Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator if he does not consider that there is this difference: That, in the first place, the law to which he refers is a means toward the enforcement of a Federal law, and, in the second place, it is nation wide in its application, whereas this proposed law is only to be applied in certain particular States?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No, Mr. President; the statute which I have just read is not in aid of a Federal law. The Federal Government has no more power to forbid a lottery in a State than it has, under the existing Constitution, to forbid the sale of liquor. It has not undertaken to deal with it in that way. If the State of Louisiana chooses to have maintained within her limits a lottery, that State has absolute power to allow it; and I am not sure but that a lottery was maintained in Louisiana after these statutes were enacted. It was forbidden by the statutes of most of the States of the Union, and I think it is now forbidden by statute in Louisiana. But the power to forbid the existence of a lottery is a State power, not a Federal power. The State having forbidden it, the policy of the people of the State having developed to that degree where the lottery has become an outlawed thing, the Federal Government has stepped in and said: "You shall not utilize the mails for the purpose of promoting this unlawful and outlawed thing."

In many of the States of the Union, either by State statute directly prohibiting the sale of liquor in the State or under the operation of local-option laws, the sale of liquor has been forbidden, and to that extent that business has become outlawed. Moreover, many of the States—five or six of them, at any rate—have provided that no circular, no pamphlet, no newspaper containing an advertisement of the liquor business, or giving out information to the general public by means of which they can procure liquor, shall be circulated in those States or in those communities where the sale of liquor is forbidden. Therefore in those States the circularization of the liquor business, the advertisement of the liquor business, is just as much an outlawed thing as the carrying on of a lottery has become in substantially all, if not all, of the States of the Union; and I can see absolutely no difference in principle between the two things.

If it is unlawful in the State of Washington to circulate an advertisement of this character, then it seems to me to be a wholesome thing for the Government of the United States, which alone possesses the power to do it, to step in and say that the mails shall not be utilized for the purpose of carrying on the thing which the State law has forbidden.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, in expressing the hope that the motion of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] will prevail, I express my sympathy with the amendment which he has offered to the Post Office appropriation bill.

In addition to the lottery statute cited by the Senator from Utah, I think yet other statutes may be cited which are exactly in line with the legislation proposed by way of amendment to this bill. I think there will be recalled by nearly all Senators here the famous case of Leisy against Hardin, known as the original-package case or decision, under which it was held that intoxicating liquors in the original package were not subject to seizure under State prohibition laws. Of course, the effect of that decision was to nullify to a great extent the prohibition laws of the States having such laws. Then, in order to prevent that condition of affairs, the Wilson Act of August 8, 1890, was passed by Congress. That act provided:

That all fermented, distilled, or other intoxicating liquors or liquids transported into any State or Territory or remaining therein for use, consumption, sale, or storage therein shall, upon arrival in such State or Territory, be subject to the operation and effect of the laws of such State or Territory enacted in the exercise of its police powers, to the same extent and in the same manner as though such liquids or liquors had been produced in such State or Territory, and shall not be exempt therefrom by reason of being introduced therein in original packages or otherwise.

And the Wilson law has been sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States in more than one decision, although I do not now recall the titles of the cases.

Further, Mr. President, comes another piece of legislation in line with this same principle, and that is the Webb-Kenyon law, passed in March, 1913, by Congress, and over the veto of the President. That law prohibits the shipment into any State of the Union of intoxicating liquors where they are to be received, sold, or used—as I remember the substance of the law—in violation of the law of the State into which they are shipped.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. HARDWICK. It is the fact, however, that that law is pending before the Supreme Court of the United States on the question of its constitutionality; and the whole court seems to be hopelessly and equally divided, so far as we can hear, on that question.

Mr. STERLING. But the matter involved here is quite another thing.

Mr. HARDWICK. Oh, I quite understand that; but the Senator is citing that as authority for this.

Mr. STERLING. Yes; and I cite that statute primarily for the purpose of showing the action of Congress in regard to this matter, and the view of Congress in regard to permitting the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution, or that part of the Constitution in regard to post offices and post roads, to interfere with or prevent the operation of the laws enacted by the States by virtue of or under their police power.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. I want to say, in answer to the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], that while the constitutionality of that law has not been determined by the Supreme Court as yet, I think I am right in saying that every Federal court that has passed on that law has sustained it, and every State court except one. Has the Senator from Georgia any information to the contrary?

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator may be right about that. Of course the main question and the controlling question is what the Supreme Court here finally decides, but that is not very pertinent. Of course there is no contention made by me or anybody else, so far as I know, that this provision would be unconstitutional if we put it in. I do not make that claim.

Mr. STERLING. So, Mr. President, there has been a marked disposition on the part of Congress, as shown by this legislation, to assist the States in the enforcement of the laws which they have enacted in the exercise of the police power of the States.

The Senator from Georgia seems to have based his argument largely upon the State-rights doctrine or principle, as though that doctrine were invaded or violated by this proposed legislation. Mr. President, instead of being a violation of any right of the States it is Federal legislation in aid of what the State has done already in the exercise of its rights, and the mailing or the shipment by mail of circulars or letters or newspapers or other matter containing advertisements of intoxicating liquors is only prohibited in those States which have laws prohibiting such advertisements. It seems to me that under the circumstances the invasion of a State right is the last thing of which the Senator from Georgia or anyone else ought to complain. This does not interfere with but aids in the exercise of the right of a State.

Mr. President, I think this is a sound and wise policy. The law is enacted in the State in the first instance in the interests of good health, the interests of good morals, subjects for which the police power of the State may be invoked; and when the General Government can aid the State in a purpose so great and so laudable as that by the enactment of a simple piece of legislation like this, I think it ought to do so.

[Mr. BORAH addressed the Senate. See Appendix.]

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, my State is not a prohibition or a "dry" State. It would have been so long since, in my judgment, however, if it had not been for the fact that one of the great industries of the State is the manufacture of wines and brandies from grapes grown in the State. The question of prohibition has been submitted to the voters of the State, and prohibition has been voted down, largely for that reason.

In the State of California, its people having determined that traffic in intoxicating liquors is a legitimate traffic, it certainly would be an infringement upon the rights of the people of the State if the Government should deny to the mails advertisements of that trade. On the other hand, quite a number of the States of the Union have determined just to the contrary; they have voted in favor of prohibition, and have also by statute provided that advertisements of that kind shall not be allowed within the State. It seems to me in that case that the laws and the wishes of the State should be respected by the National Government, and that it is the duty of the Government to do whatever it can to carry out the wishes of the States as declared by their statutory regulations; but the duty of the Government is to all of the States, not to one particular State. You can not separate the rights and obligations of an individual as a citizen of a State from the same rights and obligations as a citizen of the National Government. He is entitled to such protection of his rights as can be had by both the State and the National Governments.

It might be a very serious question which has been suggested by the inquiry of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] as to whether, in case one State had declared it to be unlawful to advertise the sale of cigarettes, it would be the duty of the Government to withhold from that particular State the mails containing advertisements of that article. The Government must take the broad view of it, it seems to me, that it owes a duty to all of the States. It might be possible that under some circumstances to deny the mails to one of the States would be an injury to other States, and that, taking it as a whole, it is better that the rights of that State should be violated—if they are rights—than that injury should come to all of the other States.

It is not true, however, Mr. President, with respect to the traffic in intoxicating liquors. So great a number of the States have already determined against the traffic and have forbidden the advertisement of the trade that the Government may well say that its prime duty under those circumstances is to protect those States that have forbidden such advertisements and such traffic. That is necessarily so, because it could not, it seems to me, work any injury to the other States.

Mr. REED rose.

Mr. WORKS. It might work some injury to an individual publisher of a newspaper or magazine, but that is a matter that the Government need not take into consideration. It is the rights of the States the Government should protect in a matter of this kind. Now, I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, can the Senator from California tell me how many States have passed laws prohibiting the advertisement of liquor in the newspapers of the State?

Mr. WORKS. No; I can not.

Mr. REED. Well, the Senator's statement a moment ago led me to believe that he thought a majority of the States had passed laws of that character. I asked the question because I really wanted to elicit the information. I do not pretend myself to know, and I was rather surprised on yesterday to hear the statement made that the State of Georgia had passed such a law, and that newspapers coming into Georgia from outside complied with the law by in some form obliterating such advertisements. Since the Senator from California thinks that there is so large a number of States that have passed such laws that no wrong would be done, although he admits the principle to be that the Government must legislate for all, it would be very interesting to know how many States have laws prohibiting the advertisement of the sale of liquor. I wish some one could give us that information.

Mr. WORKS. Well, Mr. President, I am not able to enlighten the Senator from Missouri on that subject, and I was not basing my position upon the ground that a majority of the States had passed such laws, because I think they have not. I have no idea that a majority or any great number of the States have so enacted; but I was trying to illustrate the idea that I was attempting to convey to the Senate, that Congress should determine what course is for the best interests of the States and for the people of the United States as a whole. If it be true that a half dozen States have enacted statutes of that kind and that mail of that sort could be excluded from those States without any injury to the States that have not enacted such statutes, then I think Congress ought to feel obligated to protect the laws of the States that have that kind of legislation. That is my position.

It has been said by the Senator from Georgia that the States have no rights respecting this matter; at least, they have no power to legislate with respect to it. It is very true, Mr. President, that a State has no power to legislate on the subject of carrying the mails, but it is not true by any means that the State has no right with respect to the carrying of the mails that the Government ought to respect. No State has the right to say to the Government, "You shall convey this kind of mail through or into the State," or "that you shall not carry certain other kinds of mail." It must be admitted that in that sense the States have no control over the situation; but certainly the State that has a law that prohibits the advertisement of the sale of liquor through the carrying of the mails has a moral right to say to the Government, "You should protect the laws of our State." That is all that is intended to be done by this amendment, as I understand; and I can not very well see what legitimate objection can be made to that kind of legislation as affecting the rights of the States. It is for that reason that I am very earnestly in favor of this amendment.

There is another thing that appeals to me, Mr. President: It has been disclosed here—and it is a fact that all of us know—that a great many of the respectable publications of this country have refused to accept advertisements of this kind. I think that is a fortunate thing. Legislation of this character would tend to encourage just that sort of thing on the part of the magazines and newspapers of the country and to induce them to take the position which has already been taken voluntarily by some of the publications which are now being sent out, and in that way it would be helpful, not only to the State where such advertisements are forbidden to be published, but in all of the States all over the country. It would be a wholesome thing if advertising of that kind was absolutely prevented by the publications themselves, and I should like to see legislation of this kind for that reason, if for no other.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WALSH in the chair). The question is on the motion of the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I will take just a minute. It was suggested by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] that this was an inopportune time to take up a matter of this kind in connection with the Post Office appropriation bill, because the 1st of July is near at hand and the appropriations ought to take effect then. Of course, the 1st of July is near, but we have already taken care of that situation. It became perfectly plain that this bill could not become a law before the 1st of July; that the appropriations could not be made before that time; and so a bill has already passed Congress extending the appropriations of the present fiscal year for a certain period of time so as to give us an opportunity to consider these measures. So there is not now the great urgency for haste and early action upon this bill that there was a day or two ago and, therefore, I do not think that that objection as to the consideration of the amendment is now entitled to any particular weight.

The Senator also suggests that the laws of the various States where the selling of liquor has been prohibited, and also where liquor advertisements have been prohibited, permit the citizens of those States to purchase liquor from outside of the State, and therefore he argues that we should not adopt this amendment. It is true that in some, if not all—I do not know whether all, but in some—of the States where they prohibit the sale of liquor inside of the State they do permit the bringing in of liquor from outside into the State; but this amendment does not deal with that situation; it is not intended to deal with that situation. Some States have gone further and have prohibited such advertisements, circulars, and so on, within the State, and the purpose of this amendment is to prevent the circulation of such matter within the State contrary to the State laws.

It has been suggested by some that this would disorganize the Post Office Department and impose upon it additional burdens that would hamper the administration of that department. I can not see how that is true. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] has answered that thoroughly. This amendment does not impose any additional burden upon the Post Office Department; this amendment makes certain acts a crime; and the enforcement of that criminal provision will rest upon the proper officers of the Government. That is all there is to it.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I have not been here during much of this debate, and may therefore be going to ask a question which has already been answered. If so, I will not ask the Senator to answer it again. Let me say, so that my question may be plain, that, of course, if Congress enacts such a law as this, a law directly affecting the machinery of the Government, the duty will devolve upon it to see that the machinery is not employed so that a crime shall be committed through its instrumentality. It is a mere begging of the question to say that no duty will fall upon the Post Office Department when we enact a law declaring that the sending through the mails of a certain class of matter is a crime. As soon as we do that, it becomes our duty as a Government not to employ our agencies and instrumentalities in the actual perpetration of that crime. Now, assume that a man lives in the Senator's own State, that he is a subscriber, let me say, to the New York Times or the New York World, or any other great metropolitan periodical. That periodical carries a vast amount of news and it carries thousands of advertisements. Somewhere in the paper there is an advertisement of a wine or a liquor. How is that man to get his paper? It is inconceivable that that great paper is going to print a special edition in order to send into the State of Washington, the few copies that would be there read. So, in view of the fact that the paper does print such an advertisement, which is perhaps one one-thousandth part of its business, does it not become the duty of the Postmaster General to have the packages containing the paper opened, to examine it and determine whether the governmental agency is being employed for the purpose of violating a solemn statute of the United States?

That is a somewhat involved and prolonged question, but the Senator catches the point, and I ask him how we are going to do this unless the results follow which I have indicated?

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, in the first place I am informed by some members of the Senate that many newspapers now send to the States where prohibition legislation is in force what might be called special editions of their papers with liquor advertisements cut out. They do that voluntarily, and I understand that it is not very much trouble, although I can see that it might involve some trouble, some inconvenience, and some expense, and some of the papers might not be willing to do it.

Now, as to the other point. I do not say that there would not be any duty upon the part of the Post Office Department, and yet there is nothing in this amendment that imposes upon the department any duty to make special investigations or employ any particular force in order to determine whether there are violations or not. The amendment simply says that certain things shall not be done. Then it says that whoever shall knowingly do those things shall be subject to a penalty. We have passed many laws declaring that certain offenses are crimes, and that whoever commits them shall be punished; but we do not hear of prosecuting officers going out generally for the purpose of seeing whether or not those laws are violated. They act whenever a complaint is made. Whenever somebody has reason to believe that the law has been violated and makes complaint, then the prosecuting officers act, and that would be very largely the policy under this amendment. I would expect, of course, that the inspectors of the department and the special officers of the department whom it sends about over the country would, so far as possible, see whether or not the law is being violated; but I do not believe that there would be any duties imposed upon the department under this provision that would especially disorganize it or especially burden it.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, he is now putting up this remarkable argument for his amendment, that it ought to be adopted because it will not be enforced.

Mr. JONES. I did not yield to the Senator to misrepresent my position. I did not suggest anything of that sort.

Mr. REED. I did not mean to misrepresent the Senator's position, but is not that the fact?

Mr. JONES. No; it is not.

Mr. REED. Is this not the effect of the Senator's argument: Here is a law, drastic, far-reaching, and sweeping, which the Senator says will not interfere with the Post Office Department much because the Post Office Department will not have to enforce it.

Mr. JONES. No; the Senator from Washington did not say that at all.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, as I understand the provisions of this amendment, the offense which is proscribed may be prosecuted in the courts.

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. WORKS. And the newspaper publisher or the publisher of a magazine who violates the provision by sending this sort of matter into one of the States where it is prohibited is subject to prosecution, like any other criminal.

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. WORKS. It is not done through the Post Office Department, but through the courts of justice.

Mr. JONES. That is correct; and that is what I tried to say a moment ago.

Now, Mr. President, the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] and some others have raised the inquiry as to why the necessity for making any motion to suspend the rule and place this general legislation upon a general appropriation bill. That would convey to anyone who is not familiar with our proceedings the idea that it is a very unusual thing to put general legislation upon appropriation bills; yet, Mr. President, we do it almost every time we pass an appropriation bill. There is hardly a general appropriation bill that goes through the Senate that does not contain general legislation. General legislation is put upon such bills without any question being raised, without any point of order being raised; it is put on, it might be said, by unanimous consent, when no special emergency is shown, or anything of that sort.

Now, why did we take this course in this case? We took it because we knew that the point of order would be raised the moment the amendment was offered. I do not question anybody's motive in raising the point of order upon legislation of this kind; but we knew it would be done, and therefore we took the only course that we knew was open to get legislation of this character upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey in the chair). Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Is there any general bill covering this same subject pending before the Senate?

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, the amendment which I have offered was taken from a general bill introduced by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], who is chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. The bill was introduced February 12, 1916, and no action has been taken upon it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Where is it pending?

Mr. JONES. Before the Post Office Committee, but no action has been taken on it for months.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I think I am called on to say a word.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. JONES. Yes; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BANKHEAD. When this bill was introduced and went to the committee, as usual we referred it to the Postmaster General for an expression of his opinion on the bill, as to the wisdom and propriety of enacting it, and as to how it would affect the Post Office Department. We have not heard from him on the subject——

Mr. JONES. I presume it was sent to him immediately upon its introduction.

Mr. BANKHEAD. So that the bill has not been considered by the committee.

Mr. JONES. The Post Office Department takes from February until nearly the 1st of July, and yet no report is made upon a measure of this character. It seems to me that shows some necessity for further action by Congress. I think that a similar bill was also introduced in the preceding Congress, but no action was taken upon it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield further to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. JONES. Gladly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I do not desire exactly to ask a question, but merely to say a word or two. I am very anxious to vote for such a measure as the amendment of the Senator from Washington. I wish to see it in effect in Georgia, where I live, and I believe the majority of my constituents likewise wish to see it in effect; but, whether they do or not, I do. I wish to help stop from the mails of my State the liquor advertisements which have poured in there from Chattanooga and other places. I am afraid, however, we are not going to get anywhere with the motion which the Senator has made. I am going to vote to suspend the rules, but I think it takes a two-thirds vote to suspend them. I wish to say, if we do not make any progress now, I will support a motion to discharge the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads from the consideration of the bill to which the Senator has referred, and then I will support a motion to take it up at once and pass it.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I am not so hopeless as is the Senator with reference to the action of the Senate. I believe the Senate is going to suspend the rules and allow this amendment to be adopted.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I shall vote to suspend the rules, and I hope we will get a two-thirds vote to suspend them.

Mr. JONES. Furthermore, I do not believe it requires a two-thirds vote to suspend the rules. The Senate by a majority vote so decided a year or so ago, but the Senate by a majority vote can decide the other way, and that proposition will be put to the Senate if it should be held that it does require a two-thirds vote to suspend the rules.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. JONES. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have studied the rules a long time, and I have been utterly unable to discover any authority for the statement that it requires a two-thirds vote to suspend the rules. It is true that on a certain occasion, when the Senators were swayed by differing considerations, a majority vote was cast sustaining the point that was made that it required a two-thirds vote; but that was only one instance. It will be used as a precedent, of course, but I am glad to hear the Senator say he is going to test the question again.

Mr. JONES. If necessary.

Mr. GALLINGER. If necessary. Let us have another vote on this proposition, and see whether the Senate thinks it takes a two-thirds vote to suspend the rules, so that we can have a better chance of passing this beneficent amendment. I am glad the Senator is going to make that issue, if necessary.

Mr. JONES. I am certainly going to do that, if it is necessary. I do not believe the Senate is going to refuse to give even a two-thirds vote upon a proposition of this character that looks toward assisting the States in carrying out the declared policies of the States with reference to a great question of this character and one of such great interest throughout all sections of the country.

In this connection I have here a telegram which I have been asked to present to the Senate, and I ask that it may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the telegram will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., June 29, 1916.

Hon. W. L. JONES,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Representing unquestionably the known wishes of millions of voters who demand protection in prohibition States from mail solicitations to the violation of their laws, we beg the Congress to pass the pending legislation to close the mails of the Nation to advertisements of intoxicating liquors. Such advertisements sent into prohibition communities are a chief factor in nullifying local legislation and State statutes, are offensive to local self-government, and violative of reserved police powers of every State of the Union. Speaking for the constituency represented by thousands of delegates from all States, we plead for passage of this essential and urgent measure of home protection.

Luther B. Wilson, President; Purley A. Baker, General Superintendent; Edwin C. Dinwiddie, Legislative Superintendent; Ernest H. Cheerington, Manager Publishing Interests; Wayne B. Wheeler, General Counsel Anti-Saloon League of America.

Please present above memorial to Senate during discussion.

E. C. DINWIDDIE.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. JONES. Yes; I yield.

Mr. REED. If the Senator had finished that branch of his discussion, I wanted to call his attention to another matter.

I ask the attention of my good friend from Georgia to this question. It does not relate to the general merits of the bill—that is, it does not relate to the general question as to whether or not liquor advertisements ought to be sent into "dry" territory. So far as I am concerned, I am prepared to do anything that is reasonable to protect "dry" territory against "wet" territory; but I call attention to this language, and I want to ask the Senator who is the author of this amendment if he thinks it can be justified in any law passed among free people:

Whoever shall knowingly deposit or cause to be deposited or shall knowingly send or cause to be sent * * * by mail anything herein forbidden to be carried by mail—

To wit, any document or paper containing a liquor advertisement—shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than two years, or both.

Now—and I call the attention of the Senator from Georgia to this:

Any person violating any provision of this section may be tried and punished, either in the district in which the unlawful matter or publication was mailed or to which it was carried by mail for delivery, according to direction thereon, or in which it was caused to be delivered by mail to the person to whom it was addressed.

Starting with that premise, I ask this question: Assume that a young lady residing in the State of Maine reads one of the popular magazines, and it contains an article or a story that is of interest to her sister or her relative residing in the State of Oregon, but it also contains a liquor advertisement, and she, in glancing through the magazine, observes and has knowledge of the fact that it does contain a liquor advertisement. She mails it to her sister in Oregon. Is it not possible, then, for some post-office inspector or somebody else to file in the State of Oregon a charge against that young lady who resides in Maine, and drag her 3,000 miles across the country to trial?

Mr. JONES. Why, Mr. President, of course it is possible. Almost anything is possible in the way of charging anybody with anything. I could go down here and charge the Senator from Missouri with almost anything now. It is possible.

Mr. REED. Is it not only possible to do that, but is it not expressly provided for in this law?

Mr. JONES. Oh, I do not think it probable; but that will come up when we consider the amendment upon its merits. The amendment itself will then be subject to amendment, and any proper amendment no doubt will be put in.

Mr. REED. I have heard little discussion here except upon the merits of this proposition.

Mr. JONES. I desire to say that most of my argument has been confined to the proposition to suspend the rules, and I have not gone very much into the other branch of the matter.

Mr. REED. Would the Senator be willing to answer the question just "Yes" or "No," whether it would not be entirely possible?

Mr. JONES. Why, I said it would be possible. Anything of that character would be possible.

Mr. REED. And would it not be possible not only to bring that charge but to convict her?

Mr. JONES. No; I do not think so.

Mr. REED. In the State of Oregon?

Mr. JONES. No; I do not think so.

Mr. REED. Why not? The Senator has provided for it.

Mr. JONES. I have answered the Senator's question. Of course that is an impossible suggestion.

Mr. REED. Now may I ask the Senator another question? Suppose this same young lady did not read the liquor advertisement and did not know that it was in the book, but that she sent the book containing the liquor advertisement, and thereupon some one—an inspector or somebody else—filed a charge against her in the State of Oregon. Would it not be possible and lawful to arrest her on that charge, carry her across the country, and compel her to go to trial 3,000 miles from her home? Is not that plainly written in the letter of the Senator's amendment?

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, of course that is possible, but the law says it must be done knowingly. Of course I can charge that somebody has done a thing knowingly if I see fit to do it.

Mr. REED. Does the Senator know of any other law that it has ever been undertaken to write upon the statute books of this country which proposes to give to the Government the right to try a man either in his home or in any other place that it wants to pick out? Does not this provision violate the very fundamental doctrine of Saxon civilization, that a man is entitled to a jury of his peers, summoned from the vicinage?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator; yes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish to say to the Senator from Missouri that if he will help us suspend the rule so that we can get at this amendment, I am then perfectly willing to help him perfect it so that its application will be limited to the men engaged in the business who are trying to sell their intoxicating drinks by using the mails.

Mr. JONES. Yes; the Senator will have lots of assistance in getting this amendment in proper shape. As to the suggestion of the Senator with reference to the trial in these different places, I think there is room there for amendment; and I will cooperate very heartily with the Senator in getting a proper amendment, so that people will not be tried contrary to our general system of laws and Saxon jurisprudence. I might suggest that, while I do not remember the exact terms of the lottery law that we passed, I think, possibly, under its terms about the same things could be done that the Senator suggests could be done under this; but I do not know of any such thing having been done and I never have heard of any such attempt being made.

Mr. President, I would have been through by this time except for these interruptions. I am going to refer to just one matter that is not especially important, and that is the question of State rights. I want to say that I admire very greatly the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], not only for his steadfast adherence to the principles of State rights as he understands them but also for his courage in standing by his convictions with reference to these matters. I am satisfied that he is perfectly sincere in his views, and it simply increases my admiration for him that, notwithstanding the action of the people of his State, he stands by his convictions here. This question of State rights, however, is a rather peculiar one. Some of us are for State rights one day and then we do not pay much attention to them another day; and some of those who are supposed to know what State rights mean, and who have believed in that doctrine, are to-day the furthest, it seems to me, from the principles of the fathers who adopted the principle of State rights.

I have here volume 12, parts 1 and 2, of the Congressional Debates of the Twenty-fourth Congress, first session, 1835–36. I give this reference so that if anybody wants to look at the matter more fully he can do so. I am not going to read everything that I have marked here, but it seems to me that we had up then—this was referred to by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]—the very identical proposition that we have here; and I find that really the patron saint of State rights—Senator Calhoun—was the strong advocate of legislation of this kind. At page 1103 I find this:

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill prohibiting deputy postmasters from receiving or transmitting through the mail to any State, Territory, or District certain papers therein mentioned the circulation of which by the laws of said State, Territory, or District may be prohibited, and for other purposes.

That is very much like this. The purpose sought is substantially the same.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to read a paragraph from Jackson's message?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. This is from the message of President Jackson of December 7, 1835. He says:

In connection with these provisions in relation to the Post Office Department I must also invite your attention to the painful excitement produced in the South by attempts to circulate through the mails inflammatory appeals addressed to the passions of the slaves in prints and in various sorts of publications calculated to stimulate them to insurrection and to produce all the horrors of a servile war. There is doubtless no respectable portion of our countrymen who can be so far misled as to feel any other sentiment than that of indignant regret at conduct so destructive of the harmony and peace of the country and so repugnant to the principles of our national compact and to the dictates of humanity and religion. Our happiness and prosperity essentially depend upon peace within our borders and peace depends upon the maintenance in good faith of those compromises of the Constitution upon which the Union is founded.

It is fortunate for the country that the good sense, the generous feeling, and the deep-rooted attachment of the people of the nonslave-holding States to the Union and to their fellow citizens of the same blood in the South have given so strong and impressive a tone to the sentiments entertained against the proceedings of the misguided persons who have engaged in these unconstitutional and wicked attempts and especially against the emissaries from foreign parts who have dared to interfere in this matter, as to authorize the hope that those attempts will no longer be persisted in. But if these expressions of the public will shall not be sufficient to effect so desirable a result not a doubt can be entertained that the nonslave-holding States, so far from countenancing the slightest interference with the constitutional rights of the South, will be prompt to exercise their authority in suppressing, so far as in them lies, whatever is calculated to produce this evil.

In leaving the care of other branches of this interesting subject to the State authorities, to whom they properly belong, it is nevertheless proper for Congress to take such measures as will prevent the Post Office Department, which was designed to foster an amicable intercourse and correspondence between all the members of the confederacy, from being used as an instrument of an opposite character. The General Government, to which the great trust is confided of preserving inviolate the relations created among the States by the Constitution, is especially bound to avoid in its own action anything that may disturb them. I would therefore call the special attention of Congress to the subject and respectfully suggest the propriety of passing such a law as will prohibit, under severe penalties, the circulation in the Southern States through the mail of incendiary publications intended to instigate the slaves to insurrection.

Mr. REED. What is that from?

Mr. BORAH. Jackson's message.

Mr. JONES. At page 1107 I find this:

Mr. Calhoun said that the Senator from Massachusetts had certainly raised a very important point, and he could not do justice to his argument and to himself without previously arranging the various points of it. The Senator, however, was mistaken in his view of the subject. It was because the subject particularly belonged to the States, and it was the duty of the General Government to aid and cooperate with them in carrying their laws into effect, that the bill was framed. He ventured to assert that not only did this duty result from the relations between the States and the Federal Government, but that it was an indispensable duty. The principle was not a new one; it had been applied more than once; but it was an old principle applied to a new case. He threw out these hints to prevent any erroneous impressions resulting from the remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

And then, in part 2, at page 1730, Mr. Calhoun said this:

Mr. Calhoun could not concur with the views taken by the Senators from Massachusetts and Kentucky, that this bill would comprehend in its provisions all publications touching the subject of slavery. In order to bring any publication within the provisions of the bill, two qualifications were necessary. The first was that it must relate to the subject of slavery—

The first provision here is that it must relate to intoxicating liquors—and the next was that it must be prohibited by the laws of the State to which it is transmitted. He thought that this was the view that would be taken of it by the courts.

I have marked here what I should like to put in my remarks, and I will not take the time of the Senate to read further at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission will be granted to insert the matter in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The object of this bill was to make it the duty of the postmasters in the States to conform to the laws of such States and not to deliver out papers in violation of their laws. The simple question was, Had this Government the power to say to its officers, "You shall not violate the laws of the States in which you reside"? Could it go further and make it their duty to cooperate with the States in carrying their laws into effect? This was the simple question. Now, could any man doubt that Congress possessed the power to pass both measures, so that their officers might not come into conflict with the State laws? Indeed, he looked upon measures of this kind to prevent conflicts between the General and State Governments, which were likely to ensue, as essentially necessary, for it was evident that when such conflicts took place the States must have the ascendancy. Mr. C. then briefly recapitulated the principles on which this bill was founded, and contended that it was in aid of laws passed by the States as far as Congress had the power constitutionally to go, and assumed no power to prohibit or interfere with the publication or circulation of any paper whatever; it only declared that the officers of the Government should not make their official stations a shield for violating the State laws. Was there anyone there who would say that the States had not the power to pass laws prohibiting and making penal the circulation of papers calculated to incite insurrection among their slaves? It being admitted that they could, could not Congress order its officers to abstain from the violation of these laws? "We do not," said Mr. C., "pass a law to abridge the freedom of the press or to prohibit the publication and circulation of any paper whatever—this has been done by the States already." The inhibition of the Constitution was on Congress and not on the States, who possessed full power to pass any laws they thought proper. They knew that there were several precedents to sanction this bill. Congress had passed laws to abstain from the violation of the health laws of the States. Could anyone say that the Constitution gave to Congress the power to pass quarantine laws? He had not adverted to the message of the President on this subject, because he believed that the President acted from the best motives and that that part of the message was drawn up without sufficient reflection. He denied, however, that this message was in conformity with the Constitution. It would be directly abridging the liberty of the press for Congress to pass such laws as the President recommended.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, this language of Senator Calhoun could well be applied to the bill that is now pending. It is exactly of the same character, the same in principle, and the same generally in public policy. I shall not take the time of the Senate further. I do not know whether or not the debate is over on this amendment, but I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Gore	Lippitt	Sheppard
Beckham	Gronna	Lodge	Sherman
Brady	Hardwick	McLean	Smith, Ariz.
Brandegee	Hitchcock	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Mich.
Bryan	Hughes	Myers	Smoot
Chamberlain	Husting	Nelson	Sterling
Clark, Wyo.	James	Newlands	Stone
Clarke, Ark.	Johnson, Me.	Norris	Sutherland
Colt	Johnson, S. Dak.	Oliver	Thompson
Culberson	Jones	Overman	Tillman
Cummins	Kenyon	Page	Townsend
Curtis	Kern	Phelan	Warren
du Pont	La Follette	Pomerene	Weeks
Fletcher	Lane	Ransdell	Williams
Gallinger	Lea, Tenn.	Shafroth	Works

Mr. BECKHAM. I wish to announce that the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] is absent on official business.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. THOMAS] and to state that he is paired with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER].

Mr. KERN. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON]. This announcement may stand for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey in the chair). The Chair desires to announce that the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] is absent on public business. Sixty Senators have responded to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, just a word in explanation of my vote upon this motion.

This question was before the Senate on January 13, 1915, upon a motion by the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD]. At that time I announced my position on it, and I do not believe that I could explain my vote now in any better way than I did at that time.

I stated then that I thought the Senator from Texas was very unfortunate indeed in trying to suspend the rules for legislation upon an appropriation bill, and called the attention of the Senate to paragraph 3 of Rule XVI, which I shall not take the time to read. I also stated that it was unfortunate that the motion should be to amend an appropriation bill, because of the fact that it would establish a bad precedent, that it might be done at a time when there would be a greater issue involved than the one then presented. The result, if it became an established practice, might often be the defeat of an appropriation bill in a short session of Congress. That could be easily accomplished if this was made the practice of the Senate.

If I were interested in legislation that was of interest to my State, I would not undertake under the rules of the Senate to place it upon an appropriation bill by moving a suspension of the rules of the Senate.

I wish to say to the Senator making the motion that if the principle of the motion was embodied in a bill and was before the Senate for action, I would gladly vote for it, but I can not vote to suspend the rules for the purpose of putting legislation upon an appropriation bill. I believe that the precedent established by it would do a great deal more harm to the future practice of the Senate than the good that would come by adopting it upon the motion made by the Senator from Washington.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WORKS. Does the Senator think it would be worse to suspend the rules in order to legislate in this way than to violate the rules by doing it every day we are operating upon appropriation bills by incorporating that kind of legislation in the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. As I stated when that same question was asked me in January, 1915, it is not violating the rules of the Senate when legislation is put upon an appropriation bill by unanimous consent, because the rule specifically provides that it can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. WORKS. The Senator sits by like the balance of us and sees the rule violated day after day without making any objection.

Mr. SMOOT. If every Member of this body is in favor of the legislation and it goes upon an appropriation bill, and it can not go on in any other way, I do not think it is a violation of the rule. In fact, it is not a violation of the rules of the Senate.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. JONES. If the Senator will permit me, if we were to suspend the rule it is not a violation of the rule. We are acting now in accordance with the rules of the Senate. So there is no violation of the rules involved in the matter.

Mr. SMOOT. I agree with the Senator. The rule was adopted applying only to appropriation bills because of the fact that appropriation bills are necessary for the running of our Government, and generally they come before the Senate in the very closing days of the session. The rule was made to prevent just such motions being made as we are now considering. If we undertake to suspend the rule to adopt this particular legislation upon an appropriation bill, no matter how much we may be interested in it, unless there is unanimous consent given I believe that it would establish a precedent that would arise to plague us in the future. General legislation should not be put upon appropriation bills but should take the regular course that other bills take.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Did the Senator vote to put the Jones-Works excise law on a general appropriation bill?

Mr. SMOOT. I did not vote to suspend any rule to put it on. If the pending motion was not objected to, I would not interpose an objection.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I asked the Senator if he voted to put that law on a general appropriation bill?

Mr. SMOOT. I think I did.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Senator is inveighing against the practice of putting general legislation on an appropriation bill, a practice he has himself indorsed.

Mr. SMOOT. I object to suspending the rules to do so, as I have always done in the past. That is my position. When general legislation is proposed upon an appropriation bill and there is objection to it, and then it is undertaken to be placed upon the appropriation bill by suspending the rules of the Senate, I will not vote to suspend the rules. That was my position in 1915, and I so stated to the Senate. I voted against it at that time, and I shall do so now.

Mr. SHEPPARD. If the Senator from Utah will allow me, there was objection to that measure going on a general appropriation bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is about what I rose to say to the Senator from Utah. There was objection to putting the Jones amendment on the bill, but some of us voted to put it on, and it went on. It was not a unanimous agreement.

Mr. SMOOT. But there was no motion made to suspend the rules.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is immaterial.

Mr. SMOOT. With me that is very material, and is exactly what is undertaken now.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is leather and prunella.

Mr. SMOOT. It may be with the Senator, but it is not with me.

Mr. GALLINGER. We have a right to suspend the rules under the rule.

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly we have. I have not denied that fact. I know we have a right to suspend the rules under the rule, but I say it is not a wise thing to suspend the rule in order to place legislation upon an appropriation bill. That is my position, and is the position I stated to the Senate before, and I shall not change my attitude in relation to it, no matter what the question involved may be.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator bases his objection largely upon the ground that it takes time and may endanger the passage of the bill. The contest over placing the Jones amendment on the bill took time, but it did not defeat the bill. We have all summer to pass this bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not say that in this case time was the essence of my objection, but I did say that if we undertake to do this and establish the precedent time might become a very important question, particularly in a short session of Congress.

Mr. GALLINGER. A speech will accomplish the same purpose near the close of a session.

Mr. SMOOT. That may be true. This would add another way of accomplishing the defeat of appropriation bills in the closing days of a session.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is one way out of a hundred.

Mr. WORKS. I do not know that I understand the position of the Senator from Utah. I should like to ask him whether his objection is to placing general legislation on an appropriation bill or to the suspension of the rule for that purpose?

Mr. SMOOT. My objection is to suspending the rule for the purpose of placing legislation upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. WORKS. Then you object to the lawful way, the one provided by the rules of the Senate?

Mr. SMOOT. I did not hear the Senator.

Mr. WORKS. I say, then, you object to doing it in a lawful, legitimate way, as provided by the rules of the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. No. I object to suspending the rules for the purpose of putting any kind of legislation on an appropriation bill. That is what I object to, and I think the objection is a wise one, when you take into consideration the fact that at a short session of Congress it could be used for defeating an appropriation bill. I wish to state frankly that I would vote with the Senator to discharge the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads from further consideration of his bill having the same object in view as his intended amendment to this appropriation bill; I will vote for the same proposition if it comes before the Senate in the shape of a bill; I am in favor of the legislation, but I shall not vote to suspend the rules for the purpose of putting the legislation upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Before the Senator takes his seat, let me state a difficulty which suggests itself to my mind. I express great sympathy with the position taken by the Senator from Utah. I think I see in this precedent an ability at any time when any Senator desires to put general legislation on an appropriation bill by which every appropriation bill will be subject to the assault on only one day's notice, and he will divert attention from the regular order of the Senate by his desire to take a vote on any item of general legislation obnoxious to the rule which he wishes to move as an amendment. That is, any Senator can by one day's notice load your appropriation bill from start to finish with every man's particular idea of general legislation that ought to go on it by merely giving a day's notice of the fact that you intend to do it. It seems to me it would absolutely break up the orderly proceedings of this body. I, for one, regardless of my opinion on the merits of the measure, will certainly vote now and at any other time against bringing in by one day's notice a vote on a question as to whether the appropriation bill shall be amended by general legislation. That ought to be done by the regular, orderly way of introducing a bill and referring it and reporting it and passing it.

Mr. JONES. Will the Senator permit me? I suggest that under the rule now, whether we adopt this motion or not, any Senator can give any notice that he wants about any amendment at any time, and then we can discuss it.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I do not think that is the purpose of the rule.

Mr. JONES. There is nothing in the rules to prevent giving notice.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. There is a good deal in practical legislation and I will say there is common sense in every one of these legislative bodies.

The mere fact that you can amend the rules by giving a day's notice does not mean that that rule of this body can be changed by one day's notice at your own sweet pleasure. It means that in the orderly procedure of the Senate, if you want to change the rules, it must be done by giving due notice. When the notice is given, you can change the rules. It strikes me that such a practice as that proposed was never contemplated. I do not know that anyone can interrupt any appropriation bill by giving one day's notice and then take a vote whether the Senate will place the item upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Senator from Arizona said these matters ought to be governed by common sense. So far as I am concerned, I am governed by the rules of the Senate in this and all other matters, as I understand it. The rule is explicit and incapable of misunderstanding, that if a Senator gives one day's notice he can move to suspend the rules.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. If the Senator will permit me right here, as suggested by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], do you not thereby give an advantage to that general legislation that has never had the sanction of a committee of this body? So you get absolutely undigested action on legislation that has never seen the committee, that has never been before the committee for consideration, when the Senate at its own sweet will on a day's notice can suspend the rules to amend an appropriation bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. We do not suspend the rule at my sweet will, but at the sweet will of the Senate of the United States, of two-thirds; it has been claimed, I think, one-half. If the Senator is so distressed about general legislation I will refer him to bills that have been passed.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I was not much distressed about anything.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator will please get permission to interrupt me. The Senator may well go to bills that have been passed at this session or bills that are to be passed at this session, and he will see a number of undigested matters in those bills. I refer him to the naval appropriation bill which will soon come before this body, and he will find in it general legislation which never had the sanction of a committee of this body. However that may be, the Senator from Washington was proceeding under the rules of the Senate, and no Senator has a right to criticize him for exercising his right under the rules of the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The Senator does not presume that I was criticizing the Senator from Washington purposely?

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, no.

Now, one other point. The Senator from Utah is greatly distressed, apparently, that some legislation may be defeated at the close of a session by a motion of this kind. The Senator from Utah knows that this body always gives way to a speech. It may be that if we were about to declare war and a Senator had given notice that he would make a speech he would give way to a declaration of war. That might be so, but it is about the only thing I can conceive of that will take a Senator off his feet in this body; and his speech might defeat an appropriation bill at the close of a short session. A Senator can offer an amendment and debate it at the close of a session. I see no more danger in a motion to suspend the rules leading to the defeat of an appropriation bill at the close of a short session than any other legislative procedure that might take place. So I think there is very little potency in the argument made by the Senator from Utah, so far as that is concerned.

But, Mr. President, the gist of this matter lies in the fact that the rules provide that upon a day's notice a Senator can move to suspend the rules. The Senator from Washington has conformed to that rule. He has given notice. He has made a motion to amend, and now let us vote. I have no disposition to discuss it, but let us vote on it and see how the Senate feels about it.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, this hobgoblin of general legislation on appropriation bills is magnified, I think, unduly on this occasion. For the first 90 years of the history of the United States Senate there was not any prohibition against putting anything on an appropriation bill or any other kind of a bill. About 1879 the Democrats in one branch of Congress annexed a condition in an appropriation bill to an appropriation of certain moneys to employ United States marshals that no part of it should be paid for deputies to appear at the polls, and held up the appropriation bill until that became the law and broke up what was deemed to be a very nefarious practice. Subsequently, those in charge of the Senate concluded that they would render it impossible to repeat that performance, and they adopted this rule, which has been more honored in the breach than in the performance. Daily, I might almost say, at certain periods in the history of the sessions of the Senate hourly it is violated, and to the very great improvement of the legislation of the country.

It is not an absolute rule. It is within the discretion of the presiding officer to refuse to enforce it and submit the matter to the Senate, when the Senate habitually disposes of the question upon its merits, or I should say just as individual Senators care to vote on the ultimate question submitted,

So I find no difficulty about voting to suspend the rule, not only because I am in favor of doing the thing we are trying to do in the end, but because it is an entirely proper procedure under our rules. It is absurd to say that it is an innovation upon anything or anybody, and say we could not suspend the rule for a day, whereas by some procedure and by a majority vote you can repeal the rule entirely and wipe entirely off the book the whole system. As it is a mathematical axiom, that the greater includes all smaller elements, and we could repeal this rule on the notice given by the Senator from Washington, I do not think we offend very greatly when we modify it for a single day.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, one of the strongest reasons underlying the rule is that appropriation bills are necessary for the conduct of the Government, and they are not supposed to be legislative bills. The reason why general legislation should not be permitted on appropriation bills any more than is absolutely necessary is this, that it compels the President, who has the veto power, to veto the whole appropriation bill if he does not approve the legislation that is put upon the appropriation bill as a rider. I think it is a very poor way to legislate. Everybody knows that an appropriation bill has got to go through or the Government has to be held up for its running expenses. Therefore there is an unnatural and abnormal desire to get legislation on appropriation bills in spite of the rule.

The fact that we frequently violate the rule is itself no reason why we should violate the rule. The rule provides for its suspension by unanimous consent. Every time a piece of legislation goes on an appropriation bill it goes on by unanimous consent because it is subject to the point of order under the rule, and if a Senator does not raise the point of order he gives his consent that the rule should be violated.

The only other time a piece of legislation goes on an appropriation bill is when a point of order is made and the Chair submits the question to the Senate. Then the Senate decides whether it is in order or not or whether it is legislation or not. It can do that by a majority vote. But that is not per se a violation of the rule or the judgment of the Senate as to whether it does violate the rule. The fact that the Senate frequently does not vote upon the question but votes upon its desires does not alter that argument at all.

I repeat, the main reason why it is unwise policy to put all sorts of legislative measures on appropriation bills is that it puts the President in a position in which he ought not to be placed until we give him at least authority to veto particular items on an appropriation bill.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I wish to observe here that many of the fundamental rights of the people have been preserved through the power of parliaments to exact conditions in connection with appropriation bills. The right of the English Parliament to attach conditions to supply bills, or to refuse supplies to the Crown unless the people's rights were respected, has been one of the chief safeguards of English freedom. Senators who stand out here against the right to attach conditions to appropriation bills are standing against what has been one of the greatest safeguards of freedom throughout English history.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the rule be suspended for which the Senator from Washington has given notice?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas and Mr. JONES called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JONES (when his name was called). I have a pair for the week with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON]. If permitted to vote on this motion, I would vote "yea."

Mr. OLIVER (when his name was called). On this vote I am paired with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN], who has been called from the Chamber on official business. If that Senator were present, he would vote "yea" and I would vote "nay."

Mr. KERN (when Mr. WILLIAMS's name was called). I desire to announce the absence of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] on official business. He is paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. TILLMAN. I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to my colleague [Mr. SMITH of South Carolina] and vote "nay."

Mr. COLT (after having voted in the affirmative). Has the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. COLT. As I have a general pair with that Senator, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. THOMAS] and to state that he is paired with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER].

Mr. BECKHAM (after having voted in the affirmative). I observe that the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT], with whom I am paired, has not voted. I transfer my pair with that Senator to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. LEE], and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] on public business. He would vote "nay" if he were present.

I am also authorized to announce the pair of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM].

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN];

The Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS]; and

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

The result was announced—yeas 36, nays 28, as follows:

YEAS—36.

Ashurst	Curtis	Lodge	Sheppard
Beckham	Gallinger	McLean	Sherman
Borah	Gore	Myers	Smith, Ga.
Brady	Gronna	Nelson	Sterling
Chamberlain	Jones	Norris	Sutherland
Clapp	Kenyon	Overman	Thompson
Clark, Wyo.	La Follette	Page	Townsend
Clarke, Ark.	Lane	Poindexter	Weeks
Cummins	Lea, Tenn.	Shafroth	Works

NAYS—28.

Bankhead	Hughes	Lippitt	Reed
Brandegee	Husting	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ariz.
Bryan	James	Newlands	Smoot
Culberson	Johnson, Me.	Phelan	Stone
Fletcher	Johnson, S. Dak.	Pittman	Tillman
Hardwick	Kern	Pomerene	Walsh
Hitchcock	Lewis	Ransdell	Warren

NOT VOTING—31.

Broussard	Harding	Penrose	Swanson
Catron	Hollis	Robinson	Taggart
Chilton	Lee, Md.	Saulsbury	Thomas
Colt	McCumber	Shields	Underwood
Dillingham	Martin, Va.	Simmons	Vardaman
du Pont	O'Gorman	Smith, Md.	Wadsworth
Fall	Oliver	Smith, Mich.	Williams
Goff	Owen	Smith, S. C.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In accordance with the former ruling of the Senate that it requires a two-thirds vote to suspend the rule, the Chair decides that the rule is not suspended.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I desire to appeal from the decision of the Chair holding that a two-thirds vote is necessary to suspend the rules.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The questions is, Shall the ruling of the Chair stand as the ruling of the Senate?

Mr. HARDWICK. On that question, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. JONES (when his name was called). While I have a pair with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] for the week, I understand that upon this question I am at liberty to vote, so I do so. I vote "nay."

Mr. OLIVER (when his name was called). I had a pair on the last vote with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN]. I have some doubt, however, as to whether or not that pair would apply on a vote of this kind. In order to be on the safe side, however, I refrain from voting.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I have a pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TAGGART] and vote "yea."

Mr. SHAFROTH (when the name of Mr. THOMAS was called). I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. THOMAS], and to state that he is paired with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. OLIVER. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. KERN. I again desire to announce the unavoidable absence on official business of the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. He is paired with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE].

Mr. BECKHAM (after having voted in the negative). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. LEE] and will let my vote stand.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I am requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN];

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]; and

The Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS].

The result was announced—yeas 42, nays 25, as follows:

So the ruling of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I now ask to return to page 42, at which I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk. I offer this amendment for the purpose of perfecting a number of committee amendments in connection with the provision.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 42, beginning in line 21, after the language "Sec. 16," it is proposed to strike out:

That the Postmaster General is authorized and directed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARDWICK. Now, I propose another amendment, which I send to the desk and desire the Secretary to state.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all of page 55, as the bill now stands, from line 6 to line 24.

Mr. HARDWICK. That is the provision in reference to annual weighing of the railway mails. The committee will have a substitute to offer for that, which I shall submit as soon as the motion to strike out is agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The committee amendment at that point has been agreed to, and in order for the Senator to offer his amendment it will be necessary to reconsider the vote by which it was agreed to.

Mr. HARDWICK. Then I move to reconsider the action of the Senate in agreeing to the committee amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HARDWICK. Now, I move to amend by striking out the language which I have indicated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out, on page 55, from line 6 to line 24, inclusive, as follows:

From and after the passage of this act and not less frequently than once every year to cause the United States mails to be weighed simultaneously on all railroad mail routes for a period of 30 successive working days, and when such annual weighing is completed he shall readjust the annual compensation of railway mail pay on the basis of the average daily weight of all the mail carried on each route as ascertained by the actual weight taken, as herein provided, which readjustment shall be effective on and after the 1st day of July following such weighing: Provided, That such annual weighing shall only be had in those cases in which railroad companies carrying the mails shall perform the work of weighing the mails under the supervision and direction of the Postmaster General and without expense to the Government: Provided further, That in case any contractor for a railway mail route shall refuse or fail to perform the work of weighing without expense to the Government, then the mails on such route shall be weighed quadrennially in the manner above provided.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARDWICK. I now offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] and agreed to by the Senate, after the word "applicable" it is proposed to insert the following:

Pending such hearings and the final determination of the question the existing law in reference to the weighing of the mails shall remain in force, except that if the Interstate Commerce Commissoion shall determine that it is necessary or advisable in order to carry out the provisions of this act to have additional and more frequent weighing of the mail, the Postmaster General, upon request of the commission, shall provide therefor in the manner now prescribed by law and under the terms of existing law.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, just a moment in explanation of this amendment. When this provision of the bill was previously under consideration in the Senate I made the statement to the Senate that the provisions for the details and manner of weighing the mails were in the terms of existing law, and I made that statement on information that I had received in the committee room, which I have since discovered to be inaccurate. I now make whatever apology is necessary to the Senator from Wisconsin for the inaccuracy. I am glad to acknowledge a mistake when I have made one; I am sorry I have made this one, and I desire to correct it.

The existing law is that the weighing of the mails shall be made under the supervision and direction of the Postmaster General, but by the postal employees. That was the part of it that I was mistaken about. I thought that the provision of existing law was that the weighing be made under the supervision and direction of the Postmaster General. I find the existing law further provides that the weighing shall be made by the postal employees, as was contended by the Senator. The committee thinks, on reflection, that this annual weighing ought not to be provided in view of the fact that the Interstate Commerce Commission, if the Senate provision prevails—and we hope it will—have the final disposition and control of this matter. There is no need for annual weighing pending final action by that body. We have, therefore, provided that the existing law with reference to the weighing shall continue in force pending the investigation and completion of the matter by the Interstate Commerce Commission. We have provided, however, that if the Interstate Commerce Commission while it is investigating the subject finds it necessary, in order to know what is right and just to the Government and to the railroads, to have more frequent weighings or weighings anywhere, if they want to have them, upon request the Postmaster General shall have such weighings made for their information.

So long as the Interstate Commerce Commission is to dispose of this matter, and is directed to give it precedence over all other business and to bring it to a speedy conclusion, we have, on reflection and on further consideration, concluded that there is no need for any change of existing law about weighing, except to provide that, if the Interstate Commerce Commission needs any weighing done in order to facilitate its investigation and to add to the thoroughness of it, it shall be done by the Postmaster General under existing law and at their request. I ask for a vote on the amendment, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Just a word for the purpose of getting the record straight. The amendment now submitted by the Senator from Georgia, as the Chair understands, is to come in after the word "applicable." Neither the Chair nor the Secretary is able to find that word.

Mr. HARDWICK. It is on page 3 of the Cummins amendment as originally printed. It is numbered 3, and is on page 3, line 3, of that amendment. It is so indicated in the text of the bill, and ought therefore to be very easy to discover. My amendment comes in at that point.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's amendment is an amendment to an amendment which was adopted by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. It will therefore be necessary to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted.

Mr. HARDWICK. Then I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Now the question comes on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. HARDWICK. On behalf of the committee I offer two more amendments, which I will ask to have voted on separately, and then I think we are through.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The first amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 56, after the word "inquiry," it is proposed to insert:

The Postmaster General is authorized to employ such clerical and other assistance as shall be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section, and to rent quarters in Washington, D. C., if necessary, for the clerical force engaged thereon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That seems to be again an amendment to an amendment.

Mr. HARDWICK. It is. I had overlooked the fact that this amendment applied to that section. I will therefore move again to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] as amended was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Georgia to reconsider the vote whereby the amendment of the Senator from Iowa as amended was agreed to.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HARDWICK. Now I move the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment propossed by the Senator from Georgia to the amendment, the amendment to the amendment having been stated.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARDWICK. I now ask that the second amendment offered by me be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, it is proposed to insert the following:

That the appropriations for inland transportation by railroad routes and for railway post-office car service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, are hereby made available for the purposes of this section.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to come in as a new section.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the bill it is proposed to insert as a new section the following:

That no part of the appropriations made in this act shall be used for carrying any letter, postal card, circular, newspaper, pamphlet, or publication of any kind, containing any advertisement of any spirituous, vinous, malted, fermented, or other intoxicating liquors of any kind, or containing a solicitation of an order or orders for said liquors, or any of them, by the mails of the United States, when addressed or directed to any person, firm, corporation, or association or other addressee, at any place or point in any State or Territory of the United States at which it is by law in force in the State or Territory at that time unlawful to advertise or solicit orders for such liquors, or any of them, respectively, and the Postmaster General is directed to make rules and regulations to enforce and carry out this limitation.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, against the amendment of the Senator from Washington I make the point of order that it is general legislation in connection with an appropriation bill, and therefore in violation of cause 3 of Rule XVI. The mere fact that words of limitation are used does not alter the rule, nor relieve the proposition from the rigor of the rule, if, in point of fact, under the guise of a limitation a change of existing law is made, as would be the case under the amendment proposed.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, this amendment only applies to this particlar appropriation bill and the moneys to be expended under it, and it simply provides that no part of this money shall be spent to carry these different enumerated articles. I understand the amendment is in accord with the rulings of the Chair heretofore on appropriation bills. I can not cite the rulings at the present time, for I have not them before me; but this amendment only applies to this particular appropriation bill and to moneys appropriated in this bill, and it only applies to this one year. It is not general legislation in any sense of the term.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has heretofore ruled that when there is a limitation upon the expenditure of an appropriation for a given purpose, it is not general legislation; but there must be some exception to every rule, and the effect of this amendment is just the same as that of the amendment which the Senate has refused to consider so far as its practical workings are concerned.

Mr. JONES. I beg to differ with the Vice President in regard to that. It is entirely different from the amendment which I have heretofore proposed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has not any question of doubt at all that it is the same amendment, and would accomplish the same purpose in a different way. The Chair rules it is general legislation.

Mr. JONES. I respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the ruling of the Chair stand as the ruling of the Senate?

Mr. JONES. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. LEWIS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gronna	Lewis	Sheppard
Bankhead	Hardwick	Lippitt	Sherman
Beckham	Hitchcock	Martin, Va.	Smith, Md.
Brady	Hughes	Martine, N. J.	Smoot
Bryan	Husting	Myers	Sterling
Chamberlain	James	Newlands	Stone
Clapp	Johnson, Me.	Norris	Taggart
Clark, Wyo.	Johnson, S. Dak.	Oliver	Thompson
Cummins	Jones	Overman	Townsend
Curtis	Kern	Page	Warren
Dillingham	La Follette	Pittman	Weeks
Gallinger	Lane	Reed
Gore	Lea, Tenn.	Shafroth

Mr. KERN. I wish again to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. He is paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. BECKHAM. I wish to announce the absence on official business of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN].

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

For more than a day the Senate of the United States has been engaged in a discussion of the question of setting aside the rules of the Senate to enable the Senator from Washington to introduce an amendment which was general legislation in its character. The Senate sustained the ruling of the Chair that it took a two-thirds majority to set aside the ruling, although a majority of the Senate voted to suspend the rules. The Senator from Washington now submits the following amendment:

That no part of the appropriations made in this act shall be used for carrying any letter, postal card, circular, newspaper, pamphlet, or publications of any kind containing any advertisement of any spirituous, vinous, malted, fermented, or other intoxicating liquors of any kind, or containing a solicitation of an order or orders for said liquors, or any of them, by the mails of the United States, when addressed or directed to any person, firm, corporation, or association or other addressee, at any place or point in any State or Territory of the United States at which it is by law in force in the State or Territory at that time unlawful to advertise or solicit orders for such liquors, or any of them, respectively, and the Postmaster General is directed to make rules and regulations to enforce and carry out this limitation.

The Chair has never had any doubt at all about a limitation on an appropriation bill not constituting general legislation, but the Chair also believes that there is another principle, both of the rules of the Senate and of the law in general, that what a man can not do directly he can not do indirectly; that the Senate has once settled this question, and, in addition to that, the fact that the Postmaster General is instructed to make rules and regulations now constitutes in substance out of this amendment general legislation. From that decision of the Chair the Senator from Washington appeals, and the question is, Shall the ruling of the Chair stand as the ruling of the Senate?

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I make the point of order that the question is not debatable.

The VICE PRESIDENT. These questions, under the rules, are not debatable.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I will withdraw the appeal; but I desire to offer another amendment, leaving out the clause with respect to the Postmaster General.

Mr. HARDWICK. And as to the amendment now offered I renew the point of order, because it is general legislation, no matter how it is couched. I want to say a word on that subject, Mr. President. The fact that the proposition is put in the words of a limitation is not necessarily controlling. If, in point of fact, even a proposed limitation either creates new law or changes existing law, it is still subject to the rule just the same, although it be stated in the words of a limitation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the Chair understand: Is there a general law with reference to the carrying of letters, postal cards, circulars, newspapers, pamphlets, and so forth, in force and effect in the United States?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes, sir. All those things are regulated by existing statutes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. By a statute?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes, sir.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington admit that?

Mr. JONES. No; I do not, Mr. President.

Mr. HARDWICK. There are whole chapters of the Revised Statutes devoted to that subject.

Mr. JONES. Yes; in general appropriation bills, providing appropriations for carrying the mails.

Mr. HARDWICK. Oh, no; there are statutes of the United States which regulate those things.

Mr. JONES. I do not know that they regulate them. I do not think——

Mr. HARDWICK. Oh, there are statutes regulating the carrying of letters and circulars.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It ought to be easy to ascertain the fact in regard to this. If there is a law of that kind, the Chair will sustain the point of order. If there is not, the Chair will not do so.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I want to make a suggestion. I do not know that there is any law of the kind which the Chair has in mind; but I desire to suggest that this is an appropriation bill which appropriates money for certain purposes. The amendment simply proposes that no part of that money shall be spent for a certain purpose during this year; that is all. The fact that the Senate has spent a day or has spent two days or four days or six months in the consideration of a motion to suspend the rules of this body in order to permit the offering of an entirely different amendment has no bearing at all upon this proposition. That is a matter for the Senate to determine, and it is a matter that we have a right to determine under the rules of the Senate; so that has no bearing upon the amendment that is now proposed.

This amendment says that no part of the moneys appropriated in this act shall be used for the purpose of doing certain specific, named things; that is, carrying certain articles into certain territory. It only lasts for the year, and it only applies to this bill. It comes clearly within the limitation that has been followed in ruling heretofore with respect to amendments to appropriation bills.

Of course I am not going to take the time of the Senate further. I think we ought to be permitted to vote on it. I think it is clearly in order as far as that is concerned. Whether it is wise or not is a matter, of course, for the Senate to determine; but I certainly think it is in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair can not rule unless the Chair knows whether or not there is a law on this subject. Having stricken out the clause directing the Postmaster General to make rules and regulations, this now stands, upon the face of it, as a limitation; but what stands on the face of it does not always control. The question is whether it does or does not change a law of the United States. If it does, the Chair is going to hold that it is general legislation.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, it does not apply to any law of the United States. It simply applies to this appropriation bill. That is not yet a law. That is all it applies to. It can not change any law. It is not proposed to change any law.

Mr. REED. I should like to ask the Senator if he means to tell the Senate that there are no laws of the United States which provide now that the mails shall be divided into classes, that regulate the matter of carrying the mails, and——

Mr. JONES. Why, there is a law that says that certain classifications of mail shall pay certain postage. I am not interfering with that. I am simply saying that no money appropriated by this bill shall be spent for a certain purpose; that is all.

Mr. REED. I wish to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. JONES. I am ready to permit the Senate to act upon it.

Mr. REED. There ought not to be any necessity to go and hunt up statutes in a matter of this kind.

Mr. JONES. I think that is true.

Mr. REED. I wish to ask if under existing law these newspapers, pamphlets, and periodicals are not mailable?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Of course they are.

Mr. JONES. They are mailable, but this is not going to make them unmailable.

Mr. REED. Then, although they are mailable under existing law, they will not be mailable under the proposed amendment.

Mr. JONES. Yes; they will.

Mr. REED. Therefore the Senator proposes to change existing law.

Mr. JONES. No, Mr. President; the amendment does not say anything about their not being mailable. It simply says that no part of this money shall be used for doing certain things. That is all there is to it.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me for just a minute, I find that in the act of March 3, 1879, it is provided that mailable matter of the first class shall embrace letters, post cards, and all matter wholly or partly in writing, except as thereinafter provided. Then that whole chapter goes on to provide as to what the rates of postage shall be, and that matters that come within these classes shall be accepted for the mail. The Senator proposes to change existing law by this proposition of his.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No doubt we can reach a conclusion as quickly by the Chair ruling as in any other way. The Chair rules that it is general legislation.

Mr. JONES. I respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the ruling of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. JONES. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. JONES. I ask the Chair to state the proposition.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair did state it. The question is, Shall the ruling of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLAPP (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. Not being advised on this vote, as I was on the former vote, as to his attitude, I am constrained to withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. JONES (when his name was called). I have a pair for this week with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON]. Not knowing how he would vote on this proposition, and not having secured any release, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. OLIVER (when his name was called). Again announcing the transfer of my pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD], I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BECKHAM. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] to the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. LEE] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. CLAPP. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] to the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN];

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD];

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS];

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS];

The Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS];

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY]; and

The Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE].

Mr. POINDEXTER entered the Chamber and voted "nay."

Mr. CLAPP. In view of the entrance of the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER], to whom I had transferred my pair, I must withdraw the transfer, and, consequently, withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 36, nays 22, as follows:

YEAS—36.

Ashurst	Hughes	Lippitt	Reed
Bankhead	Husting	McLean	Shafroth
Borah	James	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ariz.
Bryan	Johnson, Me.	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ga.

Cummins	Nelson	Smith, S. C.	Works
du Pont	O'Gorman	Sutherland
Fall	Owen	Swanson
Goff	Penrose	Thomas

So the ruling of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add, after the word "hearing" in line 4, page 2, of the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], the following:

In fixing and determining what are fair and reasonable rates for such service the commission shall consider the relation existing between the railroads, as public-service corporations, and the Government, and the nature of such service, as distinguished, if there be a distinction, from the ordinary transportation business of the railroads.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be necessary to reconsider the Cummins amendment again.

Mr. STERLING. I move that the vote by which the amendment of the Senator from Iowa was agreed to be reconsidered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the reconsideration of what is known as the Cummins amendment.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Now the question is on the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the amendment to the amendment be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state it.

The SECRETARY. After the word "hearing" in the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], and agreed to, near the beginning of said amendment, it is proposed to insert the following words:

In fixing and determining what are fair and reasonable rates for such service the commission shall consider the relation existing between the railroads, as public-service corporations, and the Government, and the nature of such service, as distinguished, if there be a distinction, from the ordinary transportation business of the railroads.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, what is the pending question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The adoption of this amendment is the pending question.

Mr. CLAPP. I should like to have a word from the Senator from South Dakota as to what is meant by "taking into account the relation"?

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, there is nothing whatever in the bill as it stands, or any amendment to the bill, calling the attention of the Interstate Commerce Commission to the relation between the railroads, as public-service corporations, and the Government. There is nothing whatever which refers to the particular nature of the service of carrying the mails, as contra-distinguished from ordinary transportation service for shippers. I think in the view of very many, anyhow, there is a marked distinction, and I think it is something that the Interstate Commerce Commission should take into consideration. It is simply for the purpose of inviting the attention of the Interstate Commerce Commission to those facts.

Mr. CLAPP obtained the floor.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I should like to say a word here, if the Senator from Minnesota will permit me.

Mr. CLAPP. I yield.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not think there is any necessity whatever for this amendment, but I think it simply declares what the commission would be bound to take into consideration if it were not in the bill. I do not intend to oppose it, for the reason that I look upon it as simply declaratory of the law as it is. I am hoping that we may get through with this matter. This amendment has been reconsidered about three times already.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I will go a step further than the Senator from Iowa. Of course the Senator from Iowa knows that there is a very broad insistence to-day—it has not yet been recognized, of course—that the relation of the carrier to the public is such that there should be taken into account in fixing rates, not alone the effect of the rate upon the business of the carrier but the effect of the prosperity of the carrier upon the business of the country. Now, I fear that there may be the suggestion made, and some day urged, that this proposed amendment suggests a relationship there between the carrier and the public that I for one do not feel we have yet reached such a point that we should recognize. For that reason, I think, for one that I would oppose the amendment

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, just one word. I had not expected, of course, that the offer of this amendment would lead to any particular discussion. I had conferred somewhat with the Senator from Iowa in regard to it. The very principle is embodied in the original bill, as reported to the Senate, in this language:

The commission in making such investigation shall consider efficiency and economy in service, both from the standpoint of the Government and the railroads, and shall also consider the relations existing between the railroads as public-service corporations and the Government.

Now, it is a question as to whether or not the regularity of the service, the certainty of the service, the certainty of the pay, and all such factors, including the protection afforded the railroads by the Government on account of the railroads carrying the mail, should be taken into consideration by the Interstate Commerce Commission. I think they should, Mr. President, and I think the attention of the commission might well be invited to them.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator if he will not cut out the words "if any"? It seems to me utterly absurd to lay down the rule——

Mr. STERLING. "The distinction, if there be any"?

Mr. REED. Yes; "the distinction, if there be any." If Congress is willing to assume that there is a distinction, but leaves the question as to whether or not there is a distinction to the commission, it seems to me this does not give them any rule to act upon.

Mr. STERLING. Let me say to the Senator that so far as I am personally concerned I would gladly eliminate those words, but there are some Senators who insist that there is no distinction, and at their suggestion I inserted the words "if there be a distinction."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Has any other Senator an amendment to offer to the Cummins amendment?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, on line 22, I believe, page 2 of the print of the amendment, after the word "commission," I move to insert the words "not later than 30 days after the expiration of the notice herein required."

Mr. CUMMINS. I should like to know just where that is to be inserted.

Mr. GORE. I think it is after the word "commission," on line 22, page 2.

Mr. HARDWICK. I will ask the Senator what is the effect of it?

Mr. GORE. It requires the railroads to answer within 30 days after the expiration of the notice. The amendment allows the Government three months in which to file a statement of the rates, and this says that the railroads are allowed 30 days. It is to make it entirely definite.

Mr. CUMMINS. I should like to have the Secretary state it as it would read with the amendment.

The SECRETARY. After the word "commission," near the beginning of the amendment, or in line 22, page 2, of the amendment as printed separately, the Senator from Oklahoma proposes to insert the following words:

Not later than 30 days after the expiration of the notice herein required.

So that if amended the sentence will read:

Thereupon the commission shall give notice of not less than 30 days to each carrier so required to transport mail and render service, and upon a day to be fixed by the commission, not later than 30 days after the expiration of the notice herein required, each of said carriers shall make answer——

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I have no objection whatever to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Are there further amendments to the Cummins amendment?

Mr. GORE. Mr, President, I desire to move to strike out the proviso on line 24, page 57. While I am on my feet I will say that it seems to me that the presumption ought to be indulged in favor of the department, in favor of the Government, when these changes are made. This allows the railroads to prosecute their case before the commission if they desire. They may not wish to have a hearing upon it. This assumes that in every case a hearing before the commission will be necessary, and it makes necessary such a hearing, whereas the railroads might not desire to present the matter to the commission. I think this would remove a serious handicap.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That does not seem to be in the Cummins amendment.

Mr. GORE. It is not in the Cummins amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will request the Senator to allow the Chair and the Secretary to dispose of the Cummins amendment. Are there any further amendments to it? If not, the question is on agreeing to the Cummins amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. GORE. Now I renew my motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is also an amendment to an amendment that has been agreed to as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GORE. Then, I will reserve the motion until the bill reaches the Senate.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which an amendment which I offered to section 7 was adopted. I wish to make a slight change in it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin to reconsider the vote by which the amendment indicated by him was adopted.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I have not the amendment before me, Mr. President; but the amendment provides that when an order of the Post Office Department adverse to the interests of a publisher, in the opinion of the publisher, has been made after a hearing the publisher may within 10 days appeal from that order to the Court of Appeals. I move to strike out "10" and insert "20." It has been suggested to me that if the publisher lived at some distance from Washington 10 days would not perhaps be sufficient time in which to perfect his appeal.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the sentence—

That upon such hearing, if the Post Office Department decides adversely to the contention of the publisher, such publisher shall have the right within the period of 10 days after the date of the order—

And so forth, the Senator from Wisconsin proposes to strike out the word "ten" before the word "days" and to insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, for the reason that some Senators seem to have misapprehended my position in regard to the so-called Jones amendment, if I may be permitted, I want to say just one word about the vote which I cast in favor of suspending the rules and providing for the consideration of that amendment.

I was not in favor of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington. If the rules had been suspended so that a vote could have been had directly upon the Jones amendment, I would have voted against it.

I voted in favor of suspending the rules because it is repugnant to me to defeat an amendment by an indirect vote. I preferred that the amendment should come before the Senate and a record vote be had upon it. I would have recorded my vote against it. But as the motion to suspend the rules was defeated, and as my vote upon that motion caused some misapprehension in regard to my attitude toward the main question, I make this statement in order that the RECORD may correctly show where I stand upon the question.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I send to the Secretary's desk an amendment, which I ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 5, after line 18, it is proposed to insert the following as a new paragraph:

That the Postmaster General shall have full authority to grant to any employee in the Railway Mail Service, in first and second class post offices, or in the City Free Delivery Service not to exceed two weeks' sick leave in any one year with pay, and shall not approve or continue any rule or regulation which terminates the employment of any employee by reason of absence on account of illness for a period of less than one year.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, that amendment was offered by the junior Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], who is very much interested in it. As he is unable to be present, I have sent it to the desk, and I make the suggestion that it seems to me to have much merit. I understand that the department has communicated to the committee on the subject of this amendment, and I suggest that that communication be read before the vote is taken on the amendment.

Mr. BRYAN. Let me ask the Senator from Massachusetts what is the provision of law now with reference to these leaves of absence?

Mr. WEEKS. I think the time is six months instead of one year.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I know that the representatives of these men claim that they have been satisfied with the legislation which has been adopted. This is an extension of a leave of absence from 6 months to 12 months.

Mr. WEEKS. I suggest that the department comment on the amendment be read before the vote is taken.

Mr. BANKHEAD. This proposed amendment was before the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and was referred to the Post Office Department. I desire to present the letter of the Postmaster General in explanation of it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The letter will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., May 18, 1916.

Hon. J. H. BANKHEAD,
Chairman Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR BANKHEAD: I have the honor to submit to you the opinion of the department with respect to the amendment intended to be proposed by Senator WADSWORTH to the bill (H. R. 10484) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917.

Senator WADSWORTH'S amendment would provide—

"That the Postmaster General shall have full authority to grant to any employee not to exceed two weeks' sick leave in any one year with pay, and shall not approve or continue any rule or regulation automatically terminating the employment of any such employee by reason of absence, when ill, for a fixed number of days."

The employees of the executive departments in the District of Columbia, and certain employees of the Federal Government outside of the District of Columbia as well, are entitled, under the law, to leave of absence with pay on account of sickness in addition to the leave of absence with pay authorized for the purpose of vacation. In the case of the employees of the executive departments within the District of Columbia, the law authorizes 30 days' leave of absence with pay for vacation and a maximum of 30 days with pay, in addition, on account of sickness. The different treatment of the two classes of employees has no basis of logic or reason, except that in conferring additional benefits and privileges to the employees of the Federal Government Congress is guided by the condition of the Public Treasury. With particular reference to the employees of the Postal Service, new benefits and privileges in the way of increased compensation and improved conditions of employment have been authorized by Congress gradually during recent years in accordance with the same principles and tendencies which have governed the improvement of working conditions in private employment, and these additional benefits and privileges have been accorded in proportion as the condition of the postal finances and the increasing efficiency of the postal organization would permit.

It seems to me that, although the provisions for leave of absence with pay on account of illness, as provided for in Senator WADSWORTH'S proposed amendment, is sound in principle, it would be inexpedient at this time for Congress to give favorable consideration to it because of the condition of the Public Treasury.

The provision "that the Postmaster General * * * shall not approve or continue any rule or regulation automatically terminating the employment of any such employee by reason of absence, when ill, for a fixed number of days," would have the effect of nullifying sections 306, 697, and 733, Postal Laws and Regulations, which provide that:

"Postmasters may, in addition to the leave of absence with pay provided by law, grant leave of absence without pay to carriers (clerks in first and second class post offices and city and rural letter carriers), such leave not to exceed 30 days in any one fiscal year. Applications for leave of absence to cover a longer period in cases of illness or disability received in the service must be submitted by the postmaster to the First Assistant Postmaster General, with a full statement of the facts, but leave of absence for more than 150 days in one fiscal year will not be granted in any such case. Carriers who desire to be absent for longer periods will be dropped from the rolls without prejudice."

These regulations were adopted and promulgated after very careful consideration, and are believed to be proper and in the interest of both the employees and the service, and they should not be abrogated. The principle on which these regulations rest is that to carry on the rolls a regular employee absent from duty without pay and whose return to duty is problematical works an unreasonable hardship on the substitute force. Substitutes are required to perform irregular service for many years before receiving regular appointments, and their earnings consequently are uncertain. It is essential to the best interests of the service that desirable persons be encouraged to enter and remain in the substitute force, so that the regular force may consist of the best men obtainable. It is therefore necessary that every effort be made to promote the interests of this class of employees whenever this can be done consistently with the interests of the other employees. The resignation or dropping from the rolls of a regular employee, absent without pay, creates a vacancy in the regular force to which the substitute may be advanced. His earnings immediately become regular, he receives vacation with pay, and he is entitled to the benefits of the law granting compensation for injuries received while in the performance of duty. Should the employee who resigned on account of illness be reinstated in the service, the newly appointed employee is relegated to the substitute roll, but he is credited with the period served by him temporarily as a regular employee, so that when he is eventually appointed permanently to the regular force this time is considered in computing the dates on which his annual promotions are authorized. The law governing the promotion of clerks and carriers requires that the advancement from one grade to another shall be made after the completion of one year's service in the lower grade. Consequently the promotion of the newly appointed employee is hastened by the credit he receives for the time previously served by him as a regular employee during the absence of the man who left the service on account of illness. The latter is restored to duty at the salary he received when he resigned.

Although the regulation above quoted provides that employees who desire to be absent for a longer period than 150 days in any fiscal year will be dropped from the rolls without prejudice, and "without prejudice" means that they will be eligible for reinstatement at any time within one year, the practice of the department, in order to reassure the men whose absence is made necessary by sickness, gives such employees the privilege of submitting their resignations, with the distinct understanding in writing that they will be reinstated at any time within one year from the date of their resignation upon the recovery of their health, without any change in their salary status. The object of this practice is to secure to the employee the benefit to his health which will flow from the knowledge that his sickness will not cause his total disbarment from the service.

It should be clear from the foregoing that the regulation works no hardship on the employee whose name is taken from the rolls during his period of absence beyond 150 days, and that it does work a material benefit to the substitute who occupies the regular place during the absence of the disabled employee.

For the reasons above set forth it is the opinion of the department that the provision for leave of absence with pay on account of sickness for employees of the Postal Service is inexpedient, and that the provision abrogating sections 306, 697, and 733, Postal Laws and Regulations, is unwise and detrimental to the interests of the service. Accordingly I recommend that favorable consideration be not given to the amendment intended to be proposed by Senator WADSWORTH.

Very sincerely, yours,

A. S. BURLESON,
Postmaster General.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am inclined to consent, as far as I can give the consent of the committee, that the amendment shall go to conference and there we will be given an opportunity to investigate it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I tender an amendment relative to what is known as the Cummins amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be necessary to reconsider the vote again.

Mr. LEWIS. Then I tender the amendment to be put wherever is appropriate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert the following:

That it shall be unlawful for any railroad company to refuse to perform mail service at the rates or method of compensation provided for in this act when required by the Postmaster General so to do, and upon conviction for such offense there shall be a fine of $1,000. Each day of refusal shall constitute a separate offense.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, allow me indulgence for a moment. It is reported to me from the State where I live that a railroad—I do not wish to mention their names here as if making a charge against railroads specifically—that a railroad in my State has declined to carry any mail, and 15 towns from the middle of the State to the city of Chicago are threatened with having their mail left upon the roadside to be carried by wagons, the road contending, as we understand, that such contract as was heretofore made with the Government is not satisfactory, and reserving the right promptly or within a short length of time to abandon its contract and therefore declining to resume the contract or to carry the mails by the road.

I think, sir, that such is the offense that it ought not to be permitted, having obtained the contract and assumed to enter upon service for the Government.

I ask to have this amendment adopted that we may have no such ill treatment of the public and that it may serve as a lesson and example to others.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I think it is a proper amendment. There was a provision of this character in the bill as it came from the House, but it was stricken out by the amendment agreed to. If necessary I will move to reconsider the vote by which the Cummins amendment was adopted and allow this amendment to be attached to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It can go in as a separate amendment.

Mr. HARDWICK. Let it go in separately.

Mr. LEWIS. I adopt the suggestion of the chairman and his able assistant. It may follow the Cummins amendment as a separate paragraph.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let us understand. The Cummins amendment is causing the Chair some trouble and the Secretary is trying to find out if that amendment is to be reconsidered and this amendment is to be adopted as a part of it.

Mr. HARDWICK. No; if the Chair will pardon me, that will not be necessary at all. Let it be made a separate paragraph.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is to be inserted separately in the bill following the Cummins amendment.

Mr. LEWIS. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. JONES. Before the amendment is adopted I wish to say that I do not want to oppose the amendment or anything of that kind, but I want to call the attention of the Senate to the very interesting action it has taken in the adoption of an amendment a moment ago that is clearly general legislation upon an appropriation bill and that no objection was raised by any Member of the Senate to it; that, as a matter of fact, nobody in the Senate knew what it was or that the department had reported against it, and yet it was put in and adopted as an amendment to this general appropriation bill.

This was done by the general consent of the Senate under one of the rules of the Senate which provides that it can be done. I make no objection to it at all. I simply wanted to call attention to the different action of the Senate with reference to its strictness in excluding general legislation from general appropriation bills.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no point of order raised, the Chair declares the amendment adopted.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. HARDWICK, and Mr. TOWNSEND conferees on the part of the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 5425) to standardize lime barrels, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 1388. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to furnish hot water from the hot springs on the Hot Springs Reservation for drinking and bathing purposes free of cost to the Leo N. Levi Memorial Hospital Association;

S. 1843. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to acquire certain right of way near Engle, N. Mex.;

H. R. 228. An act to amend the United States homestead law in its application to Alaska, and for other purposes;

H. R. 13383. An act making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917; and

H. R. 15775. An act making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes.

STANARDIZATION OF LIME BARRELS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5425) to standardize lime barrels.

Mr. CLAPP. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House and request a conference, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. CLAPP, Mr. SHIELDS, and Mr. BANKHEAD conferees on the part of the Senate.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15836) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 3, 4, 6, 13, 18, 19, 20, 28, 32, 34, 35, 36, 38, 40, 41, 45, 47, 51, 54, 57, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 96, 97, and 98.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 5, 9, 10, 11, 12, 17, 22, 24, 25, 27, 29, 30, 31, 33, 37, 39, 42, 44, 46, 48, 49, 53, 55, 56, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 78, 79, 88, 89, 90, 91, 92, 93, and 94, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "For the construction of a permanent wagon and foot bridge across the creek at Internation Avenue, at Nogales, Ariz., on land reserved by the United States for customs purposes, $7,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert: "$25,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert: "$1,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert: "$2,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert: "$154,580"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Frankford Arsenal, Philadelphia, Pa.;
"For a general shop building, $106,800;
"For extension of artillery ammunition storehouse, $33,000;
"For extension of instrument department building, $22,920;
"For extension of fuse shop building, $132,300;
"For extension of artillery case shop building, $42,000;
"For extension of lead shop building, $12,000;
"For metal storehouse, $25,800;
"For a storehouse for current manufactures, $54,000;
"For purchase of additional land, $125,000;
"For one sewer and connections, $9,000;
"For garage for motor trucks, $12,000;
"For construction or repair of roads, walks, and sea wall, $11,600;
"For increasing facilities for fire protection, $24,000;
"For increasing the facilities of the arsenal for the manufacture of field artillery ammunition, $183,750;
"For five magazine buildings, including necessary barriers and fences about the buildings, railroad connections, sewer lines, lighting mains, etc., $90,900;
"In all, $885,070."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 23, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, amended to read as follows: "on a site owned by the Government or to be procured by purchase or condemnation, or in the discretion of the Secretary of War, on any suitable site that may be tendered without cost to the United States which he is authorized to accept"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$1,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 43, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "During the fiscal year 1917 there shall be covered into the appropriation established from time to time under the act approved March 12, 1914, entitled 'An act to authorize the President of the United States to locate, construct, and operate railroads in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes,' the proceeds of the sale of material utilized for temporary work and structures in connection with the operations under said act, as well as the sales of all other condemned property which has been purchased or constructed under the provisions thereof; also any moneys refunded in connection with the construction and operations under said act, and a report hereunder shall be made to Congress at the beginning of its next session"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 50, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "For the purchase of such private holdings in the Sequoia National Park as in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior are desirable for the better administration of the reservation, $50,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 52, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to employ in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, and pay, during the fiscal year 1917, out of the several appropriations for protection, improvement, and management of the various national parks, including the Hot Springs Reservation, and out of the revenues from rentals and privileges derived therefrom, a superintendent of national parks and to assist him such clerical or other services, not exceeding four persons, as the Secretary shall determine, and also to pay from said funds all necessary expenses of subsistence and travel of said superintendent when absent on duty outside of the District of Columbia. A detailed statement of all expenditures hereunder shall be made to Congress at its next session"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 95, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Public Buildings Commission: With a view to ultimately providing permanent quarters for all the governmental activities in the District of Columbia in buildings owned by the Government, a commission is created to be composed of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate and two other members of said committee, to be appointed by said chairman, the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the Senate and two other members of said committee, to be appointed by said chairman, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives and two other members of said committee, to be appointed by said chairman, the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the House of Representatives and two other members of said committee, to be appointed by said chairman, all of whom shall serve thereon only so long as they are Members of Congress, and the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds, the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds, and the Supervising Architect or the Acting Supervising Architect of the Treasury during any vacancy in said office.

"The said commission shall elect one of its members as chairman of the commission and is authorized to employ such expert clerical or other services as it may deem necessary, and shall avail itself of the advice of the Commission of Fine Arts.

"The said commission shall investigate and ascertain what public buildings are needed in the District of Columbia to provide suitable and adequate accommodations, with allowances for future expansion, for all of the offices, establishments, and public services of the Government in the District of Columbia, the proper location of such buildings, the probable cost thereof, and the probable cost of such new sites as they may deem it necessary for the Government to acquire.

"Any vacancies in said commission shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointments were made.

"For expenses of said commission, $10,000, to remain available until expended and to be paid out on vouchers signed by the chairman of said commission.

"Said commission shall make final report to Congress not later than January 1, 1918."

And the Senate agree to the same.

THOMAS S. MARTIN,
LEE S. OVERMAN,
F. E. WARREN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

JOHN J. FITZGERALD,
SWAGAR SHERLEY,
FREDK. H. GILLETT,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I move that that portion of the conference report which proposes to strike from the bill Senate amendment No. 98, which was offered by myself, be disagreed to, and that the conferees be instructed to insist upon the adoption and maintenance of that amendment.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I raise the point of order that the conference report must be adopted or rejected as a whole.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There can be no question but that the report must be agreed to as a whole or rejected as a whole.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Then, Mr. President, I move that the conference report be rejected. I realize the importance of this report, but I realize as well the manifest injustice done by the rejection of the amendment which I offered. My amendment was in the interest of the cause of labor; hence, it may be flippantly set aside; but these thoughts have occurred to me very strongly: My proposition was that the wages of the employees of the Canal Zone should not be diminished, and that was the clear and distinct understanding when the amendment was adopted. While wages and the cost of living have both been increasing in the States, in the Canal Zone since 1906 wages have stood still. The fact is that the general cost of living of the employees has increased from 25 to 100 per cent.

The proposition affecting these employees does not involve a direct reduction of the wage, but they have been receiving their homes or the rent from their homes; they have been receiving electric current for light and for other purposes of utilization; and they have been receiving such fuel as they require there free of cost. Now comes the proposition that these three features, which are primarily necessary to the well-being of every household and to the maintenance of living, are to be stricken from the bill.

My proposition was that their wage should not be diminished by any measure or provision of the bill. I feel that my amendment was manifestly just to those who have spent their lives on the Canal Zone, who have in many instances sacrificed their health in the process of becoming acclimated to that tropic zone, who have worked out with their zeal, their industry, their labor, and their genius the great project of which we are all so proud—this great Isthmian Canal that startles the nations. By the rejection of my amendment we are doing an act of unfairness and injustice to those employees.

Therefore, serious as this matter is and serious as my motion is—though I have no hope that it will be adopted—but realizing the full consequences should it be adopted, I move that the report be rejected, because our conferees have receded from the amendment which I proposed and which I have been discussing.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, from the mere reading of the conference report it is impossible for Senators to be informed of what changes have been made in the bill since it was passed by the Senate. There are about a hundred amendments which have been passed upon by the conferees, and I certainly could not from the reading ascertain the action of the conference committee. I wish to ask the Senator having the bill in charge if he will not allow the report to be printed and have it taken up the first thing to-morrow morning?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah knows that a forfeiture of $650,000 is imminent. It will take the utmost diligence to prevent it, if we proceed immediately, and I am not myself willing to take that responsibility. I think this report should be acted on before the Senate adjourns to-day. If it is not, the responsibility for the forfeiture must be with the Senate and not with me.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Virginia that he has reference, as I presume, to the payment to be made to the railroad in Alaska?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That is what I refer to.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think there is any question but that the railroad would be delighted to receive their money, even if it was a few days late.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That may be; but I am not willing to take the risk by affording the railroad the temptation of seizing this $650,000. The Interior Department is very much exercised about it. The Secretary of the Interior has called me over the telephone once and has also written me a letter.

The engineer, Mr. Edes, has also written me a letter—which I have just received, and it is here on my table—urging that there shall not be any delay. Even after the bill is passed it will take some days to perfect this payment.

I think this report ought to be disposed of to-night. I am not willing to take the hazard of that forfeiture; and, if it is taken, it must be the Senate's responsibility and not mine. Therefore, if the Senator from Utah is going to insist on delay, I shall be compelled to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, of course the Senator from Virginia knows that I have no desire whatever to delay the consideration of the conference report; but there are a hundred amendments which have been passed upon, and even the numbers of the amendments were not named when the report was read. I have not any question but what the report could be considered in time if we should recess until 10.30 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Does not the Senator from Utah think that, if this matter goes back to conference, it will be impossible to perfect the bill in time to avoid this forfeiture?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know that.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I know it very well.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought the Senator was perfectly willing to have the report go over. But what about the amendments?

Mr. OVERMAN. If the Senator from Utah is interested in any particular amendment upon which he desires information, why not have it read from the desk?

Mr. SMOOT. I can do that, Mr. President.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will explain any amendment, so far as I can. What I insist on is that, in the interest of the Government and in order to avoid the forfeiture of this $650,000, the Senate should complete this conference report this afternoon.

Mr. SMOOT. I will state to the Senator from Virginia that I was not thinking of any amendment in which I was interested. What I had in mind was amendments generally to the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. To save time, while I am on my feet, I wish to say for the information of the Senate that, being under duress for want of time, the conferees on the part of the Senate did proceed more hastily than was agreeable to us. I should certainly have persisted and continued this conference much longer, with the hope of maintaining some of the positions of the Senate which have now been abandoned, but I did not feel justified in persisting any longer. We sat up nearly all night last night and took the bill up again this morning. The conferees on the part of the Senate have done the very best they could under the circumstances without jeopardizing the interests of the Government.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Virginia permit me to make a suggestion?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator from Virginia had not felt under duress, he would not have asked the committee to have worked all day Sunday, would he?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That is certainly true. We worked the entire day on Sunday from 9 o'clock in the morning until 6 o'clock in the evening in order to perfect this bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I do.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think it was in the highest degree negligent for the department to depend upon an appropriation of $650,000 in the sundry civil bill, with the consequences which are pointed out by the Senator from Virginia. That payment should have been provided for in a separate and independent bill, and it could have been done long ago without any difficulty whatever.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. If the Senator will yield to me right there to make a single remark, I wish to say that I not only agree with what he says, but I consider it most inexplicable that such a clause should ever have been inserted in a contract to be executed by the Government of the United States. The Government of the United States should not have been put under a penalty of $650,000 to comply with this contract. It is able to make its contracts good, and always does make them good, but the fact is it was done, and we have to meet that condition.

Mr. CUMMINS. It was done, and, so far as I am concerned, I would a great deal rather that the United States should lose the $650.000, or whatever else it may lose on account of the forfeiture, than enact legislation which is radically wrong or omit proper legislation which is radically right. So far as I look at it, I am not willing to be coerced into action upon the conference report on account of the alleged forfeiture; but I rose to ask the Senator from Virginia concerning the fate of certain amendments. It may be that I will have no objection whatever to the adoption of the conference report. What disposition was made of the amendment relating to the Federal Trade Commission?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Some of the amendments concerning the Federal Trade Commission were allowed and some were rejected. The conference report allows the commission a chief clerk and it allows secretaries for each member, but reduces the salaries of the secretaries to $1,500 instead of $1,800 as was desired.

Mr. WARREN. Twelve hundred dollars was provided in the House bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The House bill provided $1,200, which the Senate increased to $1,800. The House took the ground that the secretaries of Members of Congress receive only $1,500, and the conferees on the part of the House thought that the secretaries of the members of the Trade Commission ought to get along with the same amount. I tried my best to secure $1,800, feeling that the commission ought to have high-class men to aid them in their work.

Mr. CUMMINS. What was done with the provision in regard to rent?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The rent was left at $15,000.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I venture to inquire, if the Senator will be so kind as to give me the information, what was the disposition of the provision in bulk to allow the Trade Commission to continue the work of prosecuting its investigations of trade monopoly and the employment of legal assistance.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think that was not involved.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I think we gave all that was desired.

Mr. CUMMINS. What was the fate of the amendment which I offered and which the Senate very gladly accepted, unanimously, I think, appropriating $150,000 to enable the survivors of the battle or seige of Vicksburg to participate in a celebration or memorial in 1917?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will say to the Senator that the conferees on the part of the House took a peremptory stand and said that they would not under any circumstances agree to that amendment; and we were put to the alternative either of abandoning that or losing the bill. I will say, furthermore, they said they expected that to be provided for in a separate law and not under an appropriation bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. I know that certain Members of the House suggested that it be put in the sundry civil appropriation bill instead of being passed as an independent measure. It did pass through the Senate as an independent measure and went to the House, and I have been informed that certain Members of the House who had to do with the subject matter suggested that the course be taken that was afterwards taken. If we do not make this appropriation now, we will never be able to make it so as to be effectual; and I do not believe that the Congress of the United States wants to render it impossible for the survivors of one of the most vital struggles of the Civil War to be given the opportunity which this amendment sought to give them.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I want to assure the Senator that before we yielded we had assurances from the chairman of the committee which has control of the bill to which the Senator has referred that the bill would be reported out of committee. His idea was that the item did not belong on the sundry civil bill; but, as I recollect—and I think the other conferees will bear me out—he has the matter in his own hands and will report out the bill which has passed the Senate.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, with the permission of the Senator, I desire to say a word. As he knows, the measure to which he has referred was passed upon by the Committee on Military Affairs of this body, was reported from that committee as a separate measure, and was passed by the Senate. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the other House took the ground that there was legislation in the original bill that ought to accompany the appropriation. It was talked over by the conference committee in regard to putting that legislation in the appropriation bill. However, we received assurances from the House conferees, after a long discussion over it, that they would call up the separate bill to which the Senator has referred, report it, and undertake to secure its passage. They claim to be as much interested as we are in the final passage of the measure.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, while I regret very much that it did not remain in the bill, with these assurances, which I accept unqualifiedly, I do not want to interpose any objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will assure the Senator he is not any more earnest about this matter than I am and as are the other Senate conferees.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Wyoming a question. I did not hear what he said about the assurances that a separate and independent bill would be passed.

Mr. WARREN. I asked where the bill was, thinking it was with the House Military Committee. While we were insisting upon this item, I assumed that the separate bill had been referred in the other body to the Military Affairs Committee, but the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the House assured us that it was in his committee; that the committee would report it favorably and would attempt to secure action upon it at an early date.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I sincerely hope that he may keep that promise.

Mr. WARREN. I want it to be understood that he did not intend to promise that the House would agree to it, but he gave it as his opinion that the bill would be passed there, as it did here, without serious opposition.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I do not think that there will be any trouble aside from the opposition of the leaders over there, or a few of them.

Mr. President, may I ask the chairman of the committee a question regarding another item? I spoke to the chairman concerning it this morning, but he was not positive concerning it. To what amount was the appropriation for rural sanitation reduced?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It was reduced to $25,000.

Mr. VARDAMAN. From $75,000?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It was. That is a matter in which I am deeply interested and for which I entertain the very highest opinion as a public necessity. We did our best to maintain it at $75,000, but we could not legislate without the concurrence of the House, and they refused that concurrence. So, under the circumstances, we yielded and accepted the $25,000.

Mr. VARDAMAN. It is certainly unfortunate, Mr. President, that the appropriation has been reduced. There is no matter of more vital concern to the American people than the work among the farmers of the country, tending to improve the health and prevent the spread of disease. It is almost a crime of omission for Congress to treat the question as it has in this instance.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I desire to ask a question of the chairman of the committee, with his permission. He has referred—and the same matter has often been referred to as a reason for hastening this conference report—to a certain contract in regard to the purchase of a railroad in Alaska. I should like to ask the Senator, if he can do so, to give us the terms of that contract and that portion which has reference to the forfeiture?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It is a plain forfeiture; and it is most extraordinary that it should be found in a paper signed by an officer of the Government of the United States.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I wanted the terms of it, so that it might be a matter of record.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The forfeiture provision reads as follows:

> Tenth. In case the vendee shall make default in payment of said final installment within the time aforesaid, the vendors for their risk and loss in the premises shall be entitled to retain as and for liquidated and ascertained damages the said first payment and the benefit of any expenditure made by the vendee or by the United States on the property of the railway or otherwise connected therewith.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Now, two other questions. When is the payment due upon the failure on which the forfeiture depends?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I have a letter——

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. But the document itself must show that.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I was going to say that I have had several letters in which the 1st day of July is given as the date.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. But can not the Senator tell from the contract itself?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I am going to come to that. I have an uncertified copy, but I have no doubt an accurate copy—I suppose it is an accurate copy—which says the "5th of July." Letters have been written to me, stating that it is the 1st of July, but the copy of the contract which I have says the 5th of July.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. By what officer is the contract signed?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The copy I have is not signed at all. I presume it was signed by the Secretary of the Interior, as he would be the proper officer to sign it. It is a long contract, and the copy sent to me is without signature. It was sent to me as a true copy of the contract executed on the part of the Government, and was sent to me by special messenger from the Interior Department on my request.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. But the Senator is not informed as to what officer of the Government made the contract?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I do not know; but it must have been signed by Secretary Lane; and I notice it is marked on the outside "Approved, Woodrow Wilson."

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I have no doubt that a great many of us have lost appropriations in this bill which we think are meritorious. I know that I have, and I know the conferees have been compelled to recede from the amendments which were offered in the Senate and approved by the Senate. It seems to me, even if the forfeiture will not take effect until the 5th day of July, it will be difficult, indeed, to get the payment made before that time——

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It will take the utmost diligence to do it by that time.

Mr. SHAFROTH. And, therefore, under the circumstances, I think the conference report ought to be approved.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, there is one question I wanted to ask the chairman of the committee about the Alaska Railroad. Was the total payment to the railroad company $1,300,000?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. So I understand. Half was paid in cash, and the other half is due on either the 4th or 5th of July.

Mr. WEEKS. When was the first payment made?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I forget the date; about a year ago.

Mr. WEEKS. And that was to be forfeited, according to the terms of the contract?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That was to be forfeited if the last half was not punctually paid—forfeited as fixed and liquidated damages. Those are the terms of the contract.

Mr. WEEKS. I want to ask the chairman of the committee if he does not think it is possible to find out who is responsible for that, and suitably punish any official of the Government who would make a contract of that kind?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Of course it is possible to find out, but I hardly think it would justify the trouble of an investigation. It will not help the present situation, in any event.

Mr. WEEKS. If the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations were in a place of responsibility, and a subordinate of his made a contract of that kind, I am pretty sure the subordinate would lose his head.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That has not yet transpired, and I hope it never will.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, according to the statement of the chairman of the committee, the appropriation of $75,000 for rural sanitation has been reduced to $25,000 by the conference committee.

Mr. President, this Congress has appropriated $25,000,000 for the improvement of our coast defenses——

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, before the Senator goes further, I think I should state that we held out as long as we could, of course, for the $75,000. We found, however, upon the assurance of the chairman, that this specific appropriation was made $25,000 to require them to do the work, but that they had a large lump sum which they would use for this purpose, and that is the reason the House did not put it in; but we put it in, and they insisted that it go out, because they had provided for it in a lump sum?

Mr. GORE. How much is the lump sum?

Mr. OVERMAN. I will ask the chairman of the committee how much is the lump sum given to the Bureau of Health?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I do not recall the amount at this moment.

Mr. OVERMAN. We insisted on its going in.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I am not commenting on the appropriation for the Bureau of Health. It is apart from this particular proposition.

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to say that we insisted on it, and they agreed then to $25,000, upon our suggestion that they must be required to go on with this sanitary work.

Mr. GORE. Why, Mr. President, I did not allude to the appropriation made for the Bureau of Health. I understand that carries a considerable appropriation. What I wish to emphasize is that this bill now carries an appropriation of only $25,000 for rural sanitation. This Congress is appropriating $25,000,000 for our coast fortifications. This Congress is appropriating $180,000,000 upon the Army. This Congress is appropriating more than $300,000,000 upon the Navy. This Congress will appropriate $530,000,000 in preparing to slay our enemies, and $25,000 upon rural sanitation to assist in minimizing human suffering and saving human life!

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I do not yield.

I believe in industrial preparation; I believe in agricultural preparation; I believe in sanitary preparation. These services are beneficial whether we have peace or whether we have war. And yet more than a half billion dollars is being appropriated by this Congress upon purposes of war and $25,000 appropriated for and in the name of rural sanitation; and that, too, Mr. President, notwithstanding experts estimate that tuberculosis entails an annual loss in the United States of more than $300,000,000; that notwithstanding experts estimate that typhoid and malaria alone entail an annual loss in the United States of $1,000,000,000. Yet we have a half billion for war, and we have the miserable sum of $25,000 for the splendid purpose of rural sanitation!

In Rome it was esteemed as great an honor to save the life of a Roman citizen as to take the life of an adversary of Rome. I trust that this ancient standard of honor may one day be introduced among our standards of modern civilization.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I want to say in answer to the Senator that the Bureau of Health gets about $19,000,000. I want to say, in a few words, that the only estimate made by the department is of $75,000; and upon the representation that this work was included in the $250,000 item on page 50; here it is—

Field investigations, * * * including sanitation.

We agreed to reduce it from $75,000 to $25,000, because they had all the money that even they had asked for, according to the representations made to us.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, does the Senator announce upon the floor of the Senate that the Department of Health carrying on this work stated to the committee that they had all the money that they needed?

Mr. OVERMAN. No; I say that the chairman of the committee of the House said they had this question before them, and they did not allow it because they had given $250,000 for field work, including rural sanitation.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I had a talk last evening with the chief of that bureau, Gen. Blue, and he was very urgent; and I urged him to bring all the influence he could to bear upon the conferees on the part of the House and the Senate, and he told me that he hoped very much they would be able to retain the $75,000.

Mr. OVERMAN. Dr. Blue knows he need not have brought any influence to bear upon us for this item.

Mr. VARDAMAN. It seems to me it needed to be brought to bear somewhere, because they have lost $50,000. The $25,000 is not enough to go anywhere.

Mr. OVERMAN. I might also state that in the legislative bill, besides that, he has $250,000 to expend for that purpose.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I was not reflecting on the committee. I assumed they were overpowered by the conferees with whom they were in session; but I do say that $25,000 merely mocks the hopes of the friends of rural sanitation. In my judgment, it would be better to appropriate nothing than to make such a miserable appropriation as that. It can be of no substantial service. It can serve no other purpose than to deceive those who have their hearts fixed upon this service.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I do not wonder at the irritation of Senators on the outcome of this conference. I have seldom submitted to a conference where I felt more irritation myself. Nothing except the forfeiture of a contract that was in plain sight caused us to agree to and sign this conference report.

I desire to say, however, concerning the chairman of our conference committee and his able associate, the Senator from North Carolina, that in the long service I have had here and in the many conferences of which I have been a member I have never seen a stronger, more vigorous resistance, or a more zealous endeavor to maintain what was put in by the Senate than was manifested throughout the struggle last night until nearly 12 o'clock and again this morning from 9 o'clock until the hour that the report came in. Every inch of it was struggled for over and over. Every moment was occupied, and every point was gained that it was possible to gain. But I say again that I do not feel that we ought again ever to be caught in that kind of a situation. In the first place, I do not believe any officer of the Government ever ought to again expose the Government to the kind of a risk as that to which we have been exposed in this instance by reason of a forfeiture of contract; and the Senate, if it should ever learn of a thing of that kind again, ought to take measures to protect the Government in some other way than to force through, roughshod, Sunday and Monday and Tuesday, a bill that carries $160,000,000 or $170,000,000, where very many of the items have to be in amount something that must be determined upon after mature reflection and judgment of the committee having the bill in charge, and afterwards the approval of the Senate.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, in view of the situation and the conditions under which this conference report presents itself, and having been handed a photographic copy of the contract which gives rise to certain of the difficulties, I ask that this contract may be printed in the RECORD in connection with the conference report.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I have no objection to that, but I think the original ought to come back to the committee as soon as possible. They just sent it up for my use.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. This is only a photographic copy. It can be returned, anyway.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I want it returned to me. I ask the Secretary to see that it is returned to me, because it was sent to me for my use.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I want an accurate copy of it in the RECORD. I think there are some things in that contract to which the attention of the country ought to be called.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should think it would be better if it were printed as a Senate document, rather than in the fine type of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will instruct the official reporters to make a copy of the contract, and return the original to the Senator from Virginia.

The contract referred to is as follows:

W. E. STAVERT ET AL., SYNDICATE COMMITTEE, AND FRANKLIN K. LANE, SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR—AGREEMENT OF SALE OF ALASKA NORTHERN RAILWAY.

This agreement, made in triplicate this 6th day of April, 1915, between W. E. Stavert, F. G. Jemmett, and W. J. Boland, as a committee for the management of the Alaska Central Railway Syndicate, under an agreement dated September 14, 1909, herein called the vendors; Franklin K. Lane, as Secretary of the Interior of the United States, acting by the authority of the President of the United States, under an act of the Congress of the United States entitled "An act to authorize the President of the United States to locate, construct, and operate railroads in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes," approved March 12, 1914, herein called the vendee; International Assets Limited, a corporation organized under the laws of the Province of Ontario, Canada, holder of a charge against the deposited securities herein described, herein called the Assets Co.; Geoffrey T. Clarkson, holder of a charge against the deposited securities herein described and as trustee under a deed of trust and mortgage dated August 1, 1911, between the Assets Co. and said Clarkson; the Canadian Bank of Commerce, herein called the Canadian depositary; and American Security & Trust Co., a corporation organized under the laws of the District of Columbia, herein called the Washington depositary.

Whereas the vendee desires to acquire complete control and a clear title to all the assets and franchises of the Alaska Northern Railway Co., herein called the railway; and

Whereas the vendors represent that they are, subject to the charges thereon in favor of said Clarkson and the Assets Co. and one O. G. Laberee, hereinafter referred to, the owners of all the issued bonds and capital stock of the railway; that is to say, $5,000,000 first-mortgage bonds and $5,000,000 fully paid stock; and

Whereas it has been agreed that subject to the terms hereinafter stated the vendor shall sell and the vendee shall purchase said bonds and stock and that the vendors shall procure and deposit the transfers, releases, and other documents hereinafter mentioned, all of which are herein referred to as the deposited securities, and shall enter into the covenants and agreements herein contained, the intention being that the sale hereby agreed upon shall be conditional upon the vendee through the transfer of said bonds and stock, the delivery of the deposited securities and the covenants and provisions herein contained becoming the owner of the assets and franchises of the railway free to his reasonable satisfaction of all liens, debts, and claims other than any possible claim, right, or demand of the United States.

Therefore, for valuable consideration and in consideration of their mutual promises the parties agree as follows:

First. The vendors agree that they will forthwith upon the execution hereof deposit with the Washington depositary, to be held by it hereunder, the following securities and documents, that is to say:

The temporary first-mortgage 30-year 5 per cent gold bond of the railway for $5,000,000, dated as of May 1, 1910;

Stock certificates for fully paid-up capital stock of the railway to the amount of $5,000,000, with transfers of same in blank duly executed;

Agreements between the railway and the Alaska Northern Construction Corporation and between the railway and the Alaska Northern Express Co. in forms hereto annexed marked "A" and "B," respectively, to become effective only on the final consummation of the sale; and Resignations by every trustee and every officer of the railway and of all permanent employees—that is to say, of employees other than those subject to dismissal on notice of one month or less.

Second. The assets of the railway are agreed to include those set out in the list hereto annexed marked "C," and as supplementing same the vendors agree to deliver to the vendee on or before June 1, 1915, an inventory in reasonable detail setting forth the rolling stock and other personal property of the railway. It is, however, expressly understood that the sale is not intended to include claims of the railway or of the vendors against any person or persons whomsoever with reference to the title to the Seward town site, otherwise known as United States surveys 726 north and south, other than the lands in said town site set out in said annexed list "C"; and should the vendee or the railway at any time recover any moneys or any lands in respect of any such claims, the same shall be paid over or conveyed to the vendors after deduction of the actual expenses incurred by the vendee or the railway in connection with such recovery; and the vendee shall cause such proceeds to be released from the lien of the mortgage securing the bonds of the railway: Provided, however, That the vendee or the railway shall be under no obligation to prosecute same, and that they shall have the right at any time they see fit to compromise said claims on any terms deemed proper.

Third. The vendee shall proceed forthwith to investigate the title to the said securities and assets with a view to the acceptance or refusal thereof before July 1, 1915, but if he shall find that it will be impracticable to accept or refuse the title before that date and shall so notify said Boland and said Clarkson not less than 10 days before that date he shall be entitled to such further time for such investigation as shall be specified in such notice not exceeding two months from said July 1, 1915, which further time is herein referred to as "the extended period."

Fourth. If the vendee shall decide before July 1, 1915, or before the expiration of the extended period, as the case may be, to accept such title he shall thereupon make to the Canadian depositary the first payment hereunder which, in case time shall not be extended as aforesaid, shall be the sum of $500,000, which shall be paid on or before July 5, 1915; and in case time shall be extended as aforesaid shal be the said sum of $500,000 together with interest thereon at 6 per cent per annum from July 1, 1915, until payment, and shall be made before the expiration of the extended period, time being agreed in both the said cases to be strictly of the essence of the contract. Payments shall be made to the Canadian depositary, either in New York or Toronto at the option of the said Clarkson. On receipt of such first payment, the Canadian depositary shall forthwith pay $225,000 thereof to said Clarkson for distribution among parties entitled thereto, and shall hold the balance thereof until it shall have received the consent of O. G. Laberee, the holder of a charge against the deposited securities in form hereto annexed marked "D." On receipt of such consent the Canadian depositary shall forthwith transmit same to the vendee, and shall then pay the balance of said first payment to said Clarkson for distribution as aforesaid. In case said consent of Laberee shall not be delivered as aforesaid the Canadian depositary shall continue to hold said balance until the vendors shall have discharged and paid the lien of said Laberee and shall have delivered to the vendee satisfactory evidence of having done so. On making such payment the vendee shall be assumed to have accepted title to said securities and assets subject only to the covenant with reference to debts of the railway herein contained. If the vendee shall fail to make the first payment within the time above limited, or shall, before the expiration of the time allowed for investigation of the title, notify said Boland and said Clarkson of his rejection of said title, this agreement shall be deemed to be absolutely canceled and the Washington depositary shall thereupon deliver to the said Clarkson all the securities and documents referred to in article 1; and in case such notice shall not be given prior to said July 1, 1915, the vendee shall forthwith, upon giving such notice, pay to the said Clarkson a sum equal to interest at 6 per cent per annum on said $500,000 from said July 1, 1915, until payment.

Fifth. On the making of the first payment as aforesaid the vendee, subject to the provisions hereof, including the provision for forfeiture in case of future default, shall be deemed to be the owner of all the deposited securities, subject only to the obligation to make further payment as herein set forth, and on the making of such first payment the Washington depositary shall thereupon, if so requested by the vendee, deliver to the vendee or on his order the said stock certificates, it being understood that such first payment is part payment of the purchase price of all the deposited securities and not for such stock merely.

Sixth. If at any time after the making of the said first payment the vendee shall give notice to the Washington depositary and the said Boland and said Clarkson that it desires to assume control of the railway, the Washington depositary shall thereupon deliver to the vendee the resignations mentioned in article 1, and, if so requested by the vendee, shall forthwith cause the shares of stock so deposited to be transferred to such name or names as the vendee may instruct. From the time of giving the notice described in this article until the termination of this agreement, the vendee shall have complete operating and financial control of the railway, and all the other parties to this agreement shall take all steps that may be necessary or convenient to that end that the vendee may from time to time reasonably require: Provided, however, That if the vendee shall thus withdraw the resignations he shall forthwith deposit with the Canadian depositary like resignations of the successor trustees selected by him and of every officer and permanent employee of the railway appointed by the said trustees, and if he thus withdraws and transfers the stock he shall forthwith deposit with the Canadian depositary certificates for all such stock, with duly executed powers of attorney in blank for the transfer thereof, and the Canadian depositary shall hold the same, and on default hereunder by the vendee shall deliver same to said Clarkson or his order, and on complete performance of this agreement shall deliver the same to the vendee.

Seventh. From the time the vendee takes over the control of the railway it is agreed that such control until default in payment of the final installment shall be absolute. The vendee shall from time to time take and hold all the receipts of the railway; may operate, may extend, change, or alter its lines, plant, and equipment, or any of them, and use all of its assets.

Eighth. The second and final payment shall be the sum of $650,000, without interest, and shall be paid by the vendee to the Canadian depositary in New York or Toronto, at the option of the said Clarkson, and shall be made, in any event, on or before July 5, 1916; time being agreed to be strictly of the essence of this provision; and in case, by appropriation of the Congress of the United States for that purpose, such sum shall be available to the vendee before that date it shall be paid as soon as it becomes thus available. Upon such payment the vendee shall become the absolute owner of all the deposited securities and the Washington depositary shall forthwith deliver the same to him.

Ninth. The vendors and the Assets Co., with the assent of said Clarkson, trustee for bondholders of Assets Co. as aforesaid, out of and to the extent of the proceeds that shall be received by them, respectively, hereunder, agree to indemnify the railway and the vendee against and to hold them harmless from all debts of the railway now existing of which the vendee shall have given notice to the Canadian depositary prior to the making of the final payment hereunder. If any such debt shall arise or be discovered, the vendee may give notice thereof in writing to the Canadian depositary, requiring it to withhold from the said final payment made hereunder a sum to be stated in such instruction, which, in the judgment of the vendee, shall be adequate to protect the vendee from such debt; and in that event the amount so to be deducted shall not be paid to said Clarkson for distribution until such debt is paid, settled, or discharged, but shall be held by the Canadian depositary for the satisfaction and discharge of such debt. The vendors and the Assets Co. shall have the right, in case any such debt is disputed, at their own expense, to intervene in any legal proceedings brought against the railway.

Tenth. In case the vendee shall make default in payment of said final installment within the time aforesaid, the vendors, for their risk and loss in the premises, shall be entitled to retain as and for liquidated and ascertained damages the said first payment and the benefit of any expenditure made by the vendee or by the United States on the property of the railway or otherwise connected therewith, and both the said depositaries shall forthwith deliver to said Clarkson all the said securities, transfers, and documents in their hands, respectively, and the Canadian depositary shall forthwith pay over to said Clarkson for distribution as aforesaid any balance in its hands of said $500,000, irrespective of whether said O. G. Laberee shall or shall not have given the consent aforesaid; and the vendors shall be entitled to be restored to their rights as of the date when the vendee shall have assumed control of the railway, free from any debt, lien, or obligation created or suffered by the vendee. There shall, however, be no obligation on the vendee or on the United States to restore the physical condition of any of said assets in any respect in which the same shall have been altered during such control or operation; nor shall the vendee or the United States be bound to account for any moneys collected, received, or payable in connection with the operation of the railway while under the control of the vendee as aforesaid. The vendee expressly agrees not to do any act while in control as aforesaid which shall cause any surrender, abandonment, or impairment of any of the rights or franchises of the railway.

Eleventh. The vendors, the Assets Co., and the said Clarkson shall from and after the execution of this agreement furnish to the vendee all information as to title and as to the rights and assets of the railway in their possession or control, respectively, that the vendee may reasonably require and shall afford the vendee and its agents an opportunity to examine all documents and records with regard thereto in their possession, custody, or control, respectively.

Twelfth. Neither depositary shall be liable for any action hereunder in good faith nor for anything except its own fraud or gross negligence. Neither shall be liable for the acts of its respective agents or subordinates hereunder, provided the same shall have been selected with reasonable care.

Thirteenth. The charges of the Canadian depositary shall be paid by the vendors and the charges of the Washington depositary by the vendee.

Fourteenth. Assets Co. and said Clarkson, respectively, as holders of charges upon the deposited securities, consent to the execution and performance of this agreement and to the sale and delivery of the deposited securities to the vendee on the terms hereof. The sale shall be free from said charges or claims and from any other charges or claims in favor of them or any of them; and the said parties agree that they will look solely to the purchase price paid hereunder for the satisfaction of said charges or claims.

Fifteenth. The vendee shall be under no obligation in respect of the application of any payment hereunder by the Canadian depositary or by the said Clarkson.

Sixteenth. Notices to be given hereunder shall be sufficient, if deposited in the usual manner in the United States mail, addressed as follows: In the case of the Washington depositary, addressed to such depositary, Washington, D. C.; in the case of the Canadian depositary, addressed to such depositary at 23 King Street West, Toronto, Canada; in the case of the said Boland, addressed W. J. Boland, 2 Toronto Street, Toronto, Canada; and in the case of the said Clarkson, addressed G. T. Clarkson, 15 Wellington Street West, Toronto, Canada.

Seventeenth. It is expressly agreed that the covenants of the vendors and of the Assets Co. are limited to the proceeds of said sale which shall come to their hands and will not involve any further or other liability.

Eighteenth. This agreement shall be binding up the successors and legal representatives of the parties hereto. The vendee executes this agreement in his official capacity as the representative of the President of the United States as aforesaid; and the agreement shall be enforceable by his successor in authority. The powers and duties of each other party hereto shall devolve upon the successors of each of them in their respective capacities. Either depositary may be changed at any time by the consent in writing of the vendee and the said Clarkson.

In witness whereof the Assets Co. has caused these presents to be executed under its corporate seal and under the hands of the proper officers in that behalf, and the vendors, vendee, and said Clarkson have hereunto set their hands and seals the day and year first above written.

A line of railroad commencing at the southern boundary line of United States survey No. 726 south, otherwise the town of Seward to Kern, Alaska, a distance of 71.6 miles, to which the same has been completed, and extending thence in a partially completed condition toward a point on the Yukon River to which projected and all the branches, extensions, easements, rights, liberties, and franchises thereof, and all the railroad tracks, rights of way, depot houses, stations, and terminal grounds, sidetracks, bridges, viaducts, culverts, fences, tunnels, and other structures, docks, ditches, stations, elevators, engine houses, car houses, coal houses, wood houses, warehouses, machine shops, telegraph and telephone lines, superstructures, water tanks, switch tracks, switches, gravel pits; also all equipment, machinery, instruments, tools, implements, ties, iron, rails, furniture, and other chattels; all wood, coal, oil, fuel, and other supplies; all engines, locomotives, tenders, cars, motor cars and other rolling stock, equipment, and furniture of every description; all books of account, maps, inventories, and other documents; all property or interests, legal or equitable, real, personal, or mixed; all privileges and immunities; all the tenements, hereditaments, appurtenances, reversions, remainder, or remainders; all the estate, right, title, interest, claim, possession, and demand whatsoever, as well in law as in equity in any way connected with the said line of railway.

The lands, easements, leases, and locations of the railway, including the following:

Right of way for two railroad tracks over and across lands described as beginning at the southwest corner of United States survey No. 726 south; thence north on the west boundary line of said survey No. 726 south 730 feet; thence east 99 feet; thence south 140 feet to the meander line; thence south 17° 15′ west on the meander line of said survey No. 726 south 321 feet, more or less, to the point of beginning; granted by deed of Frank L. Ballaine to the Alaska Central Railway Co., recorded in Book I of deed, pages 383 and 384 of the records of said precincts and Territory.

Seven and seven-tenths acres of land, more or less, in Seward town site conveyed by deed from Frank L. Ballaine and wife to the Alaska Central Railway Co., dated June 15, 1905, recorded in Book I of deeds, pages 389, 390, 391, and 392 of the records of said precincts and Territory.

Lease of right of way, dated May 6, 1905, covering the location now occupied by the railroad track over the land embraced in United States survey No. 726 south, town of Seward, which lease is recorded in book 1 of leases, pages 6 and 7 of the records of said precincts and Territory, being that portion of the railway track on Railway Avenue, alongside blocks 6 and 7, town of Seward.

The tract of land in Seward, known and described as United States survey No. 605, containing 1.40 acres as surveyed by Charles S. Hubbell, United States deputy surveyor, November 29 and 30, 1910, as terminal tract of Alaska Northern Railway under act of Congress approved June 30, 1906, according to the plat and field notes thereof approved July 10, 1911, filed and of record in the United States General Land Office, Washington, D. C.

Tract of land in Seward known and described as United States survey No. 606, containing 0.28 acre as surveyed by Charles S. Hubbell, United States deputy surveyor, May 31 and June 1, 1910, as terminal tract of Alaska Northern Railway Co. under act of Congress approved June 30, 1906, according to the plat and field notes thereof approved January 10, 1911, and filed and of record in the United States General Land Office, Washington, D. C.

Tract of land known as Alaska Central Terminal Grounds, containing 60 acres more or less, according to the map thereof, as surveyed by William J. Boland, chief engineer Alaska Central Railway Co., April 20, 21, and 22, 1905, being the land embraced in United States survey No. 607, and being immediately north of and bounded on the south by United States survey No. 726; bounded on the north by United States survey No. 243; and on the east by the high-tide line of Resurrection Bay from the south line of said survey No. 243 to the north line of said survey No. 726.

Lots 16, 17, 18, 19, and 20, in block 16, of the town of Seward, conveyed by warranty deed from Frank L. Ballaine to the Alaska Central Railway Co., dated June 15, 1905, recorded June 15, 1905, in Book 2 of Deeds, pages 25 and 26.

Tract of land known and described as United States survey No. 608, containing 19.45 acres, as surveyed by Charles S. Hubbell, June 6–8, 1908, as terminal tract under act of Congress approved June 30, 1906, of the Alaska Northern Railway, situate on the east side of Kenai Bay, according to the plat and field notes thereof, approved February 8, 1911, and filed and of record in the United States General Land Office, Washington, D. C.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. In that same connection, there is a letter from the engineer that I should like to have go in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
ALASKAN ENGINEERING COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., May 6, 1916.

Hon. THOMAS S. MARTIN,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR MARTIN: In connection with the detailed estimates of the appropriation required by this commission for the construction of the Government railroad in Alaska for the fiscal year 1917, your attention is respectfully called to the item for the "final payment to be made for the Alaska Northern Railway, July, 1916, $650,000."

The contract of purchase of the Alaska Northern Railway, section 5, reads as follows:

"Fifth. The second and final payment shall be made by the vendee to the depositary for account of Geoffrey T. Clarkson, trustee, and shall be the sum of $650,000, without interest. This payment shall be made in any event on or before July 1, 1916, and in case by appropriation of the Congress of the United States for that purpose such sum shall be available to the vendee before that date, it shall be paid as soon as it becomes thus available.

"On such payment made to the depositary the vendee shall become the absolute owner of all the deposited securities."

In the event that the sundry civil appropriation bill is not approved before July 1, 1916, is there some way that money may be made available for this payment?

Respectfully, WM. C. EDES, Chairman.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, the other day I offered an amendment at page 168, line 14, increasing the appropriation for the Department of Labor by the sum of $200,000. The House placed the appropriation at $2,450,000. The estimate of the department was $2,650,000; in other words, $200,000 greater. I was then informed that the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] while I was at lunch had offered the same amendment. I have looked up the matter since that time. I find that the Senator from Massachusetts stated some of the grounds urged by the Department of Labor for the necessity of this additional $200,000. The amendment was accepted by the chairman of the committee. It went to the conference. I am now informed, although I have not read the conference report, that the Senate conferees have receded from the Senate amendment with regard to this $200,000 and have accepted the House amendment.

If this were just some ordinary little amendment of local benefit in some State, if it smelt of "pork barrel," I do not conceive that under the emergency we would have any right to examine into it. But here one of the great departments of the Government, that since its organization has been doing more good work than nearly any other department of the Government, is denied its modest estimate, in the face of a hearing before the House committee, and without any excuse being offered by members of either committee of either branch of Congress.

Now, why? I have in my hand a report, made out at my request by the Department of Labor, in which it is stated that this $200,000 is absolutely necessary for the proper conduct of the work of that department. I find by an examination of this report that the other departments of the Government have had their estimates nearly all carried out, or at least the House provisions as to them have been increased. I do not know whether the members of the conference realize the importance of the work of this department, or whether they take the same interest in the work of this department that I do.

I want to say that I believe the Department of Labor to-day is doing more actual internal good for this country than any other department of the Government. It has had additional work thrown on it. It is mediating in these great strike disturbances that naturally arise throughout the country, and there is no reason to expect that those disturbances will decrease. The country is not only prosperous but, as is natural in prosperous times, the cost of living is increasing and has increased, as it always has in prosperous times. That is natural. It is natural, then, that labor should strive to increase the profits of its only product, the same as everyone else is striving to increase his profit. That causes these disturbances throughout the country; and this great labor body that we have here, this department of our Government that we have recently created, has mediated, according to the report of the Secretary of Labor, in something like 150 or 200 of these unfortunate disturbances during the last two years. It has done more to bring about amicable agreements between employer and employee than has been accomplished before by anybody in this country. The report stands here, and shows that nearly one-third of these disturbances were settled through the mediation of this department.

That is not the only work the department is doing, either. There were idle men in one section of this country, and there was a tremendous demand for labor in another section of this country. This department has reached out and has found employees for the congested business in one section of the country, while it has found work for these idle men in other sections of the country.

Now, I want to know if any greater or better work can be accomplished for the people of this country than bringing idle men to work that is waiting for them? That is another great work that has been imposed upon this department. They are carrying it out, and extremely successfully; and I insist that it is not a matter of slight importance.

Let me read to you just a few brief statements from the Department of Labor with regard to this $200,000 appropriation:

It is absolutely necessary that the $200,000 which has been cut out be restored for the following reasons:

(1) Immigration via the Atlantic ports, which are the most affected by the European war, is on the increase and the prospects are that the total for the next fiscal year will be materially in excess of that of the fiscal year 1915; from present indications it may double in volume.

(2) There has been an increased immigration at all Pacific coast ports.

(3) Canadian border: Since the outbreak of the European war, thousands of aliens in Canada, who were subjects of Governments with which Great Britain is now at war, have been seeking to cross the border into the United States, in most cases surreptitiously. The smuggling of contraband Chinese is also active. The registered immigration over the Canadian border line in the last fiscal year was 90,000 in round numbers, and rate of increase for the first 10 months of this year indicates that the increase will bring the figures above the 100,000 limit.

(4) Mexican border: In view of the Mexican situation, additional officers and guards are necessary to handle the cases of diseased aliens and refugees, many of whom are entering the United States surreptitiously, the present force being insufficient to properly look after the work.

In this connection, as we all have seen in the papers during the last few days, hundreds of these Mexicans have been flying across the American border into this country to avoid, as they believe, what will be the horrors of a war between the United States and Mexico. Those men will continue to fly to this country unless we patrol that border with sufficient troops to prevent them from entering.

(5) There has been no cessation of work at the interior stations, as warrant proceedings have been instituted in the cases of several thousand aliens who can not now be deported because of war conditions, and their cases are being placed in shape for final action so that deportation may be made effective as soon as conditions permit.

(6) Employment work: There has been increased activity in connection with the employment work authorized by section 40 of the immigration act, and this must be curtailed and perhaps abandoned altogether unless additional funds can be obtained.

Does Congress desire that important work abandoned? I do not think it does.

(7) Furloughs: During the first four months of the present fiscal year it was necessary to furlough a large number of employees in the Immigration Service in order to prevent a deficiency, and it is obvious that unless the additional $200,000 for which request is made is restored it will become necessary early during the coming fiscal year to resume furloughs. It is apparent that to do so will have a very destructive effect on the morale of the service and prove extremely embarrassing. Not only that, but the effect of furloughing resulted in the loss of some of the best immigration officers because they were able to get steady employment either in civil life or in other departments of the Government at the compensation they were then receiving from the Immigration Service, and in some instances more.

(8) The Immigration Service, except during the European war, has been self-supporting, but when considered in connection with the service commencing at the time of the inauguration of the per capita tax on immigrants it has yielded a net surplus revenue over all expenses of $10,000,000, in round numbers.

And yet this is the service that Congress intends to cripple; this is the service that Congress likely intends to abandon. They do not conceive that the work of this department is of any importance whatever. They tell us that the Government is liable to lose $650,000 of forfeit by reason of the purchase of some railroad in Alaska. I do not believe they will do anything of the kind. I took a big interest in the building of the railroad in Alaska. I know that railroad company could not sell to anybody on earth except the Government, and I know that the Government could parallel that line and the line would be absolutely worthless. There was no necessity for any such clause in the contract, and whether it is there or whether it is not there, do not think for one moment that those people would not be delighted to accept that money. That does not count, either.

I do not care whether we lose the $650,000 if it is to be at the cost of crippling one of the best departments of this Government. I would rather lose $650,000 on behalf of the Government than put out of business the great employment bureau that is finding labor for the laboring men in this country. I would rather lose $650,000 than to have hordes of diseased and ignorant and criminal aliens forcing themselves across the line on the north and on the south. I will not be frightened into this rush by the unfounded fear that $650,000 may be lost.

Again, it seems of interest to the members of this body to know whether the Senate is participating in legislation. If there is no more importance to be attached to an amendment or a bill in this body than simply the pleasure of submitting it to some other branch of Congress for their consideration and approval, I feel that we are wasting our time here in adopting amendments, aye, we are wasting our time in appointing conferees.

Have the conferees on the part of this body the sole responsibility for that $650,000? Have not the conferees of the other branch of Congress any responsibility with regard to the $650,000? Can the conferees of the other body hold that $650,000 proposition as a club over the conferees of the Senate and compel the Senate conferees to agree to anything that the conferees of the other branch want?

Are they not interested in protecting the United States Government against loss? Are they not willing to come to a reasonable conference, to a fair conference? Are they not willing to concede as well as to demand? Yet so far we have heard nothing from the conferees on our side except that they were compelled to do something they did not want to do because of the insistent demands of the conferees on the part of the other branch of Congress.

If we have got to submit to their insistent demands, if a fair and free conference is going to cease to be a part of the parliamentary situation of these two bodies, then I think the sooner we cease to have conferences the better off we will be; the sooner we find that legislation in this body amounts to nothing, the better off we will be.

That is all I have to say on this matter. Those are my views. I sincerely hope that this conference report will not be agreed to and that our conferees will be permitted to go back and in a fair and free conference with the representatives of the other body, and at least express to those conferees the views of the Senate with regard to some of the amendments we have adopted here after debate. I hope that will be permitted. I hope that this report will not be agreed to. It can not be said that this matter was not brought to the attention of the conferees because there was a hearing in the House of Representatives, which hearing is a public document which announced the facts that I have read to this body.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, it is true that this matter was called to the attention of the conferees. The Senator from Nevada seems to think that he is the only man who knows anything about it, and he can get up here and assail and attack and impeach the conferees because we could not succeed in making the House people agree with him about every matter in the bill. He even charges the conferees with not having made an attempt to present it to the House conferees.

Mr. PITTMAN. Just a moment. I do not remember having charged the conferees with not having made an attempt to present it.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The Senator did not use that language, but he did it substantially time and again during his speech.

Mr. PITTMAN. I do not know how much attempt the Senate conferees made. The chairman knows better than I what attempt was made and the responsibility for the failure to retain the amendment.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The Senator has a very vivid imagination. He talks about Congress attempting to destroy the Immigration Service, and yet the bill as now reported appropriates $2,450,000 for the Immigration Service alone. I forget the amount for the entire Labor Department but for the Immigration Service alone it appropriates $2,450,000.

Mr. HUGHES. With no immigration.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The Senator from New Jersey says there is no immigration. There is not any more immigration perhaps than can be cared for with $2,400,000; but if more is required they can do as they always do, make a deficiency and Congress never has failed to meet it. There has been no injustice done to the Immigration Service. No injustice is intended to be done to the Immigration Service, and the attack of the Senator is gratuitous, unauthorized, and unwarranted.

I wish Senators such as the Senator from Nevada would tell us how we can make other people agree with us. By our Constitution it takes the concurrence of both Houses to legislate. We argued this matter as earnestly and as persistently as we were capable of doing. It is true we have not the ability and ingenuity which the Senator from Nevada imagines he has. He thinks it would have been easy enough; and I wish to God he had been on the conference committee and tried his wonderful ability and genius. Then we would have seen what he could do.

At any rate, Mr. President, the conferees appointed by the Senate did the very best they could possibly do. They worked day and night and they believe they worked out a fairly successful result? They held about one-half the amendments which were put on by the Senate, and everybody on the floor of the Senate knows that a great many amendments were put on which while meritorious perhaps were irregular and difficult to sustain. We were unable to sustain them. We sustained half, I think, less than half counting them numerically, but $800,000 in money which was added by the Senate amendments remained in the bill as reported from the conference. We have made reasonable provision for all the services of the Government. While many things have been omitted from the bill which we desired to keep in it, there were none omitted of serious and vital importance, the omission of which would jeopardize the successful administration of the laws of the country and the protection of the rights and interests of the people.

It is perfectly useless for Senators because they have been disappointed about some pet scheme which they are enamored of to come here and assail the conference committee because the Senate conferees were unable to accomplish all they wanted. We made an earnest and persistent and prolonged fight to maintain every proposition which the Senate asked us to maintain, and we think that under the circumstances we met with fair and reasonable success. We would undoubtedly have retained some other items if we had had time, but we did not feel justified in jeopardizing the appropriation of $650,000, and we obtained what we consider is a fairly reasonable bill. The exigencies of the situation required us to hurry. We held on as long as we could reasonably hold on, and we present the result of our work to the Senate and ask the Senate to adopt this conference report, believing the best interests of the country will be subserved thereby.

Mr. JONES. I wish to ask the Senator from Virginia about one or two amendments. I could not ascertain from hearing the conference report what was done with them. One is an amendment involving an appropriation for the medical relief of natives of Alaska. Can the Senator tell me what was done with the amendment?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It was not put in the bill. The House conferees would not agree to it, and it was eliminated. My friend, the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], calls attention to the fact that the House has already adopted the conference report, and did it immediately upon its submission this morning, realizing that the exigencies exist and that immediate action was necessary for the preservation of the rights of the Government.

Mr. JONES. The Senator from Wyoming confirms the statement that the chairman of the committee made that the Senate conferees had to recede from that amendment.

I want to ask the Senator also about an amendment which was put on providing for an additional ship for the Pacific coast to be used by the Coast and Geodetic Survey. What became of that amendment?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The Senate conferees receded from that. We secured an amendment for the repair of three ships now in service. We tried our best to keep the fourth, but I am satisfied no serious injury will result if that is delayed for a year. We tried our best to retain it.

Mr. JONES. I am satisfied the conferees did the very best they could under the circumstances, and I have no criticism to make of them. I regret very much that the situation in reference to this bill and this conference report is such as it is. My recollection is that the bill came from another body on Saturday and the committee met on Sunday and on Monday the bill was reported to the Senate. What I think is a subject of just criticism is the delay in bringing this bill to the Senate—in getting it over here. Those in control knew of the situation—what seems to me an inexcusable situation—in reference to the contract in Alaska and what we were likely to forfeit unless the bill was passed, and it should have been gotten sooner to the Senate, so as to give us some time to consider the bill properly, and also the amendments that were to be presented.

If the mere fact that the bill is delayed for only a day or two forces the Senate to give up what it considers important amendments, the Senate might about as well abdicate with reference to appropriation bills. That is simply notice to those elsewhere that all they have to do is to delay the appropriation bills until the stress of the 1st of July, and then they can force the Senate to accept the bill practically as they passed it.

I am not going to delay the bill. I regret very much that these amendments, together with others, were not put in the bill. I think the Government is really neglecting its duty with reference to the Indians of Alaska, who are the wards of the Government, and they are almost helpless without the Government's help and care. The commerce between this country and Alaska is very greatly endangered by the failure of the Government to provide the necessary ships to carry on the work of the Coast and Geodetic Survey and conduct the parties that ought to be conducted in order to discover the great dangers to commerce not only in those waters, but in waters elsewhere.

As I said, I am satisfied the conferees on the part of the Senate under these circumstances did the very best they could. I regret very much that the conditions were such that the conferees could not have more time to consider the amendments, but as far as I am concerned I shall not attempt to defeat the conference report.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee a question. I offered an amendment to the sundry civil bill when it was pending in the Senate, which was agreed to and made a part of the bill. The amendment proposed to appropriate in round numbers $196,000 to purchase a strip of land lying between Connecticut Avenue and the Zoological Park and add the same to the park.

I understand that the Senate conferees were not able to bring the House conferees to agree to that amendment. I do not know the attitude of the House conferees or the House Committee on Appropriations or the House itself with respect to the merits of the amendment I offered. I am assured that every member of the Senate Committee on Appropriations believed, for I took the matter before that committee, that the strip of land to which I refer should be purchased by the Government and added to the Zoo Park, and that it will be almost necessary that it shall be done, if not now, at some early future time.

I am impressed from what I have heard with the notion that the amendment was not agreed to because of the unusual exigencies of this time and the unusual demands upon the Treasury, the very great addition to appropriations because of the Army and Navy, and other like things, and that it does not concern the merits of the proposition. I should like to ask the Senator if this statement is in accordance with his understanding?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That is my understanding. In fact, the distinct statement made by the House conferees was that they did not question the merits of the proposition. There were two arguments that they made. One was that the cost was unreasonable. The second was that it was not urgent; that it could wait a while. The ultimate acquisition of this ground, they conceded, would be very desirable, if not absolutely necessary. They were not opposed to it on principle or on its merits, but they objected to the expenditure of that amount of money at this particular time. Those were the reasons given.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I agree that, in view of the unusual conditions at the present time, the Appropriations Committees of the two Houses, in the exercise of their powers, and keeping those conditions in view, should eliminate and exclude from appropriation bills almost everything that is not now absolutely necessary.

We are going to add hundreds of millions of dollars because of the things with which we are all familiar, and to which I have partly alluded, to our appropriations this year, and we shall have to add hundreds of millions of dollars in the form of additional taxation to the burdens of the people. I myself believe, however meritorious individual propositions may be, it would be a wise thing to put them aside for a while and to await a more opportune time to appropriate for them.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I recognize the fact that the fiscal year will close within a couple of days, and that this great appropriation bill should become a law before that time. I sympathize with the conferees on the part of the Senate. Ordinarily our conferees have a very difficult task to maintain the amendments adopted by the Senate against the House conferees. From what I can learn the Senate amendments in this particular bill have not been considered upon their merits by the conferees of the House, but brushed aside in an autocratic way that was anything but gentlemanly.

I am not going to delay the adoption of the report by discussing the amendments of the Senate lost in conference. I am quite content to say that though amendments which it seems to me are just and agreed to by the Senate have been eliminated by the conference report. For all this I believe the conferees on the part of the Senate have done the best they could under the existing conditions. When I first examined the conference report and noted the important amendments of the Senate which had been receded from—in fact, I may say they consist of the most important amendments agreed to by the Senate—I felt that perhaps there was a yielding on the part of the Senate conferees that could not be justified; but after talking with the members of the conference committee I believe that they did everything in their power to retain the amendments adopted by the Senate.

I had hoped, Mr. President, that the amendment which I offered providing that the plat of ground west of Ashmead Place, and between it and Rock Creek, and the plat of ground west of Twentieth Street NW., and between it and Rock Creek, would be agreed to in conference. It should have been.

Mr. STONE. Yes; it should have been.

Mr. SMOOT. There is not a question of doubt about it. I understand that the conferees on the part of the House took the position that because four small houses had been built upon the ground it was too expensive to include the ground in the parkway that is to connect Rock Creek Park with Potomac Park.

I care not if a commission did decide that the elimination of the land provided for in my amendment would not in any way affect the beauty of the parkway. I believe that if it is eliminated the people of Washington will never cease to regret the elimination and that small houses should have been built upon land that was originally part of the parkway plan. I believe a mistake was made when it was eliminated. The back yards of those small houses will ever be an unsightly view for the people using the driveway between the parks named and those crossing the beautiful bridge on Connecticut Avenue crossing Rock Creek.

To me, Mr. President, even if the land costs what it is said it will cost—nearly $200,000—it is a mere bagatelle when you take into consideration the detriment to the parkway by allowing the back doors and back yards of a lot of small houses to butt up against the parkway. On March 4, 1913, Congress undertook to provide a parkway to connect the two beautiful parks named. There was a plan agreed upon beforehand, which was submitted to Congress, showing exactly the land that would be necessary to carry the plan to a successful conclusion; but upon investigation it was found that the plan included properties near the Potomac Park, at the mouth of the Chesapeake & Ohio Canal; that it included the Chesapeake & Ohio Canal property, and also included the Washington Gaslight Co. For that reason there was a commission appointed to reexamine the lands to ascertain what lands could be eliminated from the original plan. The commission made the examination and submitted a new plan, excluding the Chesapeake & Ohio Canal property and also the property of the Washington Gaslight Co. and the little strip of property between Twentieth Street and the Connecticut Avenue Bridge. The exclusion of the latter was a mistake, and the amendment which I offered, and which was accepted by the Senate, was to reinclude that small plot of land in the plan.

Mr. President, I am sorry that the amendment was not agreed to. I suppose the chairman of the committee did everything he could do to have it remain in the bill. He so states. I hope that at an early date, upon some other bill, this amendment will be agreed to, and that it will become a law. If it were not for the fact that the fiscal year ends in a couple of days, and if it were not for the further fact that this unfortunate contract entered into with the Secretary of the Interior relative to the next payment for the railroad purchased by the Government in Alaska is involved, I should insist that the conference report be disagreed to, that the Senate ask for a further conference with the House, and that the conferees upon the part of the Senate insist not only upon this amendment but upon a number of other Senate amendments. I wish to say, however, that, under the present conditions and circumstances, realizing the position of our conferees, and believing that they have done the very best they could, I shall not insist upon any further consideration of the items in which the Senate is so deeply interested.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I do not feel that our action with reference to this conference report should be in any way controlled by the terms of the contract which has been referred to in the debate this afternoon. I doubt if anybody has ever set about purchasing a railroad on the installment plan without entering into some such contract; but I question very much if any attempt would ever be made to enforce such a provision in such a contract against the Government of the United States. Those who have been here any length of time know that Uncle Sam is about as cold-blooded a creditor as exists on the surface of the earth, certainly on this side of the water; and if the other parties to the contract should attempt to enforce the penalty clause of the agreement they would probably be knocking around the Halls of Congress for the next 25 years trying to get committees to listen to their complaints.

We have got possession of this railroad; we have paid part of the money, and whether we pay the balance of it on the 1st of July or the 5th of July or in 15 years, they will be glad to get it. There need be no difficulty, so far as that is concerned; and we can send this report back to conference if we want to do so, in spite of the apprehensions regarding the contract.

If the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] thinks that the matter in which he is interested—and it is a matter in which I am also interested—is of sufficient importance, I think he is fully justified in voting to reject this conference report.

I am deeply interested in the amendment adopted on motion of my colleague [Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey]. That amendment provided for a continuation of the present practice in the Panama Canal Zone of furnishing to employees rent and according them various other privileges.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Rent, fuel, and electric current.

Mr. HUGHES. The Senate unanimously accepted that amendment; and I feel that, while the Senate conferees in this instance, as they have always done, so far as my knowledge goes, truly represented their associates in the Senate on this matter, they may have been somewhat under duress on account of the hobgoblin made out of this clause of the contract which, it is alleged, is going to work so much injury to the United States. I can say to Senators that there is no court in the world that would enforce that contract against an individual, much less against the Government of the United States. There is not a State in the Union the courts of which would not take equitable cognizance of the rights of the parties to a contract of that kind and do equity between them. That would be so as between citizens, and the United States Government occupies a more favorable position in case of a controversy of that kind than would a citizen.

So far as I am concerned, I am going to vote to send this report back to conference. I am going to strengthen the arm of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations with a vote of the Senate, if I can, and send him back to conference, and have him tell the gentlemen representing the other House that we are deeply and sincerely interested in the amendments which the Senate has added to this bill, and that we are willing to go just as far toward bringing on a controversy between an individual and the United States Government over the purchase of a railroad as they are.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, if the Senator will excuse me for a moment, he will have to find some other language stronger than the English language if he can tell the House conferees those things any more emphatically than they have already been told to them by the conferees on the part of the Senate, and repeated and reiterated by them for about 36 hours.

Mr. HUGHES. I am satisfied that if the chairman of the committee was as vigorous toward the conferees on the part of the House as he is toward Members of the Senate who object to the position taken by the Senate conferees, then no Senator can have any fault to find.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I think if the Senator had been in that conference room, so as to see what transpired and hear what was said, he would never make an intimation of that sort. If I ever violated the proprieties in my life in the discussion of a question, I violated them in the conference with the House conferees.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, if the Senator knows the conferees on the part of the House, he will understand that some of them are pretty firm.

Mr. HUGHES. I know some of them.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I went to one of them with regard to an amendment which was inserted in the bill on my motion, and used my best endeavors to get favorable consideration of the amendment, but I could not get any consolation from him at all, although it was a most excellent and meritorious provision.

Mr. HUGHES. I know the conferees on the part of the House. While I have not acted on conference committees with them, I have been engaged in transactions with them where the same qualifications are necessary as are necessary to bring about a successful agreement of a conference committee; but I think if the Senate wants amendments in which it is interested written upon the statute books, it can send this conference report back to the conference committee, and it can get them inside of 24 hours.

All I have to say is that I think it is a public scandal that two or three hidebound gentlemen, who have preconceived notions with reference to certain things, should put the United States Government in the position of being the only employer in the United States that voluntarily and without reason cuts down the wages of its employees at this time. That is what a rejection of the amendment offered by my colleague affecting the employees of the Panama Canal Zone amounts to. I think it is an outrage. I do not think the House will vote to sustain the position of their conferees, and I know the Senate will not vote for that position. Why should two or three gentlemen be able to ram this matter down the throats of Congress?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, what is the amount we have paid on the railroad in Alaska and how much more is to be paid?

Mr. HUGHES. So far as the railroad is concerned, we have paid something like $600,000; there is something like $700,000 more to be paid, and it must be paid by the 1st of July. If so, it is practically forfeited now; but I want to say that at any time the United States Government pays the amount the other parties will be glad to get it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I merely wanted to express my agreement with the views of the Senator from New Jersey that they can not take the railroad from us; that they will not do so, and they will no doubt be glad to have the balance of the payment anyhow.

Mr. HUGHES. You could not get even a law student to take the opposite position. I think this is just a chimera, a will-o'-the-wisp, and amounts to nothing. I am against the conference report and will ask for an opportunity to vote against it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. HUGHES. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I have a very liberal pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN]. He has given me permission to vote on appropriation bills, and therefore I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. JONES (when his name was called). I have a pair for the week with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON]. His colleague, however, advises me that if he were present he would vote as I shall vote. I therefore vote "yea."

Mr. SHAFROTH (when Mr. THOMAS's name was called). I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. THOMAS] and to state that he is paired with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER].

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). Repeating the transfer I made a few moments ago, I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DU PONT. Has the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. DU PONT. I have a general pair with that Senator. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WALSH. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT], who, I am told, has not voted. Is that correct?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. WALSH. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] and vote "yea."

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to announce the absence of the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], who has been called to the War Department on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 35, nays 18, as follows:

YEAS—35.

Bankhead	Dillingham	Overman	Smoot
Brady	du Pont	Page	Sterling
Brandegee	Fletcher	Phelan	Stone

So the conference report was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives by E. T. Taylor, jr., one of its clerks, announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15836) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House has signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolution, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 16677. An act extending appropriations for the necessary operations of the Government and of the District of Columbia, and for the payment of pensions under certain contingencies; and

H. J. Res. 242. Joint resolution to authorize the President to draft members of the National Guard and of the Organized Militia of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, and members of the National Guard and Militia Reserves into the military service of the United States under certain conditions, and for other purposes.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. GORE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 12717, being the Agricultural appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 12717) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with amendments.

Mr. GORE. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that it be read for committee amendments.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. GORE. I will.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I simply wish to move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. GORE. Let us take a recess.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I preferred that, but so many Senators objected to it that I did not feel justified in making the motion. They desire to have some morning business transacted.

Mr. GORE. I suggest to the Senator that to-morrow will be the last day of the fiscal year. I have asked to have the first reading of the bill dispensed with, and then my purpose was to move a recess until to-morrow morning, with a view of yielding to the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN], so that he could secure the passage of the fortifications appropriation bill. It seems to me that as to-morrow will be the last day of the fiscal year we ought to rush these appropriation bills and let the morning hour go until the next day.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator that our experience is that when we recess it takes longer to allow Senators to come in the Chamber at all times of the day and introduce their bills at different times than it would if we had a morning hour and had the morning business attended to, and then went right on with the appropriation bills.

Mr. GORE. My observation has been the contrary; but if this recessing policy is a failure, of course I have no objection to the Senator's motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia moves that when the Senate adjourns to-day it stand adjourned until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. STONE. The Senator from Oklahoma offers an amendment to that, as I understand.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The motion is not subject to amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion is not amendable. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Virginia.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the bill be read for committee amendments. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there is no intention on the part of the Senator, I assume, to take up the bill to-night for consideration.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, personally I should be very glad to proceed with it now.

Mr. SMOOT. It is now 10 minutes to 6 o'clock.

Mr. GORE. I think, however, that Senators would prefer that the bill go over, so I shall not attempt to proceed with it at this time.

Mr. STONE. Then I suggest to the Senator that he ask to have the bill laid aside.

Mr. GORE. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the bill will be temporarily laid aside.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. STONE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After three minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 53 minutes p. m.) the Senate, under the order previously made, adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, June 30, 1916, at 11 o'clock a. m.

CONFIRMATIONS.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, June 29, 1916.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Father in heaven, help us to realize fully that procrastination is the thief of time; that we must work while it is yet day, for the night cometh when no man can work. Forgive us, we pray Thee, when we put off until to-morrow what should be done to-day; when we proclaim from the housetops patriotism and fail to put it into practice; when we pray for the kingdom of heaven and supinely wait for its appearance; when we seek to pluck the mote out of our brother's eye and behold a beam is in our own eye.

Teach us to turn our thoughts within and know the value of self-examination that we may put aside our own faults and strive to walk worthily before our neighbor. In His name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

BODIES OF MEN KILLED AT CARRIZAL, MEXICO.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Washington rise?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I present a joint resolution, which I desire the Clerk to read in my time.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the resolution in the gentleman's time.

The Clerk read as follows:

House joint resolution 249.

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to provide an escort for the transportation from El Paso, Tex., to Washington, D. C., of the bodies of the officers and men of Troop C and Troop K, Tenth United States Cavalry, who were killed in action at Carrizal, Mexico, and to inter said bodies in the Arlington National Cemetery with full military honors.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask to suspend the rules and proceed with the consideration of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not move to suspend the rules on a Thursday.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that this resolution should go to the Committee on Military Affairs. It is a very important matter. I have no doubt that the War Department will do whatever is appropriate, but if we are to request a military escort and to provide for the interment at Arlington of all the men who may lose their lives in Mexico we may find ourselves very much embarrassed. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York objects.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I am perfectly willing that the resolution shall take the course indicated by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], but in the time still remaining at my disposal I desire to say that the bodies of the men of the Navy who lost their lives at Vera Cruz were brought back and given great attention, great honor, and buried in the full form of the Navy of the United States.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That was done without any action on the part of Congress.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. These troopers who lost their lives in Mexico were colored, but they are heroes and were in the service of the United States just the same. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is not a question of race. White men as well as colored men have lost their lives in this instance. The gentleman is simply making a bunk political speech.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2986) to provide capital for agricultural development, to create a standard form of investment based upon farm mortgage, to equalize rates of interest upon farm loans, to furnish a market for United States bonds, to provide for the investment of postal savings deposits, to create Government depositaries and financial agents for the United States, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to joint resolution (H. J. Res. 242) to authorize the President to draft members of the National Guard and of the Organized Militia of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia and members of the National Guard and Militia Reserves into the military service of the United States under certain conditions, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 16678. An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the Military and Naval Establishments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes;

H. R. 6923. An act to authorize the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across Little River at a point where the line between townships 12 and 13 north, range 8 east, crosses said river;

H. R. 9615. An act to reimburse certain Indians for labor done in building a schoolhouse at Queets River, Quiniault Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington;

H. R. 10925. An act authorizing Ashley County, Ark., to construct a bridge across Bayou Bartholomew;

H. R. 10849. An act granting the consent of Congress to Ashley County, Ark., to construct a bridge across Bayou Bartholomew;

H. R. 12197. An act authorizing Ashley County, Ark., to construct a bridge across Bayou Bartholomew;

H. R. 14630. An act to quiet title in certain citizens to certain lands lying within the meander line on the St. Francis River, and being parts of lots and tracts of land lying in Craighead County, Ark.;

H. R. 7430. An act for the relief of William Foglio; and

H. R. 16677. An act extending appropriations for the necessary operations of the Government and of the District of Columbia, and for the payment of pensions under certain contingencies.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following resolution:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 14484) entitled "An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war," the Clerk be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to restore, on page 11 of the engrossed bill, lines 22, 23, and 24, and lines 1 and 2 on page 12, with an amendment as follows: "Page 12, line 2, strike out '$20' and insert '$12,' the same being for the purpose of carrying out the agreement of the conferees."

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 15775. An act making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 1697. An act to declare Ollala Slough, in Lincoln County, Oreg., nonnavigable; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

PER CAPITA PAYMENT TO CHOCTAW AND CHICKASAW CITIZENS (H. DOC. NO. 1248).

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a House document be made of the letter of Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs Meritt, dated June 21, 1916, transmitting to the Secretary of the Interior the proposed regulations covering the distribution of the per capita payment provided recently to the Choctaw, Chickasaw, and Seminole citizens, with which the House is familiar. I desire to have the letter and regulations made a House document.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent that a certain letter written by the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs, together with the regulations pertaining to the subject of which he writes, the division of the money belonging to the Indians, be made a House document. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

RIGHT OF A MEMBER OF CONGRESS TO HOLD OFFICE IN THE NATIONAL GUARD.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, in obedience to the command of the Committee on the Judiciary, I hereby submit a privileged report on House resolution 257, with reference to the right of a Member of Congress to hold office in the National Guard, as reorganized by the act of June 3, 1916. Unless there is demand that the report be read, I shall ask that it be printed and placed on the House Calendar. (H. Rept. 885.)

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina files a report from the Committee on the Judiciary respecting the right of a Member of Congress to hold office in the National Guard, which is ordered printed and placed on the calendar.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business in order on next Calendar Wednesday be dispensed with and that the business of Calendar Wednesday for next Wednesday be in order to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the business in order on Calendar Wednesday of next week be dispensed with and be in order to-morrow. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to that, provided that if the conference report on the sundry civil appropriation bill is not disposed of to-day it can be taken up to-morrow.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I also desire to have a reservation in regard to the conference report on the fortifications appropriation bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman that he formulate his request so that the consideration of conference reports may be in order to-morrow, notwithstanding that the business of Calendar Wednesday is in order.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I will so modify my request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina modifies his request so that the business in order will not interfere with the consideration of conference reports. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to ask the gentleman from North Carolina if he is prepared to say now whether he expects the House to sit on the Fourth of July, next Tuesday?

Mr. KITCHIN. I do not. We will adjourn from Monday to Wednesday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 16699) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes. Pending that motion I ask unanimous consent that general debate be limited to 25 minutes on a side, the time on the other side to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE] and the time on this side by myself.

The SPEAKER. Pending the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Military Academy appropriation bill, the gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that general debate be limited to 25 minutes on a side, one half to be controlled by himself and the other half by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Military Academy appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Military Academy appropriation bill, with Mr. BOOHER in the chair.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 25 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN].

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, the Republican Party is in a desperate condition. The old party of privilege, the stand-pat, boss-ridden Republican Party of 1912 is doing business in the same old way. Its once hated and despised bosses have done something to Theodore Roosevelt and a change has come over the spirit of his dreams. In the recent Republican convention held at Chicago the daily papers told us that the old guard was in complete control and that the big bosses were all there and that their delegates knew why they were selected and that they could be relied upon to do the bidding of the bosses. The newspapers also told us that the old guard had generously agreed to let Mr. Roosevelt try out his strength to see if he could secure the Republican nomination. Oh, how generous and magnanimous, Mr. Chairman. [Laughter.] A bunch of old-guard delegates, hand picked by the brazen bosses of 1912, going to give Roosevelt a "fair" chance to get the Republican nomination. [Laughter.] A thousand delegates of the Progressive Party were assembled in convention in the same city. None of them, save Perkins and a half dozen more, understood the program already agreed upon by Root and Smoot, Penrose and Roosevelt. They did not know that the whole thing had been planned at the billion-dollar banquet given in New York to Roosevelt, Root, and others a few months ago. And it did not occur to them, although many suspicions were being whispered around that Elihu Root had planned the tragedy and had written the despicable Chicago play when Roosevelt, Lodge, and Root met in secret conclave a few weeks after the billion-dollar banquet. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The great body of the Progressive Party were not a lot of thoughtless and irresponsible people, as the Republican newspapers characterized them four years ago, but they were men of conviction, devoted to a principle, and they enlisted for life against the corruption and bossism of the Republican Party.

The great bulk of Progressive delegates sent to Chicago and the rank and file behind them at home were sincere American patriots. There was no thought of treachery or double dealing among them. They were fighting for a principle and striving to save the life of the Nation from the deadly hold of the greedy vampires of the Republican Party. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

But where was their leader who, in 1912, had said, "If those fervent in this great fight for the rule of the people for justice and honesty against dishonesty, fraud, and theft, desire me to lead the fight, I will do so"? The same old Republican bosses that he accused of injustice, dishonesty, fraud, and theft in 1912 were in absolute control of the Republican convention in 1916.

Progressives who had challenged them to conflict on a thousand battle fields were there just as determined as ever to keep these unscrupulous and corrupt bosses from seizing again the reins of government. [Applause on the Democratic side.] As one Progressive put it, "Life is short at best, and we go this way but once. I owe a duty to my country, and so help me God I will repudiate this bargain with the Republican bosses." [Applause.] But where was Mr. Roosevelt? After all that had occurred between him and the Republican bosses he could not, and he dared not, face the Progressive delegates assembled in Chicago. [Applause on the Democratic side.] So he remained at Oyster Bay and talked over the long-distance phone. It were well, Mr. Chairman, that that transaction be carried on over a long-distance phone. [Laughter.]

With the landscape glasses that Wall Street had furnished the big bosses looked good to him now. Why, he engaged in conversation PENROSE, of his "porch-climbing" class, and whispered warm-hearted words to him over the phone, and the newspapers tell us that he assured the big boss Senator from Pennsylvania that if he were elected the White House would be wide open to him. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Do you remember, my Republican friends, what Mr. Roosevelt said about Mr. PENROSE four years ago? Do you recall how he denounced him as all sorts of a political burglar, boss, and corruptionist? It was really interesting to hear him talking to PENROSE over the long-distance phone and very pathetic to see him trying out his strength before the Republican convention. [Laughter.] This was certainly another instance of the mountain being in labor and bringing forth a mouse, for the long-distance effort of Mr. Roosevelt to deliver 4,000,000 Progressives into the 1912 camp of Republican bosses will be a miserable failure. [Applause on the Democratic side.] It reverses all the rules of arithmetic. Four million will not go into three million. [Laughter and applause.] Trying to make 4,000,000 patriotic Progressives go back to the graft-cursed and boss-ridden remnant of the Republican Party. [Applause.]

What will the patriotic Progressives do since they have been so basely betrayed?

SEVERAL MEMBERS OF THE REPUBLICAN SIDE. They are for Hughes.

Mr. HEFLIN. No, gentlemen; they are going to serve their country and vote the Democratic ticket. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I know that you old standpatters are delighted at the way you roped Roosevelt in, but you will never deliver into the camp of the bosses the men who stood for principle against bossism four years ago. [Applause on the Democritic side.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HEFLIN. Just one question; yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Is the distinguished gentleman from Alabama trying to unscrew the unscrutable? [Laughter.]

Mr. HEFLIN. No, sir. I am relating some things that Republicans hate to hear and telling you what you may expect at the hands of the American people at the polls in November. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MEEKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. Just for one question.

Mr. MEEKER. I think the gentleman should know we appreciate fully the gentleman's warning.

Mr. HEFLIN. I do not know how much you appreciate it, but because the "truth is light" I must tell it to you. You will never see the Progressive rank and file voting the ticket nominated by the bosses at Chicago. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Yes; the old guard is in the saddle, the bosses are in control, and their candidate is backed by Wall Street. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Now, I will take you into my confidence and tell you how I think this thing was done. Not more than a dozen men were originally consulted about this frame-up pulled off at Chicago by Roosevelt and the Republican bosses. The plan was agreed on, every detail of it, before the convention met—and you now undertake to break a custom dear to the American people and as old as the Government when you drag the Supreme Court into politics. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Yes; all this was planned—not out in the open, not at the fireside of the Progressives of the country, but it was planned in secret caucus by Roosevelt and the big bosses of the Republican Party. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. McARTHUR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. I can not; my time is limited.

Mr. McARTHUR. For one question?

Mr. HEFLIN. Very well.

Mr. McARTHUR. Has the gentleman heard from the Oregon primaries, where Hughes received four times the number of votes that Wilson received? [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HEFLIN. I am sorry the gentleman called that reflection on Oregon to my attention [laughter on the Democratic side], but Oregon is a small State—hardly as big as my district. They did let you have a primary out there as a kind of decoy duck to keep the people's mind off of what the bosses were really doing all over the country. [Laughter.] Now, what has happened? A special from New York to the Washington Post this morning tells us that ex-Supreme Court Judge Hughes and ex-Progressive Leader Roosevelt dined together last night behind closed doors [laughter], and the waiter was only allowed to enter when he carried hot coffee to Theodore. [Laughter.] He needed hot stimulants, because he was up against a cold proposition. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] Behind closed doors in secret conclave trifling with the rights of the people. [Laughter.] Do you suppose that the American people are going to stand for these mysterious star-chamber proceedings? [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

SEVERAL MEMBERS OF THE REPUBLICAN SIDE. Sure!

Mr. HEFLIN. They take this man off the Supreme Court, dragging it down into politics, and take Roosevelt from the head of the Progressive Party, and lock them together with hot coffee in the same room until the wee small hours of the night. [Laughter.] Do you believe that the people are going to stand for that? [Laughter and applause.] Let me tell you what the Progressives, who have been so badly treated, are going to do in November. They will stand behind Woodrow Wilson, the greatest President who ever sat in the White House. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Mr. Roosevelt says the President uses "weasel words." Do you know the habits of the weasel? He takes hold of the neck of the fowl and sucks its lifeblood. At the bidding of the bosses that is what Roosevelt tried to do to the Progressive Party. [Applause on the Democratic side.] He sat at Oyster Bay and took it by the throat over a long-distance Penrose pipe line and tried to suck its lifeblood. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Roosevelt has surrendered to the bosses. I am reminded of the fellow who went to Texas. One day some of his friends wired the father that his son was dead. The old man wired for his remains. In a few days a dead tiger, considerably swollen, arrived. The old gentleman sent another telegram, saying: "You shipped me a tiger. Where is my son?" and quickly the answer came, "Son in tiger." [Laughter.] The old Republican elephant, with sides distended, mopes around the old-guard camp while Theodore reposes in his paunch. But, Mr. Chairman, the rank and file of the Progressive Party will beat that old elephant with many stripes before the November election. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The treacherous deal framed up at the billion-dollar banquet in Wall Street will never receive the sanction of patriotic Progressives. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

To the delight of the Republican bosses, Mr. Roosevelt has been going about the country denouncing President Wilson. He has indulged in a lot of loose talk about the President. But, fortunately for the President and the country, his words do not weigh as they once did. In fact, the Philadelphia Inquirer, a Republican paper, has said: "Roosevelt has degenerated into a professional agitator for personal profit."

A REPUBLICAN MEMBER. He has reformed since then. [Laughter.]

Mr. HEFLIN. I read further: "He has become a thoroughgoing demagogue. His word is of no value whatever." [Applause on the Democratic side.] Now, here is what Judge Hinsdale, a Republican of New York, said of him in 1912:

> He has developed into the most dangerous and unscrupulous enemy of the American Constitution who has ever appeared in this country.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, Mr. Roosevelt is going to use his words and employ his time trying to elect the cold-storage twins, nominated by the Republican bosses. [Laughter.]

Mr. MURRAY. Icebergs, fringed with seaweeds. [Laughter.]

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. I regret that I have not the time.

I take my text from Genesis, forty-ninth chapter, fourteenth verse: "Issachar is a strong ass, crouching down between two burdens. And he saw that rest was good, and the land that it was pleasant, and he bowed his shoulder to bear and became a servant to tribute." You Republicans know who I am talking about. [Laughter.] In 1912, Mr. Roosevelt denounced the corrupt and arrogant bosses of the Republican Party, but this year we see him begging these same bosses to let him come in and sup with them. They refuse to give him even the crumbs that fall from their table. Penrose and Root, Murray Crane and Smoot, the big four of the old guard, were happy to see the once dashing and intrepid moose man kneeling at the door of the same old bosses, asking their favor and begging their forgiveness. [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.] Mark you, he had denounced them as a stench in the nostrils of decency. He had branded them as crooks and scoundrels. He had boldly proclaimed them enemies to the Republic and traitors to the country. He told how, by the corrupt use of money, they had defeated the will of the rank and file of the Republican Party and robbed him of the Republican nomination. Then these vile and loathesome creatures were unfit to associate with decent men and unworthy the confidence of a self-respecting people. He denounced them as a bunch of burglars, and declared that they ought to be in the penitentiary. [Laughter and applause.]

But four short years have come and gone. The same big bosses in the same old city assemble in national convention. The Ethiopian has not changed his skin and the leopard makes no apology for retaining his spots, yet Theodore stands at the door and knocks. [Applause and laughter.] At the same time, in another convention, in the same city, his devoted followers are met in national convention. How different with them. They are as brave and resolute as when they followed him four years ago against the corrupt and intrenched bosses of the Republican Party. [Applause.] They are no more in the humor to give up their principles and surrender their convictions now than when they repudiated the brazen agents of lawless capital in 1912. [Applause.]

But what has happened to the noisy general of that brave and patriotic army? Where is he who attended the billion-dollar dinner in New York a few months ago? And where is he who had a conference with Root and Lodge in the same city a few weeks later? Did he go to the convention at Chicago and tell his faithful followers that "A man must do his duty and stand by the right, though the heavens fall"? Did he tell them that the same bunch of burglars that robbed him and outraged them four years ago were in control of the Republican convention? [Applause on the Democratic side.] Or did he tell the Progressives that he had an arrangement with the "old bosses" to the end that he would keep them from making a nomination until the old guard had named their candidate; that he had an understanding with the same old bosses that he would not accept the Progressive nomination while the convention was in session, but would see to it that the executive committee was empowered to hold the matter open to be taken up with him later? [Applause on the Democratic side.] Was this all arranged at the billion-dollar banquet, or was it framed up at the conference that followed? These are some of the questions that you must answer between now and the November election. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

A few weeks ago some American soldiers were told by a Mexican who claimed to be hostile to Villa that he knew where the bandit leader was in hiding, and offered his services to lead them to the place, and they trusted him; but instead of taking them to where they could capture the bandit leader he led them to the most dangerous stronghold of the bandit gang and left them helpless in the face of unexpected conditions, and they discovered that he had deceived them. Exit Theodore. [Applause and laughter.] Armour Packing Co. has a trained ox, whose duty it is to lead every carload of cattle that comes right up to the trapdoor of the slaughterhouse, and there he escapes, stepping through a side door, but they have no opportunity to even postpone temporarily the nomination that awaits them. [Laughter and applause.] But the ox knows his owner, and he must do his master's will. [Laughter.] Once upon a time there was a man from Oyster Bay who had the daring to declare that he stood at Armageddon and battled for the Lord. Then Penrose, Root, and Smoot stood at a guilty distance, crying aloud for his destruction. But he stands no more at Armageddon. He battles no longer for the Lord. [Laughter and applause.] But Rooted in the confidence of the old guard and Lodged in the affections of the "burglar bunch," he Cranes his neck to do the bidding of the bosses, takes PENROSE by the hand and sings, "Where you lead me, I will follow." [Laughter and applause.] The Progressives of Indiana have just refused to indorse the candidate of the Republican bosses. If I thought that the men who made up the rank and file of the Progressive Party in 1912 meant no more to their country than a lot of puppets and figureheads to be placed around by men who had forfeited their claim to confidence and leadership, I would, as Mr. Lincoln said, "tremble for the safety of my country." [Applause.] But I know and you know that the men who went through that campaign supporting Mr. Roosevelt deserve far better treatment than they received by him at the recent Chicago convention. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The picture is pathetic. The betrayal is complete. John the Baptist died for the faith that was in him; Robert Emmet perished upon the scaffold for the faith that he professed; but Mr. Roosevelt surrendered his convictions and sought to sacrifice the Progressives that the old guard might live. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Some strange and soothing power has touched the once strenuous eyelids of The-o-do-re, and he can not see as well as he once could. [Laughter and applause.]

The big stick has departed,
The square-deal cry has fled,
T. R. takes salt from the old guard's hand,
And the big bull moose is dead.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. McKENZIE. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN].

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, noting the honor that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] saw fit by his attack to render to the next President of the United States [applause on the Republican side] and to the great ex-President of the United States [applause on the Republican side], I desire to give this compliment to the orator:

Then T. HEFLIN, the great boaster,
He, the incessant story-teller,
He, most reckless of all talkers,
Heap Big Chief from Alabama,
Made a speech that was pure buncombe.
Much he said that was little heeded,
Most 'bout politics and niggers,
Much with naught therein but hot air.
So the people all laughed at him;
For they caught his empty vauntings,
Heard his imagination rattle,
Only shrugged their shoulders at him,
For wot they not, he was filled with prunes.

[Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. McKENZIE. I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, everybody realizes that since the hosts of Republicanism have joined hands the doom of the Democratic Party is sealed. [Applause on the Republican side.] But we did not expect them to confess it so soon. Furthermore, I do not quite understand why the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] should have been selected to sing the swan song of his party and to act as the early announcer of the coming funeral ceremonies. He is not fitted for that sort of a rôle. He is jolly and jocund and good-natured. He is not sufficiently funereal to have done the matter justice. The gentleman is familiar with Scripture, and I was particularly taken with his text, "Issachar is a strong ass." What a touching reference to the Democratic donkey. [Laughter.] And who could have pronounced those words with more propriety than the gentleman from Alabama—"Issachar is a strong ass." But when the gentleman quotes Scripture in the presence of the sons of preachers he should quote fully and correctly. The text is, "Issachar is a strong ass couching down between two burdens." And that is exactly the position of the Democratic donkey. Those burdens are so heavy that the party will never be able to get from under them. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I realize what a sad and sorry thing it is to our friends on the other side that all of those of the Republican household of faith and all of those who believe in progress and good government and the maintenance of American honor and American prestige are united for the defeat of the Democratic Party. [Applause on the Republican side.] I realize how sad and sorry a thing it is to them, and it is unfortunate, in view of their belated appeal to our friends, the Progressives, that they have had so little sympathy for them in the past. We had on the floor of the House in the last Congress nearly a score of fine, manly, capable Members of the Progressive faith. I can not recall that the Democratic side ever gave them any sympathy or consideration.

I can not recall that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] ever professed any love for them or for the principles they preached and promulgated. His abounding and loudly proclaimed love for the Progressives and the Progressive Party has come too late to be of any benefit to him or to his party. The gentleman has shed the flood of crocodile tears—usual in a Democratic speech in these days—over the awful consequences to the Supreme Court because of the fact that the American people from one end of the country to the other, from the farms, the fields, the factories, and the shops, called to the candidacy of a great party to make him the President of a mighty people, a splendid man from that great tribunal. [Applause on the Republican side.] The gentlemen are much more disturbed over the future of the Democratic Party than they are over the future of the Supreme Court, and they will not fool anybody, particularly in view of the fact that not long since they went to the bench for a presidential candidate. Their tears and lamentations will be in vain, because the American people are not disturbed over the fact that those composing the Republican Party are so intelligent, so patriotic, so clear-sighted that they can discern and call a statesman to high responsibility wherever he may be found or whatever position he may occupy. [Applause on the Republican side.]

But our friends, though cast down and much discouraged, have not entirely lost faith. They still have a lingering hope that in some unforeseen way they may be retained in power. The hope that beats in the breasts of some of them is this, that if unfortunately—and I put it that way out of deference to a virtue I hope they possess—if unfortunately we shall be involved in bloody strife at the ides of November, the American people will not be inclined to make a change of administration. There is a good old rule that it is not a good thing to swap horses while crossing a stream, but I never heard that that rule applied to donkeys. [Laughter on the Republican side.] And the American people will not hesitate to punish the party in power for its faults, and its misdeeds because of the fact, if it should be the unfortunate fact, that we shall be involved in the issues of war. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY], in his speech the other day on the bill for the enrollment of the militia, injected a partisan note that, I think, after reflection, he himself must somewhat regret. He ascribed the enthusiasm and the alacrity with which the men of the National Guard have responded to the call of the Commander in Chief to approval by those men of the policy of the administration which had, or at least seemed, to make necessary that call. Mr. Chairman, the men of the National Guard are citizens. They have their views of policies as citizens, but they are soldiers, and as soldiers they did their duty without regard to what their opinions were as to the policy that made necessary their call to the colors by the President. As to the men who have responded as volunteers to that call, it may be said with logic and reason that their enthusiastic and patriotic response to the call is due rather to their utter disapproval of the administration's policy, and their exasperated impatience with it, than to approval of that policy. Our friends on the other side must remember a few things in connection with what may—we hope will not—occur in the near future. We on this side of the House, and all of the American people, will support the national arms. We will do all those things necessary to maintain the honor and the prestige of the country. We will do it for the vindication of American citizenship, we will do it for the rehabilitation of American prestige, we will do it to save the national honor, but it will not be done to vindicate the Democratic Party, to rehabilitate its vanished prestige, or to save it or the administration from the effect and consequence of their faults and errors. [Applause on the Republican side.]

We have voted and we will vote for all the sums that may be necessary, either in preparation for or in the carrying on of war, if it shall unfortunately come, but neither we nor the American people will forget that if war comes it will come after three years of surrender of American rights, abandonment of American citizens, three years of vacillation and dishonor.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Which will, after all our humiliation, have led us into bloody conflict. They will remember that the sacrifice of our people, the loss of our prestige, the compromise of our honor, for three long years apparently in the hope of keeping from armed conflict has led us into the condition that threatens or will bring the horrors of war. [Applause on the Republican side.] I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman specify one instance in which the President of the United States has surrendered the right of an American citizen?

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, the whole miserable——

Mr. GORDON. Name one, name one.

Mr. MONDELL. The whole miserable, sorry, sad, and lamentable story is one long chapter of surrender of rights, of abandonment of citizens, of alternate truckling to bandit forces, and bullying lawful authorities beyond our borders.

Mr. GORDON. Name one surrender.

Mr. MONDELL. And meddlesome interference—name one, I wish I had the time to name them all.

Mr. GORDON. Yes; one.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, I know the gentleman does not like to recall the time when hundreds of American men, with their wives and little children, were at the mercy of a howling, drunken Mexican mob at Tampico, and orders came from the administration at Washington to the American commander to sail away and leave them to their fate. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I know that the gentleman does not like to have us recall the fact that we demanded a salute of the flag, and then, after losing more than a score of our brave boys, pulled down our flag and left Vera Cruz without securing that salute. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The administration has done little else than surrender American rights in Mexico. That has been its principal occupation when it was not engaged in meddlesome and impertinent interference with the right of the Mexican people to determine who their ruler should be. At a time in the early stages of the Mexican trouble when we should have notified all Mexican factions that we did not propose to interfere in their affairs, but did propose to have the lives and property of American citizens respected and protected, the administration was busily engaged in attempting to overthrow the only government in Mexico that did protect our people, at the same time issuing frantic appeals to our people to get out of the country and surrender their rights of residence and property, meanwhile petting and coddling and furnishing arms to the bandit chieftains, who were flaunting our authority and outraging our people.

The horrid fruits of the administration's policy of mischief-making, impertinence, vacillation, temporizing, and coddling of bandits have been officially declared by the Secretary of State in a recent letter to the de facto government of Mexico in more humiliating details than any opponent of the administration has ever stated.

We have now reached the period of ultimatums; and, having abandoned practically everything in Mexico, called out our citizens, left their property to plunder, by our policy tended to extend the area and the period of rapine and anarchy, engendered hostilities which will require generations to overcome, the administration is as reckless and as peremptory in its demands as though it were war and not peace that is desired and friction and misunderstanding rather than justice and good understanding that were sought. The American people will not hesitate to strike, and strike hard, if necessary, but after the administration has so long temporized and so much has been lost that might have been gained had we taken the proper stand in the first instance, they are not now in the temper to be hurried into war without full and complete justification for it.

The meddlesome interference with Mexican affairs during the period of the Huerta government, the fiasco of the Vera Cruz occupation, the shameful abandonment of Americans at Tampico, the coddling of Villa and other bandit leaders, the intervention on behalf of Carranza against Villa by allowing troop movements on American territory—all these engendered the spirit that developed and furnished the excuse for the horrors of Santa Ysabel, Columbus, and Carrizal. The whole record has been one of alternate impertinent interference and hypocritical indifference, of truckling and bluffing, of surrendering real and substantial rights and issuing ultimatums relative to questionable ones. During the limited periods in which the administration has not been unjustifiably interfering with Mexican internal affairs it has been protesting any purpose of doing so. In the infrequent periods when the administration has not been coddling and encouraging bandit leaders it has been pursuing a policy calculated to arouse their animosity, and the fruits of alternate interference and supine inaction, coddling and defiance, surrender and impertinence, stand revealed in a situation as lamentable and unfortunate from the standpoint of the Mexican people as from that of the people of the United States.

The American people will meet the foreign issue, whatever it may be, with calmness and courage, but they will not get so busy over foreign issues that they will forget or neglect to hurl from place and power false and faithless leaders at home. [Applause.]

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, in the matter of the drafting of the National Guard into the Regular Army service, I wish to call attention to the condition of affairs at Mount Gretna, now called Camp Brumbaugh, where the 10,000 National Guardsmen of Pennsylvania are preparing to muster in. I trust we have not in any way misrepresented to the young men of the Guard what is expected of them in the service of their country, but legislation has been passed here with great rapidity, and during the last few days we have taken from their homes, from their wives and their dependent mothers, father, and children, some of the very best of the young men of this country, who may not have thoroughly appreciated just what they were getting into. It is easy enough to say that a man goes into the service of his country with his eyes open, but it is possible some of them may be impressed without a fair understanding. Notwithstanding the ease with which it is declared in flaring headlines that we are ready to lick anybody and that we have the men and the money, I notice there is a half-page advertisement in the Washington Post this morning appealing to the young men to come forward to fill up the quota for the District of Columbia. Only yesterday in my city the mayor was working strenuously with patriotic citizens there to induce sufficient young men to come forward to complete the draft of the Pennsylvania Guard. They were also preparing to support the families of some of the enlisted men.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. FOCHT. Is not the reason for that the fact that the young men of the country know that they they are not going to Mexico, that there will be no war, and that we are going to withdraw with discredit to the country?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That may be; but the young men who have gone into the National Guard have been taught that they would fight together. There has been a comradeship about it. They have been encouraged to stand shoulder to shoulder and to assist each other.

They have learned to know each other and have learned to know their officers, from the sergeants up to the major general of the National Guard. They have now been drafted into the regular service, and here is one result of that draft. It comes from Mount Gretna, in the great Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

I read now from the Philadelphia Ledger, whose report from the encampment is substantially the same as that published in all of the Philadelphia papers this morning. It says:

> The Second Regiment was virtually ready to get out of the camp to-day when Capt. Kemper examined the muster-in roll. He saw that certain notations in regard to minor details of the men's condition had not been made. Immediately he went to general headquarters and asked why the regulations had not been carried out in full. Gen. Clement immediately called a conference of the brigade and regimental commanders, at which, officers later admitted, Capt. Kemper "read the riot act."
> SETTLES RESPONSIBILITY AT ONCE.
> Following the conference, as he stood in front of Gen. Clement's tent, he demanded to know the name of the officer who was responsible for the mistakes in the muster roll. Col. Hamilton D. Turner, in command of the Second Regiment, stepped out and said:
> "Captain, the muster roll was filled out according to the orders received by me. The order was sent to us to turn in the roll as you received it."
> "Well, that order was wrong," snapped Kemper. "It is contrary to all regulations to return a muster roll in such shape as this."
> Turning to Surg. Maj. Arnold, who is in charge of the Medical Corps, Capt. Kemper declared:
> "There is absolutely no use in sending men down to the border whom the Government will send back. I am not going to permit such men to be sent there. These muster rolls will have to be corrected at once. And hereafter," turning again to Surg. Maj. Arnold, "you will take orders from me. I'll never report to you, but you will report to me. It does not matter whether you have that or not," pointing to the gold maple leaf on Arnold's collar band, the insignia of his office, "and I have these," pointing to his captain's bars, "you will report to me. Maj. Koerper has that, and yet he reports to me."
> ONE HUNDRED RECRUITS ARRIVE.
> Maj. Arnold made no reply and Capt. Kemper returned to his quarters. Later it was explained that the muster rolls did not note slight physical imperfections, such as flat feet and other minor ailments. The men would not be barred from the ranks for such imperfections, but, according to the regulations, they must be clearly noted. Army officers on the field explained that were such ailments not noted many men, at the conclusion of any action in which they might participate, might put forth a claim for damages or a pension, setting forth that they received disabilities in action.

I should say that Gen. Clement is the major general of the National Guard of Pennsylvania and Capt. Kemper is an officer of the United States Army.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, that is the situation that confronts us, and which was bound to confront us under the draft. Ten thousand young men of the State, believing themselves qualified for service—and this is a very large proportion of the young men who are going to the front—who may or may not have known that they were going into the service to be Regular soldiers under Regular Army officers for a long period of three years, while their families were left alone at home, at $15 per month, are now faced with conditions exactly as we pictured them here when the draft resolution was under discussion.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. A captain of the Regular Army is now amongst them, a captain against a major general of the National Guard, and he is one of the only two major generals of the National Guard of the United States; three brigade commanders, for we have nine regiments in Pennsylvania, and the various other officers. Instead of going forward with these officers whom they knew, with whom they marched, with whom they have been in camp, with whom they have stood shoulder to shoulder, with whom they have talked patriotism, with whom they expected to fight—these volunteers of the National Guard now find themselves in the Regular Army of the United States, with Capt. Kemper, of the United States Army, in charge. It is one of the things they may have understood, I do not know; but it strikes me that if it was not understood, the Mount Gretna incident just reported will not help along the important work of securing new recruits.

I glory in the fact that Capt. Kemper or any other Regular officer of the United States is trained for his work and is on his job. He has his duty to perform and he may or may not have been discreet in this instance; but it seems to me that as legislators we ought to bear in mind that these young men who have suddenly come under Regular Army discipline, who have been taught patriotism, who have been living and preaching and practicing it on their $50, $100, or $150 a month, in Pennsylvania or any other State, did not know when they enlisted in the Guard that they would be subject to draft under Regular Army regulations for three years in the hot sands of Mexico at $15 a month, while their families were left uncared for.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman now yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I now yield.

Mr. GORDON. Did the gentleman from Pennsylvania vote for the bill authorizing the President of the United States to draft the National Guard for the purpose of rescuing the Regular Army in Mexico?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; when it contained provision for the dependents of these young volunteers. I voted to reduce the draft period from three to two years. I voted for increasing the pay, which I fear the gentleman did not, and then, because I knew my people to be patriotic and I wanted to be myself, I voted to do what it was represented the President wanted done to save the country in an emergency, even if it did force a few willing young men into the service, while hundreds and thousands refused because of the real conditions imposed.

Mr. GORDON. Then what is the gentleman whining about?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am not whining.

Mr. GORDON. The gentleman is.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman has not gone to the front; he is sending others to the front. The gentleman evidently does not understand his constituency; I know mine. We are raising funds now to take care of the families of those who volunteered, and who are now caught for a possible three years.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, has all time expired?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE] has one minute.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I yield that to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT].

Mr. FOCHT. Further observing the Capt. Kemper incident reported to have occurred at Mount Gretna yesterday, I wish to say that one of the things which will destroy discipline and deter young men from enlisting is just such brutal arrogance as Capt. Kemper is reported to have been guilty of. I want it understood that the Pennsylvania Guardsmen are, many of them, sons of veterans and veterans themselves, and it must not be expected of them that they submit to the insolence and open insult of anybody, be they superior or inferior in official rank. Let us hope that the incident is exaggerated, and that it is the exception where Regular Army officers thus grossly misuse their authority and exhibit lack of self-control, for it is disorganizing, in bad taste, and the height of bad manners. The National Guardsmen of Pennsylvania are, most of them, business and professional men, thousands are college graduates, and all are gentlemen, and I want to most emphatically resent any attempted insult or breach of form manifested against them, and if this report from Mount Gretna is true it is then due that Capt. Kemper be cashiered as a wholesome example.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired; all time has expired.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the Clerk read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of cadets, $462,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Of course, I have no knowledge of the incident referred to by the two gentlemen from Pennsylvania except what is read here this morning from the newspaper, and newspaper accounts are not always to be relied upon as absolutely accurate, but if the incident took place as charged in the newspapers, and the Army officials want to know why men do not readily enlist in the Regular Army, there ought to be posted up in front of them a copy of this account. Whether the incident actually took place or not in the way it was charged I do not know, but the popular impression is that the average young man who goes into the Regular Army is treated too much as a dog or as a servant by the officers in command. We used to have that impression of the Navy. To a large extent that impression has been removed as to the Navy. That is one reason why it is easier to get men to enlist in the Navy than it is in the Regular Army. I understand the necessity of making men in any fighting machine almost automatons—do what they are ordered to do; yet there can be no excuse for a Regular Army officer acting as did this man—I will not call him a gentleman, because if this took place he is an Army officer but not a gentleman—and if this took place as described the man ought to be court-martialed for acting not as a gentleman. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

For extra pay of officers of the Army on detached service at the Military Academy.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Insert as a new paragraph, after line 11, page 2, the following:

"That hereafter whenever all vacancies at the Military Academy shall not have been filled as the result of the regular annual entrance examination the remaining vacancies shall be filled by admission from the whole list of alternates, selected in their order of merit established at such entrance examinations. The admissions thus made shall be credited to the United States at large, and shall not interfere with or affect in any manner whatsoever any appointment authorized by existing law; and whenever by the operation of this or any other law the Corps of Cadets exceeds its authorized maximum strength as now provided by law the admission of alternates as prescribed in this act shall cease until such time as said corps may be reduced to its present authorized strength."

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, this amendment which I have offered for the purpose of filling vacancies at West Point is not the same as the amendment which was offered to the bill to increase the number of cadets at the Military Academy which we passed early in May. It is worded differently, and clearly permits the filling of vacancies only from alternates nominated by Members of the House or Members of the Senate, and takes those alternates in the order of their standing at the entrance examinations. The amendment which was disagreed to on the bill S. 4876 authorized the President to appoint to vacancies any candidates who were found qualified for admission and with no limitation as to their standing in the examinations. This applies only to the list of alternates.

Certainly there should be some way of keeping the vacancies at West Point filled. It is a shame to have classrooms and recitation halls and dormitories and professors there to do the work and to have vacant desks and vacant rooms simply because boys who are nominated by Members of Congress in some instances fail. These vacancies are by no means all due to failure to pass the mental examination. A certain number of boys are always thrown out on physical examinations and a certain number drop out every year after admission. The Military Academy at West Point starts every year with about 70 or 80 vacancies, and by the 1st of January that number of vacancies has increased to one hundred or so, and it increases a little more during the year, due to illness and the dropping out of boys from one cause or another.

The amendment I have offered gives a chance simply to fill such vacancies as occur at the time the entrance examinations are taken because of failure to qualify, and the only boys who can fill them are those who have already taken the examinations as alternates.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. PLATT. Yes.

Mr. COX. I only heard the amendment read a moment ago. Let me ask the gentleman this question: Would this bill permit the appointing authorities to take an alternate from one congressional district that is already filled up and place that alternate in another district where the quota was not filled up?

Mr. PLATT. No; it will not. It simply appoints a boy who has passed the examinations as an alternate and credits him to the United States at large. It does not fill up the vacancies at all for any particular district.

Mr. COX. Then, in other words, my quota may be filled up, but I may have an alternate there on the list who has passed the examination, and if there is a vacancy in some other district for an alternate they could take my alternate and appoint him to that vacancy, for instance, in New York?

Mr. PLATT. No. Your alternate would be appointed if his standing at examination was high enough, but not to fill the New York vacancy. The New York Congressman at the next examination would nominate a principal and alternates just as if this amendment had never been passed.

Mr. COX. But they could take such a student from my district if there was a vacancy in New York and put him in there?

Mr. PLATT. That would be true, if that was the only vacancy in the whole United States. But there would be that vacancy, anyway, until the next examination came around. The New York man under this amendment would have the same right as before to nominate for the next examination. If, as in the case of only one vacancy in the whole country, it is necessary temporarily to increase the strength of the Corps of Cadets the amendment does that.

Mr. COX. Now, when this bill to increase the number of cadets at the Military Academy went through the House before, with all due deference to the gentleman from Alabama in charge of the bill, I will say it contained a section that was finally eliminated in the House, and it gave power, I think, to fill up all vacancies in the Military Academy from the sons of Army officers.

Mr. PLATT. It certainly was not intended to do that, but that provision is not in the amendment now offered.

Mr. DENT. Did the gentleman state that it contained a provision to appoint only the sons of soldiers?

Mr. COX. That was developed in the discussion we had here.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman from New York may have five minutes more.

Mr. PLATT. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. Now, it developed, and I was informed and led to believe at that time, that each Member would have two appointments. Now, I have always managed to keep my quota filled at West Point. I have two high schools in my district from which graduates are certified to West Point and accepted without any examination. They are accepted and admitted without further examination. Then I have them examined by the Surgeon General, and the same is true with respect to cadets at the Naval Academy, and they have no trouble to get in. When the bill to which I referred became a law and I had permission to make my second appointment, I was informed that I could not get another appointment until 1920, having filled my previous appointment a few days before that bill became a law, because my man was taken and the vacancy was given to another Member whose quota had not been filled.

Mr. PLATT. The extra cadets that that bill provided for were apportioned to cover four years and admit a certain number each year, but the appointees for this year for the examination held on June 6 were assigned, I believe, by lot to districts that would have had an appointment next year.

Mr. COX. Have some men not got two appointments there now?

Mr. PLATT. I do not know as to that, but it will work out hereafter so that you will have a new appointment every two years.

Mr. COX. I will have two appointments only at the end of four years, as I understand.

Mr. PLATT. It may perhaps work that way in some cases.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Those who had two appointments were those representing districts that received a second appointment by reason of the allotment.

Mr. COX. Are there any congressional districts in the United States now that have got two appointments already made?

Mr. DENT. I do not know what the gentleman means by "two appointments."

Mr. COX. I have always had only one.

Mr. DENT. Under the law, before we repealed the three-year provision you could have two cadets there after the expiration of three years. You did not have to wait until your first appointee was graduated.

Mr. COX. That is true.

Mr. DENT. That was repealed. Now, to state a concrete case, I had a cadet there who had been there three years, and before this law was repealed I had an opportunity to name another. I named another, and he successfully stood his physical and mental examination, so that I had two there before this law increasing the Corps of Cadets was passed.

Mr. COX. You had your quota filled up?

Mr. DENT. Yes; I had my quota filled up before the bill increasing the Corps of Cadets was passed, and when the War Department came to carry into effect this new law increasing the Corps of Cadets I did not get a chance to appoint anybody else.

Mr. COX. You already had your two men?

Mr. DENT. Yes. I already had them under the old law.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit an inquiry?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. KELLEY. When will you make your appointment under the new law; next year or the year following?

Mr. DENT. I may not have another appointment for perhaps two years.

Mr. KELLEY. Either next year or the year following?

Mr. DENT. It will depend upon whether my district is drawn out by lot.

Mr. COX. My appointment expired a year ago last summer.

Mr. DENT. I went to see Gen. McCain about the matter, and here is the letter that Gen. McCain wrote to the Speaker of the House in regard to this subject, which contains a comprehensive explanation of the War Department's action. Perhaps it would be better to have it read from the Speaker's desk. I will ask, Mr. Chairman, that this letter be read in my time from the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the letter will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
THE ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, May 27, 1916.

Hon. S. H. DENT, Jr.,
House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: Referring to your call at the department this morning in regard to appointments to the Military Academy under the provisions of the act of Congress approved May 4, 1916, I have the honor to transmit herewith a list showing the States (Senators) and congressional districts that were selected, by lot, as entitled to cadet nominations for the first increment for admission to the academy this summer. I also inclose a copy of a letter addressed by this office on the 24th instant to Hon. CHAMP CLARK upon the same subject.

Very respectfully,

H. P. MCCAIN,
The Adjutant General.

MAY 24, 1916.

Hon. CHAMP CLARK,
Speaker House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I have received your letter of the 22d instant, in which you make inquiry as to how it happens that you did not get a cadet to West Point under the new law; also how it happens that, while the Democrats have 23 majority in the House, Republican Members get two-thirds of the increment of cadets. I am glad to have an opportunity to explain to you fully the manner in which the first increment of the increase in the number of cadets at the Military Academy was provided for.

As the law under which this increase was made simply provided that it "shall be divided into four annual increments," which shall be as nearly equal as practicable and be equitably distributed among the sources from which the appointments are authorized, and did not prescribe the manner in which the division should be made, the matter was referred by the Secretary of War to the Judge Advocate General of the Army for an expression of opinion with regard to it.

In reporting thereon the Judge Advocate General used the following language:

"* * * It is seen that inasmuch as 67 congressional appointees qualified as successors to three-year cadets, 502 congressional appointments are authorized independently of the increase, and that the actual increase in congressional appointments to be allotted is 368—92 per year. With reference to these as well as to senatorial appointments (States), it might be contended that the particular districts, etc., which are to be favored by the first annual increment should be determined by lot. If the distribution were to be made by lot it would happen in many cases that two appointments would be made from the same congressional district or State the same year, and that no appointments would be made again from the same for a period of four years. Such a result should be avoided as far as practicable. Had the present law not been enacted those districts and States from which appointments were made the longest periods ago would next be entitled to appointments. I think they should be preferred in the allotment of increments. Those districts which now have a member in the present first class should not share in the first increment, for they either have two cadets at the present time by virtue of appointments made last year under the act of March 4, 1915, or they are entitled to have a representative enter next month as a successor to the present first-class cadet. Many of those districts and States which are represented by a member of the present second class have a recently appointed candidate who will enter in June. It has been seen that there are 67 such congressional appointments and 12 such senatorial appointments. There is a considerable number, however, of districts and States which are represented by a cadet who has been at the academy nearly three years, but whose successor has not been appointed. These should, I think, be entitled to appointment under the first increment. They will, however, by no means exhaust the first increment, and the remainder of that increment, so far as it relates to congressional districts and States, should go to those districts and States which have been represented by a cadet for nearly two years. Apparently there will not be enough of such vacancies, however, to supply all the districts and States whose cadets have been at the academy nearly two years with a vacancy. I know of no other way to determine which of such States and districts shall be favored in the first increment than by lot."

The views of the Judge Advocate General with regard to the matter were approved by the Secretary of War, who referred the matter to this office to make up the list of States and districts to which the first increment should be allotted.

The first increment consisted of 21 cadets to be nominated by Senators and 92 cadets to be nominated by Representatives in Congress. Under the terms of the plan approved by the Secretary of War 5 of the senatorial nominations and 28 Representatives' nominations were allotted to the States (Senators) and districts that, by reason of the repeal of the act of March 4, 1915, lost their right to an appointment in June, 1916, by reason of the failure of candidates appointed to succeed cadets in the class of 1917.

This left 16 senatorial districts and 64 Representatives' districts to be selected to complete the first annual increment—not a sufficient number of vacancies to supply all of the States and districts whose cadets are members of the class of 1918, consisting of 32 States and 107 congressional districts. It consequently became necessary to determine which of the districts represented in the class of 1918 should be entitled to receive another appointment under the first increment. This was done in the following manner:

A list was prepared showing the 32 States (Senators) represented at the academy by cadets in the class of 1918, and another list showing the 107 congressional districts represented at the academy in that class. The senatorial list was numbered from 1 to 32, inclusive, and the Representatives' list from 1 to 107, inclusive. Thirty-two slips, numbered from 1 to 32, were folded and placed in a box (senatorial). Similarly, 107 slips were numbered from 1 to 107, inclusive, and were placed in the Representatives' box. These boxes were thoroughly shaken and handed, with the lists, to The Adjutant General by the clerk who prepared them, who thereupon withdrew from the room.

Then The Adjutant General himself drew from the senatorial box unopened slips, one at a time, until he had withdrawn 16, handing them as withdrawn to his chief clerk, who immediately unfolded them and called aloud the number appearing thereon. This number on the senatorial list was checked by a clerk in the office. In a similar way 64 slips were withdrawn by The Adjutant General from the Representatives' box and handed by him to his chief clerk, who called the numbers appearing thereon, and the clerk holding the list checked the numbers so withdrawn.

After the drawing had been completed the clerk made a list of the States (Senators) whose numbers had been drawn from the box and a similar list showing States and the numbers of the congressional districts therein whose numbers had been drawn from the Representatives' box.

There was nothing in the list or in the numbers in the box to indicate who the Representatives for the respective districts were, and consequently there was nothing in connection with the drawing by lots which would have enabled anyone connected therewith, even if he had desired to do so, to favor any particular Member or any particular party.

I did not know at the time of the drawing and do not know now whether any political party received any advantage over the other as a result of the drawing. I only knew as nominations came in who was successful in obtaining an opportunity to nominate a cadet to enter in the first increment. I am satisfied that the drawing was as fair and impartial as it was possible to make it.

With regard to your question as to why you did not have an opportunity to nominate a cadet to enter in the first increment from your (ninth Missouri) district, I beg leave to say that, as your cadet now at the academy is in the class of 1919, having only entered the Military Academy on June 15, 1915, that district, under the regulations recommended by the Judge Advocate General and approved by the Secretary of War, was not included in the allotment for the first increment to be admitted this summer.

Sincerely, yours,

H. P. MCCAIN,
The Adjutant General.

During the reading,

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman can only have this read during his five minutes.

Mr. DENT. I ask that the time be extended.

Mr. MANN. I think it ought to be printed. Nobody is listening to it.

Mr. DENT. All right.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the remainder of the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. This is clearly legislation on an appropriation bill, as it changes existing law and it is therefore out of order. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of nine instructors of cavalry, artillery, and infantry tactics (captains), in addition to pay as first and second lieutenants, $4,900.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I was impressed by the item in the press cited by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], with reference to an alleged incident at Mount Gretna, Pa., on yesterday, and I think the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] were most timely and appropriate. Whether true or not, there is an impression in the public mind that the enlisted man in the Army of the United States does not receive that treatment which his service and his patriotic duty entitle him to receive. This is not the only incident of a similar nature which has been published in the press. I have heard—and I doubt not other gentlemen have heard from the lips of enlisted men—accounts of treatment from officers of the Army which, if true, were not worthy of the officers and which did not entitled them, as was well said, to be ranked as gentlemen. In this connection I have also heard more than once that enlisted men were required to perform menial service, service in the way of personal waiting upon officers, service in the homes of officers, service of a kind which could not by any stretch of the imagination be characterized as military service. Feeling that this was an important public matter I recently addressed a letter to The Adjutant General asking him if it were true that enlisted men were at any time required to perform menial service. I received from him a reply in which the charge that such menial service was ever required was denied, and I ask leave to print that letter as supplementary to my remarks.

In this connection, Mr. Chairman, it has often occurred to me that the attitude of mind of citizens generally toward the enlisted men was not such as they were entitled to receive, and not fair or loyal on the part of the American public.

All of us have heard remarks from time to time to the effect that the kind of men who enlisted in the Army were in part those whose characters were not above reproach, men perhaps who had been charged with some misdemeanors, and permitted to enlist; men who were not typical of the best element of young men in their respective communities. I know not whether this be true; but the mere fact that such an attitude of mind exists toward the enlisted men in our Army indicates an unhealthy condition. It ought to be considered as an act of service to his country when a young man enlists in our Army, and such an act of service ought to receive the respect and gratitude of American citizenship.

I have been much interested in the discussions here relative to our Army and its composition, as to whether we should rely exclusively upon the National Guard, or whether we should rely in part or in whole upon what has come to be commonly known as a continental army. The National Guard, at any rate, is being tested, and whether that guard shall be equal to the emergency, whether the constitutional limitations upon it shall prevent its being molded into a reserve which shall be mobile and ample at all times to answer the needs of the country, is an open question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SMALL. I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that his time be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMALL. But the point which I wish to emphasize is this, that the composition of our Army, both that portion which is in the Regular Army and that which constitutes the reserves, ought to represent an element of our citizenship which enters either the Regular Army or the reserve with the sole desire and purpose to serve the country; and having so entered the Army, that they shall be entitled to a larger degree and respect and gratitude from the American people. The time has come when our country must be in a position of readiness in time of peace for any emergency that may occur, and that condition can only be brought about when there shall be inculcated in the minds of our young men and of American citizens generally the proposition that the Army shall represent and exemplify a spirit of patriotism and of service, and so recognized by our whole body of citizenship. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a letter from The Adjutant General. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letter is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
THE ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, June 23, 1916.

Hon. JOHN A. SMALL,
House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: In response to your letter of June 21, 1916, requesting information as to the extent, if any, to which enlisted men in the Army are required to perform menial services, I beg leave to advise you that enlisted men of the Regular Army are not required to perform any duties that can properly be regarded as menial. Many duties are performed by soldiers that possibly might be regarded as disagreeable, or, at least, they may not be such as the men might have been called upon to perform while in civil life. Among those duties, are policing or cleaning the camps or posts at which the soldiers are serving, including barracks, camp grounds, and camp and barracks facilities and conveniences. This work has reference to the well being and comfort of the soldiers themselves, and, being for the common good, is regarded as a matter of duty, to be shared by all. So far as the use of enlisted men of the Army as servants for officers is concerned, such use is prohibited by section 14, act of Congress approved July 15, 1870.

Very sincerely,

H. P. MCCAIN,
The Adjutant General.

The Clerk read as follows:

For extra pay of one enlisted man employed in the mathematical department, at 50 cents per day, $156.50.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Here are several different items:

For extra pay of two enlisted men employed in the department of philosophy, at 50 cents each per day, $313.

For extra pay of two enlisted men employed in the chemical department, at 50 cents each per day, $313.

For extra pay of one enlisted man employed in the department of drawing, at 50 cents per day, $156.50.

For extra pay of one enlisted man employed in the mathematical department, at 50 cents per day, $156.50.

Are these all the wages these men receive?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. That is additional pay that they receive, in addition to their pay as enlisted men. As enlisted men they would draw $15 or $18 a month, and we accord them this extra 50 cents a day because of the duties that they perform in these particular lines of service. In other words, it gives each of these men about $15 a month extra.

Mr. COX. Of course there are different kinds of philosophers.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. They are not philosophers, but enlisted men employed in the department of philosophy, and so forth, in a clerical capacity.

The CLERK read as follows:

Repairs and improvements to the laundry machinery and apparatus in the cadet laundry, and the purchase of new material, adding machine, tools, etc., to be expended without advertising, $2,500.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. ANTHONY: Page 24, line 4, insert as a new paragraph, after line 4, the following:

"For new laundry building, $100,000."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment, unless the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] is going to do so.

Mr. DENT. I reserve a point of order.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the House to the extreme necessity for a new laundry building at West Point. It is shown very strongly by a set of photographs which have been sent to me. Here is a photograph of the marking room. It shows working girls crowded into a room of small capacity and without sufficient air space. It is marked on the back "Space entirely too small for the work."

Here is another photograph of the ironing room in the cadet laundry at West Point, showing girls packed in about as closely as they can stand, working in an atmosphere that the inspector general says in summer time reaches the point of 122°. The comment on this picture is:

Ironing room, showing the congested state of machines. Air space entirely too small for the number of employees. Note the ceiling and wall power ventilators. The temperature of this room in summer, in spite of every effort, runs to 109°, and sometimes as high as 122° F.

It does not seem to me that the United States Government should permit working conditions of that kind when we pass laws here requiring private manufacturers to be humane to their employees.

Another photograph is that of the wash room, showing congestion due to lack of space and antiquated building construction. Another photograph is of the building itself used as a laundry. It is stated that it was built in 1869, and is located 2 miles from the source of labor, which requires a 4-mile walk daily by the girls employed. That of itself is a loss of economy on the part of the Government which ought to be looked after. Another photograph shows another part of the old building.

It says:

Laundry—old and dilapidated building. When machinery is going walls vibrate five-eighths of an inch: inclosed on two sides by hills, making it the hottest site on the reservation in summer; condemned by Inspector General on account of its excessive vibration.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, so far as I recollect, no proposition of this kind was submitted at the hearing, and I do not recall that any member of the committee suggested that there should be anything of this kind.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will say to the gentleman that the matter has been recalled to my attention since the visit of the committee to West Point, and since the bill was framed in the committee.

Mr. DENT. I make the point of order.

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the gentleman withhold it for a moment more?

Mr. DENT. Certainly; I thought the gentleman was through.

Mr. ANTHONY. I desire to ask permission to insert in the RECORD a further statement showing the necessity for this new laundry building, and to express the hope that should another body make provision for this building, as it may, that the gentleman from Alabama will see his way clear to hold it in the bill.

Mr. DENT. I think it is fair to state that that was not called to the attention of the subcommittee or to the attention of the whole committee. It is a new proposition offered here on the floor of the House, and the committee has not had an opportunity to examine it.

Mr. ANTHONY. Nevertheless it is of sufficient importance to warrant an examination.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas to extend his remarks in the RECORD?

There was no objection.

The statement referred to is as follows:

THE CADET LAUNDRY, UNITED STATES MILITARY ACADEMY.

The steam laundry at West Point was established in 1865. Previous to that time the washing for cadets was done by women living in the post or in its vicinity, but principally by the wives of members of the band.

In 1869 the laundry was destroyed by fire, but was immediately rebuilt, and in 1888 the laundry building was enlarged; again in 1902 it was increased to its present size. A dry-cleaning plant was added to the laundry equipment in 1908.

Since July, 1908, the laundry has done the washing for officers and enlisted men of the post during such times as its maximum capacity was not required for cadets.

To keep pace with the requirements of the increased number of cadets at the United States Military Academy new and additional machinery has been installed from time to time in the old building until it has passed the safety limit, both in weight for the building and in necessary air space for the workers.

In his report of the annual inspection of the Military Academy, July 15 to 25, 1914, the Inspector General, Lieut. Col. D. C. Shanks, United States Army, stated:

"A new laundry is a necessity. The present building is wholly inadequate. It is not worth repair or enlargement. Moreover, it is most inconveniently located. Nearly all of the employees live in Highland Falls. A new laundry, well equipped and of adequate size, should be built on the site selected therefor, southeast of the reservoir.

"West Point has pressing need of several new buildings. When I tried to get an idea of the relative urgency for these various buildings there seemed a general consensus of opinion that a new and an adequate laundry was the most pressing of all needs."

In the report of the last inspection, made by Lieut. Col. A. W. Brewster, United States Army, September, 1915, he states:

"The cadet laundry is so old and dilapidated that it is unsafe. It is a fire trap. When the machinery is going the walls vibrate five-eighths of an inch, and such a building as this would not be permitted in any civilized community. The engine room is 150 feet from the boiler room; it necessitates the engineer running up a flight of stairs. In case anyone was caught in the machinery it would be several minutes before the machinery could be stopped."

This is the only laundry on the reservation, and from May 15 to September 15 of each year is not of sufficient capacity to do the work of those pertaining to the Military Academy. As a result enlisted men, officers, and others are compelled to have their laundry work done elsewhere. For sanitary reasons it is undesirable to have this work go outside of the post.

In the original laundry building has been installed practically all the heavy machinery now in use. As this building was not erected with the idea of sustaining such heavy weight, it has been necessary to shore up the second floor, additional supports having been required from time to time to render it reasonably safe. The building is not such as will lend itself to such an arrangement of machinery as would most economically and expeditiously handle the work, is now filled to its capacity with machinery and employees, is located in the most confined and hottest site on the reservation, and is nearly 2 miles from the main source of labor, Highland Falls, necessitating the hiring of transportation for the employees during the hot or inclement weather.

While everything possible is done to contribute to the comfort of the employees during the summer months—when little other work is done than for cadets—the conditions under which employees have to work are little short of intolerable. A record of temperature from July 15 to September 15, 1915, shows an average of 108° F. downstairs and 109° F. upstairs. The highest recorded temperature was on August 13, 1915, when the thermometer registered 122° F. upstairs and 118° F. downstairs. Numerous heat prostrations among employees occurred during the summer. On September 15 six employees were prostrated by the heat.

Large belt-driven turbine ventilators are installed in the ceiling to exhaust the hot, moist air and numerous electric fans are disposed about the building to drive air into dead spaces, but a condition has been reached where it is impracticable to make further improvements. An increase in the Corps of Cadets would necessitate letting out some of the work or else erecting a temporary structure to house additional machines required.

CADET LAUNDRY, WEST POINT, N. Y.

Total amount requested for new laundry building	$100,000.00
Value of equipment now in the laundry	33,403.25

(All serviceable and could be used in new laundry.)

Work done by laundry averages 73,992 pieces per week, 12,332 pieces per day.

It cost for the year ending December 31, 1915, $24,645.49 to do this work, and the amount received for work done for the same period was $26,774.48, the gain being used to keep up the plant. Any surplus left after that is returned to cadets on June 1 on a basis of patronage.

Average number of employees in winter	48
Average number of employees in summer	77

Pay of employees, piecework, from 13 to 22 cents per hour.

The salaried employees are:

1 manager	$150
1 engineer	90
1 clerk	60
1 driver	60
1 watchman	45

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For repair of boilers, engines, dynamos, motors, refrigerating and other machinery in the cadet mess, and the replacement of same, to be expended without advertising, $500.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This item on page 27, lines 16 to 19, for the repair of boilers, and so forth, leaves out the words "and supplies" which have usually been carried, so that if they wanted to buy 10 cents worth of something it is questionable whether they could do so without their advertising it. I do not know, and I am asking for information.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to the words being put in.

Mr. STAFFORD. You may have automatic stoking of a cheap grade of coal or of a high grade of coal.

Mr. MANN. Of course.

Mr. MANN. I did not know whether it was left out purposely.

Mr. DENT. There was nothing in the hearing to indicate why it was left out, so it must have been a mistake in the printing of the bill.

Mr. MANN. It can not hurt anything to insert it.

Mr. DENT. No.

Mr. MANN. I move to insert, in line 16, page 27, after the word "repair," the words "and supplies."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 27, line 16, after the word "repair," insert the words "and supplies."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For installation of automatic stokers under four 440-horsepower boilers in the power plant, $15,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This item is for the installation of automatic stokers under the boilers in the power plant at West Point, which I have no doubt is a good thing to do; but I take the floor for the purpose of calling the attention of the House to another power plant. We have a power plant known, I believe, as the Capitol power plant, situated a little ways from the Capitol. I believe we have automatic stokers there. I know we have two chimneys, and I know there is a very serious complaint against us because we are committing a smoke nuisance there. I frequently go on a ride around Potomac Park with a friend of mine in the evening after the adjournment of the House, and I have observed that these chimneys are quite conspicuous, and frequently notice a considerable amount of smoke coming out of them. There has been complaint made recently to the Superintendent of the Capitol, and the District officer, I believe, has threatened to arrest the engineer in charge of the power plant. The House Office Commission, of which I am a member, has jurisdiction over the power plant, and we have been appealed to by the Superintendent of the Capitol as to what shall be done. I am one of those gentlemen who, while disposed to be economical, yet believe that the Government ought not to be the first and most conspicuous violator of the law. [Applause.] I think it is up to us to operate a power plant here which will not commit a smoke nuisance. Whether that can be done by the installation of new machinery, whether it will require a different class of coal which might be a little more expensive, I do not know. I do not think that the Capitol power plant directly under the control of Congress ought to be a violator of the smoke law, and if the House would be willing to sustain the House Office Commission I am very sure we will be able to make some recommendation either for the installation of what they call a Dutch oven—and whatever that is I do not know—or something else, or possibly the use of better coal. Although I do not think it is right to repeat private conversations, yet I think I am warranted in saying that the engineer said to me the other day that the tendency is to employ rather high-class men in charge of the engines and low-salaried men in charge of the boilers. He said, "We need fairly high-class men, of course, in charge of the engines, but, after all, where you most need brainy men to-day is at the boilers, where it requires brains to get the most power out of the consumption of coal, and until the people come to realize that we will always have a smoke nuisance."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. STAFFORD. My impression is that when we authorized the construction of the Capitol power plant we made provision that there should be smoke consumers in connection with these chimneys. At that time there were devices on the market providing for smoke consumption.

Mr. MANN. I will say to my distinguished friend from Wisconsin that smoke consumers are never in connection with chimneys.

Mr. STAFFORD. They are in connection with the boilers.

Mr. MANN. Yes; smoke consumers are in connection with the fire box. I have no doubt that we have some kind of smoke consumers down there, but there is no smoke consumer on earth up to date that will prevent smoke when you put a lot of low-grade coal all at once on a hot fire.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is that automatic?

Mr. MANN. I do not know; I think it is automatic stoking down there.

Mr. STAFFORD. You may have automatic stoking of a cheap grade of coal or of a high grade of coal.

Mr. MANN. Of course.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the character of the coal supplied and used at the Capitol plant?

Mr. MANN. Well, it is a pretty cheap grade of coal at present.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is there any mandate on the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds to use this cheap grade of coal which emits smoke, whereas a high grade of coal would relieve that condition?

Mr. MANN. I think not. It may be, in a few years, under a new contract, we will get a little better grade of coal, but the gentleman understands the coal has been selected on the recommendation of the Bureau of Mines. They make the tests. We have two firemen down here to provide the coal for all of these boilers, and my understanding is when the Bureau of Mines makes its investigation it sends down a high-priced man to begin with. We have firemen who get probably $70 a month, whereas the Bureau of Mines sends down first a $1,800 man, and I think when they undertake the test down here they have nine men to assist him at one boiler, and of course there is no difficulty under such circumstances stoking it with little smoke, but when these nine men go away and the man with the high salary and probably more experience goes away and leaves a $70 man to stoke, he is not quite as successful as the nine would be in preventing smoke. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

And provided, That hereafter when any machinery, apparatus, implements, supplies, or materials which have been heretofore or may hereafter be purchased or acquired from appropriations made for the support of the United States Military Academy are no longer needed or are no longer serviceable, they may be sold or exchanged in such manner as the superintendent may direct, and the proceeds placed to the credit of the appropriation from which originally purchased or acquired, and shall remain available for expenditure throughout the fiscal year in which derived.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph, lines 12 to 21, inclusive. It is clearly subject to the point of order.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I think it is subject to the point of order, but I think it was in the last bill.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman has an incorrect understanding. I do not think it was in the last bill.

Mr. DENT. I am only going by my recollection of what the superintendent stated.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill as amended to the House, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BOOHER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 16699, the Military Academy appropriation bill, and had directed him to report the same back with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DENT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CONFERENCE REPORT—SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report on the sundry civil appropriation bill and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] presents a conference report on the sundry civil appropriation bill and asks unanimous consent for its immediate consideration, notwithstanding the rule. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 899).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15836) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 3, 4, 6, 13, 18, 19, 20, 28, 32, 34, 35, 36, 38, 40, 41, 45, 47, 51, 54, 57, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 96, 97, and 98.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 5, 9, 10, 11, 12, 17, 22, 24, 25, 27, 29, 30, 31, 33, 37, 39, 42, 44, 46, 48, 49, 53, 55, 56, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 78, 79, 88, 89, 90, 91, 92, 93, and 94, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 7: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "For the construction of a permanent wagon and foot bridge across the creek at International Avenue, at Nogales, Ariz., on land reserved by the United States for customs purposes, $7,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 14: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 16: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$154,580"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 21: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Frankford Arsenal, Philadelphia, Pa.:
"For a general shop building, $106,800;
"For extension of artillery ammunition storehouse, $33,000;
"For extension of instrument department building, $22,920;
"For extension of fuse shop building, $132,300;
"For extension of artillery case shop building, $42,000;
"For extension of lead shop building, $12,000;
"For metal storehouse, $25,800;
"For a storehouse for current manufactures, $54,000;
"For purchase of additional land, $125,000;
"For one sewer and connections, $9,000;
"For garage for motor trucks, $12,000;
"For construction or repair of roads, walks, and sea wall, $11,600;
"For increasing facilities for fire protection, $24,000;
"For increasing the facilities of the arsenal for the manufacture of field artillery ammunition, $183,750;
"For five magazine buildings, including necessary barriers and fences about the buildings, railroad connections, sewer lines, lighting mains, etc., $90,900;
"In all, $885,070."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 23: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 23, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, amended to read as follows: "on a site owned by the Government or to be procured by purchase or condemnation, or in the discretion of the Secretary of War on any suitable site that may be tendered without cost to the United States which he is authorized to accept"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 26: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$1,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 43: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 43, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"During the fiscal year 1917, there shall be covered into the appropriation established from time to time under the act approved March 12, 1914, entitled 'An act to authorize the President of the United States to locate, construct, and operate railroads in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes,' the proceeds of the sale of material utilized for temporary work and structures in connection with the operations under said act, as well as the sales of all other condemned property which has been purchased or constructed under the provisions thereof, also any moneys refunded in connection with the construction and operations under said act, and a report hereunder shall be made to Congress at the beginning of its next session."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 50: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 50, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following: "For the purchase of such private holdings in the Sequoia National Park as in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior are desirable for the better administration of the reservation, $50,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 52: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 52, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following: "The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to employ in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, and pay, during the fiscal year 1917, out of the several appropriations for protection, improvement, and management of the various national parks, including the Hot Springs Reservation, and out of the revenues from rentals and privileges derived therefrom, a superintendent of national parks, and to assist him such clerical or other services, not exceeding four persons, as the Secretary shall determine, and also to pay from said funds all necessary expenses of subsistence and travel of said superintendent when absent on duty outside of the District of Columbia. A detailed statement of all expenditures hereunder shall be made to Congress at its next session"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 95: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 95, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Public Buildings Commission: With a view to ultimately providing permanent quarters for all the governmental activities in the District of Columbia in buildings owned by the Government, a commission is created to be composed of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate and two other members of said committee, to be appointed by said chairman, the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the Senate and two other members of said committee, to be appointed by said chairman, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives and two other members of said committee, to be appointed by said chairman, the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the House of Representatives and two other members of said committee, to be appointed by said chairman, all of whom shall serve thereon only so long as they are Members of Congress, and the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds, the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds, and the Supervising Architect or the Acting Supervising Architect of the Treasury during any vacancy in said office.

"The said commission shall elect one of its members as chairman of the commission and is authorized to employ such expert clerical or other services as it may deem necessary, and shall avail itself of the advice of the Commission of Fine Arts.

"The said commission shall investigate and ascertain what public buildings are needed in the District of Columbia to provide suitable and adequate accommodations, with allowances for future expansion, for all of the offices, establishments, and public services of the Government in the District of Columbia, the proper location of such buildings, the probable cost thereof, and the probable cost of such new sites as they may deem it necessary for the Government to acquire.

"Any vacancies in said commission shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointments were made."

"For expenses of said commission, $10,000, to remain available until expended and to be paid out on vouchers signed by the chairman of said commission.

"Said commission shall make final report to Congress not later than January 1, 1918."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15836) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year 1917, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report as to each of the said amendments, namely:

Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5, relating to public buildings: Appropriates $70,000 for continuation of the post-office building at Columbia, S. C.; strikes out the proposed change in the limit of cost of the post-office building at Durango, Colo.; strikes out the additional appropriation of $15,000 for the site of the post office at Kendallville, Ind.; fixes the limit of expenditure for repairs and preservation of quarantine stations and marine hospitals at $125,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $100,000, as proposed by the Senate; and appropriates $25,000, as proposed by the Senate, for "Operating force for public buildings" for the fiscal year 1916.

No. 6: Restores the language proposed by the House limiting the maximum pay for the various classes of employees in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing to the rate paid therefor January 1, 1916.

No. 7: Appropriates $7,500 instead of $10,000, as proposed by the Senate, for a bridge at Nogales, Ariz.

No. 8: Appropriates $25,000 instead of $75,000, as proposed by the Senate, for studies of rural sanitation by the Public Health Service.

Nos. 9, 10, 11, and 12, relating to Columbia Hospital: Appropriates $2,350, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $2,300, as proposed by the House, for repair of the nurses' cottages; appropriates $11,494, as proposed by the Senate, for expenses of heat, light, and power; and reappropriates for the fiscal year 1917 the unexpended balance of the amount for special equipment and furnishing appropriated in the sundry civil act for the fiscal year 1916.

No. 13: Strikes out the appropriation of $89,441.43 and the reappropriation of the sum of $107,200, proposed by the Senate, for additional land for the Zoological Park.

Nos. 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, and 19, relating to the Federal Trade Commission: Provides for five clerks to commissioners at $1,500 each, instead of at $1,200 each, as proposed by the House, and $1,800 each, as proposed by the Senate; provides for a chief clerk at $2,000 instead of $2,500; reduces the sum for compensation, travel, and per diem of special employees from $250,000 to $244,500, as proposed by the Senate; appropriates $15,000 for rent, as proposed by the House, instead of $20,000, as proposed by the Senate; and appropriates $15,000 for witness fees and mileage, as proposed by the House, instead of $10,000, as proposed by the Senate.

No. 20: Strikes out the language, proposed by the Senate, enlarging the boundaries of the connecting parkway between Rock Creek and Potomac Parks between Ashmead Place, Twentieth Street, and Rock Creek NW.

No. 21, relating to the Frankford Arsenal: Distributes an increase of $71,970 among the various items in the bill as it passed the House to cover increased cost of construction since the original estimates were prepared and appropriates $90,900, proposed by the Senate, for five magazine buildings and the necessary fences, railroad connections, sewers, lighting mains, etc.

Nos. 22 and 23, relating to a new powder factory: Provides that the appropriation may be expended for the construction of a new plant or for the enlargement of any existing Government plant and authorizes the erection of such a plant on a site owned by the United States or to be acquired by purchase, condemnation, or gift.

No. 24: Appropriates $350,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $300,000, as proposed by the House, for repairs to arsenals.

No. 25: Inserts the paragraphs, proposed by the Senate, ratifying the internal-revenue taxes and the tonnage taxes on vessels in foreign trade imposed by the Philippine Legislature, exempts vessels owned by citizens of the Philippine Islands from tonnage taxes and light dues in ports of the United States, and authorizes the refund of such taxes imposed since August 1, 1914.

No. 26: Appropriates $1,500 instead of $1,800, as proposed by the Senate, for the addition of a kitchen and bathroom to the lodge in the Salisbury National Cemetery.

No. 27: Appropriates $200, as proposed by the Senate, to exhume, transport to San Francisco, and reinter in the national cemetery there, the remains of Orman K. Osbon, a teacher in the United States school in Luzon, P. I.

No. 28: Strikes out the appropriation of $150,000, proposed by the Senate, for reunion of Federal and Confederate Veterans at Vicksburg National Military Park.

Nos. 29, 30, and 31: Appropriates $152,500, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $135,000, as proposed by the House, for improvements in Yellowstone National Park; increases the amount for repair of the road in the forest reserve leading out of the park from the east boundary from $7,500 to $15,000, as proposed by the Senate; and inserts authority for the purchase, maintenance, operation, and repair of horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles for use in inspection work.

No. 32: Appropriates $25,000, instead of $50,000, as proposed by the Senate, for construction of retaining walls in the Meridian Hill Park.

Nos. 33 and 34, relative to the making or repairs of concrete or asphalt pavements under the control of the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds: Limits the cost per square yard to $1.80 as proposed by the Senate, instead of $1.85 as proposed by the House, and requires that the quality shall be equal to the best laid prior to July 1, 1886, as proposed by the House, instead of July 1, 1915, as proposed by the Senate.

Nos. 35 and 36, relating to the Fine Arts Commission: Strikes out the authority for rent of offices and also the increase of $2,000, proposed by the Senate, for expenses of the commission.

No. 37: Inserts the paragraph, proposed by the Senate, appropriating $100,000 toward the construction of the new Aqueduct Bridge, and in addition thereto authorizes the Secretary of War to enter into a contract or contracts for not exceeding $900,000 exclusive of the $100,000 herein appropriated.

No. 38: Appropriates $35,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $97,000, as proposed by the Senate, for the preparation of topographic maps for the War Department.

No. 39: Appropriates $8,200, as proposed by the Senate, for repairs to the Court of Claims Building.

No. 40: Restores the provision, stricken out by the Senate, repealing the transfer of the Maltby Building to the jurisdiction of the Department of Agriculture.

No. 41: Strikes out the appropriation of $100,000, proposed by the Senate, for the Geological Survey in testing the existence of artesian and other underground water supplies suitable for irrigation purposes.

No. 42: Inserts authority, proposed by the Senate, for the payment of $300, out of the appropriation for the Salt River irrigation project, to the Moeur-Pafford Co. for damages sustained in connection with certain work on that project.

No. 43: Inserts the paragraph, proposed by the Senate, covering the receipts from incidental operations in connection with the construction of the Alaskan railroad into the appropriation therefor, modified so as to limit the return of the receipts to the fiscal year 1917 and to require a report to Congress thereon.

Nos. 44 and 45, relating to relief of the natives of Alaska: Appropriates $50,000 for medical relief, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $25,000, as proposed by the House, and strikes out the sum of $25,000, inserted by the Senate, for the establishment of small industrial enterprises.

No. 46: Increases the allowance to the superintendent of Yellowstone Park for the purchase, maintenance, operation, and repair of a motor vehicle from $500 to $1,000, as proposed by the Senate.

No. 47: Strikes out the appropriation of $15,000, proposed by the Senate, for an interstate wagon road through the Mukuntuweap National Monument, Utah.

No. 48: Appropriates $110,000 for the Glacier National Park in the language proposed by the Senate instead of in the language proposed by the House.

No. 49: Increases the allowance for the supervisor of Yosemite National Park for a motor vehicle from $700 to $1,000, as proposed by the Senate.

No. 50: Inserts the appropriation of $50,000, proposed by the Senate, for the purchase of certain private holdings in the Sequoia National Park.

No. 51: Strikes out the appropriation of $500, inserted by the Senate, for the investigation of lands proposed to be included in a Mississippi Valley National Park.

No. 52: Inserts the paragraph, proposed by the Senate, for the use of national park appropriations and revenues for the employment and expenses of a superintendent and not exceeding four other persons modified so as to eliminate authority for expenses of transferring employees from one park to another and of park supervisors in conferring with the superintendent of national parks, and also limiting the authority under the paragraph to the fiscal year 1917.

No. 53: Inserts the paragraph, proposed by the Senate, transferring certain land in the District of Columbia to the Columbia Institution for the Deaf.

Nos. 54 and 55, relating to the Department of Justice: Appropriates $485,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $510,000, as proposed by the Senate, for the detection and prosecution of crimes, and appropriates $65,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $50,000, as proposed by the House, for expenses of suits affecting withdrawn oil lands.

Nos. 56, 57, 58, and 59, relating to United States courts: Inserts the increase of $30,000 proposed by the Senate in the appropriation for United States marshals and their deputies; strikes out the appropriation of $32,400 proposed by the Senate for nine law clerks at $3,600 each for the justices of the Supreme Court; increases the amount for regular assistant attorneys from $325,000 to $350,000, as proposed by the Senate; and inserts authority, proposed by the Senate, opening the courts of the United States to seamen, without furnishing bonds or prepaying costs or fees, for the purpose of entering and prosecuting suits in their own name for their own benefit for wages or salvage, and to enforce laws made for their health and safety.

Nos. 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, and 81, relating to the Coast and Geodetic Survey: Increases the amount for tidal and current observations from $6,400 to $11,720, as proposed by the Senate; increases the amount for repairs of vessels from $40,000 to $56,000, as proposed by the Senate; strikes out the appropriation of $320,000 inserted by the Senate for new vessels; strikes out all of the new employees specifically provided for by the Senate; strikes out authority for the exchange of copper plates; increases the appropriation for expenses of preparation of new charts from $50,000 to $62,500, and authorizes the use of not exceeding $6,000 of that sum for necessary employees, as proposed by the Senate; and strikes out the appropriations of $12,500 and $1,000, respectively, proposed by the Senate, for the installation of new presses.

Nos. 82, 83, 84, 85, and 86, relating to the Bureau of Fisheries: Strikes out the increase of $300, proposed by the Senate, in the salary of the superintendent of the Bozeman, Mont., station; and strikes out the appropriations, proposed by the Senate, for improvements at the Orangeburg, S. C., San Marcos, Tex., and Saratoga, Wyo., fish hatcheries.

No. 87: Strikes out the increase of $200,000, proposed by the Senate, in the appropriation for the Immigration Service.

Nos. 88 and 89, relating to the Senate: Appropriates $7,500 to pay the widow of Senator Shively and $3,000 for folding speeches and pamphlets.

No. 90: Increases the appropriation for the Botanic Garden from $8,000 to $9,000, as proposed by the Senate.

Nos. 91, 92, 93, and 94, relating to the Senate Office Building: Appropriates $55,000 for the maintenance, $5,000 for furniture, and $3,500 for alterations, for the Senate Office Building, and appropriates $17,500 for repairs, improvements, and equipment for Senate restaurants in the Capitol and the Senate Office Building.

No. 95, relating to a public-buildings commission: Inserts the paragraph, proposed by the Senate, for the creation of a public-buildings commission modified so as to increase the personnel by the appointment of two members in addition to the chairman of each of the committees enumerated therein, provides that each of the congressional members shall serve thereon only during the time he is a Member of Congress, and extends the time for the commission to make its final report from January 1, 1917, to January 1, 1918.

Nos. 96, 97, and 98, relating to the Panama Canal: Strikes out the appropriation of $53,800, proposed by the Senate, for the payment of the Malambo fire claims, and strikes out the language, inserted by the Senate, relative to the wage scale and conditions of employment of persons employed in the construction, operation, or maintenance of the Panama Canal or the Panama Railroad.

JOHN J. FITZGERALD,
SWAGAR SHERLEY,
FREDK. H. GILLETT,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I followed the reading of the statement the conferees agreed to Senate amendment numbered 25 providing——

Mr. FITZGERALD. What page?

Mr. STAFFORD. Pages 70 and 71—one part of which provides for admission to American register virtually of vessels owned by citizens of the Philippine Islands. Am I correct in my understanding of the reading of the report that the House conferees receded from their disagreement to this particular amendment?

Mr. FITZGERALD. We did; but there is nothing in the amendment which permits vessels owned by people of the Philippine Islands being registered as American vessels. The amendment provides that vessels owned by citizens of the Philippine Islands and documented as such by the Government of said islands shall be exempt from the payment of tonnage taxes and light dues in ports of the United States. That does not mean American registry by any means.

Mr. STAFFORD. That would not extend to them the privilege of the coastwise trade, I assume, or give any other advantages than merely exempting them from tonnage taxes and light dues?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is all.

Mr. STAFFORD. What are the acts referred to in the first paragraph of this amendment legalizing certain internal revenue taxes passed by the Philippine Legislature?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They were acts of some considerable importance covering a number of subjects, I do not carry them all in my mind, but the department requested the Senate to ratify those acts and they were examined carefully by men familiar with Philippine matters, and this follows the practice Congress has adopted heretofore in ratifying these acts.

Mr. STAFFORD. This is merely a formal ratification of some action of the Philippine Legislature?

Mr. FITZGERALD. To prevent a claim for the refunding of moneys paid under those laws which provide revenues in the Philippines.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will.

Mr. DUPRÉ. What disposition was finally made of the amendment which the Senate had inserted increasing the appropriation for the Immigration Service?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Senate receded from that amendment.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Willingly or unwillingly?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, quite willingly.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Willingly, to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The amendment was not reported by the Senate committee, but was put in the bill on the floor of the Senate without discussion.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I suppose we then may expect the system of furloughing to go on during the year?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Either that or the dismissal of the men.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Does the gentleman hold that men trained to that service should be turned out in that way?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not see why the Government should pay men and keep them employed when there is nothing for them to do simply because their services were required in the past. I think I could not successfully defend any such practice.

Mr. DUPRÉ. The gentleman is not anxious to. He could do it if he wanted to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No. I could not justify paying men for whose services the Government has no need.

Mr. DUPRÉ. But I have great confidence in the gentleman's resourcefulness when he is pressed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The result of the conference is that of the amount added by the Senate, $2,116,535.45, the Senate yielded in conference $1,357,901.43, and the House agreed to items aggregating $758,634. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. COX. How much does the bill carry now?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The bill as it passed the House carried $127,540,651.24; as it passed the Senate it carried $129,657,186.67; as agreed to in conference it carries $128,299,285.24.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. I want to call the gentleman's attention to amendments numbered 22 and 23, on page 64, relating to a powder plant. The provision as it passed the House authorizes the establishment of a powder factory on a site to be procured by purchase or condemnation. My understanding was that it was the thought of the committee in framing that language, and I think the statement was made on the floor of the House while it was under discussion that the expectation was that a new powder factory would be built probably west of the Allegheny Mountains, in order that we might have a powder factory that would be more secure from attack than the present powder factory at Picatinny, N. J., in case of war. But according to the language agreed upon provision is made for the establishment of a plant, or the enlargement of any existing plant owned by the Government, for the manufacture of powder, $500,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will read just what was agreed to. This is how the provision now reads:

> For the establishment of a plant, or the enlargement of any existing plant owned by the Government, for the manufacture of powder upon a site owned by the Government, or to be procured by purchase or condemnation, or in the discretion of the Secretary of War on any suitable site that may be tendered without cost to the United States, which he is hereby authorized to accept, $500,000.

The idea was that it might be deemed advisable either to utilize some property already in the possession of the Government or to enlarge some existing plant, not necessarily a powder plant; but it was believed that this would make the authority a little more comprehensive than was provided by the House.

From the statements made before the committee, I believe the gentleman will agree with me that there is very little possibility of the War Department attempting to enlarge the Picatinny Arsenal or to locate a new plant east of the Alleghenies.

Mr. MONDELL. But it might be found to be wise to locate a powder plant in connection with some other existing Government plant.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Senate was under the impression that if it were so desired there should be no question of the authority. The House agreed to the language inserted by the Senate, and then retained in the bill that part of the provision stricken out by the Senate, with some additional wording to perfect it.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. WHEELER. Was it the opinion of the War Department that if another munitions plant is to be established it should be established west of the Alleghenies?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That was the opinion of the military authorities, and the provision was so worded that that might be done. When the item was drawn by the Committee on Appropriations originally, certain appropriations were recommended to increase the capacity of the Picatinny Arsenal. It was then ascertained that a new unit could be established for $500,000. Upon the statement of the ordnance officials that such a new unit was to be established, it was the opinion of the military experts that it should not be at the Picatinny Arsenal, but should be located in some other section of the country. The committee inserted that authorization for a place separate from Picatinny Arsenal, so that it could be utilized at a point which the military experts of the Government should deem best for military reasons.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. COX. I want to say to the gentleman that I am heartily in favor of the proposition of appropriating this money for the building of a powder plant. I have no doubt but that the gentleman will have a great deal to say as to its location.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not at all. I do not want to have it in any place near me. [Laughter.] I think that is going to be one of the difficulties about locating it. Everybody is in favor of establishing a powder plant, provided it is sufficiently far away from where he lives or is interested to make it safe.

Mr. COX. I will say to the gentleman that at Jefferson Barracks, Ind., in the district I have the honor to represent, an ideal place is afforded for the location of a munition plant. There is 17 acres of ground available there, well situated and adapted to the purpose, with tremendous buildings.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, 17 acres of ground is a bagatelle. The Picatinny Arsenal has over 1,500 acres.

Mr. COX. Well, we will give 1,500 acres adjoining the place there.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I suggest that the gentleman prepare a statement showing the facilities and the amount of land, and its accessibility to water and rail transportation.

Mr. COX. I will say to the gentleman that we are right on the Ohio River.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, I do not know whether it is navigable there or not. It might be an injustice and a hardship to the Government to wait until the river there is made navigable. I suggest that the gentleman collect all that information and send it to the War Department so that they will have it on hand.

Mr. COX. I am saying this in the effort to summon the gentleman's aid to get that plant located down there at Jefferson Barracks.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Very well.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. When was this plant authorized? Was it in the bill last year?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It was placed in the bill just this year.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Was it not authorized last year?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; this year. We reported it and explained it to the House, and explained that the saving to be effected would be so great that it ought to be done not only in defense of the interests of the Government but in the interest of the Treasury, and the propriety of it was so apparent that it went through unanimously, a point of order having been withdrawn.

Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. FITZGERALD, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill and joint resolution of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 16677. An act extending appropriations for the necessary operations of the Government and of the District of Columbia, and for the payment of pensions under certain contingencies; and

H. J. Res. 242. Joint resolution to authorize the President to draft members of the National Guard and of the Organized Militia of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia and members of the National Guard and Militia Reserves into the military service of the United States under certain conditions, and for other purposes.

Mr. REAVIS rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] makes the point of order that there is no quorum present, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] moves to adjourn. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 4 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, June 30, 1916, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. ANTHONY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 244) for the appointment of four members of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 886), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. HAY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the resolution (H. Res. 274) directing the Secretary of War to furnish the House certain information regarding the National Guard of Arizona, New Mexico, and Texas, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 887), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 12544) providing for the sale of the coal and asphalt deposits in the segregated mineral land in the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, Okla., reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 888), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. WISE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 708) to make immediately available for the use of the State of Georgia in paying expenses incurred by said State in connection with the joint encampment held at Augusta, Ga., July 22 to 31, 1914, certain sums appropriated for arming and equipping the militia of said State, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 890); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. DAVENPORT, from the Committee on the Territories, to which was referred the bill (H. SENATE.

FRIDAY, June 30, 1916.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We thank Thee, Almighty God, for the revelation of the law of righteousness, which is changeless in all generations, that has within it the power of truth, and that has within it and back of it the attestation of its authority in the lives of the people, in the construction of government, in the general onward progress of the world. We thank Thee for the ideals of our Nation born out of the divine revelation of righteousness. We pray that we may be true to these ideals, building a temple whose fame shall not be extinguished with the years and that shall abide as the very transcript of the divine nature and the expression of God's will on earth. For Christ's sake. Amen.

THE JOURNAL.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. LODGE and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 16699) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution providing for the correction of an error in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 13486) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 7430. An act for the relief of William Foglio;

H. R. 14630. An act to quiet title in certain citizens to certain lands lying within the meander line on the St. Francis River, and being parts of lots and tracts of land lying in Craighead County, Ark.;

H. R. 15836. An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 16678. An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the Military and Naval Establishments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a telegram in the nature of a petition from William H. Johnston, president of the International Association of Machinists, in session at Baltimore, Md., indorsing the so-called Tavenner amendment to the fortifications appropriation bill eliminating certain features of scientific management, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WORKS presented memorials of sundry citizens of California, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to limit the freedom of the press, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I present a short petition, which I ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The petition was read, as follows:

ATLANTA, GA., June 24, 1916.

Hon. HOKE SMITH,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: On motion, the secretary was instructed to write to our 2 United States Senators and our 12 Congressmen and send them that part of the report on "Temperance" which deals with soliciting orders for liquor through the use of the United States mails:

"We deplore the fact that we are victimized by the liquor business through the use of the United States mails, and we will continue to call earnestly and persistently on Congress for relief from this accursed use of our mails and intolerant and insolent nuisance in the solicitation for liquor orders that are coming by this means into every home."

W. H. PRESTON,
Secretary of Atlanta District Conference of the Methodist Church South, Held at Druid Hills Methodist Church June 8 and 9, 1916.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota presented memorials of sundry citizens of Hot Springs and Montrose, in the State of South Dakota, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to limit the freedom of the press, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Hot Springs, S. Dak., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I present a petition from the people of Mississippi who live in that dry atmosphere there, praying that Congress pass a national prohibition law. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LANE presented memorials of sundry citizens of Oregon, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of Oregon, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to limit the freedom of the press, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. WARREN presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Laramie County, Wyo., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PHELAN presented memorials of sundry citizens of California, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of Roosevelt Auxiliary, No. 5, United Spanish War Veterans, of Los Angeles, Cal., praying for the enactment of legislation to grant pensions to widows and orphans of veterans of the Spanish-American War, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of the Board of Supervisors of San Luis Obispo County, Cal., remonstrating against the proposed imposition of an inheritance tax, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PITTMAN presented a petition of the Loyal Order of Moose of Tonopah, Nev., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit interstate commerce in the products of child labor, which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WILLIAMS, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 2184) providing for the refund of certain additional duties collected on pineapples, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 574) thereon.

Mr. SIMMONS, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 8697) for the relief of Collector of Internal Revenue A. S. Walker, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 576) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 158) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to credit the stamp account of Joseph J. Scott, as collector of internal revenue of the first collection district of California, in the sum of $300, being the representative value of certain internal-revenue special-tax stamps which were lost from the office of the said collector, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 577) thereon.

Mr. SWANSON. From the Committee on Naval Affairs I report back favorably with amendments the bill (H. R. 15947) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 575) thereon. I desire to give notice that as soon as the consideration of the Agricultural appropriation bill has been concluded I shall move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the naval bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

BRAZOS RIVER BRIDGE, TEXAS.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 12362) granting the consent of Congress to the Dallas & Southwestern Motorway Co. to construct a bridge across the Brazos River, in the State of Texas, and I submit a report (No. 565) thereon. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BAYOU BARTHOLOMEW BRIDGE, ARKANSAS.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 13715) granting the consent of Congress to C. M. Simpson, Z. T. Hedges, J. C. Hackney, and Mark Brown to construct a bridge across Bayou Bartholomew, Ashley County, Ark., and I submit a report (No. 566) thereon. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I have other reports from the Committee on Commerce for the construction of bridges, but on account of the pressure of time this morning I will not ask for their consideration at present.

Mr. SMOOT. Let them go to the calendar.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Let them go to the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reports will be received and placed on the calendar.

BRIDGE BILLS.

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 6372) to authorize the counties of Baldwin and Mobile, Ala., successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across Spanish River at or near the junction of Raft and Spanish Rivers, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 573) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

H. R. 13835. An act to authorize the county commissioners of Aitkin County, Minn., and the town board of Logan Township, in said county and said State, to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River on the line between sections 26 and 27, township 149 north, range 25 west, fourth principal meridian (Rept. No. 567);

H. R. 14483. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near the city of Williston, N. Dak. (Rept. No. 568);

H. R. 14534. An act permitting the Missouri River Transportation Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Missouri River, in the State of Montana (Rept. No. 569);

H. R. 14823. An act to authorize the Savage Bridge Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Yellowstone River, in the State of Montana (Rept. No. 570);

H. R. 15318. An act granting the consent of Congress to the village and township of Hendrum, Norman County, Minn., and the township of Elm River, Traill County, N. Dak., to construct a bridge across the Red River of the North on the boundary line between said States (Rept. No. 571); and

H. R. 15322. An act granting the consent of Congress to Traill County, N. Dak., to construct a bridge across the Red River of the North (Rept. No. 572).

PORTS OF ENTRY, STATE OF WASHINGTON.

Mr. LODGE. From the Committee on Finance I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 12954) for the establishment of Northport, Chopaka, and Laurier, in the State of Washington, as ports of entry for immediate transportation without appraisement of dutiable merchandise, and I ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in the Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

USE OF ALCOHOL IN HOSPITALS.

Mr. STONE. From the Committee on Finance I make a report, unanimously favorable as far as the committee is concerned, upon the bill (H. R. 15347) to amend existing laws relating to the use of alcohol, free of tax, by scientific institutions or colleges of learning. I will ask to have the bill read, and because of the urgency of the matter, I ask for its present consideration.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES L. FREER.

Mr. STONE. From the Committee on Finance I report back without amendment the bill (S. 6068) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to cancel and remit a certain income tax assessed against Charles L. Freer, of Detroit, Mich., with a favorable recommendation that it pass. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to cancel the assessment of $13,252.21, being income tax on profit on the sale of Charles L. Freer, of Detroit, Mich., in the year 1915, of 12,095 shares of Parke, Davis & Co.'s stock, $1,000,000 of the proceeds from the sale of said stock having been given to the Smithsonian Institution for the erection of a building to house the art collections presented to the Nation by Mr. Freer under deed of gift dated May 5, 1906, and the remainder having been paid by Mr. Freer for the purchase of additional objects which have been added to the collections and presented to the Nation by him.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REFUND OF DUTIES ON TOBACCO CUTTINGS.

Mr. SMOOT. I am directed by the Committee on Finance to report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 7256) providing for the refund of duties collected on certain tobacco cuttings. It will lead to no discussion, and I will ask to have it acted upon now.

There being no objection, the Senate, in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF NORTH DAKOTA.

Mr. GRONNA. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of a bill for which I asked consideration on yesterday, being Order of Business 495, House bill 11878, to amend section 90 of the act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary.

Mr. BRYAN. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is objection.

MARINE HOSPITAL RESERVATION, CLEVELAND, OHIO.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. From the Committee on Public Lands I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 2845) authorizing the sale of the marine hospital reservation in Cleveland, Ohio, to which I direct the attention of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I shall have to object.

Mr. POMERENE. Will the Senator withhold his objection until I can say just a word in explanation? The bill has been approved by every member of the committee who is here. I will state the situation briefly.

This marine-hospital site was bought in the thirties for the sum of $12,000. In the fifties a small hospital was erected upon it. Since that time the property has grown in value until it is said to be worth from a million to a million and a half of money. It is wholly out of date and not fit to be used for this purpose. It is interfering with a civic-center plan which has been adopted by the city. The municipality and everybody are very anxious to have this property sold. The bill provides that it shall be appraised and sold under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury. It is now interfering very largely with the contemplated plan to build a union station.

The matter has been under consideration for many years, and I hope the Senator from Michigan will withdraw his objection.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I should like very much to accommodate the Senator, but we know the calendar is crowded with just such bills of equal importance that ought to be considered, and I felt that in justice to the bills on the calendar we could not allow such bills to be considered out of their order. I have given notice to that effect and I shall insist on my objection.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am very sorry the Senator from Michigan objects to the consideration of this bill. It is a very necessary one and one that, of course, could be passed without any objection at all. But in view of the objection I will ask leave to withdraw the report, so that I may present it at a later date and renew the request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report is withdrawn.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

R. 16460), which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. TILLMAN submitted an amendment providing that hereafter every officer of the Navy shall be officially addressed by the title of his rank without any distinction or discrimination whatever, except that in written communications the corps to which any such officer belongs shall be stated next after his name, intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill (H. R. 15947), which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BRADY submitted an amendment providing for a readjustment of the salaries of the chief clerk and assistants in the office of the Chief of Staff, United States Army, intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill (H. R. 16460), which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $277,470 for all necessary expenses for investigations, experiments, and demonstrations in the dairy industry, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Agricultural appropriation bill (H. R. 12717), which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL RESERVE ACT.

Mr. McLEAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 13391) to amend the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

TARGET PRACTICE IN THE NAVY.

Mr. LODGE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 222), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, directed, if not incompatible with the public interest, and if the facts are not regarded as confidential, to send to the Senate a statement as to the grade assigned for elementary target practice, whether classified as excellent, good, fair, poor, or unsatisfactory, in each of the last two years, to the following battleships of the Atlantic Fleet: Arkansas, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Kansas, Louisiana, Michigan, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Rhode Island, San Diego, South Carolina, Utah, Texas, Virginia, Wyoming.

SIR ROGER CASEMENT.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, would it be in order to offer a little resolution?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That depends on what the Chair decides.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I am asking for the Chair to decide.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair decides that this is the time to offer it.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I will read it (S. Res. 223):

Whereas the Senate of the United States have heard with deep regret that the sentence of death has been pronounced upon Sir Roger Casement, after a hasty (so called) trial: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, requested to ask a stay in the execution of said sentence, in order that new facts may be introduced.

Mr. President, I realize that we are a good ways over here from the point of action, but I feel that human sympathies are much alike the world over. I believe that in the prosecution and conviction of Sir Roger Casement due regard to justice has been ignored. The resolution, it seems to me, is but a faint and slight step toward the end that humanitarian sympathy might prompt the United States, at peace with the world, to act.

Mr. STONE. What disposition does the Senator ask to have made of the resolution?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I should like to have an expression of the sentiment of the United States by its adoption. It simply asks that the President of the United States be requested to intercede or to stay the execution of the sentence of death upon Sir Roger Casement until new facts may be presented.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I heard the resolution read and I know what it is; but I ask what disposition the Senator from New Jersey has asked be made of it at this time?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I should like to have the Senate adopt it as the expression of our sentiment.

Mr. STONE. Is the Senator from New Jersey asking for the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I should like to have present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, permit me to say just a word. It may be that the Senate should give expression of its sentiment with respect to this matter. On the other hand, it might not be a very proper thing to be done in view of the conditions surrounding the case of Sir Roger Casement. I think, sir, that in the circumstances as they are a resolution of this character should receive the consideration of the Committee on Foreign Relations before we act impulsively on it, whatever our individual sentiments may be, pro or con. It is a matter that I submit should be given somewhat thoughtful consideration before the Senate takes the responsibility of definite or affirmative action.

I ask the Senator from New Jersey if he will not permit this resolution—I shall be glad to have his consent to this suggestion—to be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations? I assure him that at the first meeting of that committee I will ask the committee to consider it.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I realize the wisdom of the deliberation which should probably take precedence over my impulsive feelings, methods, and actions, and so long as I can be assured that the resolution will not go to the committee to sleep the sleep of the righteous and just and never come out of committee I shall be quite willing that it may go to the Foreign Relations Committee. With the assurance of the Senator that in a short time or at the first meeting of the committee—and I trust that they may have a meeting very early—the committee will act upon and report the resolution I consent to the Senator's suggestion.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I can not give assurance as to the action of the committee.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. No; I realize that.

Mr. STONE. I can merely say that when the committee meets the chairman of the committee will lay the matter before the committee for its consideration.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. That is entirely satisfactory to me, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, what was the result of the heated discussion which just occurred between the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MARTINE]?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution submitted by the Senator from New Jersey was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

On motion of Mr. LODGE, it was Ordered, That Mr. HARDING be appointed to fill the vacancy on the Committee on the Philippines occasioned by the death of Mr. BURLEIGH.

BUSINESS STATISTICS (S. DOC. NO. 477).

On motion of Mr. FLETCHER, it was Ordered, That the illustrations accompanying the letter from the Chief of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, Department of Commerce, transmitting pursuant to request the corrected manuscript of the report on business activity in the United States and in leading foreign countries be printed as a part of said document.

ADDRESS BY SENATOR FLETCHER (S. DOC. NO. 479).

Mr. STONE. I have been sent an address delivered by Senatory DUNCAN U. FLETCHER April 19, 1916, in response to the toast of the minister of foreign affairs of Argentina at a farewell dinner given to the delegates of the Argentine Government at the capital of Buenos Aires, a copy of which I have in my hand, and I desire that it be printed as a document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. It is so ordered.

STATE EMPLOYEES IN MILITARY SERVICE.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, a few days since I introduced a resolution having for its purpose that the United States Government should pay all such clerks and employees their regular wage in conjunction with their wage as soldiers. I said then, and I desire to emphasize it here again, that while the resolution went over, very many employers throughout the country are pursuing that policy. I have here, cut from the New York Tribune, what might well be termed a model list, where employers are paying their regular wage to those of their men who may have enlisted or who are in the National Guard and have gone to the front. I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE TO GIVE ALL EMPLOYEES IN THE GUARD FULL PAY.

The State of New York, following the lead of patriotic New York business men, announced yesterday it would continue full pay of all State employees called to the colors in the National Guard.

The announcement was made by Gov. Whitman after he had consulted the legal departments of the State government.

FULL-PAY MEN FILL HONOR ROLL—175 EMPLOYERS SHARE THE SACRIFICES OF THOSE CALLED TO COLORS—BROOKLYN RAPID TRANSIT VOLUNTEERS FOR $9,000 A MONTH—HARDPAN PATRIOTS PLEDGE JOBS BACK, PLACE IN LINE, AND INSURANCE IF KILLED.

Hardpan patriots—business men, who are willing to go deep into their pockets for their country while their employees go to the firing line for their country—enrolled in the business men's roll of honor last week to the number of 175.

The business men's roll of honor is the list of employers who are willing to share with their men the burden involved in going to the front for Uncle Sam. It includes those men who have volunteered to care for the wives, motners, and children of guardsmen while the guardsmen are in service and getting only $14 a month. It is the roll of those who have heard the guardsmen remark, "I'd like to go, but there's the wife and children," and have come to the rescue with the cold cash.

BROOKLYN RAPID TRANSIT TO PAY $9,000 A MONTH.

Among the 175 business men are some of the largest employing firms in the city and some of the smallest. There is the Brooklyn Rapid Transit, whose manager said yesterday: "Of course, it's not important, but it may be of interest that the loss to us will be $9,000 a month." And there is the small, unheard-of fellow, trying to keep his concern going, who said yesterday: "I have only one employee in the guard, and I wish with all my heart that I could pay him his full salary for as long as he may be away. There's nothing I would like better. But I can't promise that for the simple reason that I might not be able to do it. But I did promise him this when he left—that I'd see to it that his wife and children didn't want for anything while he was gone, even if I had to go hungry myself."

The roll is no respecter of nationalities. German firm names punctuate the list, and among the early recruits was the Liverpool, London & Globe Insurance Co. (Ltd.).

Department stores of the city have been among the first and most generous in their response to the call to the colors. Before the call of the executive committee of the Merchants' Association had gone out, praising the spirit of the militiamen and recommending that employers be actuated by a similar patriotism, B. Altman & Co. had lined up with the city of New York in a promise to every guardsman in their employ that his full salary would be paid to his dependents while he was gone.

FORTY-FIVE GO FROM ALTMAN'S.

Michael Friedsam, president of the company, announced to the 45 militiamen in the employ of the Altman store that they would have leaves of absence for as long as they were with the colors; that they would receive full pay while they were away, would be kept in line of promotion, and their jobs would be waiting for them when they came back. For good measure, the Altman store added a comfort kit to its Godspeed to the departing soldiers.

The New York John Wanamaker store has always encouraged preparedness, and the Seventy-first Regiment has a machine-gun section composed entirely of men from the Wanamaker store. Twenty-five other men are scattered through other regiments. Managers of Wanamaker's have already made arrangements to send a man's full salary to him, to turn it over to a designated relative, or to put it in the bank for the militiaman, and hand the entire sum with interest over to him upon his return from Mexico.

SALARIES AND INSURANCE BY MACY'S.

R. H. Macy & Co., immediately following the call of President Wilson, sent a letter to each of the 42 guardsmen in the store's employ promising not only the payment of their full salaries while away, but also guaranteeing the payment of $500 insurance to a designated heir, if the militiaman met death. This offer is good until January 1, 1917, when the plan will be reconsidered.

"Of course we will pay the salaries of men while they are doing military duty," was the response yesterday of Saks & Co. "A dozen of our men have gone. No man from this store shall lose because he does his duty."

A representative of the Gimbel Bros. Co. told the 32 men leaving that store for military duty that their pay would be sent to their wives while they were away, and that, instead of losing by their absence, they would return to their employers "more appreciated than ever."

ABRAHAM & STRAUS HAVE 200 IN GUARD.

Abraham & Straus, of Brooklyn, said that the call to arms would cost them nearly 200 men, but that all would have full pay and leaves of absence. Other companies granting the same were Butler Bros., in their stores in all cities; Best & Co.; Frederick Loeser & Co.; Rogers, Peet & Co.; Franklin, Simon & Co.; and Montgomery Ward & Co.

The Childs restaurants, heavy contributors to the National Guards of many States, will pay salaries and hold positions for all of its employee militiamen. The United Cigar Stores, even more thoroughly distributed among the States, will also give full pay. The Sheffield Farms-Slawson-Decker Milk Co. saw its treasurer, Thomas W. Decker, answer the call to arms and immediately announced to its employees that every one of its guardsmen answering the call would have full pay while doing militia duty.

A group insurance amounting to more than a quarter of a million dollars has been taken out by the U. T. Hungerford Brass & Copper Co. to cover the lives of its employee-militiamen. By the terms of this insurance, which is paid for by the company, a life insurance of one year's salary will be paid to relatives in case of the death of a militiaman. These employees will also receive full pay.

James Newton Gunn, president of the United States Tire Co., made good on his preparedness advocacy yesterday with the following announcement to his men:

"We have been prime movers in the campaign for adequate national preparedness. Some time ago a recruiting meeting for the National Guard was held under the auspices of the United States Rubber Co. Any of you men who want to go to Plattsburg may have two weeks' extra vacation to do so. Any of you men who are called to the front will get full pay every day you are gone."

CONSOLIDATED SWINGS IN LINE.

The board of governors of the Consolidated Exchange of New York stopped at no halfway measure. All in one swoop they announced that any employee of the exchange who "now belongs to the National Guard, or who may enlist in the guard or any other branch of the armed forces of the United States," will receive full pay while away and find his position waiting for him upon his return.

The details of the generous and spontaneous manner in which New York's business men have met the President's call to the colors, and voluntarily accepted a burden second only to the task assumed by the men who will actually tread the hot and dusty Mexican trails and face the enemy bullets, might be continued indefinitely. Following 's the business men's roll of honor—the employers who will pay in full or in substantial part the salaries of their employee-militiamen who bear arms for their country:

S. 4476. An act extending the time for the commencement and completion of the bridge or bridges authorized by an act entitled "An act to amend an act to authorize the Dauphin Island

Railway & Harbor Co., its successors or assigns, to construct and maintain a bridge or bridges, or viaducts, across the water between the mainland, at or near Cedar Point, and Dauphin Island, both Little and Big; also to dredge a channel from the deep waters of Mobile Bay into Dauphin Bay; also to construct and maintain docks and wharves along both Little and Big Dauphin Islands," approved June 18, 1912; and

S. 5777. An act to ratify, approve, and confirm an act duly enacted by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, as amended by Congress, relating to the granting of a franchise for the purpose of manufacturing, maintaining, distributing, and supplying of electric light and power within the Lihue district and the Koloa district, county of Kauai, Territory of Hawaii.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 16699. An act making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 44), which was read:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 13486) entitled "An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war," the clerk be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to restore the matter stricken out by the amendment of the Senate numbered 1 with an amendment as follows: In line 3 of the matter restored strike out "$36" and insert "$30"; and also restore the matter stricken out by the amendment of the Senate numbered 25 with an amendment as follows: In line 3 of the matter restored strike out "$50" and insert "$40," the same being for the purpose of carrying out the agreement of the conferees.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I move that the Senate concur in the resolution of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Are there further concurrent or other resolutions? If there be none, morning business is closed.

Mr. BRYAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the fortifications appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14303) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending amendment is the committee amendment, on page 7, to strike out and insert. The amendment has heretofore been read. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. TOWNSEND. What is the amendment, Mr. President?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment is on pages 7 and 8, and has to do with the patent of John Hays Hammond, jr.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I desire to say a word further in regard to this matter. I had some papers on my desk last evening in reference to it, but they have been mislaid. I can, however, perhaps state all that I desire to say on the subject without having the outline which I had prepared on yesterday.

I have stated that it seemed to me the part of wisdom for the Government to take advantage of this offer as presented by Mr. Hammond and his associates. The proposition, which I think is thoroughly understood, is to the effect that if, after an examination by a board consisting of three Army officers and three naval officers, it shall be found desirable, then the Government shall enter into a contract to purchase this invention at $750,000, $30,000, or so much thereof as is necessary, to be used for investigating the invention, to be taken out of the purchase price.

The Senate provision is simply an appropriation of $30,000 with which the same board, consisting of three officers of the Army and three officers of the Navy, shall proceed to investigate the matter. If they find that the purchase of the invention is desirable, then they are to report back to Congress, and Congress can then deal with the proposition as it sees fit.

It is possible, of course, that we might obtain this invention at that time; that is, after this board has investigated and reported. It is also possible that it can not be obtained at that time. Indeed, if I understand the situation correctly, Mr. Hammond has waited for at least a whole year since he made this proposition, or a similar one, to Congress, and there has been plenty of opportunity for him to dispose of his invention to a foreign government at a time the most favorable imaginable.

As to whether there is any basis or reason for purchasing this device, I should like to refer to the fact that Mr. Hammond has been working on it for a long time, and for several years last past an Army officer has been detailed to work at the laboratory where this device has been perfected, and has noticed every operation in connection with it. Not only that, but it has been under the investigation of a great many officers of the Army, who have seen it work. They have noticed, for instance, that this projectile could be controlled with such accuracy that on one occasion it was directed at a bamboo rod about 3½ miles away and it hit this mark, and that this was done repeatedly.

The Army officers who have investigated the device say it is a good thing. They express no doubt about this, and therefore it has seemed to me that if we have an opportunity to enter into a contract of purchase we should not throw it away. We have neglected valuable opportunities in the past, and inasmuch as we do not propose to spend a single dollar more in entering into this contract than we would spend if we had not entered into it now, providing the device is decided not to be of sufficient value to warrant its purchase, we ought to decide as the House has decided.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. POMERENE. Am I right in assuming from the statement that the Senator from Michigan has made that the Army officer detailed to make the observations in the laboratory regarded it as wholly practicable?

Mr. TOWNSEND. The Senator is correct about that. That officer appeared before the House committee, and the House hearings, which are full and complete, show that it is a device of exceeding merit, in the judgment of the officers.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I desire to ask the Senator a question. Where is the contract to which the Senator refers? It is not set out in this bill, is it?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I presume the Senator means the copy of the contract setting forth what it contains. That is in the House hearings.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I understood the Senator to say that the Government, if this device is proven a success, of course, would take it. Is that provision made in this bill?

Mr. TOWNSEND. The House provision does that; but the Senate has stricken that provision out, as the Senator will notice.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Oh, yes.

Mr. TOWNSEND. It is referred to in the House provision as contract "Z." It has been signed by the inventors and is now placed at the disposal of the Government to be signed by the Government's authorized representatives, if this board, after thorough investigation, declares the device to be practicable and one which ought to be purchased by the Government.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, does the Senator think that that board ought to be given plenary power to pass upon that, and close the contract without reference to Congress again?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I think so, Mr. President. I would not say that if the Government had not already been investigating it and had not had a man on the job to look it over for two years or more last past. I think it would be worth while to read into the RECORD, if we had time—but I do not care to do that now—the letter which Secretary Garrison sent to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations last March a year ago, in which he states what has been done by the department and why it thinks that this is a device entitled to the favorable consideration of Congress.

Mr. President, I do not care to detain the Senate any longer. It is simply a practical matter to me, and one in which we are taking no chance, it seems to me; no more so as least than we are in expending $30,000 and having the board of officers report back to Congress.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I will detain the Senate but a very brief period in expressing my views about this proposed Senate committee amendment.

It seems to me that if the Government wants to control this machine of destruction it should investigate it and experiment with it and test it to the satisfaction of its experts, in whose judgment it has confidence, and should proceed to take it at the price it agrees upon with the owner. If I understand the situation, Mr. Hammond, the owner of this patent and the builder of the machine, has spent a very large sum of money in developing this very ingenious and, according to the testimony of the board of officers who examined it, upon which the House provision is based, extremely desirable weapon. It seems to me that if, upon examination, we approve the weapon and want it, we should provide in this bill for its purchase. The House provision does that.

One investigation has been held by an expert board. The invention has been approved. The Senate committee amendment provides for another investigation to be held by a board of three Army and three Navy experts, and then does nothing about it. I submit that the Government of the United States ought to be reasonable about a pure business proposition, as this is.

I understand the owner of the patent has already declined a much larger offer from a foreign government for the invention and has refused to place this weapon in their hands if his own Government desires to have it. I think that is patriotic and commendable. I think he ought to be met in the same spirit in which he approaches our Government. It seems to me for us to say, this device having been indorsed by one board of experts, that now we will appoint another board of experts, and if they indorse it and report favorably upon it the whole thing will be left in just the situation it is to-day, is an unreasonable attitude for this Government to take.

The owner of this patent is not attempting to force it upon this Government nor to sell them "a pig in a poke." He has a patent on a machine of destruction which, if it turns out to be what the experts have already said it is, might determine a war in our favor. It might develop into an instrument of coast defense that would save untold millions of dollars, and it might save bombardment of our cities, and so forth. Nobody can imagine the benefits that it might confer if it is what the experts have already said it is.

It seems to me to be utterly unreasonable to say to this man, he having declined a foreign sale of this device, having offered it to our Government and our own military experts having favored it, "We will appoint another commission, and if they favor it, well, maybe we will see you later; but do not sell it to anybody else in the meantime. You continue to lose the interest on your money and to hang the proposition up in mid-air, and then if it is again approved by another board, you must again come to Congress, and then have the matter again go through the committees of both branches of Congress, and submit it to us again."

It has been intimated that the Senate will know more about how to decide this question upon the merits of this invention if another commission investigates it and reports favorably upon it. Mr. President, I venture to say that there is not a Senator in this body who will know any more about this torpedo-carrying boat if another commission test it and report just as the first one did—that it is satisfactory, and a success, and they recommend its purchase. There is not a Senator here who will know anything more about the invention itself than he does now, or whose judgment will be any better upon the proposition to purchase it than it is at present.

I do not think it is fair to tie this thing up through another session of Congress. If it is a good thing, we may need it before another session of Congress meets. I think that if the owner of this apparatus offers it to the Government subject to our approval upon examination, we ought to say: "We will take it subject to our own approval, and we will appoint a board to decide upon the merits of it"; or else we ought to say, "We do not know enough about it to take it, and we decline to trust anybody's judgment, even that of our own experts."

All this man wants is to be met in a fair, business way, as one business man would meet another. What is proposed here is very much as if some one wanted to buy a horse, and the owner of the horse said, "All right, the price of it is so much; you can have it at so much; you can send your own veterinary surgeon around here and examine it; you can drive it; there is no use taking my word about it; make your own examination; and if at the end of a week you want it at that price, you can take it," and the prospective purchaser sent a veterinary surgeon around, and the veterinarian reported that the horse was sound and gentle and worth the money, and then the man who wanted a horse came back and said, "Well, you just keep the horse, and maybe next year I will come around and see you, but don't sell it to anybody else."

That is a perfectly unbusinesslike transaction; and nobody ought to be expected to be put in the attitude in which the Senate amendment puts the owner of this patent. As I say, if I thought Senators would be in any better position to vote after another board had found exactly what this first board says, I would be in favor of waiting; but I know we will not know anything more about the merits of this matter then than we do now. Therefore I think, in common justice and fairness, we either ought to take this thing subject to the approval of our own agents that we appoint to examine it, or else we ought to drop it and release the man who has made us the offer.

I hope, therefore, that the Senate amendment will be rejected.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I am quite in accord with what the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] have said on this matter. It seems to me, however, that it may be in order to call to the attention of the Senate, in addition to what they have said, what this patent really means. Of course, I can not qualify as an expert in radioelectricity, and I assume that no other Senator can, so I think in all probability if this matter were discussed a week there would be very little more information in the minds of Senators than there is now. It is a question of reading the hearings, which are very voluminous—some 200 pages of them—taken in the House, where the matter was given serious and, I think, intelligent consideration.

Those hearings demonstrate that all of the Army officers, the members of the Board of Ordnance and Fortifications, are enthusiastically in favor of the purchase which is proposed; that there was some little doubt in the mind of one naval officer, but that the officers of the Navy had not given the matter the same consideration which has been given it by the officers of the Army. I think the doubt in the mind of this particular naval officer depended largely on whether or not the torpedo could be followed to any considerable distance. That question came up the other day—how long the person in control of the torpedo could follow it. Of course, he can not do it when it is beyond his vision. It can be relayed from point to point along the shore if the torpedo is going to follow a course along the shore, and it can probably be relayed from an aeroplane to a distance much greater than 6 miles.

There are three methods of coast defense—coast fortifications, mines, and some method of making a direct attack on an enemy. We have the fortifications, very largely of the first quality; we have mine fields, and can plant more; but in order to make the fortifications effective the enemy must come within a distance which will enable him to be reached by our guns and in order to make the mines effective the enemy must get into the mine field. The third method is to attack the enemy; and the only way to do it is by some such contrivance as is proposed in this case.

I suggested the other day that the English Government paid $500,000 for a torpedo which could be controlled by wires, by direct connections. It never has been successful beyond a reasonable distance. I think, on the whole, it is largely discredited, due, perhaps, to an increased gun range. But here seems to be a method of controlling an attack with an effective weapon on an enemy who is proceeding against our fortifications. It is possible that we may be wasting the money, but, in my judgment, we can not afford to take the chance.

This Senate proposition of $30,000 for a further investigation might in itself be all right if the owners of the patents had in any way been consulted and had agreed to it; but they have not been, and, furthermore, they would not consent to any such proposition as that. This matter has been considered and investigated by the best men we have in the military service, and we have their report—among them the Chief of Fortifications, Gen. Weaver, and the Chief Engineer of the Army. We can not find better men than have investigated this subject. More than that, it seems to me that the House provision does protect the Government. We make the contract, and if the device does not come up to the conditions which the contract imposes, then we do not have to take it. It is simply a question of putting it into practical effect.

We have done a vast amount of procrastination in the past in such matters, wisely frequently, perhaps wisely nine times out of ten. Very many such patents do not develop practical results; but, on the other hand, the tenth one does do an immeasurable amount in producing protection and producing an effective weapon. At this time, when we are liberally spending millions and hundreds of millions of dollars for purposes of defense, it seems to me the height of folly for us to take any chance in a matter of this kind.

When we come to the question of patents—that question was raised by the Senator from Oklahoma the other day—I understand that there are other patents that deal indirectly with matters of this kind; but it is the application of the patent to the particular purpose which is effective in this case, and in that matter Mr. Hammond guarantees the Government, or will guarantee the Government, in any way possible, to protect the Government's interests. Of course, these patents have not been issued, they are simply claims that have been taken up. The patents have not been issued, because if they were issued, then they would be available to foreign Governments, and would be of no use to ourselves, or no special use to ourselves. I understand that there have been many hundreds of them allowed—128, I think—that apply directly to this particular process. In that connection I want to read a statement relating to the patents which I think will be more illuminating than anything I could say.

With respect to the Hammond application for patents, Hon. William M. Ingraham, Acting Secretary of War, in a letter to Hon. SWAGAR SHERLEY, dated June 10, 1916, states as follows:

A very large majority of the claims have been allowed as the result of such examination, though patents have not yet been issued, for the reason that it has not been deemed best to make the investigations public. It should be added that there are over 100 applications, embracing more than 2,000 claims.

From the statement of the Acting Secretary of War it is apparent that the United States Patent Office considers that Mr. Hammond's work is of an original character, otherwise the claims would not have been allowed. As further evidence that his work is different from that of other people who have been attempting to control mechanisms by wireless energy there is a four-volume thesis written by Mr. Hammond which has been for some time in the possession of the War Department. This thesis deals in great detail with the work which has been attempted in the United States and abroad in the art of controling mechanisms by wireless and other forms of radio energy. This work describes in detail all the patents in this art that have been issued in the United States and the rest of the world.

It is therefore apparent that the War Department is thoroughly familiar with the work of other inventors in this field, and has given Mr. Hammond preference because of his work being of an original character. It is believed by the War Department that Mr. Hammond controls those essential features which are necessary for the construction of a system of wireless control of torpedoes having a significant military value. As further evidence of Mr. Hammond's belief in the validity of his own patent applications, he agrees to protect the United States Government from any infringement suits. This clause is embodied in the contract between him and the War Department.

Under those conditions and circumstances it does seem to me that the Senate would not be acting prudently or wisely without adopting the House provision covering this apparatus.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. WEEKS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. May I inquire if the Senator is familiar with the testimony taken on this subject by the House committee?

Mr. WEEKS. I have read the testimony.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I simply wanted information. I have not been able to read it myself.

Mr. WEEKS. I became interested in the matter, and I have, I think, read all of the testimony that has been taken.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Aside from the amount of money that is paid to cover the expenses incurred by Mr. Hammond and his company and such reasonable and fair compensation as he thinks himself entitled to for the invention itself, leaving that all out of consideration, what would be the expense attendant upon installing this device, with the plant—I use, of course, very crude terms—necessary to operate it?

Mr. WEEKS. I understand about $400,000 for the plant; so that the total expenditure would be about $1,150,000 if the Government accepted the device and installed the plant.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Following that up a little further, Mr. President, what field could be covered from that plant as a directing agency?

Mr. WEEKS. I am afraid I can not answer that question with accuracy. I assume that a wide range could be covered from that plant if you did not get beyond a range of perhaps 6 miles from the shore; but when it comes to following it at a considerable distance from the shore by means of aeroplanes I do not know.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. But the Senator stated in the earlier portion of his remarks something about relay stations.

Mr. WEEKS. Yes. Of course, you can not direct a torpedo, if I understand correctly, beyond your vision, which is probably not more than 5 or 6 miles; but if you had a relay station to take up that control along the shore or from an island or from any other point of vantage, depending on the height of the observer, you could continue to direct it much farther, as far as the vision could follow the torpedo. But when you go offshore, then I take it that you could not follow the torpedo farther than your vision could follow it without the use of an aeroplane. It is contended, however, that by using an aeroplane it can be followed and directed indefinitely 20 or 30 or 40 or 50 miles; I do not know how far.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Would the aeroplane be a sort of substation from which it would be directed?

Mr. WEEKS. I understand so; and the power of directing would depend somewhat on the size of the aeroplane and its capacity to carry apparatus for this purpose. But I want to say frankly to the Senator that I do not pretend to be an expert in matters of this kind, and I am simply quoting from the testimony given by our Army officers as I understand it.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me a moment?

Mr. WEEKS. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. LODGE. As I understand, the range of vision is the limitation from the shore.

Mr. WEEKS. I think so.

Mr. LODGE. The wireless apparatus can be moved along the shore, but they are controlled, in the distance out, by the range of vision. Now, Mr. SHERLEY, in a speech in the House, in which he sums up all this very admirably, says:

The question involved there is the question of the amount of energy which can be sent out from the aeroplane, and that is dependent upon the weight-carrying capacity of the aeroplane. There is no reason why an aeroplane can not now be constructed with sufficient weight-carrying capacity to have installed in it a wireless apparatus that would be able to send the necessary energy so as to control this torpedo at a distance of 5 or 6 miles—

That is, 5 or 6 miles from the aeroplane—

If that could be done, the extent to which the torpedo could be used would be very great. Instead of being confined by shore vision, as you would be if the control came from shore batteries, you would be able by following over the torpedo to go over a radius of many miles and control the torpedo from a height sufficient to put the aeroplane beyond danger of serious attack by antiaircraft guns of an enemy fleet.

That is, you can not extend the operation of the torpedo beyond the range of vision from the shore apparatus; but with the aeroplane, at a distance of 5 or 6 miles from the torpedo, you can control it, of course, for any distance.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Do I understand the Senator to mean that the aeroplane can carry a directing power out any distance to sea?

Mr. LODGE. That is, the wireless apparatus; and he says the only limit is sufficient weight-carrying capacity to have installed in the aeroplane a wireless apparatus that would be able to send the necessary energy.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Then the aeroplane has no connection with the station on shore?

Mr. LODGE. None whatever; it is an independent apparatus.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Oh, I see.

Mr. LODGE. It is only a question of where you have your apparatus. On the shore it is limited by the range of vision.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If the Senator knows, what would be the total cost of an aeroplane and the apparatus necessary to direct the torpedo in its course, if the Senator has that information, approximately?

Mr. LODGE. I do not know what an aeroplane costs, but an aeroplane is not a very expensive thing and the wireless apparatus is not expensive. The expensive thing is the shore plant, which will cost, according to the figures in the bill as passed by the House, four hundred and odd thousand dollars. That apparatus, I understand, can be moved along the shore, and to get a distance from the shore you have to have an aeroplane to carry on the apparatus just as you move it on the shore.

Mr. LANE. This device, it seems, will not operate farther than 5 or 6 miles from the shore, and you deal with a foreign ship which is doing business with you 14 to 20 miles away. I do not know how far they do shoot. They claim they can shoot 25 miles; but you can not use this apparatus without furnishing additional energy to carry it farther from an aeroplane. You would have to go out 5 to 10 miles to sea in an aeroplane in order to steer this thing against the ship. But it seems that the type of aeroplane for the work has not been invented and nobody knows whether it can be used successfully or not. It has to be developed.

Mr. LODGE. What kind of aeroplane has not been invented? Why is it more difficult for an aeroplane to carry a wireless apparatus than to carry a machine gun with two men?

Mr. LANE. It is on account of the weight, I suppose. They say they have not developed the type of vessel necessary.

Mr. LODGE. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. STONE. I beg pardon; wireless apparatus has been installed and the success of it demonstrated on aeroplanes. Aeroplanes go a long distance in the air and flash their messages to people on the earth. They do it in Europe and they do it elsewhere.

Mr. LANE. In reply to that statement I will say that everybody knows you can send a wireless telephone message or a flashlight from an aeroplane with a battery. You can carry such a battery in your pocket. It does not weigh over 2 or 3 pounds, and makes sufficient light to see the range of human vision, and it will not weigh over 1 or 2 pounds. If the Senator has any doubt about that, I can manufacture one for him myself; but it does not furnish energy enough to guide a torpedo boat.

Mr. LODGE. I do not know that the Senator knows whether it can or not.

Mr. LANE. Here is the evidence. They say here it has not been done. Here is the evidence, and I will look it up.

Mr. LODGE. I saw a statement that they had not made it yet to carry sufficient weight, but there is nothing to prevent it.

Mr. LANE. You can have an apparatus on a torpedo boat, but there is no positive information to the effect that the apparatus will work from a reinforcing station located on an aeroplane which floats on unstable air. An aeroplane is not a stable thing. It is like a boat bobbing around on rough water, and it is hard to control. It is not yet fully developed. It is not as stable as a Zeppelin.

Mr. LODGE. Boats on waves carrying wireless apparatus send messages to great effect. The motion does not affect it.

Mr. LANE. But the boat is more stable than the aeroplane. Here we are figuring on buying this apparatus and subsequently developing an aeroplane of sufficient ability to carry machinery to control and guide the torpedo. The torpedo will not go farther than 6 miles from shore. That is conceded.

Mr. LODGE. That is, the range of vision.

Mr. LANE. And the range of gunfire is 20 miles.

Mr. LODGE. I understand that perfectly.

Mr. LANE. So we can get out 6 miles in order to destroy the enemy.

Mr. LODGE. There is no doubt that they have guns which can throw shells 20 miles. The aeroplane extends the range of vision.

Mr. WORKS. I had risen to make an inquiry of the Senator from Massachusetts when the Senator from Oregon interposed. It seems we have discovered an expert in the person of the Senator from Oregon and he will be able to inform me better than the Senator from Massachusetts, who, I understand, does not claim to be an expert.

Mr. LODGE. I do not claim to be an expert; I only take the word of men who are experts.

Mr. WORKS. I am very much interested to know how successfully this aeroplane might be used in a matter of this kind. I want to inquire, first, whether there have been any tests made of that feature of this matter. Does the Senator from Massachusetts know whether there has been any such test made?

Mr. LODGE. There is a statement here by Lieut. Decker, who made the examination, in which he makes a statement on that point. He says:

> I was ordered to Mr. Hammond's research laboratory at Gloucester on December 26, 1915, for the purpose of investigating and reporting upon the practicability of controlling these carriers from energy sent out from an aeroplane. I went into the theoretical end of the question with Mr. Hammond very thoroughly, and I was personally present during nearly every one of the experiments that were made with the apparatus we had, and the results were very satisfactory indeed.
> The apparatus that was used as the transmitting station in this aeroplane control was, as Mr. Hammond has testified, a model of what would be used in the aeroplane itself, and was supported about 350 feet in the air. The set was very small, comparatively speaking. It was only radiating 1.4 amperes from the antennæ, and the receiving set consisted of a makeshift antennæ supported by an old rope without even any insulator in it and a bamboo rod run up alongside a wagon drawn by a horse. Inside the wagon was this mechanism which would ordinarily be used in the boat, and as we ran along on the country road, whenever we thought we had gone a good distance we tied the earth lead to any convenient hydrant, or something of that sort. In many cases the earthing was very imperfect, and we successfully operated this mechanism up to a distance which I approximated as being at least four-fifths of a mile. That was with a radiated energy of about 1.4 amperes from the aeroplane antennæ. From these experiments alone I was firmly convinced, personally, that we could expect, without any great difficulty, a distance of control of at least 5 miles. I calculated roughly we should expect a distance of that much with the kind of set we could get now and put in an aeroplane. Therefore, I think the problem of aeroplane control is just a question of development and of spending the necessary time and money on it. There is nothing fundamentally wrong with it.
> Mr. RAUCH. What have you to say as to the range of activity in aeroplane control of this device?
> Lieut. DECKER. That, sir, is dependent entirely on how much gasoline you can carry in your boat and how much gasoline you can carry in your aeroplane.

That is the experiment made by the expert officer sent down. He experimented, of course, with a small apparatus.

Mr. WORKS. Such wonderful things have been done by the use of electricity that I should hardly question anything that may be suggested. I was skeptical, however, about the ability to use as unstable a foundation or mechanism as an aeroplane for purposes of this kind. I think that is a very important feature of this question. Take, for example, the Pacific coast. Unless you can use an aeroplane successfully, you would have to establish an almost continuous line of these stations from one end of the coast to the other, because troops can be landed on the Pacific coast almost anywhere, and they are accessible to boats coming in from the ocean. That being so, unless you can use the aeroplane, you would have to have, as I said, these continuous stations all along the coast in order to make them effective.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me, on the shore they can move the radio or wireless apparatus everywhere.

Mr. WORKS. I presume that may be done, but that it seems to me would be a very imperfect way of dealing with the conditions which might arise in case of war. In the carrying along of one station in that way, it seems to me, in order to make a permanent benefit, there must be a permanent and fixed station at least at various places along the coast.

For that reason I was very much interested in the aeroplane feature of the question, and I wanted to know whether such test has been made as would indicate that this torpedo could be successfully operated in that way. The testimony which has been cited by the Senator from Massachusetts seems to indicate at least that it may be done.

The sentiments I have heretofore expressed might indicate that I would oppose legislation of this kind. I think we are going to an unreasonable extent in the preparation we are making for war. I do not believe that there is anything in the conditions in this country that exist at the present time to warrant the extent to which we are going. But here is a case where this instrument of destruction, which I hope we may never be called upon to use, may go into the hands of some foreign nation and at some time be used against us. I think it would be very unfortunate to allow that to be done, if it has any virtue as a killing machine, because we may some time have to resort to the killing of other people in order to protect our own Nation. While I am a man of peace, I do not believe in peace at any price. I think we must protect our own country by all proper and legitimate means, which may mean war.

Therefore, in this instance, it seems to me, if this device is anything like it is represented to be, it is very important that our Government should have some control of it. It does seem to me that it is unnecessary to delay the matter by making additional tests. Where the matter has gone as far as it has, it seems to me it would be better and safer to act upon it right now, and to protect ourselves against the possibility of this device going into the hands of some other government. I should be sorry to think that Mr. Hammond or any other American citizen would dispose of this device with any idea that it would some time be used by a foreign nation against his own country.

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator allow me just there to quote what Mr. SHERLEY said in the House, because the committee examined the very point the Senator is now speaking of? He speaks of the proposition Mr. Hammond made to sell the torpedo to us at a much lower price, royalties and the right to sell elsewhere, and then stated that—> he had expended some $300,000 in the development of this invention, in the experimentation and in the conducting of this work over a number of years. He then made the proposition to the committee that he would sell to the United States simply the rights here, leaving him free to sell the rights abroad.

> The committee was unanimous in the belief that if the thing was worth acquiring it was worth acquiring in its entirety, and that we ought to get the exclusive right and not leave it to be sold to possible enemies, and I think it is due to Mr. Hammond to say that he has all along shown a desire that his country should possess what he believes to be this very valuable weapon, and he has refrained from availing himself of perhaps the most unusual market that will ever present itself to an inventor, the market abroad brought about by virtue of the European war, in order to give to his own country opportunity of acquiring it.
> Mr. Hammond in his entire bearing and dealing with the committee exhibited a desire to serve his country and a consideration that I think was admirable, and I think it is due him to state it here. The committee being of the opinion that we ought, if we acquired it at all, to acquire the exclusive right also came to this opinion; that it was more desirable to buy the thing outright and have done with the question of royalties than to buy with a less first payment and then to continue royalties.

Mr. WORKS. I am glad to hear that statement of the position taken by Mr. Hammond. Of course, if his own Government should refuse to take over this device at a reasonable price, it might be a justification of Mr. Hammond if he should attempt to dispose of it to some foreign nation. I think we ought to treat him and his associate fairly in this matter and that if it is a desirable thing for the Government to have we should pay a reasonable compensation for the device.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, what the Senator suggests is exactly what has happened in the past. We have had opportunities to buy various weapons at different times which promised well, but we did not take advantage of it and they were sold to foreign Governments, like the Maxim patents, which have been extremely useful to foreign Governments. Of course, you might buy something which is not valuable. That is a chance, and it would be folly to buy everything that is offered at this time; but when our experts advise us that this has every promise of being effective it seems the height of folly to open the door to its being sold to a foreign Government. Nobody can blame Mr. Hammond or those associated with him if, after giving the Government every opportunity to make the apparatus, they then take advantage of the most unusual market for apparatus of this kind the world has ever seen.

Mr. WORKS. I am inclined to agree with the Senator from Massachusetts. We must necessarily take some chances in dealing with a matter of this kind. If after a reasonable investigation there is a probability that this device will do what is claimed for it, I should think it would be a wise thing for the Government to expend this money at this time and for this purpose.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I should like to finish what I began to say.

If this is a good invention, I want it. I do not want money to stand in the way of our acquiring it. I am just as anxious as anyone, but I think we ought to buy it on terms such as I would suggest, that if it proves successful after a fair trial upon the part of an independent committee appointed by Congress and giving it a reasonable time trying it out with the aeroplane or reenforcing it, placed upon the aeroplane so that they can go farther than a range of 5 miles, and so we can get out to the sea far enough to do something with it, and contract with the gentlemen under bond that we will take it at a fair price. It is worth more than $750,000 to us if it will do that. But if it will not cover a range greater than 5 or 6 miles from shore and you can not operate it from an aeroplane, which will have to go to sea at least 5 or 6 miles in order to set it, and 5 or 6 miles farther, and then do that again in order to get out 15, which is in the range of the guns, and a third station still to overcome the range of these long-range rifles, and which are on board ship, it is not a very valuable invention. We have guns on shore that will shoot that far, and they can shell our cities. They will not protect our cities if there is a range only 5 miles from shore. Everybody ought to know that without being an engineer.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the Senator answer a question, that it may be understood? I should like to know how far it is possible to see this torpedo with the naked eye or a glass?

Mr. LANE. They claim about 5 or 6 miles, not to exceed 6 miles.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is the claim of Mr. Hammond?

Mr. LANE. Of Mr. Hammond.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. You can not control it from the shore? An aeroplane or some other vessel must be sent out to control it?

Mr. LANE. Yes; it is limited by the range of vision. They can control it indefinitely, but can not tell where it is going.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If it can be sent out a distance of 4 or 5 miles it can be seen as well by the vessel it is about to attack that distance.

Mr. LANE. No; I think not. I think it is all to the advantage of the man operating, for the enemy does not know where it is coming from.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Is it made invisible?

Mr. LANE. It is carried upon a boat, a sort of double pontoon boat, a skipjack, if you please, that goes at a speed of 50 miles an hour. The value of the torpedo depends upon the rapidity it travels. It gets in under the ship.

Mr. STONE. It may go under water?

Mr. LANE. It may even go under water.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. What is the device that makes it invisible at a distance of 4 or 5 miles?

Mr. LANE. They put on it a sort of reflector, a flash light, and it is invisible to the enemy. They can do it easily.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. So it is not visible to the enemy for that distance?

Mr. LANE. No. The device is all right in that respect, in my opinion. I am giving my opinion.

Mr. LODGE. It was shown in the testimony as the Senator from Oregon stated, that—

> You may use either what they call a sea sled, which is a boat riding on the surface of the water and which gains great speed, and depends upon its speed to render it invulnerable from gunfire of the ship, or you can use a boat like a submarine which is awash, which is running with its vitals under the water but with the top exposed. In the boat is carried the torpedo, which can be fired from it at any moment; and there is also carried, if need be, a large amount of explosives, so that if the torpedo fails to hit, the actual boat itself could be run into the target and an explosion had.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to inquire of the Senator if an actual experiment has been made by the use of an aeroplane?

Mr. LANE. No; there has not been.

Mr. LODGE. The experiment, of which I read an account, was made by Lieut. Decker.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That was by a horse and wagon on shore.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; but it was for the same purpose, to see how far they could control the radio apparatus.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Why has not such an experiment been made by an aeroplane?

Mr. LODGE. They have not, I suppose, yet built one.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Aeroplanes are common.

Mr. LODGE. Aeroplanes are common; yes.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I want to hold the floor. I do not wish to yield to lose the floor, though I am willing to yield to questions.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I want to suggest to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE] and to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] that Capt. Behr, of the Coast Artillery Service, was detailed to be present at the construction, operation, and experiments with the Hammond device for something over two years. He makes the statement which appears in the hearings on page 312, which, it seems to me, would be of considerable value to the Senate if it could be read. It occupies about two pages, all told, of the record. It is the statement of a man who has been on the job, and of a man who was detailed for this purpose. He explains in detail the workings of this apparatus and what it is proposed to do with it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to hear his statement read. There are, however, one or two questions which seem to me to be the crucial tests of what the Senate ought to do. Has an actual experiment with an aeroplane been made?

Mr. LANE. It has not been, so far as I know.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If it has not been made, why has it not been made?

Mr. LANE. What I wanted to accomplish was to have the Senate, before it agreed to expend this money, make the bargain to purchase this device contingent upon its successful operation from an aeroplane. If it can be operated successfully from an aeroplane, I desire that the Government shall buy it, and I shall vote for its purchase. If it can not be so operated, then I shall not value it so highly, although it might be useful on many occasions.

There is, however, another thing about it, which is, that within a year after operation it can be duplicated by a foreign nation.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Can the Senator from Oregon explain why the experiment with an aeroplane has not been made?

Mr. LANE. No; I can not. I do not know; but it has not been done. They imitated an aeroplane by putting some object up on top of a tower and balancing it in such a way that they thought it was a correct imitation of an aeroplane. For myself I had rather be riding on that than on an aeroplane, looking to my own safety.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Then, the Senator from Oregon is not able to state why an aeroplane experiment has not been made?

Mr. LANE. It has probably been on account of the cost. As nearly as I can assume—and I merely deduce this—there is no aeroplane yet in existence, in America at least, which will handle this apparatus. I may be mistaken. They could probably easily procure an aeroplane and try it out to ascertain whether it was suitable for the work.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Can the Senator state whether the $30,000 provided in the bill will defray the expense of making this test?

Mr. LANE. I think it will take more than that if you are going to purchase an aeroplane of sufficient capacity and steadiness to carry up the apparatus. I think possibly——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. LANE. I may be mistaken, I will say to the Senator from Nebraska. I do not speak from authority. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I was going to ask the Senator this question: Inasmuch as the House provision provides for a board of Army and Navy experts to make whatever tests they think ought to be made, and to report upon this purchase—and the machine can not be bought unless they should report favorably—and inasmuch as the Government owns an aeroplane for its Army, officers and aviators can operate and make the test without any expense at all, without purchasing an airship, why does not that fulfill the conditions?

Mr. LANE. I do not think this Government owns an aeroplane which will travel through the air with any safety to the navigator; in fact, most of them have come to earth and caused a loss of life of the helmsman. I think we are practically out of aeroplanes; at least, I am so informed, although we have spent millions of dollars in building them. We ought, however, to build another type, and we should do so promptly.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I will say to the Senator from Oregon that I saw a very good-looking aeroplane the other day over at the Senate Office Building—it was a Curtiss machine, I believe, or a Wright machine—which the Government, I suppose, can purchase, if it so desires, for a very moderate sum. Aeroplanes, as I am advised, cost from about $7,500 to $100,000, according to size and depending on the kind desired.

Mr. LANE. I also saw the aeroplane to which the Senator from Connecticut refers. It was in a good, safe position; it was near the ground, and I climbed aboard of it.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. LANE. I yield to the Senator for a question.

Mr. REED. If the Senator from Oregon will permit me to interrupt him, I will say that it seems to me that the Senator has raised a very important and a very practical question, but it has been stated in a fragmentary way, owing to interruptions which have been made, and I want to review it.

I understand the facts, as the Senator states them, to be that the torpedo can not be controlled from the shore at a distance of more than 5 or 6 miles, because that is the limit of vision as applied to this particular device; secondly, it therefore becomes necessary, if the torpedo is correctly directed, that some means must be employed to follow the torpedo to keep within sight of it and thus to direct its course; thirdly——

Mr. LANE. If the Senator will allow me right there, I desire to make a statement in reply to that, and then, I am sure——

Mr. REED. Will the Senator not let me state his case, because I am very much in accord with him?

Mr. LANE. I want the Senator to get it right. Imagine this aeroplane, if you please, going to sea in pursuit, starting a torpedo ahead of a foreign vessel at war with us, 20 miles away from us at sea—and that is about the range of their guns—in a heavy storm, if you please, it would be rather an uncertain quantity.

Mr. REED. I desire to make an explanation of the third point. As I understand—and I hope the Senator will not leave the room——

Mr. LANE. I am not going to leave the room; I am only going to get where I can hear the Senator.

Mr. REED. As the Senator suggested, the plan is to carry a wireless apparatus in an aeroplane, which will be powerful enough so that by the employment of that apparatus the torpedo can be directed to any distance we may want to go.

Fourth, that no device to be carried upon aeroplanes has yet been perfected, and that no aeroplane has ever been put to the test of carrying a device sufficiently powerful so that the torpedo can be directed and controlled.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I do not wish to claim, and I did not intend to say, that no device has been invented which can be carried on an aeroplane, for I am sure there have been many; but whether the aeroplane can carry a device for this work is problematical.

Mr. REED. Well, taking those modifications—fifth, there never yet has been an experiment made whereby an aeroplane has carried a wireless device and has actually directed the course of a torpedo.

Now, Mr. President, if the Senator from Oregon is right in those contentions, then under the House provision we have this question presented to us: Are we willing to pay $750,000 if a board appointed by the President "shall be"—and I quote the language of the bill—"favorable to the acquisition of such rights, such report to be made after a demonstration of the said system to the control of torpedoes"?

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. Just a moment. Under that language this board could accept the device and pay $750,000 if it should report "after a demonstration of the application of the said system to the control of the torpedoes," in favor of acquiring the right.

There might be control of a torpedo for 5 miles; indeed, it is said we have that control from the shore; but there is nothing in this language to require that the control can be for 10 miles or 20 miles or 30 miles from shore, either from an aeroplane or otherwise; and hence——

Mr. WEEKS. Now, Mr. President——

Mr. REED. When I finish this sentence I will yield.

Mr. WEEKS. I think I can explain that to the Senator's satisfaction if he will yield.

Mr. REED. The Senator can never explain that to my satisfaction, because I can read the English language, and I have drawn a few contracts myself. This language ought to provide that the demonstration of control should be of such character as to prove that the torpedo can be controlled for a given number of miles from shore. If that is put in, I will be very much in favor of the House provision. On the other hand, if it only can be controlled for 5 miles, it still might be a useful device, worth a large sum of money; but it would not at all be worth the amount that it would be if it could be controlled for a greater distance. So I say the language of the House provision, if we should conclude to accept it, ought to be amended and made specific. Now I gladly yield to the Senator if he desires; indeed, I am through with what I have to say.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I have no intention of criticizing the Senator's knowledge of language. Every Senator will recognize that the Senator from Missouri is an expert in the meaning and use of the English language. What I wanted to do was to point out that the torpedo may be controlled for a much longer distance from the shore than 5 or 6 miles, to which reference has been made, by the use of any aeroplane or any kind of a machine simply by using a system of signals. All you have to do is to install a wireless apparatus in the machine and signal to the station on shore the direction which you want to have the torpedo take. This was suggested by the Chief of Ordnance and Fortifications himself, that a system of signals be devised to communicate from the flying machine to the shore by one call if you wished the torpedo to go to the right, two if you wished it to go to the left, or by any system of signals which may be devised for that purpose. In that way, by using the simplest form of machine, simply having the wireless apparatus installed, you may control the torpedo for a very considerable distance from shore.

Mr. REED. That, however, the Senator will agree, while it might be adopted, might be a very different thing from direct control from an aeroplane itself.

Mr. WEEKS. I agree with that.

Mr. REED. So I think, as it was the purpose of the House provision to have a real demonstration, if we are to take the House language, we ought to amend it and make it certain that the test shall be a real test, and then, if the machine does not come up to the expectations, it might be of value to us nevertheless, and we might want to acquire it, and doubtless would.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question. It seems that he has given the subject considerable thought and study. As I understand, the Senator from Massachusetts holds that the better way to operate this device would be from a battery on shore, directed by signals from an aeroplane.

Mr. WEEKS. That is the practical way under present conditions.

Mr. VARDAMAN. That is the practical way. Now, has any demonstration of that character been made?

Mr. WEEKS. I do not find anything in the testimony to indicate that a demonstration exactly in that form has been made, but that suggestion was made by the Chief of the Bureau of Fortifications.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I want to ask the Senator this question: Have any experiments been made as to the effectiveness of this torpedo, the effectiveness of the shot? Has anything of that kind been done?

Mr. WEEKS. I think very general experiments have been made, as far as could be done with the apparatus that has been installed.

Mr. VARDAMAN. What is the estimated cost of the apparatus?

Mr. WEEKS. Four hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Of one apparatus?

Mr. WEEKS. About $400,000.

Mr. VARDAMAN. That is an apparatus for shore use?

Mr. WEEKS. Yes.

Mr. VARDAMAN. What is the size of the torpedo, the dimensions of the projectile used?

Mr. WEEKS. I think it might be made of any size. I do not know the definite measurements.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, the boat which has been used with which to make these experiments is about 50 feet in length.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The torpedo?

Mr. BRYAN. No; the boat.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The boat that carries the torpedo?

Mr. BRYAN. Of course they have not been using torpedoes; they have been using boats, such boats as could carry the torpedo.

Mr. VARDAMAN. They have never, then, in fact, used the torpedo at all; they have never experimented with that?

Mr. BRYAN. Not so far as the hearings disclose.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, they use the carrier in which the torpedo would be placed, and which amounts to practically the same thing.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, the public mind is very much excited just now on the question of war. I sometimes think that half of the American people, or two-thirds, are half crazy on the subject of spending money for war. If you want to sell a gold brick now, call it a means of preparedness and you will find somebody offering a very liberal price for it. I am very much in favor of preparation——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I think if the Senator would substitute the words "Congress of the United States" for "the American people" in the statement he has made, he would be much more nearly accurate.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I will apply it to the Congress of the United States and raise the per cent and make it about 95 per cent. I do not, of course, want this wonderful discovery to be used against the American people. I hardly think that the patriotic young gentleman who has made this discovery would for a mere matter of dollars and cents dispose of it to an enemy. But if he did, and the thing should work, there is no question in my mind about somebody else discovering something to meet it, or something similar to it. But I am not opposed to the proper investigation of this matter for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not it is really what it purports to be. I am, however, unalterably opposed at this time to making a conditional appropriation of three-quarters of a million dollars, to be paid out upon the conclusion of the investigation of two or three or a half dozen men who may be selected from the Army and the Navy to determine whether or not this thing is effective. Let the investigation be made under the direction of Congress, report the result of their investigation to Congress, and then let Congress determine whether or not it is worth the price.

I think, as I said a moment ago, that we have gone wild on this question of preparedness or preparation for war, and I think there is less necessity for preparation for war than there has been in half a century. I believe if we should wait awhile and see what is going to happen in Europe, wait until we shall be able to measure the extent of the fearful havoc being wrought in that ill-fated country, then, if our good offices, which we should offer to lead the world back into the paths of rational peace, shall be rejected, the time will be ample for us to go to the almost desperate and depauperating extremes to which this Congress proposes to go of making preparation to defend ourselves against an imaginary enemy. If the world determines that in the future the affairs of the nations of the earth must be settled by the arbitrament of the sword, then the United States Government will be in a position where she can build a hundred battleships and pay for them, or organize and equip a hundred regiments and pay for them, where the depauperated, depleted, bruised, and broken nations of Europe could not build and equip and pay for one.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I do not take exactly the position of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN], nor do I take the position of the other Senators who have spoken in favor of the adoption of the House provision. I believe that this is a good invention, but I am not certain of it. I believe that inventors should be rewarded, but I do not believe in entering into a contract which places it beyond our power to determine whether or not this is good. I believe we ought to take an option upon this property. I do not believe the inventor ought to be held to keep this device for the American Government without due compensation, and for that reason I believe in sending the matter to conference so that the conferees can make a proposition to him to give him, so far as I am concerned, a hundred thousand dollars for an option to the Government to take this property.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator speaks about taking an option. Does it not take two to get an option?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly, it does. Then, if the inventor of this apparatus does not wish to take the hundred thousand dollars, I would say: "We can not agree to the terms that are contained in the House provision." For that reason I voted, in the committee, in favor of the Senate amendment to it—not that the Senate amendment will go through, but that it will put it in conference, and thereby we can see him and see whether or not he will do this. If he does not do it, I must say that I would not consent to appropriate this $750,000, and $417,000 in addition thereto, without further assurances that we would not be bound by it after the investigation.

Mr. President, I know they say this matter must be investigated and can be investigated by individuals whom the department may name; but, Mr. President, that is not satisfactory to the Senate, whose power and duty it is to determine the matter for themselves. On that account it seems to me that we ought not to close this matter. But I do believe in giving the inventor a hundred thousand dollars and letting him take the chance as to whether or not this invention is what it is claimed to be.

If he is so certain that it is a good thing—and he knows it better than anybody else—then it seems to me he ought to grab at the proposition of being paid a hundred thousand dollars for an option, the Government to exercise the option within a definite time to be fixed; and then the Government would lose a hundred thousand dollars if it did not turn out to be the proper instrument that they wanted in this destructive warfare.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator how he would determine, if it were left to him, whether or not this was a practical and useful device?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I would want the testimony of the various persons, and I would want to see for myself whether or not, in my judgment, it was good. They probably will differ. Men here on the floor of the Senate differ with relation to this matter.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Would not the Senator, in the final analysis, rely upon the judgment of experts in the employ of the Government and serving the Government to settle this question for him?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Not necessarily. In most instances I would; there is no doubt about that; but the difficulty is this: Where a thing is done and completed, and there is the pressure and the insistence and the urging upon the Members that have the final disposition of the matter, it is not like a report, and does not give them the independence that they would have if they were to report to Congress and know that their reasons were to be investigated by the Congress itself.

I want to say that if I were proposing to buy an invention I would take an option upon it. I would not go to anybody on earth. I would want to see whether there were objections to it, whether there were other forces that might come in and negative this force, whether or not other matters might make it so that it would not be of the use that it is claimed. Yet I believe it is a great instrument and likely will prove good, but I do not believe it to the extent of saying that I am going to appropriate $1,100,000 for that purpose. That is not the way men do business in their own private affairs.

Whenever an inventor comes to you and you give his device a cursory examination, you then determine whether or not you would like to take an option upon it, but hardly anybody asks you in those instances to buy it directly, and you would not want to have it left to you in that way. A man might say, "Yes, I will agree to buy this, and I will leave it to you." That imposes upon the person a moral obligation to pay for the lost time. The proper way to do it is to pay him for the lost time, to give him $100,000, and say, "Now, we will take a certain limited time to pass upon this matter. We will make these tests, and if they are satisfactory, if the device proves good, then all right and good"; and it seems to me that would be the way to do it.

I understand that the War Department appointees have passed favorably upon this matter. I understand that the naval officers have not investigated the matter. It seems to me we are buying it without knowing exactly what we are going to get. The option proposition, by which we will lose something, and by which we compensate the inventor for the loss of time, it seems to me, is the proper way to determine this matter. If it is sent to conference, then any proposition that we might make him could be embodied in the bill, and for that reason I believe that we ought to adopt the Senate amendment—not that the Senate amendment would necessarily go through, but that a solution of this question will come from it in the nature of an option, in my judgment, by which we can perhaps save a large sum of money to the Government in the event that it does not turn out well, and by which we can give to the Government the advantage of this invention if it proves to be a success.

For those reasons, Mr. President, I think the matter ought to go to conference. It can not go to conference by refusing to amend the House bill. If the provisions in the House bill are not amended, this is a closed proposition on the part of the Government. If the Senate amendment is put through, then the negotiations and the agreements between the House and the Senate can determine what is the best thing to do with relation to the matter. In my judgment, the best thing is the option that men exercise in their own affairs, giving a limited amount—a hundred thousand dollars is a very large amount to give; and, yet, notwithsanding that, I would be willing to do it—so as to make it clear to the inventor of this device that his rights are protected in the meantime.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat I want to ask him if he approves of the kind of option that was exploited yesterday in the consideration of the sundry civil bill, where we paid $650,000 as an option, on condition that an additional amount should be appropriated to pay for that road within a year; otherwise, the option should be forfeited?

Mr. SHAFROTH. That was a forfeiture clause.

Mr. WEEKS. And whether Congress is justified in appropriating money to be put up as an option with any forfeiture clause attached?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Why, if it is to the advantage of Congress to do it, and if we do it in our own private affairs, of course it is.

Take the very illustration the Senator gave a little while ago, that the English Government had paid $500,000 for an experiment of this kind, for a device that was connected with wires. The Senator gave that as an illustration, to show that the United States is not the only Government doing this, but that other governments are spending large amounts of money for devices of this kind. And yet this morning he said that this device had not proved successful, which would show the unwisdom of the British Government in paying the $500,000. So while the illustration may be very good as a precedent for this Government buying something of this kind, it is not good in the fact that it did not prove to be successful for the English Government.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, it seems to me that the proposition of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] to give $100,000 for an option on this invention would be rather, I will say, an unusual proceeding, not to characterize it by a stronger term, because we already have an option on it without paying any $100,000, without investing anything but the $30,000 necessary to experiment with it. Why pay $100,000 for an option on it when the proposition is already before us to buy it for $750,000 contingent upon a favorable report, which is the very contingency upon which we would accept it in case we had this option?

It seems to me that the Senator from Colorado is simply proposing to put into this thing $100,000 more than is absolutely necessary; to pay $100,000 for an option on something that we might not accept after investigation, when we already have a proposition before us to buy it, because this proposition is in effect an option to buy it if, after investigation, this board of Army and Navy engineers report in favor of it.

As a member of the subcommittee, Mr. President, I favored the Senate amendment. As a result of the discussion that I have heard, and the further investigation, I have changed my mind. I believe that the proper course for us to pursue is to adopt the proposition as it came from the House, and I expect to vote that way.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President, I want to say, for one, that I am very heartily in favor of the plan suggested by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH], if it can be satisfactorily handled in that way. It is a business proposition pure and simple.

I understand that the only difference between the proposition of the House and the Senate amendment is this, and I want to ask the Senator from Florida if I am correct: The House bill provides that we shall purchase this patent or invention at a certain price on the recommendation of the Army board, which has reported, and in addition thereto the recommendation of the new board which is to be appointed from the Navy Department; in other words, a joint recommendation from both boards, both the Army and the Navy, and that the purchase shall be made without referring it again to Congress. I understand that the Senate amendment proposes to appropriate $30,000 for a further investigation, and that that is about the difference between the House provision and the Senate amendment. I wish to ask the Senator from Florida if that is correct?

Mr. BRYAN. That is correct; yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President, I shall not take the time of the Senate on this subject; but I desire to say that my judgment is that if the idea of the Senator from Colorado could be carried out—in other words, if we could secure a legal option upon this invention—that would be the proper and more satisfactory way to handle it, because we would not then run the risk of spending about a million dollars for an invention that we do not know would in any way come up to what is claimed for it by the experts.

Mr. LANE and Mr. REED addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I will detain the Senate only a moment and will then give way to the Senator from Missouri.

If this device should prove successful it would be of inestimable value to this or any other country. It would do away with the cost and the expense of maintaining fortifications and would save the country money in every way. It would render it impregnable. We would be justified in paying the inventor millions and then doing him honor in addition, and I would be willing to do it.

I wish it no harm, and hope it may prove to be just such a success as is claimed; but it would be an easy matter to test it. Let us or him or some one else build an air vessel which will carry the impulsive apparatus which furnishes the energy, and then go out to sea in chase, if you please, of a fast motor boat which makes, say 30 or 40 miles an hour—this torpedo container or carrier is estimated to travel about 50 miles an hour—and overtake it and strike it, without the torpedo aboard. It can be easily tested to the satisfaction, not necessarily of a naval expert, but of any man. The very plainest citizen in the country will understand it and know whether or not it is successful. It is easy to demonstrate. So I hope that we may adopt an amendment contingent upon the successful operation of this apparatus beyond the range of the guns of foreign ships from our shores. It is of no particular value to us to make a 5-mile excursion with a torpedo, if the enemy's ship throws a shell 20 miles. We must get outside of their range, so that they will be unsafe if they come within 25 or 30 or even 40 miles of our coast.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment to the House language:

Strike out in lines 22 and 23, page 7, the words "of the application of the said system to the control of torpedoes"; and amend the text by inserting the word "practical" before the word "demonstration" in line 21, striking out the word "a" before "demonstration," and adding a letter "s" to the word "demonstration," so that it will read "demonstrations," and in lieu of the language stricken out insert the following:

Showing that the torpedo can be directly and effectively controlled for a distance of 20 miles from shore, and can be effectively used against warships at sea at that distance. Said board shall further find that the secrecy of said invention has been fully preserved.

So that the section will read——

Mr. BRYAN. I suggest to the Senator that if he will just begin reading on line 21, that will be sufficient.

Mr. REED. So that the section will read, beginning at the word "Provided," on line 18:

Provided, That said sum shall not be paid unless a report of a board of three Army and three Navy officers, to be appointed by the President, shall be favorable to the acquisition of such rights, such report to be made after practical demonstrations showing that the torpedo can be directly and effectively controlled for a distance of 20 miles from shore——

Mr. SHAFROTH. Will the Senator read that slowly?

Mr. REED. The language to be inserted is as follows:

Showing that the torpedo can be directly and effectively controlled for a distance of 20 miles from shore, and can be effectively used against warships at sea at that distance. Said board shall further find that the secrecy of said invention has been fully preserved.

I offer that amendment, and I desire for a moment to engage the attention of the Senate to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning hour having expired, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 12717) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. I should like to close my remarks at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This does not cut off the Senator's remarks.

Mr. GORE. If the Senator from Missouri desires to finish his remarks at this time, I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside for that purpose, and for that purpose only.

Mr. BRYAN. Oh, let us go on and finish this bill.

Mr. GORE. I see no reason why we should do that. The Agricultural appropriation bill has been on the calendar since the latter part of May, and this bill was reported only a few days ago.

Mr. BRYAN. Let me say to the Senator that we spent an hour and a half the other day on this same question, and we have had the debate all over again this morning. This appropriation bill has a right over the other bill, and it will be out of the way pretty soon. If the Senate now takes up the Agricultural appropriation bill, when we come back to the fortifications bill the whole question will have to be gone over again. I hope the Senator will not ask that.

Mr. GORE. I will say that from the discussion here I think Senators would rather like to have further time for the investigation of this proposition. I shall ask the Senate to proceed with the unfinished business following the speech of the Senator from Missouri. I certainly shall not make any effort to consume time.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, of course it is not necessary to lay aside the unfinished business for me to finish the very few remarks I want to make. I simply desire to state the case and let the Senate consider it.

I make no reflection upon Mr. Hammond by the statement I am about to make. From all I have read of him I believe he is a young man of extraordinary genius, and looking at the question of the value of his invention in the light of such knowledge as he possesses I am inclined to the view that probably Mr. Hammond has produced a device revolutionary in its character and of very great value to the country obtaining it.

Nevertheless, Mr. President, I make this remark, that I have never yet known an inventor of real talent who was not able not only to convince himself but to convince everybody else that the thing he had produced will work in a wonderful way. Experience shows that frequently models are produced that will work perfectly, yet when you come to make the real machine and subject that machine to actual test defects are shown which frequently demonstrate that the invention which promised so much is absolutely worthless.

Now, Mr. President, there is not in the world, in my opinion, a practical and sensible mechanic or a practical engineer who will not say that the only way to really tell whether anything will work is to build it and subject it to the practical every-day test. You can not guess at it; you can not figure it out from models; you can not figure it out theoretically, because some condition that was overlooked may arise, and in the actual test of a practical application the thing that promised wonders may turn out to be of no real utility.

We are told this morning by the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts that England paid half a million dollars for a device to direct torpedoes by means of wires, and that the device has been practically scrap heaped. We know that millions of dollars have been spent by various Governments in undertaking to perfect the Zeppelin, and yet I believe that that device has never been perfected to a point where it has been accepted as practical by either England or France.

Mr. President, here is the condition as I understand it: Mr. Hammond has made this torpedo and a device to direct it. It costs something over $400,000 to erect a wireless plant of sufficient power so that the machine can be thoroughly put to a test. It seems to be conceded that up to the present time they have not actually demonstrated the ability to control the torpedo more than 4 or 5 miles from shore. A torpedo operating within that range, of course, is not of the same utility as one which could be used effectively at a distance of 20 or 25 miles from shore. The range of the guns from ships is much longer that the effective control of this torpedo.

Now, it is said that a device can be invented, and when it is invented can be installed in an aeroplane and that an aeroplane can follow the torpedo and an operator on the aeroplane can control the flight of the torpedo so that he can send it with deadly effect against any vessel for any distance within 20 or 25 miles from shore. But no one has ever made the machine yet that is proper to be carried in the aeroplane. No one has ever put such a machine in an aeroplane. No one has ever in an aeroplane possessing such a machine followed the torpedo and directed it. That is a matter that rests for demonstration in the future, and when we come to the demonstration it may prove that we can not get an aeroplane sufficiently powerful to carry the apparatus, for this is not an apparatus to talk with; it is an apparatus to control a boat with. It may be that we can not make the machine itself that will be carried in an aeroplane and from the aeroplane effectively used.

Now, we are asked to agree to pay $750,000 by the terms of the bill as passed by the House. What does the bill require shall be ascertained by the board before the money is paid? Not that the machine in demonstration shall be operable from an aeroplane or controllable from an aeroplane, and thus made effective 20 or 25 miles from shore. That is not what this board is to find out. This board is simply to report, and I quote the language of the House bill, "favorable to the acquisition of such rights." Upon what condition? "Such report to be made after a demonstration of the application of said system to the control of torpedoes."

Senators, I invoke your attention to this. That means nothing except that Mr. Hammond's invention must control a torpedo. If it can control the flight of a torpedo 1 mile, that would be a compliance with the conditions named in the House bill, whereas what we want is a device that will control a torpedo and effectively control it for 20 or 25 miles. If that is what we mean, let us say what we mean. Therefore I have offered the amendment referred to.

Now, as to the proposition that we must buy this immediately or we will lose it forever. That may be the hard condition by which we are confronted, but it is a condition that I think no patriotic American citizen ought to impose.

I am not acquainted with the inventor of this device. I know his distinguished father by public reputation. I have recently read in the newspapers the utterances of that distinguished father declaring that every patriot in this country ought to stand for certain policies for the good of the country and rather severely criticizing some of our very high officials. I wonder if it is possible that the son of that great patriot, born and reared under the American flag, would for any sum of money whatever sell his invention to a country that might some day invade our shores and kill our people and make such sale while our Government is only asking the opportunity to make a thorough investigation. I wonder if that is possible. I have in mind a man born upon a foreign soil under another flag who produced an invention during the great war that revolutionized naval warfare and who never received, and so far as I know did not ask at the time, anything for the invention. I refer, of course, to John Ericsson, the inventor of the Monitor.

I stood on the streets of Washington the other day and saw clerks from stores marching out with their new uniforms on. I saw them leave behind their families and their homes. I saw others in my mind's vision coming from the farm, from the forest, from the factory, from the hamlet, and from the village all over the United States. They were going out to lay upon the altar of their country their service, their toil, their labor, their suffering, and mayhap their lives. I do not believe that Mr. Hammond will ever sell this invention to a foreign country, no matter what the price offered, so long as our country says to him, upon a proper and full investigation, we will, if his invention be found to be what he claims it is, pay him three-quarters of a million dollars, a princely fortune, as much money as any man really ever ought to have.

So I think neither Mr. Hammond nor any other person ought to object to an amendment of the character I have offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OVERMAN in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I hope the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri will not prevail.

Mr. BRYAN. Let us find out where we are.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. WEEKS. I would be glad to yield, but there is not any use of talking on account of the confusion there is in the Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators will please take their seats and cease from audible conversation.

Mr. BRYAN. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts to yield to me long enough to find out if the Senator from Oklahoma will not allow us to proceed with the fortifications bill.

Mr. WEEKS. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. GORE. I will say in response to that question that the Agricultural appropriation bill was placed upon the calendar in the latter part of May, May 22, and it has been the uniform custom of the Senate for the appropriation bills to be taken in their order on the calendar except by consent. I yielded to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations the other day for the purpose of bringing up the sundry civil appropriation bill, and I agreed with the Senator from Florida that after the Agricultural bill was made the unfinished business I would allow it to be laid aside in order that he could proceed with the fortifications bill upon the assurance that it would take very little time. It does seem to require considerable time, and I know of no urgent reason why the fortifications bill should be given precedence over the Agricultural appropriation bill. I trust the Senator from Florida will allow us to proceed with the unobjected amendments to the Agricultural appropriation bill, and I shall try at the earliest convenient moment to give him the right of way for the further consideration of the fortifications bill. I can not yield at this time, as there seems to be no immediate prospect of closing the consideration of the fortifications bill.

Mr. BRYAN. Let me make a statement and let us see whether there is or not. In the first place, it is impossible to make progress by taking up an appropriation bill and considering it for a few minutes of time and expect us ever to get through with it. I was placed in that attitude on one occasion yesterday and the day before. I gave way for the unfinished business which was the Post Office appropriation bill. I understood as the Senator from Oklahoma now states it, when the Agricultural appropriation bill was made the unfinished business he would then yield until the Senate finished the consideration of the fortifications bill. We have had a little more than an hour this morning to consider it.

All the amendments of the committee to the bill have been agreed to except this one amendment. Of course, the matter involved in it called for some consideration in order that Senators might be informed about it. After an hour or two of discussion it went over to another time, and when we resumed it this morning other Senators who had not been here wanted to know something about it and they were given some information upon this amendment. Now, we are about ready to vote and the Senator from Oklahoma wants to proceed with the Agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

Mr. BRYAN. So, Mr. President, when we come back the third time to consider this item we shall have to go all over it again.

Now as to the urgency of this bill, on account of unusual conditions it carries an increase over any fortifications bill that was ever reported to either branch of Congress. It carries upward of $25,000,000. There are appropriations here for the purchase of millions of dollars' worth of guns and ammunition. If it is not passed and approved within a day or two a resolution must be passed. I appeal to the Senator from Oklahoma to let us go on and get through with it. We will not be an hour on the bill in my judgment.

Mr. GORE. I will ask if the bill is not provided for in the joint resolution extending appropriations?

Mr. BRYAN. No. If the Senator will not agree to that, I will state to him very frankly that the Senate will have to determine which of these bills it wants to consider.

Mr. GORE. I will state frankly to the Senator if he undertakes to do that he probably will not make very much progress with his bill.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, may I say a word to the Senator from Oklahoma? I am a member of both the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and the Committee on Appropriations, and I am, of course, especially interested in the passage of both the bills. I appreciate fully the long delay that has occurred on the Agricultural appropriation bill. I believe I am fully as anxious as is the Senator from Oklahoma——

Mr. KERN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. WARREN. I rose only to say a word and I have about finished.

Mr. WEEKS. I think I have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts yielded, the Chair understands.

Mr. WEEKS. I yielded to the Senator from Florida.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming now has the floor.

Mr. WARREN. I hope the Senator from Oklahoma will permit a little more time to the fortifications bill, because I feel that it would tend to the earlier passage and to better feeling on the Agricultural appropriation bill. We are so very far behind in the passage of most of the appropriation bills that a joint resolution was passed extending all appropriations for 30 days on the basis of last year's appropriations; but this is almost ineffective as to the fortifications bill, because one-twelfth of the last year's fortifications bill is probably not a fiftieth of what the present bill is. If the Senator from Oklahoma feels that he can do so, I wish he would wait until we finish the fortifications bill. I think it will take but a short time to finish it.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. WEEKS. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. KERN. I suggest to the Senator from Oklahoma that in the interest of good feeling, both as respects his own bill, the Agricultural appropriation bill, and this bill, if he will yield an hour now, it is thought that the fortifications bill can be gotten out of the way.

Mr. GORE. I will say that if there be any reason to accept the assurance of the Senator from Florida that we are on the eve of a vote, I shall not object, and on the request of the Senator from Indiana I shall again ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unfinished business will be temporarily laid aside, and the Senator from Massachusetts will proceed.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I wish to say a few words in relation to the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri. I think it very important that the matter should be brought clearly to the attention of the Senate.

I understand there is an agreement that we shall go on with the fortifications bill for an hour.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the understanding.

Mr. STONE. What is that agreement? I did not know that an agreement was submitted by the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Agricultural appropriation bill was laid aside temporarily.

Mr. STONE. The Senator from Oklahoma, on his own motion, laid it aside?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Temporarily.

Mr. STONE. And that is all there is to it—temporarily.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts will proceed.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I wish to address myself briefly to the amendment which has been offered by the Senator from Missouri, because I think it contains a very important matter which should be brought to the attention of the Senate.

The Army Board on Ordnance and Fortification reported that it was desirable to pay $830,000 for this apparatus, contemplating simply the direction of the torpedo a distance from shore which one's vision would make possible, without any regard to conducting the boat further by means of aeroplanes, either directly or indirectly. In other words, what the Senator from Missouri has now proposed would require an apparatus, or rather would require that the inventor demonstrate that he can do a great deal more than the Army board proposed when it recommended paying $830,000 for the invention.

Mr. President, I hope and believe it will be demonstrated that a torpedo can be directed a great many more miles than is proposed in the proposition which came from the Army board. I hope it can be controlled 10, 20, or 30 miles from the shore and be effective, but the inventor would be simply giving away his invention at the proposed price if he had something that he felt sure could be demonstrated as capable of doing all that is proposed in the pending amendment.

In other words, he would not think of selling it for $750,000, and the Army board did not have that in contemplation.

Mr. REED. How much does the Senator think he would want?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. WEEKS. Yes; I yield for a question.

Mr. REED. How much does the Senator think a patriotic American citizen would want from his Government before he would go and sell a device of that kind to some other country?

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I am not my brother's keeper; and he must take what he thinks is the patriotic and businesslike action. I do not think that this Government can afford to say to its citizens who demonstrate something of vital use to the Government that they shall turn it over to the Government without reasonable compensation. I think that would be the height of folly. It is a misuse of the word "patriotism" to claim that a man shall give his devices to the Government when they have great financial value.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I do not claim he should give it. If he has what has been stated here on the floor, I am willing that he should have three-quarters of a million dollars for it; but the Senator says if this device could be controlled for more than 5 or 6 miles, that then the inventor would be warranted in asking a much larger sum for it; and I inquired about how high the Senator thought we would have to go?

Mr. WEEKS. I said if there were a certainty that it could be demonstrated that it could be controlled a much greater distance, then the invention would undoubtedly have a commercial value many times $750,000. What the Senator from Missouri is now proposing is something entirely foreign to the report of the Board on Fortifications and Ordnance. Therefore I hope the Senate will refuse to adopt the amendment, because I am certain that the contract could not be carried out on any such terms.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I can see no good object to be accomplished by the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. The House provision shows that Mr. Hammond has signed a proposal of a contract, and deposited it with the War Department, conveying all his rights to his patents and inventions. The hearings held before the House committee show that this mechanism can be controlled for 28 miles.

Mr. REED. No; for 10 miles.

Mr. BRYAN. I will read the testimony to the Senator. It is found on page 270 of the hearings, and is as follows:

How far from a radio station can you operate?

Mr. HAMMOND. With only 5 kilowatts, about 6 and a fraction horsepower, we have operated the mechanism 28 miles.

Suppose they could not operate it 20 miles, but could operate it 15 or 18 miles, that would not justify a refusal to take advantage of the offer made by Mr. Hammond.

Again, Mr. President, what board can come to Congress and say that the secrecy of this invention has been preserved?

That is in the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. President, I hope we may get an early vote upon the amendment of the Senator from Missouri and upon the committee amendment. The matter has been pretty thoroughly discussed. I may again state my position in a word. I do not believe it is unreasonable to ask of Mr. Hammond that this matter be postponed for a sufficient length of time for an investigation to be made—or for a more thorough investigation to be made than has been made—by the officers of the Navy Department, who have not investigated it at all.

The proposition that Mr. Hammond will sell this invention to some foreign Government has no terrors for me. I do not believe he will do that even if he has an offer. I do not think that Mr. Hammond is the sort of man who would want to sell an engine of destruction to a foreign Government.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. BRYAN. I yield.

Mr. REED. The Senator from Florida, I believe, reported in favor of the Senate amendment and is, therefore, willing to entirely postpone everything until there shall be an investigation.

Mr. BRYAN. Yes, Mr. President; let me say that the investigation would be made and over with and another bill would be passed before the 4th of March next.

Mr. REED. Very well. Now, why does the Senator from Florida object to my perfecting the House language by putting in some safeguards in the way of an investigation; because after that is perfected, still the Senator's proposition to have an investigation and bind us to nothing will be before the Senate. Why not perfect the House measure so that, if it does pass, it shall pass with some safeguards?

Mr. BRYAN. I think this provision that it must be demonstrated that these torpedo boats can be controlled directly for 20 miles is a limitation that ought not to be placed in the House provision. I think that is too much to require. I do not think it will be necessary to have it shown that these torpedo boats can be controlled for 20 miles, and if they can not be controlled for 20 miles, under the amendment of the Senator from Missouri the proposal made by Mr. Hammond would be rejected.

Mr. REED. How far does the Senator from Florida think they ought to be controlled to be of any use?

Mr. BRYAN. I do not claim to be an expert. I have heard experts discuss this provision so much this morning that I think about the only mistake which either the House or the Senate have made is that they did not provide that the experts be chosen from the respective bodies to determine this whole question.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, that is a very beautiful bit of irony.

Mr. BRYAN. I did not include the Senator from Missouri in that suggestion, because he has not pretended to be an expert.

Mr. REED. But, unfortunately, the committee composed of Members of this body brings in a report, and this body is not yet ready to abdicate its duties and functions, even at the request of a committee composed of its own Members. Neither ought the Members of this Senate to be sneered at because they have ventured to suggest a practical amendment to the language of the bill. I assumed, of course, when I asked the Senator from Florida how far he thought this ought to be controlled before we paid $750,000 for the invention that, as chairman of the subcommittee, he would have some sort of answer based upon his own knowledge or that which he had acquired.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I stated to the Senator from Missouri that I did not include him among the experts that have testified here this morning, but I want now to explain that neither do I claim to be an expert. I should not think, however, that you could expect to hit anything farther than you could see it.

There is one other thing that makes me believe the Senate committee amendment is wise. If we may direct the torpedoes only from the shore station, and if we can not have them operated by aeroplanes, it seems to me that we are entering upon a rather expensive proposition. It will be noted in the text of the House bill that a torpedo unit costs $417,000. So if you are going to be confined to the shore batteries or stations, you could only operate these torpedo boats from the units; you could only have as many as you could pay for at the rate of $417,000 apiece. It seems to me that that would make a very great limitation upon the use of the invention.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. BRYAN. Certainly.

Mr. REED. The picture painted here this morning was of an aeroplane sailing over the ocean and directing one of these torpedoes at 20 or 25 miles, so that we could go beyond the reach of the deadliest guns carried by any dreadnaught that sails the ocean. Now the Senator from Florida tells us that, in his opinion, that is a question which is unsolved, and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] practically tells us that he wants us to buy this device upon terms and conditions that do not require a control of more than 5 or 6 miles. So we have at least gotten rid of some part of the invention this morning; that is, the inventive imagination of some of the advocates of this measure.

Now, I ask the Senator this: If it be possible to control the flight of a torpedo from a secondary battery carried in an aeroplane, then why is it not possible to have upon a battleship that is about to be attacked an equally powerful or a more powerful battery, and to direct the torpedo in any direction the battleship wants to have it go? If that be so, what does the invention amount to?

Mr. BRYAN. That matter came up at the first discussion of this provision. It is claimed that an enemy ship can not interfere with the control of the torpedo boat.

Mr. REED. Why?

Mr. BRYAN. That is in the invention.

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. BRYAN. I can not explain it, but it is plain that it can not be done. It is claimed that the Dolphin tried to do it and failed.

Mr. REED. It ought to be a part of this test to ascertain if that can not be done.

Mr. BRYAN. The Army officers have said that that attempt has been made and that it has failed. Mr. Hammond says that it is by the changing of the wave lengths, as I understood him; that if an enemy ship should get the same wave lengths that this torpedo boat is using the torpedo boat could change them, and then the enemy ship could not control the matter.

There is another statement in the hearings to the effect that if the enemy ship undertakes to interfere the torpedo will turn head first and go for the enemy ship.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. BRYAN. I yield.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I should like merely to make this suggestion to the Senator: All the questions which have been asked by the Senator from Missouri, to my mind, go to show the wisdom of the course which the committee has pursued, that this matter should be thoroughly investigated, and then a report of such investigation be made to Congress for action on the subject.

As to the suggestion that haste is necessary to prevent the sale of this device to some other nation, of course that, as the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN] has said, has no terrors for me whatever. I do not believe it is going to be sold to any other power. If, however, it should be sold to any other power and should prove effective, as an implement of warfare, I have no doubt about somebody in the United States devising something equally as good. This Congress will not be intimidated by any veiled threat of that character.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I have the same opinion as that expressed by the Senator from Mississippi. In addition, it seems to me that when Mr. Hammond lays a proposition before the Government for consideration and adoption, he certainly ought to give sufficient time for the most complete investigation to be made.

Mr. VARDAMAN. That is the point I was just going to make. Certainly the inventor does not want the Government to take something which the inventor himself may not know is going to be the thing that he sells or that the Government intends to buy. Certainly the inventor is not going to grow impatient and insist upon the Government taking the device before the Government has had an opportunity to test it thoroughly and to ascertain just exactly what it is buying.

Mr. BRYAN. I do not think so; and that is the view the committee took.

Mr. VARDAMAN. It seems to me it is very like all other talk about preparedness, that you have got to weld the iron while it is hot. The world is crazy on this subject of war and profits. You must act while the public mind is inflamed—have the contracts signed before calm reason assumes her normal function.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I would like to say a few words about the immediate question before the Senate.

I favor the House provision as against the proposed Senate committee amendment. I would like to state some of the reasons, not all of them, that incline me quite decisively to favor the House view. And yet in doing this I feel as if I were almost wasting time. There are very few Senators present in the Chamber. I do not fancy the idea of addressing myself merely to the circumambient air, and still less to empty chairs. Hence I say it rather looks like a waste of time to talk if I talk with a hope of impressing my colleagues—my absent colleagues.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to his colleague?

Mr. REED. I would be very glad to suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. STONE. No; that would do no good. I suppose my distinguished and enlightened colleagues have read the title of this bill, and from that have come to a conclusion as to its merits.

Neither my colleague [Mr. REED] nor I, nor any of us, can keep Senators in their seats if they do not wish to stay within the Chamber. There is a condition in that respect it is difficult to change.

Mr. President, I shall attempt to condense as well as I can the observations I have had in mind to make. Some Senators now present, I know, understand the provisions of the House bill and understand the provisions of the proposed Senate committee amendment. Some of us know that Mr. Hammond, after years of patient study and effort, has invented a device for controlling the direction or course of torpedoes or other bodies charged with high explosives by electrical processes. He has laid his invention before the Government of the United States with a proposition to transfer that invention to the Government for its exclusive, monopolistic control.

I will not attempt to describe the invention so far as it is known. I fear I could not do that successfully. I think his proposition is understood by Senators who have looked into the matter. I content myself with saying that if this invention will accomplish the things the inventor claims for it, it would be of inestimable value to the Government and people of the United States.

What is claimed for it? What will it do? In a word, this is what it is claimed it will do, namely, that through the operation of electrical energies controlled by the devices of this invention an explosive body may be directed in its course until it comes in contact with a given body, stationary or movable, against which it is directed.

Senators have asked how far from shore can the course of the explosive body be controlled. The answer is, first, for 6 miles from shore, which is the limit of shore vision; secondly, it can, through air machines or aeroplanes properly equipped, be controlled to a much farther extent from shore.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. As far as they fly.

Mr. STONE. Yes; as far as the controlling air vessel can fly. Thirdly, it is affirmed that mechanical electrical apparatus can be installed on battleships or other sea craft to follow out beyond the limit of shore vision and direct indefinitely the course of the explosive body. Hence there are three ways of control, as claimed by the inventor. Now, let me put this up to you, Senators, and ask if it is not worth your serious attention. Let it be conceded that this invention can not be made effectively operative beyond 6 miles from shore; that that is the limit of control capacity. Assuming that to be true, then I put up to you this concrete proposition. We have spent about a half billion dollars in the construction of the Panama Canal. The importance of that waterway as a line of communication between the western and eastern shores of our continental Republic will not be questioned; its importance every man admits. The canal must be kept intact if we are to pass in times of stress our warcraft from the Atlantic to the Pacific and vice versa. We have islands lying out upon either side some miles away from the two mouths or entrances to the canal.

Assuming, now, that this invention will accomplish what it is asserted it will accomplish, and if we should, in accordance with Mr. Hammond's plans, establish radiodynamic stations on these islands, fronting both the Pacific and Atlantic entrances to the canal—miles out from the entrances—would we not be able to guard these entrances, so far as this invention could be made effective to that end, not only for 6 miles of shore vision from the mouth of the entrance, but for twice or three times that distance? If we could use this invention to do that, and only that, we would receive a consideration for the proposed investment of vastly greater value than the sum carried by this bill as the price to be paid for the invention.

Again, our harbors along the seacoast, lying in front of our great cities, in time of war would be strewn with mines for a distance of 4 or 5 miles out from the shore. It is a matter of common knowledge that in times of war, when enemy battleships seek to creep into our harbors so as to get into closer and more deadly range, they send, under the shadow of night, their mine sweepers to take up the mines that lie as dangerous obstructions in the path of warships. If this invention will do what its inventors say it will do, and if we owned and controlled it, no enemy ship could do the thing I refer to. We could send this electrically controlled destroyer, also slipping even more silently through the shadow of the night, to meet the ships engaged in attempting to destroy our mines, and the mine sweepers would themselves be sent to the bottom.

Mr. President, I do not personally know about the value of this invention. I make no pretense of that kind. I am not one of the "experts" to whom the Senator from Florida sarcastically referred. Indeed, I do not think any expert has appeared on the floor of the Senate; but we need not be electrical or nautical experts to have common sense, and be able to express opinions as Senators. I do not know anything about the invention as an expert. I can not with personal knowledge or assurance speak as to its value. How are we to determine as to its value, and when? Shall we attempt to do that to-day or to-morrow or at some more distant future time?

The Senator from Florida could not as an expert determine the value of this invention either in money or effectiveness, neither could the Senator from Colorado nor I. They will admit that as I do. We know we are not fitted for that job. Then to whom must we commit the question of determining its value? Of necessity we must remit that question to experts in fact, real experts; and by that I mean strong and honest men who have devoted their lives to the study of questions of which this is a part, and who understand such questions if anybody in the country understands them.

This invention has been tested already by Army experts, the very kind of men upon whom we must depend to have its value determined. Officers in control of our coast defenses—distinguished and capable Army officers, with Gen. Weaver at their head—have tested it, have experimented with it—not idly, not as a matter of mere curiosity, but seriously, deliberately, extensively, in a businesslike way—to really determine its value and capabilities, and over their official signatures they have reported upon their examination and made solemn recommendations to the Government. That has been done already by the very kind of men who must make these additional examinations if they are to be made at all and be regarded as of value.

But this young inventor is willing to have another test. And here, Mr. President, I digress long enough to say that I never saw Mr. Hammond until during the present week. I have read of his invention. I have read numerous publications about it. I have felt greatly interested in it, and I desired to talk with him about it, and did talk with him during the present week more than once. He gave me a fund of information that I hold to be of value. He is not only willing but he desires to have his invention authoritatively and exhaustively examined in all its particulars by the ablest, or among the ablest, men in the military and naval service of the country—tested until they are completely satisfied as to its merits. The House bill is intended to accomplish that end and to settle the question as to whether this Government desires to purchase and own this invention or prefers to turn it down.

It has been said that Mr. Hammond will not dispose of his invention to a foreign country. I know nothing about that. I have no license to speak for him. I do know this, that foreign countries know about this invention. Foreign countries, or the scientific men of foreign countries, have been endeavoring for years to invent something of this kind. Foreign countries have heard of Mr. Hammond's success or alleged success. They have heard of the experiments made by him on the shores of Massachusetts. The fact of these experiments has not been kept secret, indeed could not be kept a secret, and foreign governments are asking Mr. Hammond to make experiments for them on their ocean shores. Those who would deal with him, if he satisfied them that his invention will do what he claims, would deal with him in a large and liberal way. They are more than ready to negotiate with him. But this young man of rare inventive genius—and I am glad we have such young men in America—has patriotically determined, before he would even negotiate, or even seriously consult with any foreign power, to come to his own Government—first, at the other end of the Avenue and then at this end of the Avenue—and lay his invention and his offer before both the executive and legislative departments, and see whether his own Government, after a thorough demonstration, would desire to take over his invention. For this course I take the greatest pleasure in commending him.

Of course objections can be raised. We can say, as it has been said, that other people can invent something like this and that we can not long retain a monopoly of the invention even if we accept the Hammond proposition. As to that I can not speak with assurance. I know that no other invention of the kind has yet been discovered.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, does not Mr. Hammond say so himself, that they can duplicate it in less than a year?

Mr. STONE. I did not know that he had said that.

Mr. LANE. He says so right here.

Mr. STONE. Of course it can be duplicated if the secret is known. There would be no difficulty about that.

Mr. LANE. Without the secret; they can solve the secret in less than a year.

Mr. STONE. Well——

Mr. LANE. I do not object to it, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. LANE. I will ask the Senator to yield. He is addressing himself to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield?

Mr. STONE. I do, since the Senator wishes it.

Mr. LANE. And I want the Senate to know what Mr. Hammond says.

Mr. STONE. What does he say?

Mr. LANE. He says they can duplicate it in less than a year.

Mr. STONE. Read what he says.

Mr. LANE. I will. I will find it. Go ahead, and I will find it.

Mr. STONE. Then find it. What he said to me, and in the hearings to which my attention has been called, was this—that the great fundamental parts of his invention, the essential parts of it, without which everything else would be valueless, is secret. This secret would, under his contract as printed in the RECORD, be conveyed to the Government of the United States, to be locked in the secret archives of the Government, and not to be exposed under any circumstances or in any contingency. That is what he says and that is his proposal.

To be sure, there are men in any important Government of the world who, if they knew the essentials of the invention could recreate or duplicate it. As to whether we could hold and keep this secret for our own use, I know no more than any other man. As a matter of opinion, I should say we could. If the United States should have in its possession, and in its possession alone, the essential and determinative features of this invention, and that should be given out to foreign nations, it could only be done through fraud, through crime, through some treasonable action of our own officials or by theft. That efforts might be made to obtain this secret goes for the saying, but would such efforts succeed? To say they would succeed is to place a low estimate upon the integrity, the honor, the patriotism of the officers of the American Army and Navy and of the officials of the department into whose custody the great secret would be committed. Important state secrets have been and may be divulged. Our diplomatic and Army signal codes have been obtained by enemies, or by foreign governments, but whether by theft or treachery or bribery or whether by one means or another, I do not know, but that has been done, and may be done again. But shall we hesitate to take over this invention because of a possible danger of that kind? I should think not.

Mr. President, just what will we do if we adopt the House bill? We will appropriate $750,000 conditionally, to be paid to Mr. Hammond and his associates, when—how? After the investigations already made by the expert Army officers in charge of our coast defenses have been supplemented by another investigation to be made by Army and Navy officers to be appointed by the President of the United States. And what are they to investigate? Every feature of this invention—everything tending to show its uses, its capabilities, its value. They are to go fully into all its possibilities—into everything showing what it can do, what may be done against it, what it may do when directed from shore, from the air, or from a battleship. These six experts from the Army and Navy will take the whole subject in all its aspects under consideration; and, Senators, upon such men we are bound to depend. There is nobody else for us to depend upon.

Already we have had a report from the coast defense officers; but we do not stop at that. Their examination is to be supplemented by another examination upon which there is no time limit. For that examination $30,000 is to be appropriated to be taken out of the $750,000 to be paid to Mr. Hammond. This board is to be charged with a high and most responsible duty. For one I am willing in this grave matter to trust such men and rely upon them. I have no fear that my faith will be misplaced. I do not like the proposed amendment. It means only delay—unnecessary delay. We should act now, definitely and finally. Why not now, as well as at some future time?

Mr. President, some Senator wanted to know why Mr. Hammond was urging this now, why he was so impatient. He has manifested no urgency or impatience in the talks I have had with him. I say again he impressed me as a young man of a very high type of intelligence, of splendid Americanism, and as being full of the spirit of patriotism. That is the way he impresses me; but he wishes to know whether or not this Government wants his invention; that is all. And he has a right to know that without unnecessary dillydallying; and he has a right to know that without having his loyalty or patriotism put in question.

Mr. President, it seems to me we run a great risk if we do not purchase this invention, and do it now, if the claims made for it are satisfactorily established. I think the House provision is a safe one and a wise one. I shall vote against the Senate committee amendment to the end that the House provision shall stand. If the Senate decides otherwise, I shall, of course, be content.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I am in hearty accord with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] in his desire to acquire this device if there is any reasonable ground for our doing so; and I would hesitate to say that it is not worth the price which we are asked to pay for it even if it does not carry farther than 5 miles from shore, for the reason—my attention was called to this by one of the Members of Congress who has this matter in charge—that if you can send a torpedo 5 miles from a battleship at sea, and control its course, it would be worth the money. But as far as concerns its being anything which will long remain a secret, I acquired doubts from reading the testimony of some of the gentlemen who testified before the House committee.

One of them was Col. Treat. I am reading now from the hearings on the fortifications bill before the subcommittee of the House Committee on Appropriations. Col. Treat, on page 306, in answer to a question by Mr. SHERLEY, testified as follows:

> Mr. SHERLEY. Do you not think that if an enemy could do the same thing, operating from their ships, that it would take away some of the effectiveness of our offense operating from the shore?
> Col. TREAT. I certainly do, and I think that inside of six months or a year they would have a similar apparatus.

That does not say that they would obtain it by fraud. The general principles of wireless telegraphy are known by the scientists of all nations, and better known by the scientists of a number of nations, I presume, than they are in this country, for the reason that they have made a greater study of it.

Then again, on page 317 of the same hearings, in the testimony of Lieut. Decker, the statement is made by him that—

> It is possible that an experienced radio engineer could take this boat, as it is assembled, and get every bit of information out of it of value in a short time, with the exception of the detector. It would be practically impossible to get anything out of that because it is more or less a question of a secret process.

But they could make, in my opinion, a detector which would answer every purpose.

Capt. Behr, who stayed for a year and a half, I think, in charge of the investigations for the Government—not less than that—makes the statement on page 310, in answer to a question by Mr. SHERLEY as to the time it would take to discover the secret of this invention:

> Well, I doubt whether it can be done inside of a year.

Now, that would be all right, too, in a way. The Senator misunderstands me if he thinks I am opposed in any way to this invention. If all nations knew it, if every nation on the earth knew it, it would still be valuable to us and worth the price if we knew it also, as it would protect our shores from invasion. It would render the smallest, the poorest country invulnerable to the attacks from the sea of an enemy. For that reason I am in a general way in favor of it. All I want to do is to guard this Government against the purchase of something which has not the necessary range from the shore to take the place of fortifications. I am not so much in favor of it if we still have to go ahead and put in this apparatus, this device, and at the same time be compelled to build fortifications and maintain them for the defense of our country; and I did not want the Senate to misunderstand how far the invention went. Beyond 5 or 6 miles these projectiles will not protect the coast. The vessels of foreign nations and our own throw a shell 14 or 15 miles.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, aside from controlling the direction of this little boat carrying the explosive by an apparatus attached to an aeroplane in the air which the Senator questions, I put this question to him: An aeroplane may beyond all doubt, flying miles in the air, flash signals to the shore and by the signals the shore radiodynamic plant can direct the course of the torpedo. That is also one of the things stated in this report.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I think the Senator is a little optimistic in that respect, and I will tell him why. That will work all right for signals from aeroplanes as to location of a stationary body or fortification upon which to land your shells, but to land shells on a war vessel running 25 miles an hour—some of them travel as high as 30—it not being a fixed point, and the message to be transmitted through an intermediary, it also moving rapidly, to the commander of the battery or to the man who, the Senator assumes, controls the course of this torpedo—it would not, in my opinion, work very accurately. It probably would be inaccurate to an extent that would render it valueless. I know something about that, for the reason that I have had experience in shooting at moving targets. Any man knows that you may calculate the distance, but a man in an aeroplane can not so easily calculate the speed of the vessel. He will be kept too busy guiding his own vessel.

Mr. STONE. Is it not true that now coast guns fire at targets far beyond the shore range?

Mr. LANE. Absolutely.

Mr. STONE. And they are moving as high as 20 miles an hour from signals sent from the air. The shots are directed——

Mr. LANE. I do not think so. I never heard of it, but it may be true.

Mr. STONE. That is my understanding of it—and the signals come instantaneously.

Mr. LANE. The observer on shore with his instruments can ascertain the velocity of the object which he is shooting at, and the wind pressure which he has to gauge against, and then land his shots very accurately, but whether he can do that through an intermediary aeroplane or not I do not know, for it seems it has never been tested.

I do know, as the Senator says, and I think perhaps what is in his mind, it is true as to a stationary object, but if the Senator has ever had any experience in shooting at an object from a boat which is going over the waves he will find neither the object which he shoots at nor himself in a stationary position. It is a different matter, and while that can be accomplished to act through a floating intermediary a second relay would render it problematical.

In regard to the control of these projectiles from an aeroplane, Lieut. Decker stated that it was a problem of aeroplane control, and that was then a question of development and spending certain necessary time and money upon it—that it had not yet been devised. The Senator is basing his argument on a proposition and a device which has not yet apparently been devised.

I want to call the attention of the Senate to that. It may work out beautifully, and I have no doubt that in the course of time with experiments carried on it will, but I wish to call attention to the fact that an aeroplane which is to drive the torpedo tandem, if you please, 10 or 15 miles out to sea has not been devised according to the testimony as far as I can ascertain from reading the evidence on the subject. I have no doubt it will in time, I do not question that. I have thought in view of these other problems which will have to be solved, we should make a thorough test before we purchase the device or enter into a contract with the provision in it to the effect that the device be tested and it can easily be done, and if it is successful, then I am willing to vote to accept and pay for it double the price the inventor asks for it. Instead of $1,150,000 I will vote to make it $2,500,000 after it is demonstrated that this torpedo can be driven tandem at sea from an aeroplane a distance of 25 or 30 miles and blow up the enemy's ship. I would not want anything better, and when I had it well in hand I would challenge the whole world to a naval combat and I could beat them off the seas.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Chamberlain	Curtis	Gallinger
Bankhead	Clapp	Dillingham	Gore
Brady	Clark, Wyo.	du Pont	Gronna
Bryan	Culberson	Fletcher	Harding
Hughes	Lee, Md.	Reed	Stone
James	Lodge	Saulsbury	Sutherland
Johnson, Me.	McLean	Shafroth	Thompson
Johnson, S. Dak.	Martin, Va.	Sheppard	Townsend
Jones	Norris	Sherman	Vardaman
Kenyon	Overman	Simmons	Warren
Kern	Page	Smith, Ariz.	Weeks
La Follette	Pittman	Smith, Ga.	Williams
Lane	Poindexter	Smith, Md.	Works
Lea, Tenn.	Pomerene	Smoot

Mr. HUGHES. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS], who is detained from the Senate on account of illness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-five Senators have answered the roll call. There is a quorum present. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I only want to say a word as to the question upon which we are voting. It seems that both the House of Representatives, judging by their provision in regard to this matter, and the Senate committee, judging by its proposed amendment, are agreed on the proposition that this matter ought to be further investigated. Each one of these provisions provides for an investigation.

Mr. BRYAN. I will suggest to the Senator from Washington that the vote now comes upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri to the House text of the bill.

Mr. POINDEXTER. After that we will then vote on the Senate committee amendment to the House provision, and that is what I am speaking of. The only difference is practically—and consequently the only thing to be determined by a vote upon the Senate committee amendment is—whether Congress will surrender all control over the matter to a commission of Army and Navy experts which may be employed, to appoint your commission and allow them to determine whether or not the $1,100,000 shall be expended; or, on the other hand, according to the Senate committee amendment, whether we will appoint such a commission and have them investigate and get their report, and see the report and use our judgment as to whether it is reasonable and logical or not, and finally determine whether we should expend the money. I think the latter course is the wiser one. I think the Senate committee amendment ought to be adopted.

It has been urged by a good many people that Senators and Representatives are not experts. I do not know whether they are or not. They are experts on some subjects. There may be experts in one or the other body, it makes no difference, but you might as well proceed according to the same theory in the trial of any case by a court where expert witnesses are called upon technical questions and allow them to decide the case. Nobody ever heard of such a proceeding. It is probably very seldom that a technical or a scientific question is presented to a court by experts on that subject that you can not get an equal number of experts upon the opposite side to testify just as strongly. You will get a report from a committee of experts upon this question, we will assume, favoring this invention. I venture to say, I assert, that you can get a report from an equal number of just as competent experts adverse to the invention.

I have great faith in the technical men in the Army and the Navy. I am not disputing the fact of this discovery or invention of this wonderful torpedo control, but I am disputing its practical application as an instrument of actual warfare. It is in an experimental stage, so far as that is concerned. It is admitted that those things which are absolutely essential to carry out the plan described by the inventor, of directing this torpedo at a great distance, have not been actually tried. They assume that they can direct it from an aeroplane. They have never undertaken to do it. No one knows whether they can or not.

I have some opinions here, not given in an official capacity, from scientific men who doubt the practicability of that sort of a control of a torpedo. Without giving their names, if I may be permitted I will let their statement stand for just what it is worth upon the statement itself. I will read a few lines of it. One statement is:

> It seems as if this invention should be considered to be in the same class as a torpedo directed by a wire that proved to be proof to interference—

An invention the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] spoke of as having been acquired by Great Britain and of having been a failure, and the reason why it was a failure was that they could not locate the torpedo because they could not see it—they did not know where it was, and consequently they could not direct it. This man, who is an expert, said that the same reasons apply to this, that being out of sight it would be impossible for them to tell where it is or in what direction it is going, and consequently, of course, they could not control its course. I am not accepting that as final. I say it is a consideration which ought to impel us not to decide this matter finally now or to abdicate our right of deciding it in future, but to submit it to this commission for their report and then determine it. He proceeds:

Having been carefully examined and experted, and also proved to be perfectly dirigible under conditions of service, but was found impracticable because once being launched on its mission it was impossible to accurately determine its position from time to time and therefore to know at any moment the direction it should be guided.

It is not a question of how far you can control the machinery by which a torpedo may be directed in its course if you know where the torpedo is. I assume that it might be at a very great distance. The President of the United States, who is not an expert, as far as I know, in wireless telegraphy or any other kind of telegraphy, started the powerful machinery of the Panama-Pacific Exposition 3,000 miles away over a wire. I presume he could have done it by means of wireless appliances, which seem to operate with equal if not greater power than the electrical impulse carried over wire. We can talk by wireless; we can start machinery by wireless. That does not minimize in any way at all the credit that is due to this inventor for having thought of what seems to be a comparatively simple thing, so far as the application is concerned—the proposition that you can use wireless electrical methods, already know, to start machinery in the same way that you start it over wires. Like every other great invention after it is thought out and announced, it seems comparatively simple, and the wonder is that some one of us had not thought of it before, but that does not in any way detract from the credit which is due to the inventor or from the value of the invention.

I am only mentioning this circumstance for the purpose of emphasizing that the important element is in determining the value of the practical application of this invention for the purpose of destroying hostile ships at sea.

Another circumstance which is urged by these technical and scientific men is the fact that this torpedo is perfectly visible, so long as it is within the range of vision, not only to the person who is controlling it and who sends it on his mission, but to the enemy. The enemy can see it as far as we can see it. They can see its approach and they have the means of destroying it. That is one feature that is emphasized in the argument against its practical value in actual warfare. I will read a few words on that subject.

Mr. CLAPP. If the Senator will pardon me, I think some of the experts here in the Senate this morning have testified that it is so adjusted—and I think it is due to the invention to say this—that it can be seen from the point where it is to be controlled, on account of the reflection of light, when it would not be observed from the other point of view.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That might be true to a certain extent. It might be seen farther from the rear than it can be seen from the opposite direction. I do not know in regard to that. One statement is the following:

The consensus of opinion seems to be that while it may possess some novelty, yet it is felt, from an engineering and military standpoint, that it has a number of decidedly vulnerable points, which, as near as can be remembered, may be catalogued something as follows:

First. In its final form it is said to be directed by wireless from an aeroplane flying overhead.

(a) Anything happening to the aeroplane itself, its personnel, or its wireless equipment would render the torpedo useless.

Second. Wireless phenomenon, from start to finish, is not only one of great sensitiveness but is of the high potential electric variety which is easily put out of commission by the least moisture, being especially vulnerable when running close to water, particularly rough water, as would very likely be the case with the torpedo.

Third. The torpedo runs on the surface of the water toward a battleship or fleet and is thus visible. The battleship is always protected by a mosquito fleet of high-speed small vessels, which would be perfectly aware of the presence of this adjunct to the coast defense, and would therefore be on the lookout for it. The moment it was spied, there being no personnel upon the torpedo, and it being impossible for the torpedo, running at a high speed, to turn at all quickly, they would feel themselves entirely at liberty to run just as close in to the torpedo as necessary to pepper her full of shot. The torpedo is so vulnerable that one shot alone would suffice to sink her or blow her up.

Fourth. To attain any such speed as has been officially claimed for this torpedo, the boat would have to be one of the most high-powered boats for its size ever built.

That is, the boat upon which the torpedo is floating. Of course, it is understood that the plan proposed here is to put the torpedo upon a small boat, carrying it over the surface of the water. The proposal is that there shall be upon that carrier wireless electrical apparatus which is responsive to wireless electrical impulses by which the course of the boat upon which the torpedo is launched will be directed. Of course, as I said before, it can only be directed when it can be seen and when its location is known.

Some reference was made this morning to 6 miles. Of course, I think it is the common knowledge of everybody that it would be impossible to see a small launch carrying a torpedo 6 miles. It is doubtful whether it could be seen 2½ miles. I do not know in regard to that. I have had some experience in looking at ships at sea, and it is difficult to see a battleship 7 or 8 miles at sea with the naked eye. This little launch upon the surface of the water would only be seen a very short distance away, and when out of sight it is beyond control.

This man, speaking of the boat upon which the torpedo is launched, says:

It would therefore be in a very constant high state of pulsation and vibration. The wireless directive apparatus and the other wireless adjuncts which have been named in connection with the torpedo are not only very complex but of a highly delicate and extremely sensitive nature, and if any one of the various intricate factors should become deranged through the great vibration present, of course the torpedo would immediately become unmanageable.

Fifth. Of course, each torpedo, with its plant, adjuncts, and the hydroaeroplane that would need to be used with it, constitutes an expensive unit, and the total chances, considered in their most favorable light, of its ever becoming effective seem altogether too slight to justify the initial expense, to say nothing of the proposed bonus or payment for the rights.

I state that only for what it is worth upon its face, and it seems to me to be extremely logical. It does not require an expert to make the final decision of these matters. It requires an expert to understand the scientific machinery by which the results are accomplished, but when we are given the results and the known conditions, it only requires common experience and common sense to draw a conclusion. That is why I say that we should be left to judge after we see the report of this board of Army and Navy experts which the Senate committee amendment proposes.

Mr. LANE. Will the Senator allow me to ask him from what authority he was quoting?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I was quoting from a number of authorities, but I do not cite it upon the strength of their position or their authority. I cite it only for what it is worth upon its face.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, as I understand the proposition in the House bill and the amendment proposed by the committee, the House bill provides for the actual purchase of this invention, the price to be paid only upon a favorable report as to its efficiency by the board. That is provided for, and that will be the effect of the House provision.

The proposed Senate committee amendment provides only for the investigation, and nothing else; and when that investigation is made and a report comes in, we shall be just where we are to-day, except we will have that information here in Congress, instead of having it before the proper department as under the provisions of the House bill. I do not agree with the Senator from Washington that the latter is the best course to pursue. I think we had better act in this matter now, and leave the determination of the efficiency of this device to the proper officers when that report is made.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, as I said this morning in speaking on the main bill, it seems to me that the House provision is much better than is the Senate provision. When I say that, of course, I mean that, if I may so say, it appeals to my judgment as the best, the most businesslike, and the commonsense way to proceed.

Either of these amendments recommends another investigation by a board of experts. It is perfectly evident that nobody on this floor knows anything about wireless or radio control of torpedoes or of torpedo boats that are carrying torpedoes. If we did, there would be no occasion, perhaps, to refer this matter to a board of experts. Of course, it goes without saying that this invention being a secret and a patented thing, the very provisions of the bill authorizing that it shall be kept secret can not be analyzed and diagnosed here by Senators so as to form an intelligent opinion or to come to a reasonable conclusion about the merits of the case.

The Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] has read certain extracts from statements of gentlemen who have furnished him with their views about this matter. They criticize this invention, this contrivance; their criticisms may be perfectly justified; I do not know; but I would not allow their opinions to influence my vote on this question. They can take their testimony and their opinions to the board of experts which we propose to appoint, to weigh their merits and to test them against the opinions of other experts, and then to experiment with the boat in actual service.

It strikes me that, even if this invention does not do something that some Senator thinks it ought to do, it still may be worth the amount of money named for this Government to control it. These expert Army and Navy men, who will have the advantage of using $30,000, if they see fit, to summon all the experts in the country before them, may be able to see uses for this torpedo boat in defense and offense which we have not considered at all. It may be found to be worth the full price, and more than the price, asked for it, after they have experimented with it, for the uses that they may see it is available to be put to. If we desire to have a new arm of the service, I can not conceive of any more common-sense way or of any safer for the Government to pursue than to authorize its purchase, subject to the decision of the very authorities that we pay to decide these questions for us.

I think it really unwise to put on amendments such as the one which the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] has offered, which attempts to prescribe the tests which the investigating board shall employ and the standards to which this invention shall conform before they shall even recommend its purchase.

We can see so little about this thing and we know so little about it, that it seems to me the more complete freedom we give to these sworn officers of the Government—whom we have educated and whom we trust with all our secrets of defense—to use their own judgment and to ascertain in their own way, in view of all their knowledge, whether the Government ought to have this invention or not, the better it will be. If they say that they think this thing is worth the $750,000 which the bill provides, and they recommend its purchase to the President, I think that we may safely take a chance, rather than, and much more safely than, to take the chance which the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] says he is willing to take, to wit, take the chance that the gentleman who in good faith offers this to the Government at a reasonable price will bear the entire burden himself and take all the chances himself, and that the Government shall take no chances, and then appeal to his patriotism—which is simply the Government's appeal to the charity of a private individual—to bear all the expense and take all the chances in order that the Government may avail itself of the fruits of his labor at his expense. I am free to say that I can not understand the reasonableness of such a proposition as that; and I hope that the amendment will be voted down, and that the House provision will be agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, in my opinion the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] is subject to an objection which may also very properly be lodged against the amendment offered by the Senate committee. I do not think that a report telling all about the experimentation to be made by officers of the Army and Navy, telling all about what this device will do or what it will not do, should be published and laid before Congress. For perfectly obvious reasons the matter should be kept as much a military secret as it is possible to keep it. That can not be done under the plan offered by the Senate committee amendment or by the plan offered by the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

I am satisfied, however, that we ought not to entrust the purchase of this device absolutely to these officers of the Army and the Navy under the House provision. The President appoints these officers, but he has absolutely nothing whatever to say with respect to the question as to whether or not the device shall be purchased. If these officers conclude that it ought to be purchased, it will be purchased, even though the President, upon such information as he has about the matter, should be satisfied that the public interest directs the other course.

I propose to offer an amendment which I think ought to be accepted, and to which no one, as it seems to me, ought to offer any objection. I desire to put the responsibility upon the President to buy or not to buy, as may seem to him wise, upon a favorable report made by the board of Army and Navy officers. The President is responsible to the people; and if the device shall eventually prove an entire fiasco, he will be obliged to assume the responsibility for it. I accordingly, Mr. President, move to amend the House provision by striking out the word "unless," at the end of line 18, on page 7, and to insert thereafter "except upon the approval by the President of"; to strike out the words "the President," in line 20, and to insert "him"; and to insert the word "which" after the word "him," so that it will read:

That said sum shall not be paid except upon the approval by the President of a report by a board of three Army and three Navy officers, to be appointed by him, which shall be favorable to the acquisition of such rights.

I am authorized by the Senator from Missouri to say that if the Senate should accept this amendment he will consent to withdraw his amendment.

Mr. BRYAN. Do I understand the Senator from Missouri withdraws his amendment?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I had that same idea in my mind when I was speaking. I entirely agree with the Senator from Montana about the matter. I think the amendment which he suggests is perfectly proper.

Mr. BRYAN. I think the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana improves the House provision.

Mr. WALSH. Then, Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I have tendered as a substitute for the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. BORAH. Will the Senator from Montana again read his amendment?

Mr. WALSH. I will read it as the language would be if the amendment should be adopted:

Provided, That said sum shall not be paid, except upon the approval by the President of a report of a board of three Army and three Navy officers to be appointed by him, which shall be favorable to the acquisition of such rights.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It should read "which report shall be favorable."

Mr. WALSH. I will insert the word "report" there.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, is the effect of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana to leave the President in a position where he will be obliged to buy this device if the report thereon is favorable?

Mr. WALSH. No.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Or does it broadly still leave it in the President's discretion as the head of the Army and Navy to buy it if, on a favorable report, he thinks the purchase desirable?

Mr. WALSH. That is the purpose, and I think the language justifies that construction.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And the Senator is satisfied that that language fully meets that condition?

Mr. WALSH. I am.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If it does, I shall vote for the amendment and shall also vote for the House provision as it will be amended.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Will the Senator from Montana be good enough to again read his amendment?

Mr. WALSH. As proposed to be amended the language would read:

Provided, That said sum shall not be paid, except upon the approval by the President of a report of a board of three Army and three Navy officers to be appointed by him, which report shall be favorable to the acquisition of such rights.

Mr. VARDAMAN. That is not altogether clear.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I hardly think that language meets the idea presented by the Senator from Montana. It seems to me it should provide that the President, upon a favorable report of this board, should have the right, in his discretion, to make the purchase if he thought that the needs of the Government required it. With that language, or substantially that language, I am ready to vote for the amendment.

Mr. WALSH. Let me say to the Senator that if the President does not want to buy the device he will not adopt the suggestion of the board and will disapprove their report, in which case the purchase would not be made.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I did not catch the Senator's remark.

Mr. WALSH. I stated that if the President does not want to buy the device and is satisfied that the interest of the Government will not be subserved by its purchase, he will then decline to approve the report recommending the purchase.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Montana to the fact that his amendment entirely changes the conditions which the House provision imposes. The House provision proceeds on the theory that a sale is made provided the apparatus comes up to the conditions approved by a scientific board. The provision as proposed by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] changes that and leaves in the hands of some one else after the board has reported the determination of whether the purchase shall be made. I do not know how the owners of this patent will feel about that proposition, but the amendment makes of it a very different kind of proposition.

Mr. WALSH. Let me say to the Senator from Massachusetts that I do not so understand the House provision at all. The provision in the House bill does not specify any requirements whatever which the device must meet. The amendment of the Senator from Missouri attempts to specify some requirements which it shall meet. I think it would be difficult for us, with the meager knowledge we have of the possibilities, to attempt to specify.

I call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to the fact that the House does not endeavor to lay down any requirements. It merely provides that the device must be of such value as disclosed by the test as will satisfy the board of Army and Navy officers that it ought to be accepted, and the amendment I propose puts the ultimate responsibility to make this purchase upon the President.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I understand that the House would have authorized an appropriation for the purchase if such purchase had been approved by the officers of the Navy to the same degree that it had by the officers of the Army. The Board of Ordnance and Fortification recommended the paying of $830,000 for this apparatus. The Army officers, who naturally are those who would pass upon it, are evidently convinced that the purchase ought to be made, and they recommend its purchase, but the officers of the Navy have not given the same consideration to it, and for that reason this proposition was put in the bill by the House.

I do not know anything about how the owners of the patent would feel, after they have demonstrated that this apparatus will do substantially what they claim it will do, about leaving its purchase to the option of the President. I merely call that to the Senator's attention, because I think it does change the provision.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I have no information on the subject, I may say; but I should naturally think that these gentlemen, moved by patriotic impulses, as I have no doubt they will be, could scarcely find any reason for declining to allow the President of the United States to say whether we had better take the device or not.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I feel satisfied that if a board of Army and Navy officers, after full investigation, recommend the purchase of this invention, and give good grounds for so recommending, the President of the United States will approve their report. I see no objection whatever to the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana, and, so far as I am concerned, I hope it will be adopted.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Montana a question?

Mr. WALSH. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator construe his amendment to leave it to the discretion of the President to purchase or not to purchase, even if the report of the Navy and Army officers should be to the effect that the patent will do what it is now contended it will do?

Mr. WALSH. Yes; he would still have the discretion under the amendment not to buy the device, because the House bill does not contemplate that the device shall do anything; it simply contemplates that the board of officers shall recommend the acquisition of the device.

Mr. BORAH. Then, the President may, under the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana, for reasons wholly outside of any report, decline to purchase the device?

Mr. WALSH. I should say so; he could disapprove of the recommendation made in the report that the Government acquire the invention.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Montana a question. It seems to me that the House bill provides that the board of Army and Navy officers shall make the investigation for the purpose of determining certain facts. If in their investigation they find, in their opinion, that this device, apparatus, or whatever you may call it, will do a certain thing, and they report that fact to the President, under the terms of the amendment proposed by the Senator the President will be compelled to accept it, whether he approves the purchase or not.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, the Senator is mistaken——

Mr. WALSH. I do not agree with the Senator in either particular.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me, I think that I perhaps am justified in stating that the patentees are willing that this provision shall rest upon the amendment of the Senator from Montana. They have such confidence in the merits of the invention that they are perfectly willing to abide the judgment of the President after it has been investigated by a board of Army and Navy officers.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, for information I wish to ask a question of the Senator from Montana. I am not sure that I understand his amendment, because it is sent to me in lead pencil and interpolated, on page 7, line 18. As I understand, his amendment means that the sum shall not be paid unless a board of Army and Navy officers, to be appointed by the President, report in favor of it, and unless their report meets with the favorable approval of the President. Is that right?

Mr. WALSH. That is the idea intended to be expressed by the amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, Mr. President, I am not a radioelectrical engineering expert. A good many Members of the Senate have qualified to-day as radioelectrical engineering experts. I frankly confess that I know nothing about the technicalities of this branch of science. If the invention offered by Mr. Hammond is accurately described by him and by the experts who thus far have studied it, it is worth $20,000,000 to the United States Government; if it is not, it is not worth anything. It reminds me of the old story about the man who went to sell a mule to another man. When he got through describing the mule, the other man said, "If the mule comes up to your description, it is worth $10,000; if it does not, I am not buying any mule." [Laughter.]

It seems to me that the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana is perfectly right. Under the Constitution, at any rate, the President is Commander in Chief of the Army and Naval forces of the United States. If you are going to provide that a certain amount of money shall be paid provided a certain board, consisting of three Army and three Navy officers, shall approve of it, it is nothing but right and proper that it shall also provide that the constitutional chief shall approve of it.

I do not know anything much about this. I have read a little about it in the newspapers; I have read a little about it in the magazines. Comparing my concealed knowledge with the proffered information of Senators, I am about as well equipped to pass on it as they are, I think; but I not only do not claim that I am equipped to pass upon it, but I do not even confess that I am. I do not even go so far as a lawyer in middle Tennessee went when somebody said that he had been accused of being the best lawyer in that section of the State. Somebody else asked, "What is the proof of it," and he said, "There is no proof of it; confound it, I confess it; I admit it." [Laughter.]

It seems to me, Mr. President, that this is a great invention, if it is an invention at all, and I do not know whether it is at all or not. If you can run out a torpedo under wireless control even 5 or 6 miles, that is one of the new things that the world has to treat as a scientific miracle. I no more understand it than I understand wireless telegraphy, and I do not understand anything about that. I no more understand it than I understand Morse's telegraph system; and I do not understand that, and the average citizen does not; but if there be a man in the United States who has a device whereby a torpedo can be guided for even 5 or 6 miles—not by wires, not by physical contact, but by wireless touch, that man is as great as Marconi—I will not say greater, because without Marconi he could not have gone that far. Just as a dwarf on the shoulders of a giant is not greater than the giant, but the dwarf's vision is superior to that of the giant's, so this man's vision, if what is claimed for this invention be true, is superior to that of Marconi himself.

Suppose that you can not guide this torpedo by wireless any more than 5 or 6 miles; suppose that an aeroplane can not be invented to extend its transcoastal vision any further than its transoceanic vision; suppose that all it can do is to direct by wireless an invisible, incomprehensible, concealed system, an attack upon a dreadnaught or upon a transport ship filled with troops and entering one of our harbors; suppose that is all it amounts to; then let us suppose that one of them is down at Cape Henry or at Cape Charles to protect the entrance to the Chesapeake on the way to the Capital of the United States; suppose that one of them is at Port Eads, at the mouth of the Mississippi River, to protect the United States against that division that the Union Army effected during the war and after which the Confederacy was helpless; suppose that one of them or two of them or three of them, at the prices fixed in this bill, are off Sandy Hook to protect the harbor of New York; suppose that one of them is at the entrance to the Golden Gate to protect San Francisco; that one of them is at the island of Catalina, off Los Angeles, to protect Los Angeles on the Pacific coast; and suppose that machine succeeds in sinking one dreadnaught or one transport with three regiments aboard—it will justify the expenditure of every dollar appropriated in this bill.

This year the Democratic Party, in charge of the administration and of both Houses, is afflicted—and I use the word "afflicted" advisedly—with protecting and preparing for any sort of danger that may menace the United States. We know now that we have got to appropriate at least two hundred millions of dollars more than we have ever appropriated in our entire history. Are you going to hesitate about $1,150,000 to invest in something that you think could protect the entrance to the Chesapeake, Sandy Hook, the Golden Gate, that could possibly, even if not probably, sink a dreadnaught or a transport with two or three regiments aboard?

I have heard a great deal said about the patriotism of John Hays Hammond. My heart responds to a few words that were uttered this morning by the Senator from California. If I had been wise enough, mechanical engineer enough, to make this invention, I would not have let my children or grandchildren know that I had ever come to the Congress of the United States for compensation for it. I would have put it at the service of my Government and my country. I especially would have done that if my father were a millionaire and I needed no money; but that is not the question. You are faced with this condition.

What are you going to do with it? Are you going to buy this device, or are you going to let it go by the board? Are you going to leave it possibly to the heart of somebody who has not the same sort of a heart that you and I have to sell it to some foreign country?

It seems to me absurd to talk about making out of one device, one invention, a universal Atlantic and Pacific coast defense for the entire United States. Of course, that can not be done. The question arises as to whether you can create aerial wireless stations on aeroplanes in order to defend the coasts. If you can, this thing is worthy many times the price that you are required to pay by the Hammond family. If you can not do it, it is worth two or three times the amount of money that they want for it even to defend New York Harbor, or the entrance to the Chesapeake, or the entrance to the Mississippi, or the entrance to San Francisco Bay. Why swallow camels and hesitate about gnats?

It seems to me that the only thing needed in this provision is the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana, and that is that after these expert boards get through with it their order shall be approved by the President of the United States, who under the Constitution is the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy. Why? Not because the President is a radioelectrical engineering expert, but because, after he gets all the information that radioelectrical engineering experts can give to him, he is after all a man of magnificent sense and fully equipped for the place which he now occupies, not only as the Chief Civil Magistrate of this country but as the Commander in Chief of the Army and the Navy. He will act as a nonexpert sitting in judgment upon expert conclusions, and he will act as a dwarf acts upon the shoulders of a giant. A dwarf can see farther than a giant can if he is on the shoulders of a giant, not because he is a dwarf, but because he is on the shoulders of a giant; and the President ought to be permitted to decide finally and conclusively as to whether the report of these experts shall or shall not be accepted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. As a matter of parliamentary law, the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] is still pending.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair was about to suggest that it might be temporarily withdrawn, and if the amendment of the Senator from Montana is not adopted it will be again presented.

Mr. WALSH. I am authorized by the Senator from Missouri to say that his amendment may be considered as temporarily withdrawn.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then the question is on the amendment of the Senator from Montana.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now recurs on the committee amendment.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment at the close of the amendment just adopted, running in this language:

And provided further, That said board is authorized and directed to test and report upon the efficiency of the Clark invention of similar character, and in case of a favorable report said invention and patent rights may be likewise purchased upon terms to be approved by the President.

I hope the Senator from Florida will accept the amendment.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, of course I can not accept the amendment in that form, because the Senate amendment does not authorize the President to approve and thereby put into effect anything. If the Senator will limit his amendment to the first half of it——

Mr. GORE. I desire to make it coterminous with the amendment just adopted, the one offered by the Senator from Montana.

Mr. BRYAN. That is, that the board of Army and Navy officers should report upon the merits of the Clark device?

Mr. GORE. As I understand, under the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana, the Hammond invention might be purchased. I desire to give them equal chances. This amendment simply gives an opportunity to have the Clark invention tried out the same as the other.

Mr. BRYAN. The Senator from Montana offered his amendment to the text of the House bill.

Mr. GORE. I am offering this following his amendment—not to the Senate amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add, after the amendment just adopted, the following:

And provided further, That said board is authorized and directed to test and report upon the efficiency of the Clark invention of similar character, and in case of a favorable report said invention and patent rights may be likewise purchased upon terms to be approved by the President.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Oklahoma if he would have any objection to inserting in his amendment the words "and other," so as to read, "the Clark and other inventions"?

Mr. GORE. That was my original idea, to insert the words "and other similar inventions." I think they ought to be in there; but after the provision was adopted for the purchase of it, offered by the Senator from Montana, I felt some doubt about authorizing the purchase of all other inventions. I do not know that there are any besides the Hammond and Clark devices. I have no objection to it, however.

Mr. WEEKS. I understand that there are a great many inventions that relate indirectly to this subject.

Mr. GORE. Very well. I think that ought to go in.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator a question. Of course his amendment is not in print, and I have not had an opportunity to read it critically; but who is to agree upon the price to be paid for other inventions?

Mr. GORE. The amendment, as I offered it, provides that the payment is to be made upon terms approved by the President. I would rather assume that possibly it would go over. I have an idea that the Clark invention is superior to the Hammond invention, and that it can be purchased for much less money, and I do not think the opportunity ought to be foreclosed.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I have no objection whatever to an examination of any invention that could possibly be of any service to the Government or the purchase of it at a proper price.

Mr. GORE. Certainly there can be no objection to that.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. None whatever. It simply occurred to me that this bill carries a provision of $30,000 to be devoted to the examination of the Hammond invention. I do not know anything about the expense that would be incurred in investigating all other inventions of similar character and making the necessary tests. That is one thing that occurred to me. Another thing is that nobody has offered any other invention to the Government at any price whatever. We are utterly in the dark about that. A third consideration is that even if it is desirable to purchase all of these things, if they are meritorious and do not conflict with each other, it seems to me to be a little hasty to authorize the President to buy certain things upon the recommendation of a board at any price he may see fit to name. It is a little irregular method of appropriating money, it seems to me.

Mr. GORE. I rather agree with the Senator that it is a little hasty and perhaps lacks the circumspection that ought to be employed.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I want to suggest to the Senator, also, that unless some definite sum were specifically appropriated, I doubt whether, in law, the money could be gotten out of the Treasury—whether even the President could pay it.

Mr. GORE. I have no doubt that if the terms were agreed upon the matter would be allowed to drift until Congress reassembled. I have no objection to that course being pursued. In fact, I do not know whether they would determine to purchase it at all or not. I think they ought to investigate it and determine it upon its merits, and I have no doubt that it could be held in reserve until Congress met.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If this $30,000 is necessary and sufficient for the investigation of the Hammond invention, which has been considered by both committees and reported upon by an expert board, all right; but I do not think the $30,000 intended to be appropriated for this one purpose, if needed for that purpose, should be diverted to all these other investigations. I was going to suggest also that I have no objection whatever to letting the amendment go in the bill in any form the Senator from Oklahoma wants to have it, for the purpose of having it considered in conference, for I am quite convinced that the House would never agree to it as it is.

Mr. GORE. That is the paramount object I had in mind, and I should expect the conferees to work it out more effectively and more systematically than I have been able to do offhand here. I hope, however, it will remain in the bill as it is offered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now recurs on the committee amendment.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Let the question be stated again.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on the committee amendment, which is the amendment to strike out the House provision.

Mr. OLIVER. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on striking out the House provision and inserting the Senate provision. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARDING (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. Not knowing how he would vote if present, I will withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], who is temporarily absent from the Chamber. I am informed that if he were present he would vote "nay." Therefore I feel at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SHAFROTH (when Mr. THOMAS's name was called). I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. THOMAS], and to state that he is paired with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER].

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to my colleague [Mr. SMITH of South Carolina], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a standing pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], but I am informed by his colleague and by the Republican whip that if he were present he would vote "nay." Desiring to vote "nay" myself, I regard myself as released from the pair for this particular vote. I therefore vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN], but under the terms of that pair I am permitted to vote on questions of this kind. I vote "nay."

Mr. WALSH. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT], but I am advised that he would vote as I am about to vote. Accordingly, I vote "nay."

Mr. HARDING. In view of the announcement made by the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] to the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WALSH. I announce that my colleague [Mr. MYERS] is absent on account of illness.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON]; and

The Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS].

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 42, as follows:

YEAS—28.

Bankhead	Gronna	Lea, Tenn.	Smith, Ariz.
Beckham	Hardwick	Overman	Smith, Md.
Bryan	Hughes	Poindexter	Swanson
Clapp	Johnson, S. Dak.	Ransdell	Taggart

Cummins	McCumber	Phelan	Underwood
Fall	Martin, Va.	Reed	Wadsworth
Goff	Martine, N. J.	Robinson
Hitchcock	Myers	Shields
Hollis	O'Gorman	Smith, Ga.

So the amendment of the committee was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is still in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 13, line 8, after the figures "$100,000," it is proposed to add:

Provided, That hereafter the Chief of Coast Artillery shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of a major general."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WEEKS. I move to amend by striking out the whole of section 6, commencing on line 24, page 16.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 16 it is proposed to strike out section 6 of the House text, which was originally section 5, in the following words:

SEC. 6. That expenditures for carrying out the provisions of this act shall not be made in such manner as to prevent the operation of the Government arsenals at their most economical rate of production, except when a special exigency requires the operation of a portion of an arsenal's equipment at a different rate: Provided, That no part of the appropriations made in this act shall be available for the salary or pay of any officer, manager, superintendent, foreman, or other person having charge of the work of any employee of the United States Government while making or causing to be made with a stop watch or other time-measuring device a time study of any job of any such employee between the starting and completion thereof, or of the movements of any such employee while engaged upon such work; nor shall any part of the appropriations made in this act be available to pay any premium or bonus or cash reward to any employee in addition to his regular wages, except for suggestions resulting in improvements or economy in the operation of any Government plant.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. BORAH. Will the Senator state the provision that he proposes to strike out?

Mr. WEEKS. It is what is now section 6; it was section 5.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the provision be read, Mr. President.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. It is the intention of the Senator to strike out the proviso?

Mr. WEEKS. Yes; that is what I want to have stricken out.

Mr. HUGHES. Then the Senator really wants to strike out the proviso rather than beginning at the section. Would it not be better to change the amendment?

Mr. WEEKS. I will have the amendment commence with the word "Provided," line 3, page 17.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 17, beginning at line 3, it is proposed to strike out the following words:

Provided, That no part of the appropriations made in this act shall be available for the salary or pay of any officer, manager, superintendent, foreman, or other person having charge of the work of any employee of the United States Government while making or causing to be made with a stop watch or other time-measuring device a time study of any job of any such employee between the starting and completion thereof, or of the movements of any such employee while engaged upon such work; nor shall any part of the appropriations made in this act be available to pay any premium or bonus or cash reward to any employee in addition to his regular wages, except for suggestions resulting in improvements or economy in the operation of any Government plant.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I move to lay the amendment on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Florida moves to lay the amendment on the table. [Putting the question.] The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARDING (when his name was called). Announcing my pair with the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. WALSH (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and vote "yea."

I wish to state that my colleague [Mr. MYERS] is absent on account of illness.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MARTINE] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH];

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN];

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS]; and

The Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS].

Mr. HARDING. In announcing my pair, I stated my position under an apprehension that I was voting for the amendment suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts. However, I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and vote "nay."

Mr. GALLINGER (after having voted in the negative). I have voted, but I have a pair with the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN]. This is a question concerning which I am not at all sure as to his attitude, and therefore ask to have my vote withdrawn.

Mr. DU PONT (after having voted in the affirmative). Mr. President, I voted under a misapprehension, supposing the question was on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS]. Since voting, however, I have learned that the question is on laying the amendment on the table. I therefore desire to change my vote from "yea" to "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 36, nays 20, as follows:

YEAS—36.

Ashurst	Fletcher	La Follette	Sheppard
Bankhead	Gronna	Lane	Simmons
Beckham	Hughes	Lea, Tenn.	Smith, Ariz.
Borah	Husting	Norris	Stone
Brady	James	Overman	Swanson
Bryan	Johnson, Me.	Ransdell	Taggart
Chamberlain	Johnson, S. Dak.	Reed	Thompson
Clapp	Jones	Saulsbury	Vardaman
Culberson	Kenyon	Shafroth	Walsh

NAYS—20.

Brandegee	Harding	Oliver	Townsend
Clarke, Ark.	Hardwick	Sherman	Warren
Curtis	Lee, Md.	Smith, Mich.	Weeks
du Pont	McLean	Smoot	Williams
Gore	Nelson	Sterling	Works

NOT VOTING—39.

Broussard	Hitchcock	Newlands	Shields
Catron	Hollis	O'Gorman	Smith, Ga.
Chilton	Kern	Owen	Smith, Md.
Clark, Wyo.	Lewis	Page	Smith, S. C.
Colt	Lippitt	Penrose	Sutherland
Cummins	Lodge	Phelan	Thomas
Dillingham	McCumber	Pittman	Tillman
Fall	Martin, Va.	Poindexter	Underwood
Gallinger	Martine, N. J.	Pomerene	Wadsworth
Goff	Myers	Robinson

So Mr. WEEKS's amendment was laid on the table.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I did not expect that a motion to lay the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts on the table would be made, and I had intended to occupy three or four minutes in the discussion of that amendment. That privilege has been forbidden me by the action of the Senate. I now ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD communications—few in number—from citizens of my State and, I believe, one or two from other States relating to this subject, without reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

COMMITTEE OF TEN TO OPPOSE LEGISLATION ANTAGONISTIC TO EFFICIENCY IN AMERICAN INDUSTRY,
New York, June 27, 1916.

Hon. JACOB H. GALLINGER,
The Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I understand that some of your constituents have called your attention to the antiefficiency legislation now pending in Washington. I refer particularly to the Tavenner amendment to the various appropriation bills, some of which have already passed the House, and others are now under consideration.

These riders prohibit the use of time studies, premiums, or bonus payments in the Government work authorized under these appropriations.

Time studies are simply a means of determining the best method of accomplishing work and the amount of time required by a workman, without fatigue, to accomplish the work through these best methods.

Bonus and premium payments are a means of rewarding the industrial worker by an extra payment over and above his daily wage for the accomplishment of a fair day's work.

The opponents of these efficiency measures have made a false statement, that they are simply the means of setting an excessive task, based on the capabilities of the most rapid workmen, and that less capable workmen are forced to accomplish this or suffer. This is absolutely false, and ample evidence can be furnished to anyone who honestly desires the information.

The efforts which are being made by the leaders of organized labor are of vital importance to the industries of the country, and will, we believe, receive the condemnation of everyone who makes a thorough study of the conditions.

I trust that your active opposition to the Tavenner measures may be counted on.

If there is any further information that we can give you, we shall be very glad, indeed, to furnish it.

Yours, very truly, W. HERMAN GREUL, Secretary.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Washington, D. C., June 27, 1916.

Hon. JACOB H. GALLINGER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In four appropriation bills—the Army bill, the naval bill, the fortifications bill, and the sundry civil bill—now pending before the Senate of the United States or its committees there has been incorporated an amendment, popularly known as the Tavenner amendment, prohibiting the use of certain methods incident to the establishment of an efficiency system in Government manufacturing establishments. Against such legislation, which would block the road to increased efficiency in Government plants, the Chamber of Commerce of the United States has placed itself on record, and we would earnestly ask your attention to the following resolution adopted at the fourth annual meeting, held in Washington, D. C., February 8, 9, and 10, 1916.

Very respectfully, yours,

ELLIOT H. GOODWIN,
General Secretary.

INDUSTRIAL EFFICIENCY.

Whereas the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, assembled in its third annual meeting, urged that Congress should reject the so-called Dietrick amendment to a pending appropriation bill in so far as this amendment sought to prevent the study of methods to increase industrial efficiency in manufacturing establishments of the Government and to forbid additional compensation to employees as a reward for improvement in skill and effort;

Whereas no legislative enactment of any kind should have as its purpose interference with the development of industrial efficiency in ways which comport with the public interest: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, in fourth annual meeting assembled, emphatically reaffirms the attitude it has previously taken upon this question.

Senator JACOB H. GALLINGER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: We want to appeal to you to oppose the legislation before Congress aimed to prevent the use of time study and the stop watch in Government work and premium payments to Government workmen. This proposal is based on absolute and utter misunderstanding. The stop watch or some time-measuring device is essential to the determination of rates that are really accurate and fair to the worker. It is used only to determine the rates. It is never held over the operator afterwards, and once rates are determined its use ceases.

Bonus and premium payments are a true recognition of efficiency and mean sharing with the worker the savings effected. Proposed legislation appears in Tavenner House bill, also Van Dyke Post Office bill and naval appropriation bill as reported. To approve this antiefficiency legislation would be a crime, and surely a grave injustice to American labor. Workers in plants where rates are correctly established by scientific time studies and where proper bonus payments are given will all strongly approve and indorse their use.

Very truly, yours,

GERMAN-AMERICAN BUTTON CO.,

To Members of Congress:

Under date of January 21, 1916, before his elevation to the Supreme Court, Mr. Louis D. Brandeis, an eminent advocate of the workers, wrote us as follows:

"Referring to the proposed congressional legislation to prohibit the introduction or use of time study and premium payments in Government establishments, in my opinion, any such restriction upon the conduct of Government establishments would be highly inadvisable. The purpose for thus proposing the legislation is doubtless one which all of us would approve. Increased efficiency ought not to be purchased at the expense of health and other qualities essential to good citizenship and the general welfare; but no one can doubt that increased efficiency is essential to the public welfare; that we have not yet learned now best to secure that efficiency, and that the most important element in securing efficiency is the knowledge of facts, to the ascertainment of which time study is a means.

"To prohibit time study and premium payment is as crude a method of affording to the workingman proper protection as the proverbial 'burning of the house to roast the pig.'"

We respectfully request you to consider this in connection with the Van Dyke and Tavenner bills and appropriation riders.

Yours, truly,

A. W. KIMBER, Secretary.

Hon. JACOB H. GALLINGER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We are informed that the naval appropriation bill as reported includes a provision preventing the introduction of efficiency methods into naval construction work.

We feel that this could never be seriously proposed by anybody who really understood the true significance of what has come to be known as "scientific-management" work. The introduction of these methods is as great a stride in advance as was the introduction of machinery in the place of old-fashioned hand work. It is most distinctly favorable to the interests of the working people and the public and will soon be so understood. To have our Government set itself in opposition to such a broad, enlightened forward movement would be a most serious blunder, and most assuredly would react against anybody indorsing it.

We most urgently bespeak your interest in this matter, and urge you to cast your vote against all forms of legislation whose object is the hindrance of the development of efficient methods of conducting public work.

Yours, respectfully, CHENEY BROS.,

MY DEAR SENATOR GALLINGER: Your letter of the 2d instant was duly received, and, as I understand from letters received from both of our Representatives they were opposed to the Tavenner bill but that it passed the House and is now a measure pending in the Senate, and, I think, attached as a rider to the naval appropriation bill.

Such legislation as that is about as far away from efficiency for preparedness as anything the labor agitators could think of, and I most sincerely hope it can be defeated in the Senate.

With kindest regards,

Yours, very sincerely, J. W. UPHAM, Treasurer.

DEAR SIR: We urge that you use your efforts to defeat any measure which contemplates the prohibition of efficiency methods by private or governmental manufacture of materials made for our Government.

Lack of efficiency and the encouragement of same by our Government will lead to a tragedy in times of peace and a holocaust in times of war. Let us be warned by England's opposition to efficiency and prepare ourselves by economy and scientific methods for both industrial and military competition, and further fortify ourselves by the recommendations of a tariff commission.

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR GALLINGER: Inclosed please find copy of letter writtten to Hon. CYRUS A. SULLOWAY, which will explain itself.

I sincerely hope that you will use your efforts to prevent legislation of this kind from going through when it reaches the Senate.

I can not emphasize too strongly the fact that it would be a distinct backward movement for the Government of this country to begin to take sides against those industries that are trying to do their work in a scientific manner. There is absolutely nothing about a scientific-managed plant which will operate against the workman's bests interests; in fact, his future depends upon scientific investigation by his employer, of the conditions under which he is working, and time-study work is one of the essential factors.

With kindest regards, I remain,

Very sincerely, yours, ROBERT B. WOLF.

LETTER TO MR. SULLOWAY.

TUESDAY, May 30, 1916.

Hon. CYRUS A. SULLOWAY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SULLOWAY: I sent you a day letter to-day, according to the inclosed confirmation, and I sincerely hope that you will do your utmost to prevent legislation of this character from going through.

Time-study work is a very important factor in furnishing means for recording man's progress, and, while it is usually the case that bonus or premium payments go with the type of management that use time study, it is nevertheless a fact that the principal gain comes from giving the man a knowledge of the progress of his work. This enables him to do his work more intelligently, for he is taught how to use his brains; in fact, instead of a man doing his work in a routine uninterested way he is given some incentive to use his brains and intelligence.

There is no surer way to reduce the industrial efficiency of this country than to have the Government frown upon scientific management of industries, and real scientific management can not be used unless scientific time studies are made of the individual operations that the men are going through.

The attached bulletin outlines our type of management in Berlin, and I hope that you will take the time to look it over, so that you can perhaps get a little different point of view regarding the scientific management movement.

With kindest regards, I remain,

Very sincerely, yours, ROBERT B. WOLF.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask permission also to insert from the Bulletin of the Society to promote the Science of Management, a most interesting article entitled "Individuality in Industry," by Robert B. Wolf, of Portland, Me.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the RECORD?

Mr. GALLINGER. I wish to have it inserted in the RECORD without reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

INDIVIDUALITY IN INDUSTRY.

[A paper presented at the Boston meeting of the Society to Promote the Science of Management, May 21, 1915. By Robert B. Wolf, manager of manufacturing, Burgess Sulphite Fibre Co., Berlin, N. H.]

A PAPER EMPHASIZING THE NECESSITY OF GIVING INDIVIDUALITY TO THE INDUSTRIAL UNIT ITSELF, AND HOW IT CAN BE ACCOMPLISHED.

About three years ago I was asked by the "Committee on economic administration of industrial establishments" of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers what I considered to be the "new element in the art of management." At that time, while the general principles of what I wish to present for your consideration to-day were in my mind, they were more or less indefinitely formulated, and I hesitated to give them expression. Since then, however, I have had ample opportunity to verify my earlier conclusions and have put many of them into actual practice.

In presenting for your consideration my conception of progressive industrial organization, I do not wish to have it understood that I am attempting to elaborate on the methods of Mr. Taylor and others, nor do I wish to detract in any way from the splendid work done by these men. I hope that this paper, however, will show that there is a relationship between the various methods and will point out how they are all forward steps in the great movement which increases man's productiveness and his creative powers.

In order to give you my ideas more clearly a general review of present conditions in the industrial world seems to me necessary.

Many of you have undoubtedly had more or less opportunity to observe the deplorable inefficiency of most of our large industrial concerns, especially those commonly known as trusts, where a number of formerly independent plants have been united under one common management. The plants are usually scattered over a considerable area and the central offices located in some commercial center.

The first step in the organization of these corporations has usually been the removal of the resident owners and managers from the various localities to the central offices and the subsequent attempt to carry on the functions of management by the superintendent and heads of departments. These men, in most instances, not having had any real knowledge of manufacturing costs and profits, are, of course, incapable of conducting the business intelligently. It, therefore, becomes necessary for the central office to perform much of this work for the various plants.

As a rule, no final manufacturing costs are made at the plant and, as a consequence, those who are held directly responsible for the cost of producing and who have the most intimate knowledge of operating conditions have not a very intelligent basis upon which to work. They can receive very little help from the former managers; in the first place, because these managers are so far removed from the actual conditions that their judgment is affected; and in the second place, their interest is divided among so many different plants that, in the very nature of things, they can not give the various problems the time required for intelligent consideration.

A realization of the impossibility of keeping close watch on details at a distant plant is perhaps responsible for the removal of some of the vital functions of the individual plants to the central offices, such as purchasing, selling, construction and maintenance, cost keeping, etc.

A central purchasing department has undoubtedly many advantages, but as ordinarily conducted in large corporations these advantages are almost entirely offset by the obstacles placed in the way of free choice on the part of the mill organizations and the consequent discouragement of individuality in making selections. The impossibility of handling all of the purchases by one capable man necessitates delegating a lot of minor purchases to subordinates, who have no real knowledge of actual mill requirements. Even though they know what is required in one mill, they can not know in others where conditions are not the same.

The purchasing agent should have full power to build up an efficient organization for keeping informed of the market conditions, so that requisitions from the mills can be handled with promptness and dispatch. The department should be able to furnish full, complete information to the individual plants whenever they need it in order to properly purchase supplies. It should encourage the mills to furnish specifications and welcome attempts on their part to keep comparative records for the purpose of determining the best materials to use. It should always conduct itself toward each separate organization as if it were an outside firm, employed to give advice and assistance in every way possible to enable purchases to be made economically. Each plant should receive frequent reports from the purchasing department giving complete information about materials found to be giving good results in other places. This one feature alone would make it immensely valuable to the parent corporation.

I have dwelt upon these details merely to show how greatly a central purchasing department can aid if put in its proper relationship to the various plants, namely, that of servant rather than the equal of the manufacturing department. Certainly nothing can be more important to manufacturing than the proper purchasing of materials which are to be converted into the finished product or which are needed to effect this conversion.

Let us take accounting next. Why are accounts kept and what is their purpose? In the last analysis, accounts are records of the progress of accomplishment and are used to enable those in charge of the corporation's affairs to decide upon the future policy to pursue.

Why, then, should any attempt be made by the central office to keep accounts that are of strictly local interest to the individual plants? And why even attempt to dictate how and when these accounts should be kept? In so far as comparisons between individual plants are concerned, this is justified, but no further, and even in this case it should not be pushed to a point where comparisons which local conditions at the plants demand are not allowed.

The foregoing should not be misconstrued to mean that I believe a central accounting system for corporations is not necessary or desirable, for it most certainly is. The accounting department should confine itself, however, to such accounting as is of interplant nature, and not attempt to dip into local conditions except in an advisory capacity.

One serious mistake often made is allowing the accounting department to practically control the mill offices. These, for reasons to be pointed out later, should be entirely under the control of the local management, subject, of course, to frequent auditing by the accounting department.

The central office of the corporation needs only resultant figures giving a true record of the progress of each plant, and made in such a way that comparisons can be easily made, the local plants being required to furnish any figures called for at all times.

The selling in most cases can be handled by the central office much better than any other function; indeed, the main purpose in forming large corporations was primarily to stop ruinous competition between plants, especially in periods of slight demand. There should, however, be much closer touch between the selling department and the mills and a much more intimate knowledge of operating conditions by the salesmen. The degree of this intimacy is, of course, one of the important things to be decided by the chief executive.

"Maintenance and construction" is another thing which should be touched upon. There is usually much damage done to the individual plants by decisions of "absentee" engineers, whose knowledge of the plant conditions can not be of such an intimate nature that they can make intelligent decisions. This very often actually retards progress in the organization and serves to discourage individual effort upon the part of the local mill management.

A high-grade consulting engineer employed to devote his entire time to the corporation's affairs would be a very valuable asset. He should conduct himself toward each individual plant exactly as he would if they were all independent establishments and his own clients. There would be this very important difference, however, which would mean much greater freedom of action; i. e., he would be entirely free to give each plant the benefit of his experience in others, and in this way would be a constant, highly intelligent means of exchanging ideas of mutual interest and benefit.

Of course, I realize that most of this is a review of things already known to many of you, but this review seems to me to be necessary in order to properly present what, I hope, will be more constructive in nature.

I am now going to make a plea for the development of plant individuality. This is not merely a return to old conditions existing prior to amalgamation, but a regaining of all the advantages of the old order of things with the additional advantages of the new.

To begin with, we must have managers in our plants who have real executive ability and who are not selected because of their particular skill in certain manufacturing lines. These managers should have power to select and form their own organizations, and for this reason must be men who have a broad realization of their unity with the parent corporation. They should be the kind of men who are ready to receive suggestions and receive them gladly and at the same time have individuality enough to reject those things which, from their knowledge of conditions, seem unwise to incorporate.

Having selected this type of manager, the work of developing the organization's individuality can begin.

A good organization must have the following elements:

1. A certain definite function to perform.
2. A definite central organization of control.
3. A thorough system of recording all events which take place in the performance of the work.
4. Means for vitalizing certain subconscious functions of control so as to produce prompt, intelligent action without direction from the conscious mind.
5. Means for making newly acquired accomplishments automatic.

In other words, the question resolves itself into developing in the plant as a unit all of the functions so wonderfully exemplified in the human body.

Recognizing the principle that any organization to be progressive must have individuality, let us see how this individuality can best be built up. To do this we must have some knowledge of what constitutes individuality, and I know of no better way to illustrate this than by showing how unity of action is maintained in the organized activities of the physical body.

The mechanism which enables the human body to act as a unit is the nervous system, which controls, either consciously or subconsciously, every bodily function. We have thousands of afferent (or ingoing) nerve paths leading from every portion of the body into the central nervous system, where every external impression is finally recorded in the cortex of the brain.

The end organs, which enable us to see, hear, smell, and taste, all have their nerve paths leading to the brain, and we find upon analysis that what we once called the sense of touch is wonderfully differentiated into various senses, as, for instance, the thermal sense (of hot and cold), the pressure sense, and the sense of pain, each conducted inwardly by a special set of nerves, which respond only to its particular kind of stimulation.

We find that all of the nerve paths lead to the brain through various relay stations, or nerve centers, for an intelligent kind of sorting or grouping of the impulses that take place, so that the final presentation to the brain is in proper form for recording.

We find also that while all impressions are in some way recorded in the cortex of the cerebrum, that many of the nerve impulses producing them (in nerve centers through which they pass) act directly upon certain efferent (or outgoing) nerves, whose function it is to produce musculo-motor action in the body, this resultant action taking place before the conscious mind has had time to direct it.

A study of the cortex of the brain, which is the seat of all consciousness, including memory, self-consciousness, and volition, reveals a wonderful mechanism for coordinating and relating our sense impressions and musculo-motor action; for instance, the sense of violin playing has its seat in close proximity to the musculo-motor center which controls the motion of the arms; in other words, the place where the final recording of an external impulse takes place is close to and always associated with impulse terminals of a similar nature and at the same time with those nerve cells which can enable the individual to further the action required for the proper development of an accomplishment.

In addition to the foregoing, which has to do principally with the conscious action of the mind, we find a wonderful control of the bodily functions by the brain, which keeps the various organs in harmonious relationship with each other. When, for instance, the environmental conditions demand heavy muscular action on the part of the individual and there is a waste of muscular tissue and a demand for its removal, the nerve which accelerates the heart action is stimulated and increased circulation results, enabling the blood to carry material for restoring the body tissues to their normal condition and carrying away waste products. At the same time that the heart is accelerated the lungs are caused to increase their rate of respiration through stimulation of the nerve accelerating the motion of the diaphragm. Many other things too numerous to mention occur simultaneously, such as the operation of the sweat glands to assist the organs of elimination to carry off the waste products, etc.; but enough has been stated to illustrate the point I wish to make, namely, that the whole unity of action is made possible only because of the marvelous control exercised over the body by the nervous system. It is only when this control is lost, through disease or injury, that the unity of action and consequent definiteness of purpose upon which progress depends is impaired.

In order to understand the reason for the simplicity and wonderful unity of the nervous system, in spite of its apparent infinite complexity, it is necessary to describe its three great subdivisions:

The sympathetic system.
The spinal system.
The cortical system.

Take first the sympathetic system, which is the seat of those almost entirely automatic functions over which the conscious mind has only very indirect control. This consists principally of the efferent (or outgoing) nerve cells, whose bodies are collected into ganglia, or groups, located outside of the spinal cord, principally in the head and in the body cavities. For instance, the nerves which stimulate the growth of the hair, the finger nails, and even the growth of the body itself; the vaso-constrictor and vaso-dilator nerves controlling the contraction and expansion of the blood vessels; the nerves controlling the beating of the heart and thousands of other functions are all a part of the sympathetic nervous system. This is so designed that it constantly reminds and, in a sense, releases the forces required to keep the routine work necessary to our preservation in motion.

Next, let us take the spinal system, which is located inside of and protected by the backbone. This is the seat of those semiautomatic functions over which the brain has a direct and constant control. These functions—such, for instance, as walking or breathing—after once being set in motion by the will, acting through the brain or conscious mind, are kept in motion by the nerves in the spinal cord without the conscious effort of the individual. It is also the seat of the so-called "reflex muscular action," which causes the body to act involuntarily for its own protection, when necessary.

The fundamental difference between the subconsciousness of the sympathetic system and the subconsciousness of the spinal system is that the stimulating nerve power of the latter is more or less directly under the control of the conscious will, while the sympathetic system performs its work independently of it.

Finally, let us describe the cortical system, which is really an outgrowth of the spinal system, surmounting it, cordinating, and controlling its action. The upper portion, or cortex of the brain, is the seat of the memory, where all the sensory impressions from every portion of the body are brought by the afferent (or ingoing) nerve paths, and from which originate the efferent (or outgoing) impulses, which keep the body functioning properly in accordance with its environment. The will, having the power to recall and use the stored-up records in the brain, can, by means of communicating nerve fibers in the cortex, direct the organism through its outgoing nerves to useful efforts of progressive accomplishment.

Having described the functions of the three main divisions of the nervous system, it now remains to sketch briefly the relationship of each to each other.

The sympathetic nervous system is connected, through what the anatomist calls the "preganglionic nerves," with the brain and spinal cord, and comprises the outlying efferent (or outgoing) nerve cells, through which the impulses from the central nervous system finally reach the involuntary muscles and glands, the spinal-cord connections coming out between the spinal vertebræ and the direct brain connections being made through the cranial nerves coming down from the cortex direct. The so-called sympathetic nerve cells are connected into ganglia (or groups) located, as before mentioned, in the head and body cavities. The various nerve plexes, such as the pulmonary and the solar, are also a part of the sympathetic system, and the connections into these ganglia and plexes, coming from both the cranial nerves and the spinal nerves, complete the cycle which produces a harmonious working together of the parts and a continuous correcting or complementing action.

I could go on almost indefinitely with illustrations of this nature, but enough have been given to bring out the point I wish to make, namely, that the human body is an organization of many elements—and, I might say, of many personalities, for each cell has individuality of its own, and many can live outside of the body itself—all working together in harmony, under the direction of the will, acting through the nervous system.

If anyone wishes to inquire into the forces which have led up to the individual development of mankind, he will find himself at once plunged into the realm of psychology and mental philosophy. I can heartily recommend such a course as immensely profitable and of practical value.

The five important facts, however, that have to do with the subject in hand are:

1. That the human body is such a wonderful organization because it is the product of the forces of creation acting through millions of years of evolution.
2. That its capacity for progress depends upon the maintenance of the unity resulting from this creative evolution and upon a conscious recognition of this unity.
3. That this unity would not have been possible without the development of the nervous system.
4. That the conscious intelligent progress made by mankind could not have reached its present level until in the process of evolution a mechanism had been built up in the nervous system itself capable of recording the various impressions which the senses are constantly receiving.
5. That the recording of past events, with the power of consciously recalling them for the solution of problems immediately confronting it, is absolutely essential to its development.

Now, what I want to point out is that inasmuch as man's progress depends upon the perfect coordination of his forces to produce unity of action, we have no right to expect an industrial organization to make progress (which it must do as a unit) without the establishment of a conscious coordinating mechanism similar to the nervous system in the human body.

Is it not a fact, then, that the success of scientific management, properly applied, is due to its action in building up the individuality of the organization? I think there is not the slightest doubt on this point, nor is there any doubt that the failure of some organizations to put their business on a scientific basis has been caused largely by the fact that they have not used the mechanism of scientific management for the purpose of perfecting its unity.

I am personally very familiar with one large flourishing establishment, which has no less than 100 recording and 100 indicating instruments, representing 20 or more different kinds of sensory impressions, such as temperatures, pressures, colors, gas compositions, liquid densities, liquid levels, etc., all required in order to maintain uniformity of product and economy of operation.

Recognizing, then, these various recording devices and instruments which come in direct contact with the work as the end organs of newly acquired senses, we must conduct the impulses resulting from the instrumental contacts through suitable channels to the place where all things affecting the organization are recorded.

We must have, in other words, an organization memory, which is entirely apart and separate from the memory of the various individuals of the plant. It is only by having such a place of record, where all things affecting the organization as a unit can be recorded, that a proper perspective can be obtained.

A gradual development of such a memory by the addition of new senses will tremendously accelerate the rate at which the organization will progress, just as in the individual the addition of new concepts to the brain tremendously increases its reasoning power.

In designing the recording mechanism or plant memory it is best to use graphical methods in order that comparisons may be easily made. Figures, it must be remembered, are static, while curves show tendencies.

By the use of graphical records things affecting each other can be brought in close relationship, enabling those whose business it is to control the manufacturing process to see at a glance what action is necessary on their part to produce the best results, not only with respect to their own department, but with respect to the whole plant.

If I had time I would like to describe to you in detail a chart room containing over 1,400 separate plotted records, all used to record the operations of a single plant. These charts are so arranged and grouped as to be instantly and at all times available for study by those directing the organization's activities. This department is the plant memory and corresponds to the third and last acquired great subdivision of the human nervous system—the brain.

Having described the memory part of the organization, as corresponding to the cerebrum of the brain, let us now consider the part corresponding to the spinal cord, which is the seat of what we will call the vital or intelligent subconscious action. In our industrial organizations this corresponds to the control by the department heads and foremen, who are constantly directing and setting in motion corrective forces tending to keep the organization functioning properly. This is analogous to what the anatomist calls "reflex action."

Now, in the average organization much of the the work is done in this manner without direction from the central conscious mind. There being no plant memory, this is the only way it can act, and progress is necessarily extremely slow; as it is, for instance, in the insect world, where the spinal system is not surmounted by a brain.

As the coordinating effect of a brain, however, enables the spinal cord to do much better work, so does the addition of a plant memory tremendously aid by intensifying the subconscious action; as, for instance, when it acts through its executive branch to stimulate the creative energy of the foreman, subforeman, and even individuals, by giving them a record of the performance of their work and by making comparisons with others. By this means a spirit of emulation is built up which makes each man desire to do good work of his own free will. The urge comes from within instead of from without. The result of having this spirit permeate the organization means an entire reversal of the old order of things, where the chief executive uses his creative force to make his department heads carry on their work, and they in turn pass the impulse along to their foremen, and so on until it reaches the last man in the organization, where it is felt very faintly indeed.

The new order carried out to its ultimate point means that each man in the organization is interested, because those above him have had brains enough to furnish him with the means of recording his progress. He then feels that he is creating something and is happy. His foreman, being released from the tedious work of making his men work against their will, finds stimulation in directing the forces he feels flowing upward for him to direct. As a consequence, he becomes creative in his work.

The department head has the same experience and finally the chief executive finds himself directing the forces looking to him for leadership and he himself becomes creative, and no longer wears himself out by trying to drive his own creative force into the men in his organization, thereby depleting his own supply.

Finally, let us take that part of the organization corresponding to the sympathetic nervous system, for it has a very important place in our scheme of rounding out the organization's individuality. Much of the organization's activity must become automatic, otherwise our capacity to acquire new accomplishments will be greatly limited. Man's progress in the world consists largely in the conscious acquisition of new talents and making them subconscious, or automatic. We begin this when we, as children, consciously learn to walk and later in life, perhaps, learn by dint of hard work, to ride a bicycle. Once having learned these things, we no longer have to think about them, but our minds, while we are doing them, are released for other purposes.

Now, in our plant organization there is no better method of installing a subconscious control than by the use of a tickler system, as it is used in the Taylor system of scientific management. This consists simply of a cabinet with a drawer for each month in the year, containing substantially built folders for each day of the month. In these drawers are placed the various memoranda, to be taken out and distributed on the proper dates, reminding those to whom they are addressed of certain routine work to be done. A system so safeguarded as to keep the conscious mind of the organization informed when a departure is made from methods decided upon as best, or made so responsive to changes in plant conditions as automatically to allow the executive branch to know when conditions should be changed, is fulfilling a long-felt want. I can describe to you a thousand ways in which such a system is serving a large industrial concern and enabling the conscious mind of its executive, department heads, foremen, and others to do creative work for its advancement.

There are many other functions which can be brought into use, all of them having exact counterpart in the human body, nor is there any end to the elaboration of methods. I will not weary you, however, with any more details.

I want now to state, in as few words as possible, what seems to me are the essentials of organization work. The first thing to decide upon is what constitutes individuality. The units must be no larger than they should be to function properly as units in the performance of a common task. If the corporation ownership is large, divide it into these units and make them come into the parent organization as complete units.

Having determined your units, give them individuality in the following manner:

First. Furnish them with means of becoming conscious of themselves and of their environment, by building up a system of scientific registration and control similar to the nervous system of the human body.

Second. Provide a definite central place for recording all of the various sensory impressions furnished by the recording mechanisms, arranged in such a way that comparisons of the whole progress of the plant can be made with the least possible effort, exactly as it is done in the brain of the human body.

Third. Provide for the subconscious control of the newly acquired accomplishments as exemplified by the spinal and sympathetic nervous systems in man, thereby liberating the conscious mind to deal with new problems of a creative nature.

If these three functins of management are kept in mind there will be no danger of becoming confused by the mechanism of control, for it will always be seen to be what it really is, namely, the nervous system in progress of development in order to establish greater unity of organization.

Furthermore, a thorough recognition of these three cardinal principles for establishing unity of action is a perfect safeguard against oversystematizing. The human nervous system is extremely flexible and always more or less under the control of the will, and it is of the utmost importance that the mechanism for controlling and unifying an industrial organization be equally flexible and capable of being modified.

An organization filled with red tape is like a man who has lost his will power and is dominated by his appetites and desires. He can not become efficient until the will regains control and restores unity of action.

Any system so designed that it does not permit the intimate contact of employer with employee and therefore does not fully recognize the value of the human touch is doomed to failure.

I sincerely hope that in outlining this philosophy of management I have indicated to you how an organization can be made so conscious of itself as to realize at once when the human units, of which it is composed, are not being given the proper opportunity for self-expression, or to realize as well when these same human units are not receiving the sympathetic help they need for their own individual development.

Men can be productive only when they take an interest in their work, and they will not take this interest unless those intrusted with the direction of their efforts realize that they must teach them constantly how to exercise their creative powers.

In conclusion, I wish to assure you that this paper is not an academic discussion of what might be done, but as true a picture as I can give you of methods I have actually used successfully.

DISCUSSION.

Mr. SHELTON. Mr. Wolf has drawn an exceedingly interesting analogy, well calculated to help managing members of an industrial organization keep their balance. Yet he does not seem to stick to his own parallel. For instance, the autonomy which Mr. Wolf would give the accounting department of the different local organizations in a large corporation does not seem consistent with his picture of centralized control over bodily activities such as is exercised by the cranial system. If the central office of the corporation can determine the one best way, whether in accounting or any other practice, should it not hold the subsidiary plants responsible for living up to that standard? The central office, it seems to me, should be in a peculiarly advantageous position in the establishing of proper standards. Therefore I take issue with Mr. Wolf's contention that its relation to local plants should be purely advisory.

The suggestion that an industrial organization to make progress as a unit should have a conscious coordinating mechanism comparable to the nervous system in the human body is hardly open to argument. Neither is it open to argument that every organization can and should have a distinct individuality as a whole, to which its component parts harmoniously contribute. The question whether scientific management helps to build up such an individuality can certainly be answered in the affirmative. But the statement that "the failure of some organizations to put their business on a scientific basis has been caused largely by the fact that they have not used the mechanism of scientific management" seems to me absolutely wrong.

Tickler systems, recording devices, and indicating instruments are mechanisms valuable and often necessary. Yet scientific management does not lie in these. How often have we heard Mr. Taylor emphatically declare that scientific management is not a particular mechanism of any sort, but is primarily a point of view. That, it seems to me, indicates the secret of success or failure in scientific management. It depends not on the mechanism but on the individuality which controls and uses the mechanism.

Taking Mr. Wolf's own analogy, Mr. Taylor's cerebrospinal and sympathetic nerve systems were built on much the same plan and of much the same material as those of the rest of mankind. Yet consider the difference in the way he—in his individuality, his point of view—used those mechanisms and with what results.

Mr. MIXTER. The paper says that an organization filled with red tape is like a man who having lost his will power is dominated by his appetite and desires. I think it is the other way round, that a concern dominated by red tape is like a man with excessive will power who has a fixed idea and who will not change or changes with great difficulty. I think in all human affairs, whether Government or industry, we never can achieve anything that approximates the coordination of the human person. As regards the different plants under one central ownership, the problem is very much the same as the problem of controlling armies in the field in time of war. What the general staff does is to plan in advance, and then the plan is executed, and the two great modern innovations have been the very thorough planning in advance and also learning this lesson as it never was learned before, of never interfering with commanders. Scientific management as to planning in advance is very similar to the work of the general staff. In practice does scientific management do the other thing just as well? Isn't there a little too much of a tendency to control everything from the planning room?

As regards the personality of persons in a particular plant, it seems to me that the only thing that you can do about that is to have a working suggesting system and have everyone in the planning room or in the shop realize that any idea he has that he thinks will benefit the work in any way will be considered, and if found to be good will be adopted and he will be given credit for it in some money award or by publishing his name, and so given the full credit for it. It seems to me that nothing is more deadening to individuality than for clerks and foremen and others to feel that they are not given credit for suggestions of that sort. The spirit of the thing is that suggestions for improvement are welcome. Clerks and foremen do see many ways in which things can be improved, and if they do not feel that they will be given a sympathetic hearing it takes the heart out of them and they have no individuality.

Mr. FEISS. The plant is more than a building, a set of machinery, or a routine system or any mechanical device. Its ultimate success is the result of a group of individuals and is an expression of that type. Each plant I have been in has a certain type of management and a certain type of workers. I have seen two plants in the last month under exactly the same methods. They are under scientific management, and still the whole organization of the plants is different. They express something, and the thing that impresses me is the type of worker and how much that type is in its expression similar to the type expressed by the personality of the management. When you get into the bigger organizations, where plants in different localities are under one general management, it seems to me that the point is well taken that it is impossible to perform certain personal functions from a central location.

After all, plant management is a little more than keeping a few machines running and keeping the building open. The building up of organization depends on the personal contact between the managers and their employees. That can not be controlled in any of its expressions by anybody except the men on the job. In fact, in my opinion, that is the ultimate key to success. I believe that there is a limit in management to this expression, and whenever a plant is so large that the individuality of the plant ceases to exist, that personal contact no longer is there, that it is too large to be efficient. It seems to me that is the very reason why a large controlling company does not locate all its manufacturing under one roof. There is a limit to what one man can personally do. Somebody who is on the job is essential to get the utmost efficiency and that expression of individuality which means real management and real success.

Mr. SCOVILLE. I was impressed by what the author of the evening said about recording instruments. I attended a little convention of paper manufacturers at Erie, Pa., which was presided over by a number of extremely methodical Germans. In going through a plant an American that I knew pointed out a paper machine that was running at high speed and said, "Look at that gauge go," and I read several hundred revolutions a minute. I said, "Is that fast?" and he said that it was. I asked, "why don't the others go fast?" And he said, "Mostly because they don't know how. In most paper mills they take a piece of white paper about so long [indicating] and they have some contrivance for sticking it in, and the man has to depend on his eye." A great deal of the success which those paper industries in Erie have obtained is due to the competent and systematic use of their recording instruments. That is an example that many of us will follow, and when they get recording instruments that will do what our speaker told us about they will plot it out.

Mr. VALENTINE. Mr. Feiss struck the note that appeals to me. I felt just one lack in Mr. Wolf's paper. I felt there were a lot of things down the line that his scheme of things could not take into account. I missed the idea of will power all the way through. It seems to me that the danger that those of us who have scientific management most at heart see for scientific management is that it shall not be adequately scientific and that it shall not sufficiently take into account the constant, continuous, and forever-and-ever-amen uncertainties of things that make life both a success and a failure.

Mr. WOLF. I am glad that Mr. Valentine has pointed out that my paper apparently does not appear to put sufficient emphasis upon the human will, for I will try to correct this impression. Perhaps I took too much for granted that in comparing the organization with the human body this feature would be clearly understood. My effort has been to describe how an organization can be built up which will allow the greatest possible latitude for the expression of the individual will.

The manager and all of his assistants must be in close touch with the men and easily accessible to them at all times.

The position taken by Mr. Feiss is very much to the point, namely, that a plant is more than a set of machinery, or a routine system, or a mechanical device.

When we recognize the fact that the form taken by the bricks and mortar, machinery, etc., is, in the first instance, conceived by a human mind, we surely can not fail to realize that ultimate success depends upon encouraging the creative faculty of that same mind. Truly, then, as Mr. Feiss points out, the progress of the plant is, in the last analysis, an expression of a typical group of individuals. I have been simply trying to show how this group can be aided in the expression of their creative powers by giving individuality to the group and at the same time blending every member of the organization into that individuality.

Mr. Mixter missed the point when I indicated the effect of red tape. No man can best express his will if any portion of his anatomy is overdeveloped, as, for instance, the glutton who has allowed his appetite to become his ruling passion. Unless his will asserts itself he will weaken his whole organism by becoming a slave to his stomach. The thing which makes it hard for him to break the habit is the domination of the senses, such as taste and smell, with particular reference to the demands of the digestive tracts.

It is particularly hard for the other bodily functions to get their requisitions past the overdeveloped system of the gastronomic nerves, all of which naturally tends to break up the unity of action.

I agree with Mr. Mixter that there is danger of making scientific management too much like a military organization by overemphasizing the planning department. We must do more than give men a chance to make suggestions to the planning department; we must give them an opportunity to externalize the suggestions of their own minds in the performance of their work. This is something a military organization does not permit to any but the general staff. A military organization is not designed to create, but to destroy, so we can not handle a producing system in the same way.

A central corporation office assumes the military type when it attemps to determine for all plants a "one best way" of accounting or recording manufacturing operations.

Just as individual men differ in temperament, so the individual plants differ, and each one is a law unto itself.

The relationship between the directive principle back of the central corporation and each manufacturing plant should be the same as that between the common law of the land and individual men. This does not in any way prevent the central governing body from adopting standards of great value to the individual units. Except for those regulations, however, whose violations would endanger its corporate unity, it must not attempt to force their adaptation if they are not acceptable in each particular case.

Mr. Shelton, I fear, misunderstood my meaning. I did not say that the "failure of some organizations to put their business on a scientific basis has been caused largely by the fact that they have not used the mechanism of scientific management," but that their failure to use this mechanism for the purpose of perfecting its unity was the reason why they did not make a success.

I agree with him thoroughly that the point of view is of primary importance and the mechanism merely incidental. It helps very materially to clarify the point of view.

In concluding this discussion I feel that I must call attention to Mr. Barth's remark that he does not see how I have time to study anatomy and philosophy. I feel that I can not afford not to take the time. It is of the greatest importance that we understand which way we are going in all of this complicated process of civilization. There must be some purpose back of all of the wonderful creative activity surrounding us and a philosophy of life is necessary to all of us in order that we may get our poise; otherwise we simply add to the noise and confusion. Philosophy is merely a search for the truth underlying our own individual organized life. So must we also build up a philosophy of management, which will give us the principles underlying industrial organization. In this way alone can we properly direct it.

Mr. GALLINGER. And also a paper in the form of an allegory on the stop watch and the lawn mower. I ask that that also be inserted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

THE ALLEGORY OF THE STOP WATCH AND THE LAWN MOWER.

Mr. TAVENNER, or some other Congressman, has at his home a large lawn which is mowed at 30 cents an hour by Thomas, who also takes care of the grass in the yards of various neighbors. One afternoon the Congressman notices that the noise of the mower, which has been clicking away since early morning, gets on his nerves. He goes to a window and watches the laboring Thomas. The pace up and down the lawn looks to be unnecessarily slow, and a closer observation discloses the further fact that the width of the cut, the feed of the machine, so to speak, is pretty narrow.

So the Congressman, unjust and unnatural though it be, pulls out his watch and times Thomas on a trip across the grass. It may or may not be a stop watch. It tells him that the trip consumed 3 minutes 40 seconds. A further timing shows that 20 seconds is consumed at the end of each cut in turning and resting, giving a total of 4 minutes. The Congressman does not feel stingy about it, but he resents the extra hours of irritating noise.

When Thomas goes home he leaves the mower behind him, and the Congressman decides to make a few tests. Had the workman known what was to happen he would have gnashed his teeth with rage, according to some of the labor leaders. However, his employer pushes the mower at what he considers a fair pace the length of the lawn, timing the trip, mind you, and does it in 2 minutes 50 seconds. Then he times the turn and decides that 10 seconds, including a few moments for a deep breath or two, is a proper allowance. His total is 3 minutes. The width of the lawn is 100 feet. Why not a broader swath? he asks himself.

So he gets out another instrument of precision, a yardstick. He finds that the cutting blades of the mower are 18 inches long, while the cut made by Thomas was but 8 inches. Now he is really interested. He experiments and finds that, allowing a suitable lapping over of swaths, a 15-inch cut would be about right.

The Congressman, little realizing that he is making a scientific time study, continues the investigation in his library, with paper and pencil: "Thomas has been taking 150 trips; the 15-inch swath would mean but 80 trips. Thomas takes 4 minutes a trip; he could do it easily in 3 minutes. The broader cut would mean very little additional muscular exertion. His total time is 4 minutes multiplied by 150 equals 600 minutes, or 10 hours. My time would be 3 minutes multiplied by 80 equals 240 minutes, or 4 hours. At 30 cents an hour the saving of 6 hours would be $1.80, to say nothing of the wear and tear on my nerves, while I am preparing my bill to prohibit the use of the stop watch and the payment of premiums for labor in Government shops."

The Congressman knows Thomas to be no intentional laggard, but rather a man who has established his labor in an ambitionless, unthinking rut. He is mowing lawns according to the customs established by his trade. His employer does not wish to discharge him, and so he works out a neat little plan which should be of benefit to both of them, he believes. A day or two later the monthly bill is presented, and one item reads: "Labor mowing lawn, at 30 cents per hour, $3."

When the Congressman pays it he broaches his idea to Thomas:

"See here; your bill is all right, and here is a check for it. Now, you know I hate the clatter of that mower, so I'll tell you what we'll do. I'll pay you the same 30 cents an hour for your time and I'll divide with you the wage for all the time you save from 10 hours. We'll call that the standard time. If you cut the grass in 8 hours—and do it well, of course—you'll get 30 cents an hour for the 8 hours and also 30 cents for one additional hour. If it takes you only 4 hours, you'll get 30 cents an hour for that and the same rate for 3 hours additional, half of the 6 hours you have saved. So you'll receive 7 hours' pay for 4 hours' work, which is $2.10, or 52 cents an hour. Pretty good, isn't it? I'll save 6 hours of noise and the difference between $2.10 and $3. You can put in those saved 6 hours on some other lawn, which at 30 cents an hour will give you $1.80, making your total for the 10 hours $3.90. That's better than $3. Get the idea?"

Thomas thinks it over and figures it out, and finally says:

"It seems a pretty good plan, but supposing the grass is wet or something else is wrong and the job takes me 12 hours. What then?"

"Oh," replies the Congressman, "that would be all right. You would get your 30 cents an hour anyway. I guarantee you the hourly wage."

Inspiration comes to Thomas under the spur of a new ambition. He works out speeds and feeds of his own. The trip time he reduces to 2 minutes; he clips the lapping to 1 inch, and borrows a neighbor's lawn mower having 24-inch blades, giving him a 23-inch swath and reducing the number close to 50. His total time is 2 minutes multiplied by 50, or 1 hour 40 minutes. He receives his wage for 5 hours 50 minutes, which is $1.75, or more than $1 an hour for his actual working time. He feels well contented with himself, but is a little shy about telling the Congressman about it, because he does not know what will be said concerning that 24-inch lawn mower.

The Congressman laughs at him.

"You're all right, my boy. The idea was yours. You're entitled to the results of it. And you've reduced my bill to $1.75. The broader the cut the better. Get a 24-foot mower, if you want to, or a horse mower. We're partners, you see."

Then a neighbor, who is perchance the president of the lawn mowers' union, hears of the arrangement and goes to the householder.

"Look here, Mr. Congressman, you ought to be ashamed of yourself. The idea of holding a watch on an honest American workman! And paying him a premium for his labor! Shame! There ought to be a law on the statute books to protect men like Thomas against such an outrage."

And the Congressman, as any sane lawn owner would, tells his critic to go hence. What right has a neighbor or anyone else to interfere in a strictly private transaction.

"Thomas is pleased; I am pleased; so they can all go hang."

Thomas's viewpoint of industry has been changed. He has found that it pays in dollars and cents to do his best work. He is using his brain to better advantage. He is trying to get his other employers to adopt the same system. And the wise ones, to conclude the allegory, are doing so.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Before the subcommittee on the fortifications appropriation bill we took some testimony as to the working of this plan at the Watertown Arsenal. The testimony was given by Gen. Crozier. I ask unanimous consent to insert that testimony, consisting of the pages I have marked, in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

TIME-STUDY AND PREMIUM-PAYMENT SYSTEM.

Gen. CROZIER. That prohibits using time studies and premium payments, which I think is a very disastrous proviso. We have had a good deal of experience now with time study and premium payments. We have been operating under the time-study and premium-payment system at the Watertown Arsenal, where we have done the most of it, for five years. Under it the output has very considerably increased, the cost of labor has very considerably decreased, and the pay of the workmen has very considerably increased.

Senator TOWNSEND. What do you mean by that?

Gen. CROZIER. The amounts paid employees have very considerably increased.

Senator TOWNSEND. Oh, yes.

Gen. CROZIER. The Watertown Arsenal employs about 600 workmen, and I get from the arsenal a monthly report of the amount of work which is done under the premium system by each individual workman who works under that system, and the increased earnings of these men for the time when they are working on premium-paid jobs averages about 27 per cent of their regular day pay, and has done so for years. The premium earned by the men, if it were spread out over all of them who work on premium jobs at all, would increase their pay in accordance with the recent records on an average by $10 a month.

Senator TOWNSEND. You say the men do not work on premium jobs all the time?

Gen. CROZIER. Because we are not able to make time studies of all the jobs as we would like to; but we make all the premium jobs we can. That 27 per cent applies to the time they work on premium jobs, and if that were spread over all the time when they were working on premium jobs it would amount to 27 per cent; that is, 27 per cent over their regular wages, and the wages are fixed in accordance with the wages of the vicinity for work of like character; and those wages are now ascertained for us by the Department of Labor. We have followed that practice within the last year of asking the Department of Labor to send an agent up there to determine the wages, so as to have an outside agency make the comparison. It has not resulted in any increase of any significance whatever in the wages we have been paying ourselves at the places where we have been practicing this time-study and premium-payment system.

Senator OLIVER. Have you discovered any discontent among the workmen themselves with this system?

Gen. CROZIER. There is evidence of discontent in the form of petitions, although none very recent, sent in, numerously signed, from workmen.

Senator OLIVER. From the men themselves?

Gen. CROZIER. From the men themselves; yes, sir. There is also evidence the other way, in the way of strongly worded letters of protest against the abolition of this time study and premium payment from some of the men themselves. The evidence in the establishment of cheerfulness and cooperation and industry and satisfaction with the method is very strong indeed. The relations there have never been more harmonious; but, then, there is the evidence of these petitions.

Senator TOWNSEND. What do they ask for in these petitions—what is their grievance?

Gen. CROZIER. One of the most common things set forth in the petitions is that one workman will be given a premium job and have a chance to earn a premium, and another workman in the same shop, with claim to be equally meritorious, and perhaps is equally meritorious, will not be given a premium job and will not have a chance to earn a premium. The answer to that is that while that is true to a certain extent, we make it true to the least possible extent, and as the method continues, and as we become more accustomed to it, we are continually increasing the percentage of employment on premium jobs.

Another part of the answer is that that complaint is not a complaint of the premium system, but a complaint of there not being enough of it. The man who does not get a premium job and does not have an opportunity to get a premium still gets the full pay of his grade in comparison with the wages of the vicinity, and a man who gets a premium job gets more. Now, the complaint as to the man who does not get the opportunity to earn the premium is the complaint that this premium system is not carried far enough. We are extending it as much as we can.

Senator TOWNSEND. Would it be possible to make it universal?

Gen. CROZIER. I doubt if it ever reaches that point, although we have a very considerably increased percentage of premium work since we started the system.

Senator JONES. When you start the premium-system work do you start all the men in that kind of work on premium work, or are you able to start only a part of the men?

Gen. CROZIER. All the men doing the same kind of a job we start on premium work. The premium work requires for its inception that what is called a time study shall be made of a job. That is to say, a man comes and watches a good workman employed on a job, with the knowledge of that workman—they both understand what the process is—and times all of his different operations, and makes such suggestions as to where they could be done with better facility, where there could be an improvement made; where he could do something in the way of bringing up another piece, for instance, while the piece in the machine is moving instead of doing that while the machine is stopped, and so forth. The time is then arrived at in which the job could be reasonably expected to be performed without undue fatigue in continuous operation. Then, to that is added, in our practice in the Watertown Arsenal, two-thirds; it is increased by two-thirds, and a man is told that for any time he saves within that time thus increased he will get a premium, which will be so adjusted that if he does the work in this time ascertained to be the time in which it could be reasonably expected to be done the premium will amount to one-third of his pay; and he can do it in still less if he wants to, and he often does.

Senator JONES. When your time experiments show that the work can be done in 60 minutes you fix the reasonable time for doing that at what?

Gen. CROZIER. If we find that the job can be done, say, in 45 minutes, we add to that an allowance based upon experience for fatigue and interruptions, etc., and get it up to, say, 60 minutes, and we often add a greater allowance than that. We will take that 60 minutes as the time in which it could be reasonably performed and we will add to that two-thirds, making 100 minutes, and we will say to the man, "For all the time within 100 minutes that you save you will receive a premium, and that premium will be so adjusted that if you do that job in 60 minutes the premium will amount to one-third of your pay, and you can do it in less time if you want to." It is on that system that these men doing premium jobs earn from 25 to 27 per cent more than their regular wages.

Senator TOWNSEND. What effect does that have upon the hours of labor?

Gen. CROZIER. We work eight hours, in accordance with the statute, irrespective of that system, and we do not exceed it.

Senator UNDERWOOD. You merely get a larger output from the men who do premium jobs?

Gen. CROZIER. Yes; a larger output, and an output which is over twice as large on the average as we got and as we continue to get on the jobs on which the men do not get premiums.

Senator TOWNSEND. Have you caused any study or investigation to be made as to the effect upon the physical condition of the laborer himself of this speeding-up process?

Gen. CROZIER. I have examined that subject carefully and have employed experts who have had a great deal of experience in that, and, based upon our experience, this allowance for fatigue which I mentioned a moment ago is fixed. In addition to that I have in several instances made an analysis of characteristic jobs at the Watertown Arsenal to see whether there is any possibility of the men being overworked. For instance, a job will be done on a machine, in a lathe, we will say. That job is divided into two general parts, called, with reference to the time that they require, the machine time and the handling time. The handling time is the time when a man has to be doing something with his hands; he has to be putting a piece of work in his machine and setting it up to be turning on the feed screw of his cutting tool, or something of that kind. The machine time is the time when the workman stands in as comfortable an attitude as he cares to take and watches the machine work. In the ordinary machine it is rarely that the handling time amounts to as much as half of the total time. So that for more than half his time the man is usually watching his machine do the work, and that has been the case in the instances which I have examined, and I have examined those instances usually with reference to some complaint.

Senator TOWNSEND. You started to tell us, and you did mention the one complaint, that there were not enough premium jobs to go round. What other complaints do the laboring men set up in their petitions or by letter or otherwise?

Gen. CROZIER. Another very common complaint is that the premium jobs or opportunities to earn premiums are given to low-priced men; that the object of this system is to procure work which is practically the work of high-class tradesmen, such as machinists, to be done by a much lower class of men, who can do one thing only, and are therefore included under the term of "machine operators," as distinct from machinists; and that therefore this works a discrimination against the higher class men in favor of the lower class men. At the Watertown Arsenal I have had that specially examined into, and have found that the records show that the proportion of earnings by the high-class men at that arsenal is considerably higher than the proportion of earnings by the low-class man. In other words, the facts are the exact contrary of those alleged in the complaint.

Now, with reference to another feature of that complaint, and this is a feature which is borne down on pretty strongly by the labor unions, namely, that there is a tendency to eliminate the machinist's trade in favor of the machine operator, who does only one thing and it not an all-round man, my answer to that is that in general it has nothing to do with this time-study and premium-payment system, or with the subject of scientific management, of which that system forms a part, but it is an accompaniment of all industry. It has been done since the beginning of industry and is being done now all the time. It receives an illustration in our work in the manufacture of the infantryman's rifle, for instance. In the early days a rifle was manufactured by a gunmaker who made all parts of the rifle himself. It is now manufactured by a large number of men working on machines which are to a very considerable extent automatic, each man making some part, or even doing only some operation on some part. Some of those parts require a hundred operations, and man may do only one of them.

Senator OLIVER. Mr. Ford has carried that pretty nearly to perfection in his establishment, has he not?

Gen. CROZIER. Yes.

Senator OLIVER. Having one man do one thing?

Gen. CROZIER. And another man do another. That accompanies all industry. By means of that, in the rifle industry we are able to make a far better rifle than under the old system that was in vogue years ago and at a far lower price.

Senator OLIVER. And under the old system of manufacture no other rifle would ever be like that rifle.

Gen. CROZIER. And all the parts are now interchangeable. Another illustration, which is a very familiar one, and you all are probably, at least, as familiar with it as I am, is that of the shoemaker. In the olden time a shoemaker used to make the whole shoe. The result of the change in method of making shoes is that they are much cheaper, and the result is that people can wear shoes now who never could think of wearing shoes in the old days. So much for that complaint.

Senator TOWNSEND. Were there any other complaints?

Gen. CROZIER. There was a complaint which has been made on behalf of our workmen by outside workmen, but which has not been made by the workmen themselves, in regard to speeding up and overwork. There is no allegation of overwork by our workmen. No man has ever said or admitted that he was overworked. So that I suspect I should not include that complaint in my answer to your question, since it is not made at our establishments.

Senator JONES. About how many protests have you had against this system from the Watertown Arsenal laborers?

Gen. CROZIER. I think three or four, probably. Some of them are very numerously signed. But, with regard to that, my conviction is that those signatures were procured at the instance of labor organizations outside of the arsenal.

Senator JONES. How many employees have you there?

Gen. CROZIER. About 600.

Senator JONES. About what proportion of them have signed some of these petitions?

Gen. CROZIER. In some cases, over one-half. One workman wrote me in regard to one of these numerously signed petitions that if the signatures were removed of men who had signed the petition under some kind of compulsion, and of men who had signed without knowing what they were signing, there would be nobody left but the framers of the petition. That came from a workman. In that particular case, the method followed of obtaining a good many signatures was to circulate a blank piece of paper, and for the men to sign that, and then the signatures were copied off onto the petition. A large number of the signatures were in the same handwriting on the petition. I do not think that was done with any fraudulent intent. I think that the men who signed all knew that they were signing some form of protest against the system, and the man who did the copying did not realize that that was not the way to present signatures. I do not think there was any intentional bad faith in it.

Senator JONES. Can you, without too much trouble, put in your statement copies of those petitions, leaving off the signatures?

Gen. CROZIER. Yes, sir. I can furnish you with what perhaps will suit you better, a marked copy of a congressional document in which the petitions are printed, and also certain other matters in connection with the petitions, for instance, my answers to them. If there is any way of getting hold of Senate Document No. 800, of the last Congress, I could in a short time allude to several others, I think, and allude to the answers.

Senator JONES. If it has already been printed, that is enough.

Senator OLIVER. I received a petition from the employees of the Frankford Arsenal at Philadelphia, which it seems to me included all of the employees, very nearly, protesting against this proposed legislation.

Gen. CROZIER. Yes.

Senator OLIVER. Do you recollect that?

Gen. CROZIER. Yes.

Senator OLIVER. As the result of that the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate struck it out of the bill, but it was afterwards restored on the floor.

Gen. CROZIER. Yes. Now, with reference to that, Senator, I think I ought to give you the reason why you have not been ever since receiving vigorous protests along the same line since that legislation was put back in the bill on the floor.

Senator OLIVER. Yes.

Gen. CROZIER. The reason is this: The prohibition that was put on the Army bill last year was in very similar language to this, and prohibited the payment of premiums in addition to the regular wages.

Senator JONES. Where is that, here?

Gen. CROZIER. The language is as follows:

"Nor shall any part of the appropriations made in this act be available to pay any premium or bonus or cash reward to any employee in addition to his regular wages."

I secured a ruling from the comptroller that piecework rates were different from premiums, and that prohibitions were not included of the employment of pieceworkers; so that, as the work at the Frankford Arsenal is largely repetition work, and lends itself to piecework, I changed the premiums to piecework. I think I ought to explain to the committee now that in my opinion there is no essential difference between piecework and premium work, in its stimulating effect. There are some differences in the conditions under which the two kinds of payments can be made, but it makes little difference whether the stimulus is in the form of piecework rates or premium-work rates.

The difference comes in this, however, that the premium-work rates have special application to work that is not in the nature of repetition work, of which there will be very few pieces, and perhaps only one, done, whereas the piecework rate applies largely to repetition work where large numbers of the same article are turned out. So that, although the prohibition of premium rates was not very effective at the Frankford Arsenal where there is repetition work, it would be very effective at the Watertown Arsenal, where we make gun carriages and there is very little repetition work.

Senator UNDERWOOD. Is there anything else you want to bring to the attention of the committee, General?

Senator TOWNSEND. Have you figured, General, how much saving per year is made by this premium and time-study business at Watertown?

Gen. CROZIER. I had made up there some careful observations in regard to several jobs of work upon one occasion, which was done under the premium-payment system, after time studies and under the regular day-wage system, and it was found on those jobs that the time occupied under the regular day-wage system averaged 2.7 times that in which the same jobs were done under the premium rate. That would make the labor cost, you see, very considerably greater.

Senator TOWNSEND. I did not understand that matter of 2.7. What was that?

Gen. CROZIER. A man would take, to do a given job of work, 2.7 times as long under a regular day-wage system as he would under the premium-rate system; and that is not a singular experience at all. It is very common. I have had made at the Watertown Arsenal a curve of the rate of production of pig iron, per employee, commencing at about the time we put in the premium system, and as the premium system continued the curve of production regularly rose until the production ended up with over three times the amount it had been to start with, in the same length of time.

Senator UNDERWOOD. Was that in the manufacture of pig iron, you say?

Gen. CROZIER. That was in the manufacture of pig-iron castings produced per employee, not in money value but in pounds produced.

Senator UNDERWOOD. That was making castings, not in the production of pig iron?

Gen. CROZIER. No; it was iron casting in the foundry, and not the production of pig. We do not do that.

Senator JONES. Is there any plant where this prohibition that was put in the military bill has really gone into effect affecting any considerable number of employees?

Gen. CROZIER. No; not to any extent; for the reason that at the Watertown Arsenal, where the prohibition of the payment of premiums would have been serious, the work is practically all done from appropriations made in the fortifications bill, and last year this legislation was not put on the fortifications bill. This is the first time it has appeared on the fortifications bill.

Senator JONES. So that there is no complaint where that prohibition has affected any considerable number of employees?

Gen. CROZIER. No, sir; not so far; but there will be if this remains on this bill.

Senator JONES. Yes; I understand.

Gen. CROZIER. Now, I think I will make another statement with respect to that. With reference to this payment on the piecework system and on the premium system these items of legislation have been attached to these bills, and under them the ruling of the comptroller will protect the disbursing officer; but there is a bill pending with a favorable recommendation before the House of Representatives covering the same subject, in which it is made a criminal offense to do the things which are prohibited here, and if that bill should become a law I should feel very indisposed to direct any officer to make even any payments on the piecework system, because, when it becomes not a matter in which he can not be protected by a ruling of the comptroller, but a matter of criminal prosecution, he would be, I think, treading a very narrow line in distinguishing in that way between piecework rates and premium rates.

Senator JONES. You have not had any petition from anybody who has been affected by that prohibition to have it done away with, have you?

Gen. CROZIER. Yes, sir.

Senator JONES. From where?

Gen. CROZIER. Individual workmen at the Watertown Arsenal have written letters protesting against this legislation.

Senator JONES. Since it was passed?

Gen. CROZIER. Yes; although it did not affect them, because these workmen were at the Watertown Arsenal; but they saw the threat of it, and they were aware of the bill I have just mentioned to you, and they were aware of the intention to submit these items of legislation as amendments to the appropriation bills.

Senator TOWNSEND. Were these labor-union men? Did they belong to the unions or were they not members?

Gen. CROZIER. I think not, Senator, although there is something in regard to which we never inquire.

Senator TOWNSEND. I did not know but what you might know.

Gen. CROZIER. We make no discrimination against the unions.

Senator TOWNSEND. I know you do not, but I was wondering whether any members of the Federation of Labor had felt that this was not a fair thing and had so expressed themselves to you.

Gen. CROZIER. No employees that I know to be members of the Federation of Labor have so expressed themselves to me.

Senator TOWNSEND. Do you know of any influence anywhere that is working against this efficiency plan except organized labor?

Gen. CROZIER. No, sir. There was a man who took an interest in the subject who claims to be an expert along this line, and he criticized some of our methods at the Watertown Arsenal as not properly fulfilling their intent, as not being scientific enough, but he is a very strong advocate of the general method of which this forms a part.

At the request of the Secretary of War the Federal Industrial Relations Commission created by the act of August, 1912, took up this subject of scientific management. They did not make any investigation of what we were doing at the Watertown Arsenal themselves, but they employed a committee composed of Prof. Hoxie, of the University of Chicago, a representative of the employer class, Mr. Valentine, and a representative of the labor class, Mr. Frey, to make an investigation of the Watertown Arsenal, and that committee made a report, which has not been published officially, but the substance of which has been published in a book by Prof. Hoxie, entitled "Scientific Management and Labor." In this book he did not mention the Watertown Arsenal, but he discussed and to a certain extent criticized the methods of what claims to be scientific management. He said that its performances were not up to its claims. The substance of his objections was that it was not scientific enough; that is to say, it did not efficiently, skillfully do what it claimed to do. But the report stated in effect that scientific management had come to stay and that there must be adjustment of its conditions and those of labor.

Senator JONES. Were they unanimous in that conclusion?

Gen. CROZIER. I think they were; yes, sir. I think it was stated that these general conclusions were unanimous. Now, perhaps I am justified in stating one illustrative instance of the kind of criticism which they make, which by some one else was directed particularly at the Watertown Arsenal. Mr. Frey, the labor member of that committee, which I may call the Hoxie committee, presented to the Committee on Labor of the House of Representatives an illustration of what he claimed to be the unscientific nature of this time study to determine the reasonable time in which a piece of work can be done at the Watertown Arsenal. The illustration he presented was a chart showing the efficiency of a certain workman over a certain period of time. The efficiency was determined by the ratio of the time which he took to perform his assigned job of work to the reasonable time which the time study showed it ought to take. If he had done it in the exact reasonable time, his efficiency would be 100 per cent. If he did it in a longer time, his efficiency would be less, and if he did it in a shorter time his efficiency would be greater.

In the chart that man's efficiency varied from 20 per cent to over 200 per cent—that is, his efficiency went up and down very violently, you might say—and Mr. Frey from that, assuming that the man was constant and worked just about as well at one time as at another, concluded that these jobs were unscientifically set and that sometimes performance was possible and sometimes impossible within the time which had been given as the reasonable time. The answer to that is that upon consulting the records it was found that with reference to this man, whom we were able to identify, that when performing the identical job at different times his efficiency varied in the most irregular way—that is to say, it varied by as much as 100 per cent—which completely refutes the supposition that the man was constant and that the irregularities must therefore have been due to unscientific time setting. The curve went up and down in very much the same way, although the fluctuations were not so great, but they were very great. The man was temperamental, and when he thought that he had a good job and he could make a good thing he hit it pretty hard, and when he did not he behaved in the reverse manner.

In addition to that, taking the evidence presented by Mr. Frey himself, the average efficiency of the man for this considerable period of time which his records cover averaged 120 per cent. That is to say, on the average he was able to do the work in less time than the reasonable time we said it could be done in, by the amount which gave him an average efficiency of 120 per cent instead of 100 per cent, and consequently that man, during the time which Mr. Frey's estimate covered, earned an average of 50 per cent over and above his regular day's pay.

Senator JONES. You do not know whether this particular man was opposed to the system or not?

Gen. CROZIER. Yes; he was opposed to the system.

Senator JONES. He was opposed to it?

Gen. CROZIER. Yes; but the conclusion is very difficult to avoid that he is opposed to it on paper only. He is an official of a labor union—that he has brought to our attention himself—and he is a good workman, and he earns these high premiums, and he continues to earn them, and has been doing it for years, and there is no evidence that he does not like it, except that he says he does not like it. He earns these premiums, and takes them cheerfully—seems to like to get them.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. BRYAN. I move that the Senate request a conference of the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the Vice President appointed Mr. BRYAN, Mr. LEA of Tennessee, and Mr. JONES conferees on the part of the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10484) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MOON, Mr. FINLEY, and Mr. STEVENSON, managers at the conference on the part of the House.

RURAL CREDITS (S. DOC. NO. 480).

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask unanimous consent to submit the supplemental report of the United States Commission on Rural Credits and that it be printed in the RECORD and also be made a document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. There was so much confusion in the Chamber I could not hear what the request was.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is the supplemental report of the United States Commission on Rural Credits, and the last report. It consists of only a couple of pages. I ask to have it printed in the RECORD and also as a document.

Mr. SMOOT. Would it not be better for the Senator to confine it to one, either the RECORD or as a document?

Mr. FLETCHER. I desire to have it appear in the RECORD and it ought to be printed as a document also.

Mr. SMOOT. It has been the universal practice, I will say to the Senate, to print either in the RECORD or as a document, but not in both.

Mr. FLETCHER. But this is the report of the Commission on Rural Credits, and I think it is entitled also to be printed in the RECORD. It will not take half a page of the RECORD.

Mr. SMOOT. It is only establishing a precedent for what we have undertaken to prevent. It has been the rule to print either one way or the other.

Mr. FLETCHER. That applies to ordinary documents but this is the final report of the United States Commission on Rural Credits, including its work up to this time, and I think it ought to be printed in the RECORD for general information and then it ought to be printed as a document.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think it should be done.

Mr. STONE. What is the report?

Mr. FLETCHER. It is the report on rural credits.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. STONE. I do not object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

The report referred to is as follows:

SUPPLEMENTARY REPORT UNITED STATES COMMISSION ON RURAL CREDITS.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 30, 1916.

To the Congress:

The act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916 (H. R. 20415, Public No. 293, 63d Cong.), authorized the United States Commission on Rural Credits to continue its work for another year and made available such part of the unexpended balances of the original appropriation provided for it as might be necessary for its further work. Complying with this provision of Congress the members of this commission have continued their investigation of the needs of the farmers of the United States, and after a most careful consideration of the subject present herewith a brief report to supplement its original recommendation (S. Doc. 380, pts. 1, 2, and 3).

The commission, in cooperation with the American commission, after a most extended study attempted to clearly separate the credit needs of the farmers of this country into two main classes: (1) Long-term land-mortgage credit, and (2) short-term personal credit. It was the judgment of both commissions, as shown in earlier reports, that it was advisable to first take up the question of long-term land-mortgage credit. It is gratifying to note that since the commission made its original report and prepared a bill to provide for a system of long-term land-mortgage credit, nearly, if not quite all, public consideration has approved of the general action in separating these two types of credit and in urging immediate consideration of land credit.

The commission also notes with pleasure that not only have practically all bills introduced into Congress dealt with long-term mortgage credit, but, further, that nearly all have followed the general recommendations outlined by the commission, varying only in detail of organization or method of procedure. The commission looks with great satisfaction upon the fact that land-mortgage legislation has finally been enacted, which we sincerely believe will be successful and effective.

We are satisfied from several years' investigation, however, that this legislation will not solve the entire rural-credits problem. We recognize that there are in the United States some 2,360,000 tenant farmers. Many of these will inherit farms. Others who are industrious and frugal will be able to take advantage of the system and purchase farms, but many others who are equally worthy will be unable to do so. Steps should be taken to provide a special system which will make it possible for all worthy tenants and efficient farm laborers to become occupying farm owners.

Turning now to another phase of this question, it is our judgment that much remains to be done to improve the short-term personal credit facilities for farmers, and it would seem wise to continue the investigation and study which is being carried on at the present time until additional facilities are provided, which will more nearly meet the legitimate needs of farmers for personal credit.

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. GORE. I ask that the Senate proceed with the consideration of House bill 12717, the Agricultural appropriation bill.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12717) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will proceed to read the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, under the subhead "Office of the Secretary," on page 4, line 23, after the words "farm practice," to strike out "$220,000," and insert "$230,000," so as to make the clause read:

To investigate and encourage the adoption of improved methods of farm management and farm practice, $230,000.

Mr. GORE. Yesterday the formal reading of the bill was dispensed with, and I desire to have it read for action on the amendments of the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is the way it is being read. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 24, to strike out:

For studying methods of clearing off "logged-off" lands with a view to their utilization for agricultural and dairying purposes; for their irrigation; for testing powders in clearing them; and for utilization of by-products arising in the process of clearing; in cooperation with the States, companies, or individuals, or otherwise, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES subsequently said: Mr. President, I have been temporarily engaged in some other matters, and I wish now to inquire why the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry reported an amendment to strike out the provision on page 4, beginning in line 25 and ending in line 4 on page 5, in reference to studying the methods of clearing off "logged-off" lands, and so forth, which amendment has been agreed to?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I will say that we had a report from the department on that subject, and it was evident from the report that all existing methods of logging off land had been tested out by the department. That report stated that there might be devices developed in the future which it might be necessary or advisable to try out; but the members of the committee took the view that the process of getting logs and stumps off land was a very ordinary one. For that reason they concluded to drop the provision from the bill. It has been contained in the Agricultural appropriation bills for a number of years, experimentations have been carried on for some time, and we felt that in the light of the report, up to date at least, the question had been pretty thoroughly exhausted.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, the Senator from Oklahoma says that the committee felt that very ordinary devices were suitable for this purpose. Does the Senator take into consideration the character of the timber, the stumps, and so forth, that have to be taken off the land in our western country?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. JONES. Some of the stumps are from 6 to 8 and 10 feet in diameter, and sometimes even greater.

Mr. GORE. They are much larger than that in many cases; but I have the report to which I have referred, and if the Senator so desires I will ask that the amendment be passed over for the present.

Mr. JONES. The amendment has been adopted by the Senate, and I will not ask for its reconsideration until I have had an opportunity to look over the report to which the Senator refers. I may not then feel justified in moving a reconsideration, although I think it is a very great mistake to cut out this provision, for the matter of logging off the land is a very serious one, especially on the Pacific coast. I shall not, however, at this time ask for a reconsideration of the vote by which the amendment was agreed to, and I will try to get hold of the report on the subject from the department.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 5, line 5, after the words "general expenses," to strike out "$225,000" and insert "$230,000," so as to make the clause read:

In all, for general expenses, $230,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 6, after the words "Secretary of Agriculture," to strike out "$688,160" and insert "$693,160," so as to make the clause read:

Total for Office of the Secretary of Agriculture, $693,160.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Weather Bureau," on page 9, after line 1, to insert:

For the purchase of a site and the erection of a building at Cape Henry, Va., to be constructed under the supervision of the Chief of the Weather Bureau, plans and specifications to be approved by the Secretary of Agriculture, and for all necessary labor, materials, and expenses connected with this work, $22,500.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, if it is not out of order to inquire about the increases in appropriations in this bill, I should like to inquire if it is necessary at this particular time to have the Weather Bureau building in Virginia and the other one in Wyoming? I was not present in committee when this matter was discussed, and I should like to know the reason for the great emergency at this time for making appropriations for these purposes.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, if the Senator from Iowa addressed a question to me, I did not understand him.

Mr. KENYON. I asked the chairman of the committee with relation to the pending amendment, and also the one following it, which provides for the same thing at Cheyenne, Wyo. Why is it necessary at this time to make these appropriations?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I will say with reference to the weather station at Cape Henry that it is regarded as one of the most important stations in the entire country. It is situated near the entrance to the Chesapeake Bay, and the present site of the weather bureau is situated on land which will be included within the new fortifications. On that account it is necessary to provide other quarters. It could not be operated within the immediate vicinity of the large guns, for the machinery and the apparatus are so delicate that the guns would interfere with their functions.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 9, after line 7, to insert:

For the purchase of a site at Cheyenne, Wyo., and the erection thereon of a building for use as a Weather Bureau observatory, to be constructed under the supervision of the Chief of the Weather Bureau, plans and specifications to be approved by the Secretary of Agriculture, and for all necessary labor, materials, and expenses connected with the work, $20,000.

Mr. GORE. With reference to this amendment, I will refer the Senator from Iowa to the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN].

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the weather station at Cheyenne, Wyo., is one of the oldest in the United States. It was established there by the War Department many years before the Agricultural Department obtained jurisdiction of Weather Bureau matters, and it is now a large and important station. They have no Federal building for the purpose and therefore must pay rent. This appropriation does not add anything to the expenses of the office itself, except to give it a habitation in which to house its property.

Mr. KENYON. I should like the Senator from Wyoming to inform us how they are accommodated at this time? Is there not a Federal building there in which they are stationed?

Mr. WARREN. While there is a Federal building in Cheyenne, it is not sufficiently large for the purpose of accommodating this bureau, and has not been able to provide for it. We have waited many years, hoping that provision might be made in the Federal building for this bureau by finishing up the third story and rearrangement of offices, but the United States business is large at that point and constantly growing larger, so that they are not able to take care of all of the other Federal offices, to say nothing of the Weather Bureau. Therefore it has always been necessary to provide for this bureau outside of the Federal building; and that is the case at present.

Mr. KENYON. I am not going to make any objection to the amendment, Mr. President. I know it is practically useless to object to anything in any of these bills.

Mr. WARREN. This appropriation is a very modest one.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment is agreed to, without objection.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 9, line 15, after the words "general expenses," to strike out "$1,388,700" and insert "$1,431,200," so as to make the clause read:

In all, for general expenses, $1,431,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 16, after the words "Weather Bureau," to strike out "$1,724,760" and insert "$1,767,260," so as to make the clause read:

Total for Weather Bureau, $1,767,260.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Animal Industry," on page 12, line 20, after the word "cattle," to insert "and malta fever in goats," so as to make the clause read:

For inspection and quarantine work, including all necessary expenses for the eradication of scabbies in sheep and cattle and malta fever in goats, the inspection of southern cattle, the supervision of the transportation of live stock and the inspection of vessels, the execution of the 28-hour law, the inspection and quarantine of imported animals, including the establishment and maintenance of quarantine stations and the alteration of buildings thereon; the inspection work relative to the existence of contagious diseases, and the tuberculin and mallein testing of animals, $532,780.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 5, after the words "cattle ticks," to strike out "$632,400" and insert "$782,400," so as to read:

For all necessary expenses for the eradication of southern cattle ticks, $782,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 6, after the words "live stock," to insert "and dairy," so as to read:

For all necessary expenses for the eradication of southern cattle ticks, $782,400, of which sum $50,000 may be used for live stock and dairy demonstration work in cooperation with the States Relations Service, in areas freed of ticks, and of this amount no part shall be used in the purchase of animals for breeding purposes.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee the object of the amendment inserting the words "and dairy" before the word "demonstration." What is the purpose of those words? What kind of demonstration work do they calculate on doing?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I will state to the Senator that those words were added upon the recommendation of the department.

Mr. JONES. I understand that, but what does the department want to do?

Mr. GORE. I will ask to have the text read; I do not quite catch the connection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the clause as proposed to be amended.

The Secretary read as follows:

For all necessary expenses for the eradication of southern cattle ticks, $782,400, of which sum $50,000 may be used for live stock and dairy demonstration work, in cooperation with the States Relations Service, in areas freed of ticks, and of this amount no part shall be used in the purchase of animals for breeding purposes.

Mr. GORE. I have a communication from the department on the subject, which I will ask to have read by the Secretary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

BUREAU OF ANIMAL INDUSTRY.

Page 12, line 18, after the words "live stock," insert "and dairy."

Note: The solicitor suggests that this change be made in order to clearly authorize the department to conduct demonstration work in tick-freed areas in connection with creameries and cheese factories. The department believes that this work is essential to the most rapid development of dairying in the region which has been freed from ticks. The establishment of creameries and cheese factories in this region will make possible the profitable expansion of the dairy-cattle industry to an extent which otherwise would be impossible.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I can not see where there is any indication in that statement as to the character of work which they propose to do. Do they propose to demonstrate how to milk cows and how to churn butter?

Mr. GORE. I hardly think it would extend to such elementary demonstration as that.

Mr. JONES. That is what I thought.

Mr. GORE. The bill in another part contains a specific appropriation in connection with the cheese industry and cheese factories; but in the southern territory rescued from the fever tick so much attention has not been devoted to the dairy industry as in other sections, and I presume it is for the purpose of introducing the industry in that section.

Mr. JONES. Is there not another appropriation in the bill somewhere else for dairy experiments and demonstration work?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir; under other circumstances.

Mr. JONES. Why is it necessary, then, to make part of the appropriation for the eradication of southern cattle ticks available for this purpose? Why not use the funds provided elsewhere in the bill for this purpose in the southern section of the country?

Mr. GORE. As I remember, the other appropriations are to be expended in specific directions, which might not be applicable to the southern section, and sufficient money would not be available under these provisions for the extension of the dairy industry in the rescued territory.

Mr. JONES. If sufficient money would not be available under those appropriations, I should think it would be better to increase those appropriations than to take some of this money which has been used for a long time for the eradication of southern cattle ticks.

Mr. GORE. I will say that this does not carry an additional appropriation for the purpose. It merely provides for the extension of the work and the dissemination of information upon this subject. The appropriation is not increased at all, but merely the purposes to which the appropriation may be applied are increased.

Mr. JONES. I understand, Mr. President, that it does not increase the appropriation, but it puts it in such shape that the estimate that will come in for the next appropriation will be larger than it would otherwise be, covering the work authorized in this paragraph. I doubt the wisdom of putting that amendment in the bill, but I shall not say anything further concerning it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 13, line 18, after the words "Bureau of Animal Industry," to insert:

And provided further, That of the total amount appropriated by this paragraph $35,000 shall be immediately available.

Mr. GORE. I suggest that that proviso be omitted.

Mr. SMOOT. I was going to suggest that it be not agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 13, line 24, after the word "markets," to strike out "$272,470" and insert "$277,470," so as to make the clause read:

For all necessary expenses for investigations and experiments in dairy industry, cooperative investigations of the dairy industry in the various States, inspection of renovated-butter factories and markets, $277,470.

Mr. BRADY. I ask that that clause be passed over. There is an amendment which I desire to propose to it, and so I ask that it be passed over for the present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 14, line 8, after the words "necessary expenses," to strike out "$208,320" and insert "$214,320," so as to read:

For all necessary expenses for investigations and experiments in animal husbandry; for experiments in animal feeding and breeding, including cooperation with the State agricultural experiment stations, including repairs and additions to and erection of buildings absolutely necessary to carry on the experiments, including the employment of labor in the city of Washington and elsewhere, rent outside of the District of Columbia, and all other necessary expenses, $214,320: Provided, That of the sum thus appropriated $25,000 may be used for experiments in the breeding and maintenance of horses for military purposes.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the appropriation of $214,320 in line 9, page 14. I have an amendment prepared, which I intend to offer at the proper time, appropriating $200,000 to assist in experiments in the breeding of horses. In the following paragraph there is an appropriation of $25,000 for experiments in the breeding and maintenance of horses for military purposes. What I desire to do is to subtract that $25,000 from the $214,320, and then, after that is done, to add another paragraph providing for an appropriation of $200,000. Therefore, I ask to have that amendment passed over for the present.

Mr. GORE. Then the amendment may be passed over for the present to enable the Senator to present his amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over.

The SECRETARY. Continuing the reading on page 14, line 9——

Mr. SMOOT. Let all of that paragraph go over down to the end of line 16.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the paragraph will be passed over.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I should like to inquire why lines 14, 15, and 16, on page 14, have been stricken out?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That amendment has been passed over temporarily. The whole paragraph has been passed over.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The only trouble is that if it is passed over I should like to inquire when it is to be taken up again. I prefer to say what I have to say at this particular time on that amendment.

Mr. GORE. I will say that the reason the Senate committee struck it out was that they felt that the ostrich industry was not one that could be extended over the country generally, or that promised very substantial returns.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I know; but have they investigated at all about it? Perhaps there was no man on the committee who knew anything about the ostrich industry of the country. The House committee evidently did. I will ask the chairman of the committee if there was any reason in the world for taking this action except that the committee did not know about ostriches?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I think the committee had in a general way some information upon the subject, and they certainly had no evidence presented to them that would sustain the conclusion that it was a promising industry, or one that made any very golden promise.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I know; but this being in the House bill, and coming over to the Senate, I should not think the Senate committee would strike out a provision unless some reason was given to them for striking it out. The investigation was made before a committee that had original jurisdiction of appropriation bills.

Mr. GORE. Undoubtedly the action of the House ought to have considerable weight with the Senate committee and with the Senate itself. However, it is not conclusive; and I think the committee were justified in the conclusion that this industry is not one that can be extended generally over this country or that can be made of general interest to the public; and as this is a charge upon the public, it ought to be of a general character.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Does the Senator know, or did any member of his committee suggest at any time, how much the Government was already expending in experiments on the improvement of the ostrich feather, and how many ostriches there were in my State alone?

Mr. GORE. I know there are a number of ostriches in the Senator's State, and also in California.

Mr. OVERMAN. How many? Let us have the facts.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I wish the chairman of the committee, without taking the time that would be necessary to discuss it, would permit that amendment to be voted down, and leave it as it was in the House bill. I assure him that it is as essential as any one thing in the bill. I could read matter that I have here, and give you the data of the whole business; but what is the use of consuming the Senate's time with it?

Mr. GORE. I prefer to let the matter go to conference, and then I shall be glad to take it up with the Senator. It is only a small amount, and if the Senator has any reasons to present to the committee we shall be glad to hear him.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The only reason I am pressing it now, if the Senator please, is because I was called away from the Senate, and I have waited for the last hour or two to get to this little matter, thinking that upon the mere suggestion of it, inasmuch as the Senate committee had no data at all on which it acted, this item would be put back. No objection having been made, no proof taken, and no facts ascertained, I thought probably the committee would not insist upon omitting this item of $34,500 for investigations, including the feeding and breeding of ostriches, and investigations and experiments in the study of the ostrich industry. The Government itself has already spent quite a large amount of money along this line, and imported 30 ostriches only last year, as I understand, purely for the purpose of crossing the breed, and ascertaining the means of obtaining the best ostrich feather that can be grown.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, if I may interrupt the Senator, I will call his attention to the fact that the House bill provided that of the total appropriation, the sum of $37,000 "may be used for experiments in poultry feeding and breeding, including the feeding and breeding of ostriches and investigations and experiments in the study of the ostrich industry." The Senate committee strikes out the clause with reference to the feeding and breeding of ostriches, and leaves the appropriation at $34,500. I take it, therefore, that the amount of the appropriation required for this industry would be only $2,500.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Now, I ask the Senator, for what reason did they strike it out? Was there any proof given before the committee that they did not need it?

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator can not quarrel with me. I am with him on the proposition. I am calling his attention to the fact that only an expenditure of $2,500 is proposed for this purpose.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I thank the Senator for the suggestion of a fact which I had not noticed, that they reduce it from $37,000 to $34,500. They leave the turkey and the hen, which are quite familiar objects in the front yards of most of the districts of this country; but when it comes to the ostrich, about which they know nothing, which is worth five times as much as the poultry of the State that it is in, they provide that it shall be absolutely excluded, and that a sensible investigation at so small a sum as $2,500 shall be cut off, in the very face of the fact that in 1915 the department purchased ostriches of different breeds for the purpose of crossing, to determine if it were possible to improve the quality of the feathers now being produced. The only difference between ours and the best ostrich feathers grown, for that matter, has been the result of crossing the breeds. That is the thing they are now investigating; and with hundreds of the birds, some worth $250 or $300 or $400 apiece, this $2,500 for continuing the investigation is struck out without any reason on earth.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, can the Senator from Arizona tell us anything about the ostriches of Arizona as a reason why we should pay something toward them? Instead of calling upon the committee to explain why we did not appropriate the money, we would like to hear from the Senator why we should.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Will the Senator tell me why anything should be appropriated for hens and chickens?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Why?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is one of the greatest industries in the United States; and the study of the culture of chickens and their diseases has been of inestimable value to the people of this country.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. If that work has been of inestimable value to the people of the country deriving a revenue from it, why does the committee say that ostriches that bring in money, cattle that bring in money, or other products that yield something for the men who raise them shall not receive any assistance?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator does not understand me. What I wanted him to do was to tell us what ostriches there were—what the industry amounted to.

Mr. KENYON. Where do they live?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. So far as the committee was informed, there was a little drove down here, a sort of an amusement drove, near Jacksonville, that excursionists in Jacksonville go out to see—an utterly impractical endeavor, except for the entertainment of visitors; not a practical proposition that involved the general welfare. If the Senator will point out that the ostrich industry is one worthy of improvement and one worthy of culture, I will vote to set aside the action of the committee; but I would not vote for it on account of this little amusement drove down in Florida.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I am not at all surprised at the action of the committee after the ignorance of the question displayed by the very learned and competent Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is not what I am asking the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I know what the Senator is asking me, and I am telling him. No wonder the Senator from Georgia has never heard of an ostrich excepting in Africa and the few that were somewhere in Florida! Therefore he would strike out an appropriation, because he says it is going to be a mere experiment on a little matter in Florida.

I do not think the House committee would have been subject to that sort of an accusation any more than the committee of the Senate. The only difference was that they knew what they were talking about, and the Senate committee did not stop to inquire, as they usually do. I am not reflecting upon them, but rather commending their anxiety to see that the appropriations are cut to the lowest possible figure; but I do protest against their providing for chickens and ducks and geese and all the poultry of all the people that are represented here and discriminating against this important industry. The largest herd of ostriches, if you can so denominate them, in the world is in Arizona to-day.

Mr. OVERMAN. How many are there?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I could not say, for I want to be perfectly accurate; but it goes up into the hundreds.

Mr. ASHURST. Into the thousands.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Probably into the thousands. Last year $5,000,000 worth of ostrich feathers were imported into this country. I have the data here in regard to the whole business; but I get so tired of hearing discussion on the floor of the Senate that I do not want to go into the matter in detail.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator is not hearing discussion on the floor of the Senate now. He is contributing it, and we want the benefit of his information. I admit my lack of knowledge, and I am asking the Senator to give me the facts.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me a moment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I do.

Mr. LODGE. I believe I am right in saying that the ostrich industry in southern California and Arizona and th t region has been established for many years.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. A great number of years.

Mr. LODGE. Because I recall, in the second McKinley campaign, that an enthusiastic Democratic orator was in southern California, and at a meeting there he was pointing out the infamies of the tariff, and, among other things, he said, "Now, look at the duty on ostrich feathers; look at the duty on the feathers your wives and daughters wear!" The chairman caught him by the coat and said, "Don't talk about ostrich feathers here; we have ostrich farms in this town." [Laughter.]

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Plenty of them.

Mr. LODGE. Exactly. It is an old industry and a good one.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I want to say that the industry amounts to a very great deal. The investigations here suggested, in my opinion, are absolutely essential to the welfare of the industry, and they can be very cheaply carried on.

I shall proceed further, if necessary, to have these words restored in this bill, and the amount likewise restored.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will suggest to the Senator that perhaps, if this were stricken out of the bill, the Department of Agriculture would still expend money for the purpose of experimenting in the ostrich business; because I find that in the case of the appropriation we made for the eradication of the foot-and-mouth disease in 1915 within two weeks the Secretary approved expenditures, first, of $271.81 and, a few days later, of $303.77 to inspect the ostrich-breeding work being conducted in Arizona and to study the ostrich, poultry, and turkey industries at other points enumerated.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Using the money out of what appropriation?

Mr. SMOOT. He took it from the $2,000,000 appropriated for the eradication of the foot-and-mouth disease in 1915.

Mr. OVERMAN. By what authority?

Mr. SMOOT. No authority. What I was thinking was——

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The very thing that the Senator suggests shows the necessity of my keeping my appropriation.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator had waited a minute, I was going to call attention to that fact, because I would very much prefer to make a direct appropriation for this purpose than to have the Secretary of Agriculture send Mr. Harry M. Lehmann and others to Arizona for this purpose and take it out of a fund that was appropriated directly for some other purpose.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, of course, I could not say without having investigated the record, but I will ask the Senator from Utah whether he knows if this might not be the explanation of that circumstance: When the foot-and-mouth disease broke out in the country, the Secretary had to draw upon lump funds in order to meet the emergency, there having been no emergency appropriation for that purpose. We then made an appropriation for the reimbursement of those funds. Might it not be that out of those reimbursements the expenditures to which the Senator has referred were made? I do not know myself.

Mr. SMOOT. No, Mr. President; because of the fact that the expenditures were made from June 11 to June 30, 1915, after the appropriation of $2,000,000 was made for the foot-and-mouth disease, and I will say to the Senator that this is only one item. I can call the Senator's attention here, for instance, to an expenditure for investigating the system used by the city of New York in grading milk, taken out of that fund, and another expenditure for the purpose of attending a meeting of the Southern Sanitary Association, held at Asheville, and delivering addresses on subjects pertaining to the dairy.

Mr. GORE. The Senator knows that out of the appropriation to which he refers, the lump funds were to be reimbursed. I assume that is the one.

Mr. SMOOT. No, Mr. President; the Senator is mistaken in even thinking for a moment that that is the way it was done. When the appropriation was made, Congress required the Secretary of Agriculture to make a detailed report upon the expenditure of the $2,000,000.

I have before me now that report, found in House Document No. 113, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, showing the expenditures for travel from Washington to points outside of the District of Columbia, and the charges made to that fund. Here is a detailed statement as to the men that were sent, the title of the work, the destinations to which they went, the kind of work and business they were sent for, the amount appropriated, the total expense, and the appropriation to which it was charged.

Mr. GORE. I will say, Mr. President, that it is my purpose to have the unobjected amendments considered this afternoon; and if there is to be further discussion on this subject I will ask that the pending amendment be passed over. If the Senator from Arizona has to leave the city, of course we will proceed with it.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I was suggesting to the Senator that this is such a small amendment as compared with some of the appropriations that it strikes me it will be a good plan to settle this, and when I am done with it I am through with this bill. I will tell the Senator that there are a great many items in the bill that I should like to see go out, and many omitted from it that I should like to see put in.

Mr. GORE. In view of that remark, after one observation, I do not know but that I will consent to have the amendment go back in the bill. I think it will be public economy.

I merely wish to observe that the poultry industry of the United States, as everybody knows, is the second largest industry connected with the American farm. The output annually is worth a billion dollars. Corn is the only other product which exceeds it in value. The poultry output exceeds cotton in value, and it exceeds wheat in value. That is the justification for making generous appropriations for the poultry industry.

I have visited the ostrich farm in California to which the Senator from Massachusetts alludes. I did not know that cutting out this $2,500 item would interfere with the carrying on of that industry. We supposed that the enterprise and intelligence of the people of California and of Arizona had placed it upon a permanent footing, so that paternalism might be withdrawn from this infant industry; and perhaps it was in the mind of some Senator that if we could dispense with these fine feathers it might afford a little protection to the feathers of the American eagle in the way of preparedness.

I believe I will consent to have this go back.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On line 12, page 14, after the word "appropriated," the committee proposes to strike out "$37,000" and insert "$34,500," and in line 13, after the word "breeding," to strike out "including the feeding and breeding of ostriches and investigations and experiments in the study of the ostrich industry."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I wish to ask the chairman of the committee what use is made of this money appropriated for poultry feeding and breeding? I recognize the importance of the poultry industry and that it is carried on all over the country. It seems to me that that is one evidence, probably, of the lack of the need of further assistance in the way of paternalism, as the Senator calls it. Now, what is done by the department with this money?

Mr. GORE. The Senator, of course, is aware that the industry is widely distributed. He also knows that in many sections and in many localities they have not introduced the finer breeds of poultry. Nobody knows better than the Senator from Washington that there is no better investment than fine blood in connection with chickens and other live stock. Poultry clubs are organized all over the country; the boys and girls are induced to organized poultry clubs, and I think efforts are made to stimulate the introduction and the improvement of breeds throughout the country.

Mr. JONES. How is it done?

Mr. GORE. Of course I could not describe the minutiæ of the operation.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me for just a moment, I will say to him that at these experimental stations they experiment in mixing the food to ascertain the combination that brings the best results—what produces the laying of eggs, making fat, and all that—just as they experiment in blending the varieties to improve the breed of the fowl. It is a question of judicious selection, of blending the different strains in order to develop the chickens demanded for special purposes. There are certain strains of chickens that are desired for their egg-laying qualities, others for the table, and it will be remembered that the endless variety of strains of chickens are the result, largely, of development brought about by judicious selection and breeding.

I want to say to the Senator, when you consider the magnitude of this enterprise, taking it as a whole, if the appropriation were $100,000 it would not be excessive. There is no money this Government will invest that will bring a larger return to all the American people than the money prudently invested in this enterprise.

Mr. JONES. I thought if this work was needed very much, it is an extremely small appropriation.

Mr. VARDAMAN. If the Senator will pardon me, every appropriation connected with the Agricultural Department is small. The entire department receives little more than the cost of one great battleship, when we all realize that that department is doing more to add to the material welfare, the comfort, and the happiness of the producing American people than any other department of the National Government.

Mr. JONES. I wish to ask the Senator where the Government is raising poultry and developing different breeds?

Mr. VARDAMAN. It is done at the agricultural colleges and at the agricultural experiment stations.

Mr. JONES. State agricultural colleges?

Mr. VARDAMAN. Yes; and those under the control of the Government. There is a department in every agricultural college in the United States where this work is going on.

Mr. JONES. Is this money to be used there?

Mr. VARDAMAN. It is not to be used there, but it is to be used by the department, I suppose, in Washington.

Mr. JONES. That is what I was trying to find out, whether the money is to be used for the particular purpose for which it is appropriated. I was just trying to get information. I do not think there is anything wrong about it.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The representatives of the Agricultural Department here in Washington go all over the United States, as special agents or experts, teaching the people the truth about this great question.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I can answer the Senator's question very easily. It is used in connection with the experiment stations in different States and in cooperation with them in such a way as under the discretion of the department here it is deemed advisable to use it, the total amount being $214,000. It all falls under the same class and it is used in connection with the experiment stations.

Mr. JONES. I merely want to say that I have no objection to the appropriation, and I think there is really more reason for continuing this ostrich appropriation than there might be for the poultry appropriation, because it is virtually a new industry. I think the possibilities of its development are very great, and the chairman of the committee has acted wisely in allowing the appropriation to go back.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 22, after the word "products," to strike out "$88,020" and insert "$138,020: Provided, That of said sum $50,000 may be used for researches concerning the cause, modes of spread, and methods of treatment and prevention of the disease of contagious abortion of animals," so as to make the clause read:

For all necessary expenses for scientific investigations in diseases of animals, including the maintenance and improvement of the bureau experiment station at Bethesda, Md., and the necessary alterations of buildings thereon, and the necessary expenses for investigations of tuberculin, serums, antitoxins, and analogous products, $138,020: Provided, That of said sum $50,000 may be used for researches concerning the cause, modes of spread, and methods of treatment and prevention of the disease of contagious abortion of animals.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 21, after the word "disease," to insert "And provided further also, That such amount as the Secretary of Agriculture may deem necessary and proper may be expended in testing serums, vaccines, and other preventives of hog cholera," so as to make the clause read:

For investigating the disease of hog cholera, and for its control or eradication by such means as may be necessary, including demonstrations, the formation of organizations, and other methods, either independently or in cooperation with farmers, associations, State or county authorities, $360,000: Provided, That of said sum $175,000 shall be available for expenditures in carrying out the provisions of the act approved March 4, 1913, regulating the preparation, sale, barter, exchange, or shipment of any virus, serum, toxin, or analogous product manufactured in the United States and the importation of such products intended for use in the treatment of domestic animals: And provided further, That of said sum $35,000 shall be available for researches concerning the cause, modes of spread, and methods of treatment and prevention of this disease: And provided further also, That such amount as the Secretary of Agriculture may deem necessary and proper may be expended in testing serums, vaccines, and other preventives of hog cholera.

Mr. JONES. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee why it is necessary to put that amendment in? It seems to me it is covered by the language in the preceding part of the paragraph.

Mr. GORE. I will state the reason for it. There has been a recent distinguished scientist in Louisiana who claims to have devised a vaccine that is a specific for hog cholera, and there did not seem to be money available under the law to conduct the experiments. An effort was made by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], and he can explain it fully if it is desired. In conducting the experiments the Government was handicapped and the experiment was handicapped by a lack of funds and cooperation between the scientist and the Government. If the new vaccine accomplishes what is claimed in its behalf it meets a most serious emergency in this country.

Mr. JONES. Of course I am in hearty sympathy with the purpose of it, but the language in the preceding part of the paragraph is as follows:

For investigating the disease of hog cholera, and for its control or eradication by such means as may be necessary, including demonstrations—

And so forth. It seemed to me that that covered the whole subject and I could not understand why they needed any further authority, but of course if they think they do need it I am not opposed to giving it.

Mr. GORE. I think in view of the history of this particular case it is desirable to have this language in the bill.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I should like to add just a word. The Senator from Oklahoma in charge of the bill has stated a part of the facts. I do not care to go into a full history of the discovery of these very eminent scientists from Louisiana, Drs. Duval and Couret, but there seemed to be some trouble about having the discovery thoroughly tested by the Department of Agriculture. Dr. Duval is professor of pathology in Tulane University, and he and his associate, Dr. Couret, claim to have discovered a sure preventive of hog cholera. They have made a test of this remedy with a great many hogs—several hundred, in fact—and have demonstrated to their own satisfaction that it is a preventive.

When they attempted to have it tested by the Government merely with a view of securing a permit to use the serum in interstate commerce, because, as the Senator from Washington is aware, no man can sell serums of this kind until the department has given a permit——

Mr. JONES. I hope the Senator does not understand that I am opposed to the amendment.

Mr. RANSDELL. I understand that.

Mr. JONES. It seemed to me that the language of the paragraph was broad enough to allow the department to do almost anything it wanted to do within that appropriation to accomplish the purpose desired.

Mr. RANSDELL. I understand the Senator's position. I am simply trying to explain very briefly the motives that induced the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to put in these words. We felt that Drs. Duval and Couret were not securing quite the active cooperation in testing out this serum that the importance of the discovery warranted, and to prevent any possibility of a lack of a complete and thorough investigation in the future, not only of this remedy—if it be a true remedy—but of any other discovery, we deemed it best to place these specific words in the statute, so that there could be no possible misunderstanding.

I may say that recently investigations have been going on in a most satisfactory way, at least in a most thorough way; we can not know how satisfactory they will be until they have been completed, but they are at least being made in a very thorough manner, and I think the department will be enabled to say in the near future whether it be a valuable discovery or not.

As the Senator knows, nothing could be very much more important to this Nation than the discovery of a remedy that would cure or prevent hog cholera. We had evidence before us about two years ago that in the State of Iowa the loss by hog cholera was $33,000,000 in one year, and the loss to the Nation annually from hog cholera is enormous. It was merely to make assurance doubly sure on this most important subject that these words were inserted.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to suggest to the Senator having the bill in charge that the word "also," in line 21, page 15, after the words "And provided further," be stricken out.

Mr. GORE. I observed that when the Secretary read it. I intended to have the word "also" stricken out.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That modification of the amendment will be made.

Mr. ASHURST. I have an amendment to the committee amendment. I should like to have it read. I would ask the chairman of the committee if it be parliamentarily in order at this time as an amendment to the committee amendment?

Mr. GORE. I will state that it is the policy to act for the present on the amendments of the committee, and that amendments to be offered by individual Senators will be taken up at a later stage in the proceedings.

Mr. ASHURST. I have no objection, but I would like to have the amendment read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. After line 24, page 15, insert:

For the elimination and eradication of the purple loco weed, the white loco weed, and other poisonous leguminous weeds, in Arizona, Colorado, Kansas, Montana, Nebraska, New Mexico, North Dakota, Oklahoma, South Dakota, Texas, Utah, and Wyoming, $100,000.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not see how that has anything to do with the committee amendment.

Mr. ASHURST. It is not in order then. That is what I rose to ask.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It does not apply to the committee amendment at all. It will be in order after the committee amendments are disposed of.

Mr. STERLING. I wish to suggest an amendment to the amendment of the committee. It seems to me that there is no necessary connection between the amount that may be expended there and the rest of the paragraph.

So far as the appropriation is concerned, I would suggest that after the words "such amount," at the beginning of line 22, page 15, the words be inserted "of the above appropriation," so as to read:

That such amount of the above appropriation as the Secretary of Agriculture may deem necessary and proper, etc.

Standing alone, it might be construed as authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to expend money not herein appropriated.

Mr. GORE. I understand that merely makes the language more explicit, and I have no objection to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be so modified, without objection. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 2, after "$75,000,"' to insert "of which sum $20,000 shall be immediately available," so as to make the clause read:

For all necessary expenses for the investigation, treatment, and eradication of dourine, $75,000, of which sum $20,000 shall be immediately available.

Mr. WARREN. I think the chairman will ask that we do not agree to the amendment which makes a part of this appropriation immediately available. It is not necessary.

Mr. GORE. I ask that the amendment be disagreed to.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 9, after the words "general expenses," to strike out "$2,222,776" and insert "$2,433,776," so as to make the clause read:

In all, for general expenses, $2,433,776.

Mr. WARREN. I think action on the total should be omitted for the present until the figures preceding it are corrected, and that then the clerks at the desk be instructed to correct it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will be instructed to correct the total.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 17, after the words "Bureau of Animal Industry," to strike out "$2,965,746" and insert "$3,176,746," so as to make the clause read:

Total for Bureau of Animal Industry, $3,176,746.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This total will be passed over.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Bureau of Plant Industry," on page 17, line 1, before the word "mailing," to strike out "and," so as to read:

One superintendent of seed weighing and mailing, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, line 3, after the word "laborer," to strike out "at," so as to read:

One skilled laborer, $960.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Plant Industry," on page 21, line 4, after the word "investigations," to strike out "$48,820" and insert "$53,320," so as to make the clause read:

For the investigation, testing, and improvment of plants yielding drugs, spices, poisons, oils, and related products and by-products, and for general physiological and fermentation investigations, $53,320.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary informs the Chair that there is a mistake in printing those figures.

Mr. GORE. I rise to call attention to a typographical error and to ask that it be corrected. The figures should be "$53,820."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The change will be made. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, line 9, after the word "thereof," to strike out "$88,770" and insert "$109,920," so as to make the clause read:

For investigating the handling, grading, and transportation of grain, including the grain sorghums, and the fixing of definite grades thereof, $109,920.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, would the chairman of the committee just as soon have that amendment go over?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I ask that the amendment shall go over for the present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 21, line 21, after the word "diseases," to insert "and flax wilt"; in line 23, after the word "production," to strike out "$157,005" and insert "$164,505"; on page 22, line 1, after the word "That," to strike out "$10,000" and insert "$20,000"; and in line 2, after the word "wheat," to insert "oats, and barley," so as to make the clause read:

For the investigation and improvement of cereals and methods of cereal production, and the study of cereal diseases, and for the investigation of the cultivation and breeding of flax for seed purposes, including a study of flax diseases and flax wilt, and for the investigation and improvement of broom corn and methods of broom-corn production, $164,505: Provided, That $40,000 shall be set aside for the study of corn improvement and methods of corn production: Provided, also, That $20,000 shall be set aside for the investigation of the diseases of wheat, oats, and barley known as black rust and stripe rust.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, line 9, after "$10,840," to insert:

Provided, That of this sum $5,000 shall be used for investigating, experimenting, and testing flax fiber in the manufacture of crash and linen.

So as to make the clause read:

For testing and breeding fibrous plants, including the testing of flax straw, in cooperation with the North Dakota Agricultural College, which may be used for paper making, $10,840: Provided, That of this sum $5,000 shall be used for investigating, experimenting, and testing flax fiber in the manufacture of crash and linen.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, line 15, after the word "beet," to insert "and beet seed," so as to make the clause read:

For sugar-beet investigations, including studies of diseases and the improvement of the beet and beet seed, and methods of culture, and to determine for each sugar-beet area the agricultural operations required to insure a stable agriculture, $41,495: Provided, That of this sum $10,000 may be used for investigations in connection with the production of table sirup, including the breeding, culture, and diseases of cane, and the methods of manufacture, standardization, and marketing of sirup, and the utilization of cane by-products.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, line 25, after the words "grazing lands," to strike out "$24,000" and insert "$27,000: Provided, That of this sum, $3,000 shall be used to cooperate with horticultural organizations in the standardization of botanical names in horticultural use," so as to make the clause read:

For investigations in economic and systematic botany and the improvement and utilization of wild plants and grazing lands, $27,000: Provided, That of this sum, $3,000 shall be used to cooperate with horticultural organizations in the standardization of botanical names in horticultural use.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, line 7, after the word "paragraph," to strike out:

Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be used in the free distribution, or propagation for free distribution, of cuttings, seedlings, or trees of willow, box elder, ash, caragana, or other common varieties of fruit, ornamental, or shelter-belt trees in the Northern Great Plains area, except for experimental or demonstration purposes.

So as to make the clause read:

For the investigation and improvement of methods of crop production under subhumid, semiarid, or dry-land conditions, $160,000: Provided, That the limitation in this act as to the cost of farm buildings shall not apply to this paragraph.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator having the bill in charge, for what reason did the committee report to strike out lines 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, and 14, on page 23?

Mr. GORE. I did not hear what the Senator from Utah said.

Mr. SMOOT. The committee has reported to strike out the proviso in the item for the investigation and improvement of methods of crop production under humid, semiarid, or dry-land conditions, as follows:

Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be used in the free distribution, or propagation for free distribution, of cuttings, seedlings, or trees of willow, box elder, ash, caragana, or other common varieties of fruit, ornamental, or shelter-belt trees in the Northern Great Plains area, except for experimental or demonstration purposes.

The House inserted that proviso, and I ask for what reason is it reported to be stricken out by the Senate committee?

Mr. GORE. I will say, Mr. President, that at the station at Mendan, N. Dak., the Government has been for some years distributing seedling trees, and a great many farmers and settlers in that region have been availing themselves of this free distribution. The other House inserted this provision in order to prohibit the continued distribution of these free seedling trees, and the Senate committee reports to strike out the proviso so that the distribution may continue in the future as it has been going on in the past.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 25, line 4, after the word "weeds," to strike out "$140,920" and insert "$135,920"; and, in line 7, after the word "seeds," to strike out: "Provided further, That $5,000 of this amount shall be used for a reconnaissance survey of the noxious-weed situation in the spring-wheat areas of the United States," so as to make the clause read:

For the purchase, propagation, testing, and distribution of new and rare seeds; for the investigation and improvement of grasses, alfalfa, clover, and other forage crops, including the investigation of the utilization of cacti and other dry-land plants; and to conduct investigations to determine the most effective methods of eradicating weeds, $135,920: Provided, That of this amount not to exceed $60,000 may be used for the purchase and distribution of such new and rare seeds.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, line 16, after the words "general expenses," to strike out "$1,840,840" and insert "$1,872,490," so as to make the clause read:

In all, for general expenses, $1,872,490.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, after line 16, to strike out:

Purchase and distribution of valuable seeds: For purchase, propagation, testing, and congressional distribution of valuable seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants; all necessary office fixtures and supplies, fuel, transportation, paper, twine, gum, postal cards, gas, electric current, rent outside of the District of Columbia, official traveling expenses, and all necessary material and repairs for putting up and distributing the same; for repairs and the employment of local and special agents, clerks, assistants, and other labor required, in the city of Washington and elsewhere, $252,540. And the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby directed to expend the said sum, as nearly as practicable, in the purchase, testing, and distribution of such valuable seeds, bulbs, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, the best he can obtain at public or private sale, and such as shall be suitable for the respective localities to which the same are to be apportioned, and in which same are to be distributed as hereinafter stated, and such seeds so purchased shall include a variety of vegetable and flower seeds suitable for planting and culture in the various sections of the United States: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture, after due advertisement and on competitive bids, is authorized to award the contract for the supplying of printed packets and envelopes and the packeting, assembling, and mailing of the seeds, bulbs, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, or any part thereof, for a period of not more than five years nor less than one year, if by such action he can best protect the interests of the United States. An equal proportion of five-sixths of all seeds, bulbs, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, shall, upon their request, after due notification by the Secretary of Agriculture that the allotment to their respective districts is ready for distribution, be supplied to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress for distribution among their constituents, or mailed by the department upon the receipt of their addressed franks, in packages of such weight as the Secretary of Agriculture and the Postmaster General may jointly determine: Provided, however, That upon each envelope or wrapper containing packages of seeds the contents thereof shall be plainly indicated, and the Secretary shall not distribute to any Senator, Representative, or Delegate seeds entirely unfit for the climate and locality he represents, but shall distribute the same so that each Member may have seeds of equal value, as near as may be, and the best adapted to the locality he represents: Provided, also, That the seeds allotted to Senators and Representatives for distribution in the districts embraced within the twenty-fifth and thirty-fourth parallels of latitude shall be ready for delivery not later than the 10th day of January: Provided, also, That any portion of the allotments to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress remaining uncalled for on the 1st day of April shall be distributed by the Secretary of Agriculture, giving preference to those persons whose names and addresses have been furnished by Senators and Representatives in Congress and who have not before during the same season been supplied by the department: And provided, also, That the Secretary shall report, as provided in this act, the place, quantity, and price of seeds purchased, and the date of purchase; but nothing in this paragraph shall be construed to prevent the Secretary of Agriculture from sending seeds to those who apply for the same. And the amount herein appropriated shall not be diverted or used for any other purpose but for the purchase, testing, propagation, and distribution of valuable seeds, bulbs, mulberry and other rare and valuable trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that that amendment go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the amendment going over?

Mr. GORE. Let it be passed over, Mr. President.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Oklahoma that I am perfectly willing to discuss the question now, but I am quite sure it would be next to impossible to secure a quorum, and of course we should have to take a vote upon the amendment before it could be finally acted upon.

Mr. GORE. I have no objection to the amendment being passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 28, line 7, after the words "Plant Industry," to strike out "$2,511,620," and insert "$2,290,730"; so as to make the clause read:

Total for Bureau of Plant Industry, $2,290,730.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Forest Service," on page 28, line 13, after the words "one forest supervisor," where it occurs the first time, to strike out "$2,600" and insert "$2,800"; so as to read:

Salaries, Forest Service: One Forester, who shall be chief of bureau, $5,000; 1 chief of office of accounts and fiscal agent, $2,500; 7 district fiscal agents, at $2,000 each; 1 forest supervisor, $2,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, line 15, after the words "in all," to strike out "$2,361,120" and insert "$2,361,320"; so as to read:

One charwoman, $540; 1 charwoman, $480; 1 charwoman, $300; 11 charwomen, at $240 each; in all, $2,361,320.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 33, line 8, before the words "National Forest," to strike out "Chiricahau" and insert "Chiricahua," so as to make the clause read:

Chiricahua National Forest, Ariz. and N. Mex., $2,558.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 33, after line 22, to strike out:

Dakota National Forest, N. Dak., $201.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I simply wish to say to the Senate that it was upon my motion in committee that this item was stricken out. I thought it was only a mockery to appropriate $201 for the protection of a national reserve. Further than that, there are about 21 sections of land, I believe, included within this national forest. Every acre of that land ought to be opened up to settlement; the people ought to be permitted to go on those lands and make homes. For that reason I wanted it stricken out.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 39, line 21, after the words "national forests," to strike out "$1,800,508" and insert "$1,800,307," so as to read:

In all, for the use, maintenance, improvement, protection, and general administration of the specified national forests, $1,800,307.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 43, line 3, after the words "general expenses," to strike out "$3,188,616," and insert "$3,188,415," so as to make the clause read:

In all, for general expenses, $3,188,415.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 43, line 12, after the words "navigable rivers," to strike out "$15,000," and insert "$25,000"; in line 13, after the word "therein," to insert "or for carrying out its purposes"; and in line 14, after the word "agents," to insert "title attorneys," so as to make the clause read:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture more effectively to carry out of the provisions of the act of March 1, 1911 (36 Stat., p. 961) entitled, "An act to enable any State to cooperate with any other State or States, or with the United Sates, for the protection of watersheds of navigable streams, and to appoint a commission for the acquisition of lands for the purpose of conserving the navigability of navigable rivers," $25,000 of the moneys appropriated therein, or for carrying out its purposes, shall be available for the employment of agents, title attorneys, clerks, assistants, and other labor and for the purchase of supplies and equipment required for the purpose of said act in the city of Washington.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 44, line 3, after the words "Forest Service," to strike out "$5,549,736" and insert "$5,549,735" so as to make the clause read:

Total for Forest Service, $5,549,735.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Chemistry," on page 44, line 9, before the words "clerks, class one," to strike out "23," and insert "26"; and in line 11, before the words "clerks, at $900 each," to strike out "34" and insert "30," so as to read:

Salaries, Bureau of Chemistry: One chemist, who shall be chief of bureau, $5,000; 1 chief clerk, $2,500; 3 executive clerks, at $2,000 each; 8 clerks, class 4; 11 clerks, class 3; 1 clerk, $1,440; 12 clerks, class 2; 1 clerk, $1,300; 26 clerks, class 1; 12 clerks, at $1,020 each; 13 clerks, at $1,000 each; 1 clerk, $960; 30 clerks, at $900 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 46, line 21, after the words "Bureau of Animal Industry," to strike out "$40,000" and insert "$49,000," so as to make the clause read:

For investigating the preparation for market, handling, grading, packing, freezing, drying, storing, transportation, and preservation of poultry and eggs, and for experimental shipments of poultry and eggs within the United States, in cooperation with the Office of Markets and Rural Organization and the Bureau of Animal Industry, $49,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 47, after line 9, to strike out:

For the employment of chemists and other scientific assistants for investigation and experiment in the utilization of coloring materials, $50,000.

And insert:

For investigation and experiment in the utilization, for coloring purposes, of raw materials grown or produced in the United States, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, line 8, after the word "analysis," to strike out "$632,954" and insert "$657,951," so as to make the clause read:

For enabling the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of the act of June 30, 1906, entitled "An act for preventing the manufacture, sale, or transportation of adulterated, or misbranded, or poisonous, or deleterious foods, drugs, medicines, and liquors, and for regulating traffic therein, and for other purposes," in the city of Washington and elsewhere, including chemical apparatus, chemicals and supplies, repairs to apparatus, gas, electric current, official traveling expenses, telegraph and telephone service, express and freight charges, and all other expenses, employing such assistants, clerks, and other persons as may be considered necessary for the purposes named, and rent outside of the District of Columbia; and to cooperate with associations and scientific societies in the revision of the United States Pharmacopoeia and development of methods of analysis, $657,951.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, line 15, after the word "elsewhere," to strike out "$10,000" and insert "$5,000," so as to make the clause read:

For investigating the grading, weighing, and handling of naval stores, the preparation of definite type samples thereof, and for the demonstration of improved methods or processes of preparing naval stores, in cooperation with individuals and companies, including the employment of necessary persons and means in the city of Washington and elsewhere, $5,000.

Mr. GORE. I will ask that the naval-stores amendment be passed over. The junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] desired to be present when it was discussed.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think we ought to leave in the provision of the House bill.

Mr. GORE. I will say that I have no objection to the restoration of the amount as carried in the House bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The change was made in committee on my motion. I have since made a further investigation of the item in connection with naval stores men, and I think the amount provided by the House is needed. I suggested the reduction because I thought $10,000 provided by the House bill would not be needed, and, as I have said, in committee it was on my suggestion that the reduction was made. I now think that the amount should be restored, and I hope the Senate committee amendment may be rejected.

Mr. GORE. I have no objection to that course being pursued.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 48, line 16, after the words "general expenses," to strike out "$838,211" and insert "$867,211," so as to make the clause read:

In all, for general expenses, $867,211.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, line 17, after the words "Bureau of Chemistry," to strike out "$1,153,801" and insert "$1,182,801," so as to make the clause read:

Total for Bureau of Chemistry, $1,182,801.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Soils," on page 50, after line 8, to insert:

For the investigation and demonstration within the United States to determine the best method of obtaining potash on a commercial scale, including the establishment and equipment of such plant or plants as may be necessary therefor, $175,000: Provided, That the product obtained from such experimentation may be sold at the market price of such product, and the amount obtained from the sale thereof may be used by the Secretary of Agriculture in continuing such experimentation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, line 3, after the words "general expenses," to strike out "$258,735" and insert "$433,735," so as to make the clause read:

In all, for general expenses, $433,735.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, line 4, after the words "Bureau of Soils," to strike out "$328,735" and insert "$503,735," so as to make the clause read:

Total for Bureau of Soils, $503,735.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Entomology," on page 52, line 14, after the words "forage crops," to insert "including a special investigation of the Hessian fly," so as to make the clause read:

For investigations of insects affecting cereal and forage crops, including a special investigation of the Hessian fly, $114,660.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, referring to line 15, page 52, I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill to inform me as to the aggregate amount of money which has been appropriated in former bills for investigating the Hessian fly?

Mr. GORE. I will state that the language is inserted in the bill this year for the first time.

Mr. THOMAS. No; there have been appropriations for the Hessian fly and the gipsy moth ever since I have been here.

Mr. GORE. I think not in express terms. There may have been money used for that purpose.

Mr. THOMAS. I think the Senator is mistaken about that.

Mr. GORE. Possibly I may be. This was not in the bill as passed by the House. The Senate committee inserted the words "and the Hessian fly" upon the suggestion of the department.

Mr. THOMAS. Does the Senator know what benefit has been derived from former appropriations for this purpose and why it is necessary that we should appropriate such a large sum of money for that purpose?

Mr. GORE. I will say that I am not familiar with the history of the effort to exterminate or to combat the Hessian fly. I will have it passed over, however, if the Senator desires.

Mr. THOMAS. Oh, I am not going to make any point against the amendment.

Mr. GORE. I have not the information available at the moment.

Mr. THOMAS. It seems to me, however, that we ought to have some returns from the various appropriations designed to minimize or exterminate these pests.

Mr. GORE. I think the Senator is entirely correct; and I may say that I wrote to the Secretary suggesting that I would appreciate it if he would submit to me a list of the wars waged against various insect pests and parasites where the investigation had been prosecuted to success, so that we could eliminate them from this bill. I told him that the bill, from one end to the other, swarmed with every conceivable sort of insect pest; and I think I will offer an amendment before the consideration of the bill is concluded requiring a report of that sort annually.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I want to suggest to my colleague that the words "including a special investigation of the Hessian fly" do not increase the amount of the appropriation.

Mr. THOMAS. I understand that; but the amendment suggested to my mind the fact that these appropriations follow each other every year with great regularity, thus conforming to the general custom that where an appropriation is once made for a special purpose the precedent is set, and from that time on we make that appropriation in some amount, sometimes without much information as to the manner in which the money was expended under the previous appropriation or any information about the result.

Mr. SHAFROTH. There is not a distinct appropriation for the investigation of the Hessian fly. The other provision, for investigations of insects affecting cereal and forage crops, carried an appropriation of $114,660, and this is just included as a part of that appropriation.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not intend to oppose it.

Mr. GORE. I should like to state, before passing from that item, that last year $5,000 was expended by the department in an effort to exterminate the Hessian fly, although it was not expressly authorized in the appropriation. The department suggested that this time language be inserted expressly granting that authority, and also asked for an increased appropriation of $5,000. The committee did not increase the appropriation $5,000, as requested, but did insert the language conveying the authority.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the Senate committee amendment. After the words "Hessian fly" I move to insert the words "and the chinch bug." The chinch bug is one of the great enemies of the spring-wheat crop in the Northwestern States.

Mr. THOMAS. Why does not the amendment cover that?

Mr. NELSON. I want the words "and the chinch bug" inserted after "including a special investigation of the Hessian fly." It is a great pest. I have known whole fields to be entirely destroyed by it.

Mr. GORE. I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. THOMAS. May I inquire of the Senator whether the appropriation as it stands is not ample for this purpose? It is for investigations of insects affecting cereal and forage crops.

Mr. NELSON. But the amendment refers particularly to the Hessian fly, and I think the chinch bug is as bad a pest as the Hessian fly. It is a far greater enemy and more destructive to our wheat crops in the Norhtwest than the Hessian fly. That is an insect that is particularly fatal to the winter-wheat crop, but the chinch bug is a most vicious enemy and most destructive to the spring-wheat crop.

Mr. GORE. I will say to the Senator from Minnesota that work is being carried on by the department along this line, and that last year $3,500 were expended in combating the chinch bug. I have no objection to the insertion of the amendment if the Senator insists upon it.

Mr. NELSON. I wish the Senator would agree to it.

Mr. GORE. So far as I can, I consent.

Mr. NELSON. I move to insert "and the chinch bug" after the words "Hessian fly."

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Oklahoma, if he knows what proportion of the appropriation is to be expended on the cigarette beetle?

Mr. GORE. I will furnish the Senator with that information directly. I am not able to find out at this moment.

Mr. LANE. I should like to know how many of the beetles the money will buy for the use of the Government. Have the committee any estimate on that?

Mr. GORE. I did not understand the Senator's observation.

Mr. LANE. I want to know how many of the beetles the appropriation will purchase. I suppose they are to be used in destroying cigarettes.

Mr. GORE. I will furnish the Senator with that information a little later on. The Senator from Florida can no doubt enlighten him on that point. I understand there was $2,650 expended last year on the cigarette beetle.

Mr. LANE. That ought to buy a good supply of them. My idea was that the Government would probably aid in purchasing large numbers of them in order to destroy the cigarettes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota to insert, after the words "Hessian fly," the words "and the chinch bug."

Mr. GORE. I accept the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. GORE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After three minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

RECESS.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 52 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Saturday, July 1, 1916, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, June 30, 1916.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who art love, rich in grace, plenteous in mercy, pour out upon us as individuals and as a Nation Thy blessing. We confess our ignorance and pray for wisdom and knowledge, our weakness, and pray for strength that we may resist the temptations which assail us on every hand, our selfishness, and pray for generosity, nobility of character, that under Thy guidance we may become the synonym throughout the world of wisdom, purity, and nobility of soul. For Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory for ever and ever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON CLAIMS.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I present the following privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 285 (H. Rept. 900).

Resolved, That the employment of the additional clerk to the Committee on Claims, authorized by House resolution 164, adopted March 11, 1916, be, and the same is hereby, continued for a period of 30 days from the date of expiration of said employment, and that compensation therefor at the rate of $75 per month be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

The resolution was agreed to.

WILLIAM M'KINLEY COBB.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I present the following privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 241 (H. Rept. 902).

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House $1,200 to William McKinley Cobb for extra and expert services rendered to the Committee on Pensions during the first session of the Sixty-fourth Congress as assistant clerk to said committee, by detail from the Bureau of Pensions, pursuant to law.

Mr. LLOYD. This is the usual allowance paid to the expert accountant assigned to that committee.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is this the same gentleman that performed the services in times past?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. The same man who performed the services in the prior Congress?

Mr. LLOYD. The same man.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is it the same amount that was allowed in the prior Congress?

Mr. LLOYD. The same amount that was allowed in the last Congress.

Mr. STAFFORD. We established the precedent in the last Congress of allowing this amount to this individual assigned to this committee?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. How long does it continue?

Mr. LLOYD. It is a lump-sum appropriation. In the last Congress we set the precedent of $2,000 for a Congress, and we allow him $1,200 for the first session, and in December, or some time during the winter, we will present another resolution, if he has served up to that time, for $800 more.

Mr. STAFFORD. You do not plan to increase the allowance for the Congress?

Mr. LLOYD. No.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

NORMAN E. IVES.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I present the following privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 242 (H. Rept. 901).

Resolved, That there be paid out of the contingent fund of the House $1,500 to Norman E. Ives for extra and expert services to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, from March 5, 1915, to June 4, 1916, each date inclusive, as assistant clerk to said committee, by detail from the Bureau of Pensions, pursuant to law.

The following committee amendments were read:

In line 2 strike out "$1,500" and insert "$1,400"; in lines 3, 4, and 5 strike out the words "from March 5, 1915, to June 4, 1916, each date inclusive," and insert the words "during the first session of the Sixty-fourth Congress."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman whether this is the customary resolution for the person assigned to this committee.

Mr. LLOYD. It is the customary resolution, but there is a slight change in it which I wish to explain. In the last Congress we allowed $2,000 to this expert clerk. By this provision in the end we will pay $2,200 during the coming year, and the reason of that is this: This particular expert receives $200 less through the Pension Bureau than the clerk of the other committee, and we felt that he certainly rendered as much service to the General Government as did the expert clerk of the other committee, and therefore we are giving him $200 more than we gave to the expert clerk in the other committee to even it up.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is the policy of the Committee on Accounts to have the total sum paid each clerk on the statutory rolls the same?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5425) to standardize lime barrels, had requested conference with the House, and had appointed Mr. CLAPP, Mr. SHIELDS, and Mr. BANKHEAD as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15836) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 6447. An act to amend section 10 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the opening, maintenance, protection, and operation of the Panama Canal and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone," approved August 24, 1912, relating to immigration in the Canal Zone;

S. 1792. An act for the relief of settlers on unsurveyed railroad lands; and

S. 6212. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to sell certain magazine rifles.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 600. An act to validate title to the town site of McCabe, in the State of Montana.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, the bill (H. R. 10484) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes, had requested a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. HARDWICK, and Mr. TOWNSEND as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 12954. An act for the establishment of Northport, Chopaka, and Laurier, in the State of Washington, as ports of entry for immediate transportation without appraisement of dutiable merchandise;

H. R. 12362. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Dallas & Southwestern Motorway Co. to construct a bridge across the Brazos River in the State of Texas;

H. R. 7256. An act providing for the refund of duties collected on certain tobacco cuttings;

H. R. 13715. An act granting the consent of Congress to C. M. Simpson, Z. T. Hedges, J. C. Hackney, and Mark Brown to construct a bridge across Bayou Bartholomew, Ashley County, Ark.; and

H. R. 15347. An act to amend existing laws relating to the use of alcohol, free of tax, by scientific institutions or colleges of learning.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 10484) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes, had asked a conference with the House on the said bill and amendments thereto, and had appointed Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. HARDWICK, and Mr. TOWNSEND as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 6212. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to sell certain magazine rifles; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 1792. An act for the relief of settlers on unsurveyed railroad lands; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 6447. An act to amend section 10 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the opening, maintenance, protection, and operation of the Panama Canal and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone," approved August 24, 1912, relating to immigration in the Canal Zone; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

RECLAMATION EXTENSION.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, some time ago a conference committee was appointed on the bill H. R. 6057, the reclamation extension bill, from the Irrigation Committee. Judge SMITH of Texas, chairman of the committee, is unavoidably absent, and will be for quite a little time, and I ask that the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] be added as one of the conferees in lieu of Judge SMITH.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] will be appointed instead of Judge SMITH.

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by publishing an interview given by the Hon. EBENEZER J. HILL on the Monday following the Republican national convention.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing an interview given by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] shortly after the Republican convention. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing an editorial from the Washington Post of this morning entitled "Fodder for machine guns."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by printing an editorial from the Washington Post entitled "Fodder for machine guns." Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I did not catch the title of the editorial,

The SPEAKER. "Fodder for machine guns." Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech made by the President at Philadelphia yesterday before the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEPHENS] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by printing a speech made by the President at Philadelphia yesterday. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MCARTHUR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing the official abstract of the election returns of the State of Oregon at the presidential primary held there on May 19. Some little jest has been made about it——

The SPEAKER. It is not debatable. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing an abstract of the returns at the presidential primary held in Oregon a few weeks ago. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIEGEL. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the conditions in the war zone in Europe.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on conditions in the war zone in Europe. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PENSIONS.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the concurrent resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a concurrent resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House concurrent resolution 44.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 13486) entitled "An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war," the Clerk be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to restore the matter stricken out by the amendment of the Senate No. 1, with an amendment, as follows: In line 3 of the matter restored strike out "$36" and insert "$30"; and also restore the matter stricken out by the amendment of the Senate No. 25, with an amendment, as follows: In line 3 of the matter restored strike out "$50" and insert "$40," the same being for the purpose of carrying out the agreement of the conferees.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS FOR SATURDAY, JULY 1, 1916.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business on the Unanimous Consent Calendar for Monday next be dispensed with, and that the same be in order to-morrow.

Mr. MANN. Business that would be in order Monday?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; that the same be in order to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that business that would be in order on next Monday, the first Monday in the month, unanimous consent, suspension of the rules, and so forth, be taken up to-morrow instead of Monday. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Will the Speaker's statement that he will recognize the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] to move to suspend the rules on Monday for the consideration of a bill relating to the National Guard hold good to-morrow under the circumstances?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. KITCHIN. I want to modify my request by asking that conference reports shall be in order to-morrow also.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman modifies his request, so that conference reports will be in order to-morrow. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following concurrent resolution:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 13486) entitled "An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, the Clerk be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to restore the matter stricken out by the amendment of the Senate numbered 1 with an amendment as follows: In line 3 of the matter restored, strike out "$36" and insert "$30," and also restore the matter stricken out by the amendment of the Senate numbered 25 with an amendment as follows: In line 3 of the matter restored, strike out "$50" and insert "$40," the same being for the purpose of carrying out the agreement of the conference.

ADJOURNMENT FROM SATURDAY UNTIL WEDNESDAY NEXT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-morrow it adjourn to meet on Wednesday next.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-morrow it adjourn to meet on Wednesday next. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KITCHIN. I ask unanimous consent to meet at 11 o'clock on Wednesday instead of at 12 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the House meet at 11 o'clock on Wednesday, instead of 12 o'clock. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, if the gentleman insists upon it, I will not object, but many Members will go out of the city, and it will not be very convenient for them to get back by 11 o'clock on Wednesday.

Mr. KITCHIN. Then we will meet at 12 o'clock, and sit later.

The SPEAKER. The House will meet on Wednesday at 12 o'clock.

Mr. MCKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I wish to inquire whether or not the bill that was made the special order for Monday, introduced by the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs [Mr. HAY] will be in order to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Virginia at 1 o'clock to-morrow, unless we are in the midst of one of these unanimous-consent matters.

Mr. HAY. I will be recognized to move to suspend the rules?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. It will be suspension day to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. Yes; suspension day and unanimous-consent day has been transferred from Monday to to-morrow.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think the Chair ought to recognize the gentleman from Virginia to-morrow immediately after the reading of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. Very well. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Virginia to-morrow immediately after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. HAY. Very well.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

The SPEAKER. Under the order heretofore made business in order on Calendar Wednesday next is in order to-day. The Clerk will call the committees.

The Clerk called the Committee on the Judiciary.

WESTERN AND EASTERN JUDICIAL DISTRICTS, OKLAHOMA.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 11148) transferring the counties of Osage and Pawnee from the western judicial district of the United States courts, in the State of Oklahoma, to the eastern judicial district of said court in said State, for judicial purposes.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the counties of Osage and Pawnee, in the State of Oklahoma, are hereby transferred from the western judicial district of the United States court, in Oklahoma, to the eastern judicial district of said court, in said State, and hereby made a part of said eastern judicial district of said court, in said State, for judicial purposes: Provided, That all crimes and offenses committed prior to, and all prosecutions pending at the time of the taking effect of this act shall be prosecuted and determined as if this act had not been passed.

SEC. 2. That all acts and parts of acts in conflict with this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Speaker, I will ask that the Clerk read the report.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11148) transferring the counties of Osage and Pawnee from the western judicial district of United States court, in the State of Oklahoma, to the eastern judicial district of said court in said State, for judicial purposes, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it do pass.

Oklahoma is divided into two judicial districts, the eastern district and the western district. This bill seeks to transfer the counties of Osage and Pawnee from the western district to the eastern district of that State. Both counties are in the congressional district of the author of the bill. At the present time there the Federal court sits at Tulsa. A portion of the city of Tulsa is in Osage County. Those parties residing in that part of Tulsa situated in Osage County are within the jurisdiction of the Federal court that sits at either Guthrie, Enid, or Oklahoma City, a distance of from 100 to 150 miles. Part of those counties affected by this bill are so situated with reference to distance and railway facilities that without any inconvenience the people residing in them can attend the court at Tulsa, but both are far removed from any other site of the court. Numerous petitions of citizens and attorneys residing in the affected territory were filed with the committee asking a change. No one, although notice was given, opposed the transfer. Telegrams from the bar associations in the two counties affected are printed herewith as a part of this report. The committee unanimously reported the measure.

Mr. THOMPSON rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Oklahoma rise?

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to discuss this bill at some length. I desire to be recognized.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Speaker, I think the situation is this: There is some opposition to the report of the committee, and a member of the committee, Mr. MORGAN, as I understand it, will have the right to recognition.

The SPEAKER. Any gentleman who is recognized has a right to an hour.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the rule provides that there shall be two hours of general debate.

The SPEAKER. That is true. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. CARLIN] for an hour and the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN] for an hour.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes of my time to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DAVENPORT].

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Speaker, it is always a very unpleasant task to oppose certain members of one's delegation, and it is unpleasant also when the delegation can not agree on legislation affecting its State. I do not think it will be necessary for us to discuss this matter for an hour. It is apparently a proposition of whether this House prefers to compel the Government of the United States to pay additional mileage and send the parties away from the place of holding the Federal court, because in the earlier days the districts were so apportioned, or whether they desire to have them attend court at the nearest and most convenient place from an economical standpoint and for the matter of convenience to parties. I desire to say in this connection that I have not thought to trespass on the territory of anyone else. It is a sort of mutual benefit association as between my friend THOMPSON and my friend MORGAN. As the district now stands, the parties who have to attend the Federal court must go from my district and to one place in Mr. MORGAN's district and one place in Mr. THOMPSON's district, and, of course, the gentlemen interested in the cities and towns in their districts are not taking into consideration the question of distance a man has to travel or the question of convenience in getting to and from a place, or the question of the expense or the increase in the expense it is to the Government and to the litigants to take their witnesses there to attend court.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVENPORT. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. Do I understand that the gentleman seeks to take two counties that are in his congressional district from the western district and add them to the eastern district?

Mr. DAVENPORT. That is the fact. I want to call the attention of Members of the House to the situation. This dark line on the map which is before us shows the outline of the first congressional district, which borders upon States of Arkansas, Missouri, and Kansas. In the corner here is the city of Tulsa, in the first district, where the Federal court is held regularly. Over here is Osage County, in this first district, and this section here is Pawnee. These are the two counties that we desire to transfer from the western to the eastern judicial district for judicial purposes. Here are the railroads running through Pawnee, going into Tulsa, around this way by Osage Junction, from the extreme northeastern corner of Osage County in a diagonal line down to Tulsa, so that most of the litigants can leave home at supper time in the evening and be there the next morning to attend court, or a great many can leave at breakfast time and get over there in two or three hours. The nearest point of holding court from Tulsa in the western district is at Enid. That is in the district of my colleague, Mr. MORGAN. The nearest point in the district of my colleague, Mr. THOMPSON, is over here; but as for the people in this section of Osage, and in that section of Pawnee, they must go clear across that distance, which is something between 80 and 100 miles to the nearest point of holding a Federal court. I believe that the intention of establishing a court is for the convenience of the litigants and so that it may be as economical as possible to the Government. I would not have sought to rearrange that convenience had I been trespassing upon any of my colleague's territory or upon the convenience of anyone in those counties in going to Federal court. I can understand why my colleagues oppose this proposition, because the people of the city of Enid and the people of the city of Guthrie or Oklahoma City, the business men, would get the benefit of what little money those who attend court spend while they are in the respective cities attending court. I can understand it, because they have not taken into consideration, in my judgment, anything further than that; but I believe this Congress ought to give to those people along that line the protection that they need, the convenience of attending court.

Now, it may be presented by some of my fellow Members of this House that the docket of the eastern district of Oklahoma is crowded and they can not get their cases tried. I admit the docket at Muskogee, one of the places of holding court in the eastern district, which is down here, is crowded, but I put in this RECORD on the 3d day of April of this year the docket for the last term of the Federal court held at Tulsa, and it shows there were 15 criminal cases of that term which had four weeks to run, and 17 civil cases, so that the docket at Tulsa is not crowded and that part of the argument should not, in my judgment, influence any Member of the House. Now, that is the situation, gentlemen. I also put in the RECORD at that time a communication from the bar association in Tulsa County and different parties living in that locality.

Mr. KELLEY. Are the first, second, and third districts in the eastern district?

Mr. DAVENPORT. The first, second, and fourth——

Mr. KELLEY. Indicate on the map just the line that separates the eastern from the western district.

Mr. DAVENPORT. I can not follow them here because of the way they were embraced in the old Indian Territory, the old Indian Territorial division, so I can not follow them down offhand, and I am only seeking by this bill to make it more convenient for those who live in Osage and Pawnee Counties to get to Tulsa, which is practically Osage County.

Mr. KELLEY. Transfer them——

Mr. DAVENPORT. From the western to the eastern. Now, there are more than a thousand people who have gone to the outskirts and live in and around a radius of a mile and a half in the corner of Osage County who get their mail at Tulsa, and do business there, and to get to the Federal court they would have to go either to Enid or Guthrie or Oklahoma City. In other words, you can see by the map that Osage County runs into the corner of the city of Tulsa. I have seen that city grow from 300 population to 35,000 population and I know every foot of the ground.

The nearest point of Pawnee County is less than 16 miles from the city of Tulsa, and a direct line of railroad running three passenger trains daily goes to Tulsa, so it is absolutely a question of whether or not we are willing to continue these counties in the western district and compel these parties to go either up here to Enid or down here and change cars and go to Guthrie or Oklahoma City. As I said, I put in the RECORD some time ago a number of letters in reference to this matter. I put in some at that time from the Department of Justice. While the business is heavy at Muskogee in the eastern district, the Department of Justice submits it, so far as that court is concerned, to the better judgment of this House.

I want at this time, however, to file in the RECORD a petition signed by a number of citizens asking that they be permitted to go down to Osage Junction and come to Tulsa by what is known as the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railroad instead of being compelled to go to the other places.

I append the following letter as a part of my remarks.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

The letter is as follows:

HOMINY, OKLA., April 3, 1916.

Hon. JAMES S. DAVENPORT, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We, the undersigned residents of Hominy, Okla., and vicinity, indorse and urge that you use your best efforts in securing the passage of the bill providing for the transfer of Osage and Pawnee Counties from the western judicial district of the Federal court to the eastern district with cases triable at Tulsa instead of Enid, Guthrie, and Oklahoma City.

W. E. Schwaba, M. Mullindore, J. W. Spaks, Chas. F. Dodson, Carl F. Matthew, O. E. Stewart, W. M. Surwod, F. V. Wilson, T. J. W. Hoffman, W. S. Coan, R. L. McCay, S. H. Roleunage, H. R. Adams, J. West, Herman Comett, S. B. Elrod, C. H. Stenger, William H. Theisen, W. F. Herron, H. C. Higgins, Corbett Comett, P. P. Montgomery, G. F. Stahr, B. L. Westbrook, Oscar K. Petty, James Jenkins, O. J. Parkhurst, L. D. Edgington, Percy Dixon, Guy G. Bennett, P. H. Harris, H. W. Hoffman, O. W. Kingsbury, Ira Mullins, J. J. Page, C. E. Page, Charles Pettet, Sam Castell, E. C. Beard, C. E. Carnagey, Dick Wallace, D. A. Williams, L. S. Weiser, Prentiss Price, O. L. Barlow.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMPSON].

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, the only explanation for this bill is the popularity of my colleague from Oklahoma [Mr. DAVENPORT]. There is absolutely no reason on earth for this bill; on the contrary, it is in the face of all reason. My colleague put in the RECORD, on the 3d of April, a letter from the Attorney General, and the Attorney General at that time suggested that this bill ought not to pass unless a rearrangement was made in the districts in Oklahoma, and he suggested to Mr. DAVENPORT that he call for a report of the district judges and the district attorneys of both the western and eastern districts if Mr. DAVENPORT desired them.

Mr. DAVENPORT did not ask the Attorney General to ask the district judge or the district attorney in either the eastern or western district to make these reports. But I did, and I have the reports here from the district judge and the district attorney of both those districts, and they all oppose the enactment of this bill and the transfer of these two counties—Osage and Pawnee—from the western to the eastern district of Oklahoma. I shall send these letters to the Clerk's desk and ask them to be read in a moment. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that the reason that these two counties ought not to be transferred from the western to the eastern district is that the eastern district is overworked. It is two or three years behind in its work and the western district is up with its work, and, if you do not want to create another judicial district and give another United States judge and another United States attorney, you want to transfer from the eastern to the western district instead of from the western to the eastern district, because just as sure as you transfer those two counties from the western to the eastern district you will create a condition that will create another judicial district down in Oklahoma. That is the whole question. Now, I sympathize with my friend Mr. DAVENPORT——

Mr. CAMPBELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMPSON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Where is the greater part of the business now—in the eastern or the western district?

Mr. THOMPSON. Why, the business in the eastern district is several times as great as in the western district.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Is it proposed to take these two counties and place them in the eastern district?

Mr. THOMPSON. It is proposed to take two counties where the least amount of business arises in the western district, take them out of the western district, and put them in a district two or three years behind with its work. That is a fact.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Is that not good politics for eastern Oklahoma, to get another judge?

Mr. THOMPSON. I do not think so. I live in eastern Oklahoma.

Mr. CAMPBELL. But they want another district and another judge?

Mr. THOMPSON. That is all it means, of course—another judge and another district attorney and another marshal—and I am opposed to it, because I do not think it is necessary.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. THOMPSON. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. Which is the most convenient for those people—to go to Guthrie or to go to Tulsa?

Mr. THOMPSON. Here is the situation, I will say to my friend from Mississippi: Down in Oklahoma, both in the eastern district and in the western district, we do not have divisions of the court business. In other words, the eastern district has places of holding court at Tulsa, Vinita, Muskogee, McAlester, Chickasha, and Ardmore. So many counties are not set off and given to Tulsa. Another group of counties are not given to Vinita, another to Muskogee, and so on; but when the business arises, no matter whether it arises in Tulsa or not, it goes to Ardmore, Chickasha, McAlester, Muskogee, Vinita, or wherever the court is in session. It does not make any difference whether it is most convenient to do the business there or not. The question of how much business there is does not make any difference. It does not make any difference whether it arises in any particular county. It goes all over the eastern district to be tried, maybe hundreds of miles away. My colleague will not deny these facts.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to quote from the last report of the Attorney General. Here is the report of the Attorney General for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915. It shows that the population of the eastern district in 1910 was 834,395, and in the western district the population in 1910 was 822,760. Now, I do not know that any man acquainted with the eastern district and the western district of Oklahoma, or any man who is acquainted with the oil development and the gas development and the consequent manufactures that grow out of that kind of development, will contend that the western district, which is a purely farming part of our State, compares at all in population with the eastern part of the State, the eastern district.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. This proposes to transfer two counties from the western to the eastern district?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. Are the two counties in the western district in the gentleman's district?

Mr. THOMPSON. In mine?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. THOMPSON. No, sir; they are in Mr. DAVENPORT's district.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. THOMPSON. I do.

Mr. CARAWAY. Is your sole opposition to it a belief that it is to be followed by the creation of a new judgeship in Oklahoma?

Mr. THOMPSON. That is not my sole opposition. My sole opposition is that if you do transfer these two counties, you make it absolutely necessary to create another judicial district.

Mr. CARAWAY. That is the basis of your opposition, then?

Mr. THOMPSON. Not all of it.

Mr. CARAWAY. Then, what is it?

Mr. THOMPSON. Well, I have tried to make it plain to the gentleman. I am sorry I have not made it plain to the gentleman. I am satisfied that it is my fault that I have not, not the gentleman's.

Mr. CARAWAY. Let me ask you another question.

Mr. THOMPSON. Very well.

Mr. CARAWAY. The people in those counties are now compelled to attend a court that sits in your district?

Mr. THOMPSON. No, sir; they are not.

Mr. CARAWAY. Do they not do it?

Mr. THOMPSON. Partly they do and partly they do not; but they do not have to go 100 miles to attend court, and I say to the gentleman from Arkansas there are many counties in his district where they have to go a greater distance.

Mr. CARAWAY. Can you name any one of them?

Mr. THOMPSON. Not at this moment.

Mr. CARAWAY. There is not one.

Mr. THOMPSON. I accept the gentleman's statement as to that. But there are many districts in which the people are compelled to go greater distances, I am sure the gentleman will admit.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. The gentleman says these counties are about 100 miles away from his district, where some people go to court?

Mr. THOMPSON. There are some places that far away; yes.

Mr. HARRISON. How do they get to these places?

Mr. THOMPSON. In Pawnee County it is easier to get to Guthrie and Enid, which is in Mr. MORGAN'S district. It is just as easy to get to those two places as to get to Tulsa, to which they seek to transfer Pawnee County. In some parts of Osage County the railroad connections with Guthrie and Enid are better than the railroad connections with Tulsa. In the eastern part of Osage County the railroad connections are better with Tulsa than with Guthrie or Enid.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I want to ask a question in order to see if I understand the gentleman's objection to the transfer of these counties from the western to the eastern district. In the eastern district the calendar is two years behind, is it?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes; perhaps three years behind.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. In the western district, in which these two counties are located, the calendar is pretty well up?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. So that the gentleman's contention is exactly this: That to take two counties from the western district, where the calendar is clear up, and put them over into the eastern district, where the calendar is three years behind, would be inexpedient?

Mr. THOMPSON. That is a fact.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. And those are the two counties that supply the bulk of the business in the western district?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes. I have one letter here which says that one-eighth of the business in the western district comes from Osage County alone.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. And that calendar is all up?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Then the gentleman contends that if we put into the district, the calendar of which is already two years behind, two counties that are not so busy, but where the calendar is up, the calendar in the eastern district will be still more hopelessly behind, and it will be necessary then to create a new judicial district and a new judge and district attorney, and so on?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes. I will have read at the desk a letter from the judge of the eastern district, to whose district it is proposed to transfer these counties. He says their district is swamped now with business which they can not transact.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. If we put those two counties over into a district where the calendar is already two years behind, how can they catch up with the calendar unless there is another judge created?

Mr. THOMPSON. They can not.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That is the gentleman's objection?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It looks to me like a valid objection.

Mr. THOMPSON. The objection is to transferring these counties where the business is up to a district where the business is behind. That means, of course, the creation of a new district, which the judge and the district attorney of the eastern district say will have to be created. The report of the Attorney General shows that at the close of business on June 30, 1915, there were 21,150 civil suits pending in the eastern district of Oklahoma.

There were 627 criminal cases pending in the eastern district of Oklahoma, an increase of 62 criminal cases over the preceding year. In other words, the business increased that amount during the year. In the western district there were only 187 civil cases pending at the end of the year and 109 criminal cases, a decrease in both civil and criminal business.

Now, I want to call the attention of the committee to this further fact, which is a very important fact in the consideration of this bill: Osage and Pawnee Counties are made up of two Indian reservations. Osage County is the old Osage Indian Reservation. Pawnee County is the old Pawnee Indian Reservation. The treaty, tribal laws, and regulations in those reservations are entirely different from those in the Five Civilized Tribes—the Chickasaws, Choctaws, Seminoles, Creeks, and Cherokees—which constitute the eastern district. The judge in the western district has been trying these cases for 10 years, and is familiar with their laws, treaties, and tribal regulations. The judge of the eastern district does not understand these tribal laws and treaties, rules, and regulations. So if you transfer these two tribal counties from the western district over into the eastern district you will transfer them from a judge who is familiar with their treaties, laws, and regulations into the district of a judge who does not know anything at all about them.

In this connection I send to the Clerk's desk and ask that the Clerk read in my time a letter from the judge and district attorney of the western district and a letter from the judge and district attorney of the eastern district of Oklahoma.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The letters will be read in the gentleman's time.

The Clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT,
WESTERN DISTRICT OF OKLAHOMA,
Oklahoma City, Okla., May 3, 1916.

The ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: Your letter of April 5 is acknowledged, in which you request my views regarding the proposed transfer (by H. R. 11148) of Osage and Pawnee Counties from the western to the eastern district of Oklahoma. I regret very much the delay which has occurred in forwarding my reply.

A practical consideration in favor of the transfer is the nearness of Tulsa, one of the court towns in the eastern district. The attendance upon court there of persons concerned would be more convenient and economical, particularly from Osage County. However, under the existing plan, by which there are no divisions, the entire docket is triable at each place of holding court, and the regular terms are held but once a year. Hence, cases from those counties might call for earlier trial at other points inconvenient to them, and the advantage would not exist. Special terms are authorized, but by experience, where so many places are designated by law for regular terms, the special terms are not as a rule practicable at each place, especially for jury trials. Nevertheless, it seems quite likely that cases from those counties could be chiefly heard at Tulsa, and in that respect there is ground for the transfer.

In my judgment there is a more important consideration against the transfer, and that is the comparative state of the dockets in the two districts. The work in both is quite heavy, but in this district, doubtless, it is more nearly up and will so continue in the future. The result from the addition of the two counties to the eastern district would be an increase in the work of the court already burdensome on that side, and would mean more delay than now occurs in the hearing of cases from those counties. My view is that the more equal division and certain prospect of greater dispatch of the court work, secured by the retention of the two counties in this district, outweigh the considerations to arise from the transfer, and that the transfer is inadvisable.

Yours, very truly,

JOHN H. COTTERAL, District Judge.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. THOMPSON. Will my colleague Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma yield me 10 minutes more?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I yield to the gentleman 10 minutes more.

Mr. THOMPSON. I ask the Clerk to continue the reading of the letters.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT,
EASTERN DISTRICT OF OKLAHOMA,
JUDGE'S CHAMBERS,
Muskogee, Okla., April 19, 1916.

The ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: Replying to your letter of April 5, 1916 (C. S. 37-E.-11), asking expression of my views as to proposed legislation involved in H. R. 11148, which contemplates the transfer of Osage and Pawnee Counties, in this State, from the western to the eastern judicial district, I have to say:

So far as relates to the addition of these two counties to this district, considered from their geographical location, and railroad facilities with reference to Tulsa, the nearest court town in this district, I believe that point is probably more accessible than the nearest point of holding court in the western district, and in this respect, such change might be of advantage. There is this phase of the matter, however, which I must call to your attention:

The volume of business in this district is constantly growing, and has been for a good while more than one judge can attend to properly, working every day in the year. The district now includes the Five Civilized Tribes and the Quapaw country, and the litigation incident to the titles to these Indian lands has been heavy from the very beginning of statehood. With a population approximating over a million people, with large coal, lead, and zinc mining interests, railroads and other industrial activities, the district has afforded no small amount of ordinary Federal litigation, aside from the Indian feature. In addition to this, each year has seen the oil and gas industry grow, until now it covers a very large part of the district, and in the opinion of conservative oil men is only well started. New fields are constantly being brought in. Values of lands grow by leaps and bounds, and as they all depend upon Indian titles, the litigation growing out of this oil and gas activity is enormous. The oil and gas litigation now pending and in immediate prospect is enough of itself to keep one judge reasonably busy in giving it prompt and proper attention. The oil and gas are bringing in extensive smelters, refineries, and other kindred industries which are fast becoming most fruitful sources of litigation. In addition to the usual amount of ordinary criminal business of a Federal nature incident to a district of such population, there is a large volume of prosecutions arising from the violation of the laws for the suppression of the liquor traffic among the Indians, to which pending legislation, if it passes, will immeasurably add.

I make this statement to impress the fact, for some time apparent to me, that rather than taking on more territory and additional burdens, the Federal court of this district, if it is to serve the litigants with the promptness and dispatch and efficiency to which they are entitled, needs some assistance in carrying the ever-increasing load. If Osage and Pawnee Counties, with their additional burden of litigation, are added, there should, in my judgment, be some legislation by which corresponding relief can be afforded. It has been suggested to me that the department might favor taking a part of the western portion of this district and adding it to the western district. This would be a measure of relief, but would probably be subject to the objection that it would result in putting the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations partly in two districts, whereas the fact that the acts of Congress relating to them are identical might make it preferable that they be not so divided.

My mature judgment is that the business at present and in prospect for years to come in this district is sufficient to amply justify its division into two districts, each with enough business to keep its judge reasonably busy, especially, as by assignment, the judges could work back and forth according as the pressure of business in either district from time to time might require. In the adjustment incident to laying out such additional district, the matter of detaching Osage and Pawnee Counties from the western district might be considered.

I appreciate the fact that it will be urged that judges from other districts in this circuit might be assigned to aid in the work here. To that there are several answers. The judges of this, the eighth circuit, are almost all so busy in their several districts that I have found it very difficult to get much of their time. When they do come, they are unfamiliar with the peculiar Indian questions which permeate so much of our litigation, and hence, their usefulness is curtailed. On the other hand, if another district were created, and a judge appointed who had lived and practiced here in this Indian country, familiar with its peculiar legislation, he could at once take up his share of the burden.

You have asked an expression of my views, and I have taken the liberty to express them fully and frankly. I am seriously in earnest when I say that in my judgment there is ample justification for another district in this State.

Very respectfully,

RALPH E. CAMPBELL,
United States District Judge.

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Speaker, I understood the gentleman to say there were 21,000 cases on the docket of one of these district courts?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes.

Mr. CLINE. What is the character of those cases?

Mr. THOMPSON. They are suits by the United States to cancel titles to 21,000 different tracts of land.

Mr. CLINE. Will all of them have to be tried?

Mr. THOMPSON. There are 347 different issues that will have to be tried, but there are 21,000 individual suits.

Mr. CARAWAY. And the trial of one or two will settle them all?

Mr. THOMPSON. No; there are 347 different issues of law involved, and the trial of the law question involved will settle, as far as the law is concerned, 21,000 cases; but the facts are different in each case.

Mr. CARAWAY. As a matter of fact, the court said that eight or nine cases will settle them all.

Mr. THOMPSON. Oh, no; there have been over 137 cases already disposed of, and they only dispose of 3,700 cases. There were 24,000 cases to be tried.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. THOMPSON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. What is the population of these two districts?

Mr. THOMPSON. I gave that a moment ago. There are 834,395 in the eastern district and about 822,760 in the western district.

Mr. KELLEY. I understand from the statement made by the gentleman that the eastern district is overworked and the western district has not enough to do.

Mr. THOMPSON. That is what the reports of these judges and district attorneys show.

Mr. KELLEY. Why not transfer Tulsa County from the eastern district to the western district. That would relieve the eastern district and at the same time accommodate those people.

Mr. THOMPSON. That would be much preferable, and I would be willing to do that, if my colleague from Oklahoma Mr. DAVENPORT would. I think that would relieve the situation and be a fair settlement of the matter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. THOMPSON. I will ask my colleague for more time.

Mr. MANN. A parliamentary inquiry. Who controls the time on the two sides?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN] and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. CARLIN].

Mr. THOMPSON. I should like five minutes more.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I yield five minutes more to my colleague.

Mr. THOMPSON. I will ask the Clerk to continue the reading.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF THE UNITED STATES ATTORNEY,
WESTERN DISTRICT OF OKLAHOMA,
Oklahoma City, May 7, 1916.

The ATTORNEY GENERAL, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have the honor to reply to your letter CS 37E 11, of April 5, 1916, requesting an expression of my views regarding H. R. 11148, entitled "A bill transferring the counties of Osage and Pawnee from the western judicial district of the United States court in the State of Oklahoma to the eastern judicial district of said court in said State for judicial purposes."

I am not advised as to what has occasioned the introduction of this bill, nor the interests proposed to be served thereby. However, there has heretofore been some agitation among the attorneys of Pawhuska, Osage County, looking to securing a Federal court at Pawhuska, and I am constrained to believe that these attorneys have inspired this bill in the hope of at least procuring a Federal court nearer them, as Tulsa is just across the line of Osage County and nearer than any of the court towns in the western district. I do not know of any interest of the Government to be served by such change, except possibly some expense of witnesses in the event the cases arising in Osage and Pawnee Counties are tried at Tulsa. However, there are no court divisions in either district, and, unless the cases arising in Osage and Pawnee Counties are tried at Tulsa, there would be no saving of expense, as the other court towns appear to be no nearer than Guthrie, Oklahoma City, and Enid in the western district.

The court cases arising in Pawnee and Osage Counties are tried either at Guthrie, Oklahoma City, or Enid, principally at Guthrie, thus furnishing three terms of court each year to dispose of the cases arising in these counties, which is greatly to the interest of the Government in both civil and criminal cases. I am of the opinion that no three court towns in the eastern district can dispose of this business at any less expense of witnesses.

A large volume of business comes from Osage County to this office, particularly since there has been no tribal attorney for the Osages. Much of it is disposed of without the necessity of court action. However, I would estimate that Osage County furnishes one-eighth of the criminal cases for this district, consisting almost wholly of disposing of liquor to Indians or introducing liquor on Indian allotments or reservations, also more civil cases in which the Government is interested than from any other Indian agency in this district. The civil business from Osage County has been increasing, and I believe will continue to increase for some time to come.

Pawnee County furnishes its quota of Government business, about on an average with the other counties embracing Indian agencies, except Osage and Kiowa Agencies.

There is no necessity for such a proposed change in this district. Our court dockets are more nearly up and cleared of cases than ever in the history of the court. Every criminal case on the docket for trial wherein arrests have been made is assigned for trial at the present term of court except five, in four of which all of the defendants have not yet been taken into custody, and for this reason were not assigned for trial. The grand jury now in session will probably return 50 new indictments, but these will likely be disposed of at the present term and at the Enid term commencing June 5. Thus the criminal docket, which a year ago was far behind, will be practically clear with the exception of new indictments returned by the present grand jury now in session. We can continue to keep the criminal docket of cases for trial practically clear in this district at the close of each term of court.

The clerk of the court informs me that there are now 60 civil law cases pending, 19 equity cases, and 3 bankruptcy cases in this district, and that a large majority of the civil cases that are at issue will be disposed of by July 1. The clerk informs me also that the entire docket is more nearly clear of cases than ever in the history of the court. This has been accomplished by steady and rapid work on the part of all the court officials. Day and night sessions of court during the trial of criminal cases is the rule. My entire office force work under high pressure practically all the time, and the amount of work, especially during terms of court, which are in practically continuous session for 10 months of the year, require my office force to work in the office and in the court room practically every night.

In view of the foregoing, I can not see any necessity for any change in the district at this time or any interest of the Government to be served by such change.

Respectfully,

JOHN A. FAIN,
United States Attorney.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. THOMPSON. I ask my colleague for three minutes more.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. How much time have I left?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has 30 minutes left.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I yield to my colleague three minutes more.

Mr. THOMPSON. I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the letter from the district attorney for the eastern district of Oklahoma.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by printing in the RECORD the document referred to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letter is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF UNITED STATES ATTORNEY,
EASTERN DISTRICT OF OKLAHOMA,
Muskogee, Okla., April 8, 1916.

The ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your letter of April 5, 1916 (C. S. 37 E 11), suggesting that the department had been requested to furnish information regarding H. R. 11148, entitled "A bill transferring the counties of Osage and Pawnee from the western judicial district of the United States court in the State of Oklahoma to the eastern judicial district of said court in said State, for judicial purposes," the substance of said bill being to transfer Osage and Pawnee Counties from the western to the eastern district of Oklahoma.

You request that I furnish you with an expression of my views as to the proposed legislation at the earliest practicable date.

The volume of business before the court of this district is so great that the docket now is far behind, and Judge Campbell is very greatly overworked.

For the hearing of equity cases the court is in almost continuous session. By reason of this very large amount of work requiring such continuous application, Judge Campbell is not enjoying good health.

The work of our office drags somewhat because of Judge Campbell's inability to give consideration to the numerous pleadings that necessarily have to be presented. During the term of my service as district attorney, instead of the litigation in the Federal court growing lighter, it has steadily grown heavier. Not only is this true with reference to litigation instituted by the Government, but also with reference to litigation instituted by private individuals. From my knowledge of the situation, growing out of a long residence in this district and my experience in this office, I am of the deliberate opinion that the work in the district, as presently constituted, is, and for many years will be, too much for one judge.

As suggested above, I feel that under present conditions, there is a necessity for a division of the work now before the court in this district. In this connection, I suggest that the law relating to real property in the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations is similar, and that in the Seminole, Creek, and Cherokee Nations is somewhat similar, but different from that in the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations. There is also a similarity of industry in the Cherokee and Creek Nations with that in the Osage and Pawnee country, so that if the Cherokee, Creek, Seminole, Osage, and Pawnee countries should be placed in one judicial district, I should think it would be quite advisable. There will be sufficient work to keep the court quite busy for many years. The same is true of the Choctaw and Chickasaw country.

My judgment is that the division of this district, as suggested above, and the creation of an additional Federal judicial district would be a matter of great economy not only to private litigants but also to the Government. The additional expense now incurred by the Government in the bringing of witnesses from remote parts of the district to the places of holding court and the service of process is much greater than would be the salaries of the officers of a new court.

As suggested above, the work of the Federal court during my term of office has increased rather than diminished. I am informed this has been true since the creation of the court. My judgment of conditions in the eastern half of the State, including Osage and Pawnee Counties, is such as to lead me to believe that litigation in the Federal court will increase and continue to increase for many years. Another reason why I suggest the creation of an additional Federal judicial district is that the habits, customs, and interests of the Indian people, as well as all other residents in the Cherokee, Creek, Seminole, Osage, and Pawnee countries, are similar. Therefore litigation arising in this section of the State could be more easily disposed of and the law more accurately determined if all of it was presented to one judge for consideration. The same situation exists in the southern end of the State, including the Choctaw and Chickasaw country.

If the eastern district should be so re-formed as to comprise that territory now in the eastern district north of the Canadian River, including Osage and Pawnee Counties, which territory would also include the Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole Nations, and a new district should be created south of the Canadian River, including the Choctaw and Chickasaw country, I think it would be advisable from every standpoint. My suggestion of territory to be embraced in the proposed eastern and southern districts is intended to be general.

I think the business now before the court is too much for one judge to attend to, and of course the adding of Osage and Pawnee Counties to the business now before the court without a division of the district would simply mean an additional congestion of an already congested docket.

I take the liberty of making this full explanation and proposing the creation of an additional Federal judicial district in response to your letter in order that you may understand the situation as it appears to me.

As I view the situation, I think the creation of an additional judicial district is not only advisable but almost imperative if litigation instituted in the United States court in the territory now embraced in the eastern district of Oklahoma shall be attended to with the proper dispatch.

It therefore seems to me that it would be advisable that this bill should become a law, in conjunction with a bill creating a southern Federal judicial district in this State.

Respectfully,

L. H. SINEBAUGH,
United States Attorney.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I will state that the United States attorney for the eastern district of Oklahoma and the United States attorney for the western district, the judge for the eastern district and the judge for the western district all report against this bill. They all agree that the work in the western district is up, and that the work in the eastern district is three or four years behind, and that if these counties are transferred it will be necessary to create a new district. That is the report of these men.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to read a telegram from the county attorney of Pawnee County addressed to me, as follows:

PAWNEE, OKLA., March 29, 1916.

Hon. J. B. THOMPSON,
Congress Hall Hotel, Washington, D. C.:

I as for one am opposed to the bill to put Pawnee County in eastern Federal judicial district, and believe that the majority of the people of the county are of the same opinion.

J. A. MCCOLLUM, County Attorney.

In addition to all this, the attorney general in his letter to my colleague, Mr. DAVENPORT, which was put in the RECORD on the 3d of April, says to Mr. DAVENPORT that this bill ought not to pass—he says that in effect, although he does not say it in so many words—unless there is a rearrangement of the districts down there in which certain counties are taken out of the eastern district and put in the western district. That letter has already appeared in the RECORD. For that reason, Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the bill, and I think the people in our State are opposed to it, and I hope the bill will not pass. As much as I love my colleague and would like to see him win in this fight, I can not go against the wishes of my State. I want to say that if it had not been for my colleague, this bill never would have been reported. It is a Davenport bill and not a Pawnee-Osage bill.

Mr. Speaker, I recognize I am speaking to a House where no quorum is present, and when we defeat them by a vote of those who are present they will call for a quorum, and when gentlemen come in they will vote for the committee report without regard to the fact that the committee reported this bill without showing the courtesy to Mr. MORGAN, who is a member of the Judiciary Committee, or to myself, a Member of the House, that they were considering the bill.

I rest content, however, in the knowledge that those who know the provisions of the bill will vote against it and that the bill will never become a law. I assure gentlemen who vote for this bill that it will never get started on its legislative course in the Senate, where those who oppose will have a fair chance with those who favor it—a condition which has not been permitted in the House. [Applause.]

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Speaker, I have explained the bill in detail as to the situation down there. We come back to the same proposition that I stated. My colleagues have presented the objections as they claim, but they are only argumentative objections. I want you to consider the language of both the trial judges. They both admit that it would be economy to the Government and a convenience to the people situated in the two counties. I ask this House if they are going to consider this position from the standpoint of the Federal officers who have to do perhaps a little more work. My colleague is altogether mistaken about its being my bill. It makes no difference to me, as far as I am individually concerned. The record shows, with one exception, that every man that has spoken on this proposition in either county is in favor of it. It is easy enough to understand why some gentlemen should object to it; they do not want the bread and butter money expended at the places of holding court in their district taken away from them, and they have no consideration for the men who have to travel with their witnesses in civil lawsuits to attend court. My colleagues are not considering that proposition. Neither of my colleagues are considering that. Now, as to the question of the crowded docket in the eastern district, we have plenty of business there. I call your attention to the fact that on the docket of Tulsa there was but 15 or 16 criminal cases and 17 civil cases for the month's docket. My colleagues know that you do not have to try civil cases anywhere else except the place that is nearest and most convenient to you, unless you, in open court, agree to try the case at some other place. The grand jury sits in different places, and if a defendant demands it and asks for it he is permitted to have his case tried at the nearest place of holding court.

Now, the gentleman's statement of the docket at Muskogee is not correct. I will tell you about the 3,000 cases; that has been used for an argument for a long time. There are about 344 separate cases now on the docket. There are a lot of people named in these cases, and in nearly every instance one case settles five or six thousand cases. There are some thirteen hundred of them on the docket now; that is, that many defendants named in the cases. I say to the House that if you gentlemen believe that the court officials should be given consideration instead of the citizens of these counties you will not vote for the bill. I am surprised at my colleague that he should take this position for the paltry hope of winning for his district, and that he should seek to bring in here and try to prejudice you by trying to scare you by saying that they will try to get another district. But concede his argument, and I want to ask you gentlemen of this House, are you going to vote under that scare to force men who have property involved in a lawsuit to take their witnesses miles away simply because they want them to come there for what little money they spend?

Mr. IGOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVENPORT. Yes.

Mr. IGOE. Is it not true that the gentleman favored an additional judge to the circuit court of appeals?

Mr. DAVENPORT. Yes; and with all his acumen, shrewdness, and ingenuity he is standing up for the bill now which has been reported and is on the calendar.

Mr. THOMPSON. That does not affect the creation of another district down in Oklahoma, does it?

Mr. DAVENPORT. No; and this bill does not affect it.

Mr. THOMPSON. Do not the district judges and the district attorneys all protest against this bill?

Mr. DAVENPORT. They may say what they please; I have a right to my opinion. Everybody says that it is more convenient and more economical to take them to Tulsa——

Mr. THOMPSON. I will say that that is for the reason, as the gentleman knows, that there is no division between the court towns, and you take a man from Tulsa to Ardmore——

Mr. DAVENPORT. I did not yield for an argument. The gentleman knows that it is not true that you have to go all over the district. You do not have to have your cases tried anywhere else except in the court that is the nearest to where you live. My colleagues know that, because they have been practicing in the Federal courts ever since they became constitutional Federal courts in Oklahoma.

Oh, they say that judges say this and that, and the district attorneys. Mr. Speaker, I have never yet seen a Government official in all of my experience of several years who was overworked.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. The gentleman surely does not refer to Congressmen?

Mr. DAVENPORT. I do not refer to any one, but I have never yet seen it. That is the situation. If I were intruding upon some one's territory or were presenting a matter here that would inconvenience the people of those districts, then I say to you that I would not stand here and argue it. If it was in one of my colleagues' districts and did not touch my district, except to take some court business out of my district, I would not be raising my voice against it, but I would say to my fellows that I would join them for the convenience of the people. But this affects no one's district, except it brings those people down here, where they ought to be. That is the situation. There is no alarming condition. The district attorney or one of the judges said that unless a rearrangement of the district is made such and such a thing would happen. I am honestly for that proposition, but the bill was before the Judiciary Committee, and my colleagues knew or ought to have known it, because one of them is on that committee, and if they believe the districts should be rearranged by Congress, then I say that the bill is open for amendment. The bill was open for amendment before the committee, and not a single one of them was heard. If this bill fails to pass, here are the facts: Some of my unfortunate constituents who get into trouble have to go down to Enid or Oklahoma City or to Guthrie and spend some money for hotel bills and railroad fare and per diem, and my colleagues Mr. THOMPSON and Mr. MORGAN are willing to have them do it in order that they may spend that money in their congressional districts.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] such time as he desires to use.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, there are a great many ways of accomplishing a given result. If you can not do it one way, then do it in another. No one to-day would think it proper to vote for an additional judge for the eastern district of Oklahoma; but if this bill passes to-day, then to-morrow any of us would be justified in voting for an additional judge for this district, or even more, or to divide the eastern district into two districts instead of having only one. Here is a case where the eastern district is away behind in its business and the western district is up in its business. It is now proposed to transfer counties from the western district, where the business is up to date, to the eastern district, where the business is away behind.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. THOMPSON. I beg to say to the gentleman that there is a bill now pending just for that purpose.

Mr. MANN. Yes; but it has not been reported.

Mr. THOMPSON. I know; but a report from the Attorney General is being requested upon it.

Mr. MANN. Very well. I say that I have no doubt that that is one of the objects of the bill. The western district is able to take care of its business. If this were a bill to transfer two counties from the eastern district to the western district, there would be some justice in it. But here are two districts, one behind and one up to date, and instead of trying to bring them both up to date, trying to fix it so that one will not have too much to do, it seems to be an effort to add to the burdens of the already overworked one. It is true everywhere that the willing worker has work added to his burden, but it is not wise legislation for us to add to the burdens of the eastern district, which are now too great, and take away from the burdens of the western district, where now they do not have enough to do. I do not think this bill ought to receive favorable consideration from any body of legislators which has the slightest intention of looking after the welfare of the public. [Applause.]

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I am in a way personally interested in this bill. We all know how these things are. These districts were made before I was in Congress and before the other gentlemen from Oklahoma were in Congress. They were established years ago by the enabling act which brought Oklahoma in as a State. I do not think it is just right to take from one what has been deliberately given to it and give it to another. I say very frankly that I would oppose taking from my district or from any other district that which it now has and giving it to another district, unless there was absolutely some good, sufficient reason based upon the interest of the public which demanded it, and that reason should be made plain to the House before action is taken. I am upon the Judiciary Committee, and it so happened that this bill was reported out at a time when I was absent attending other official duties; otherwise I should have put in a minority report. I do not know whether the Members of this House can see this map, but here is Osage County, and here is the western district, running in an irregular line. Down here is Guthrie, with the railroad running directly up in this direction, and over here is Enid, in my district, with the railroad running directly from Tulsa to Enid through Osage and Pawnee Counties. Possibly it is true that in mere distance there is a little difference in favor of Tulsa, probably an average of 25 miles, but there is only one intervening county between those two counties, so that, as United States business is generally transacted, any of these towns is very convenient. But leaving aside any personal interest any of my constituents might have which would lead me to oppose this change, which, so far as you are concerned, is immaterial, as has been so well said by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and by my colleague [Mr. THOMPSON], the one fact that in the eastern district the business is three years behind and in the western district the business is practically up to date is of itself sufficient reason why this House should not and, in my judgment, will not transfer two of the counties which contribute mostly to the business in the western district to the overloaded district on the eastern side.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. So that the actual condition would be, if the bill proposed by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DAVENPORT] should pass, that it would transfer business from a court that already has its business current to another court which is three years behind; and if that be the case, there is absolutely no justification for the passage of this bill.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Certainly not. The only argument which is worth while considering which the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DAVENPORT] presented is that looking to the convenience of people.

But, my friends, the question of convenience after all depends upon the promptness with which the business is transacted. If these two counties are transferred to the eastern district, lawyers, clients, and officers will go down to Tulsa and hang around there for weeks waiting to have their cases tried; but if they remain where they are they will go to Guthrie or Oklahoma City or Enid where their business is transacted promptly and expeditiously, and hence as a matter of convenience it is better to do this than it would be to transfer where you would have to wait weeks and months to have your cases tried. Many of you are lawyers and know something about courts and know how inconvenient it is, how costly it is, and how annoying it is to have to go to court and wait around there days and days before your case is called.

Mr. MADDEN. So there would be no economy at all in the matter of saving of railroad fare, as that would be a mere bagatelle as compared with the amount of money expended at hotels, and so forth, waiting for the consideration of cases?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Absolutely.

Mr. CARAWAY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I will.

Mr. CARAWAY. How many cases are pending on the docket at Tulsa now?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Well, that is not a fair question.

Mr. CARAWAY. The gentleman does not object to people knowing it?

Mr. THOMPSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. In just a moment. As the gentleman knows, we have in the district four, five, or six court towns, and the judge tries cases in these various towns without regard to the county in which they arose, and the business of another county can be brought to Tulsa.

Mr. THOMPSON. There is not a case pending at Tulsa; there is not a case pending at any place except Muskogee in the eastern district, because they have but one clerk there; they do not have a deputy clerk at the other places; they simply farm out these cases and take them over when they get ready to try them——

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, well——

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. That does not happen to be the record.

Mr. THOMPSON. That is the record.

Mr. CARAWAY. No; it is not.

Mr. THOMPSON. I say it is the record.

Mr. CARAWAY. The gentleman knows a deputy is assigned to these cases——

Mr. THOMPSON. At Muskogee. The gentleman does not know anything about it. I know, and I feel sorry for the gentleman.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Now, the fact is, if there is to be any change, as has been suggested, there ought to be a readjustment and bringing from the eastern district some of these counties over to the western district, and that matter ought to be thoroughly gone over before the proper committee to see whether or not a proper and better adjustment might be made, but in the end it must be made by transfer from the eastern district to the western district and not from the western to the easern district, so I hope this bill will be voted down.

Mr. IGOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I will.

Mr. IGOE. The gentleman knows there are several bills pending before the committee for the creation of an additional district——

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. An additional circuit.

Mr. IGOE. Does not the gentleman believe the condition of business in Oklahoma now justifies the creation of an additional district court?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. That, of course, does not depend upon this.

Mr. IGOE. The statement was made——

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. As the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] so forcibly said, if you increase the business of the eastern district then it would be justifiable for this House to make two districts of the eastern.

Mr. IGOE. I am speaking of the whole State, the condition of business in both districts as they stand to-day.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I say, as a matter of fact, the business in the eastern district now is so crowded as to be justified in giving another judge.

Mr. IGOE. Does the gentleman believe we ought to have three districts in Oklahoma now?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Well, I believe if properly divided they could do the business, but it is not properly divided.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has used 10 minutes.

Mr. CARLIN. Has the gentleman used all of his time?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I believe I have no further time to use.

Mr. CARLIN. If the gentleman has concluded, I am going to conclude in 10 minutes.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. All right.

Mr. CARLIN. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY].

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Speaker, I am in a very fortunate position in this case, because I have no real interest in the outcome. That is more than either of the gentlemen, I presume, who have addressed the House can say.

I know the bill was pending before the Committee on the Judiciary and came to a subcommittee of which I was acting chairman. After being heard by this subcommittee it was unanimously reported to the full committee with a favorable recommendation, and after lying there some days it was unanimously reported favorably by the full committee. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN] is a member of that committee. The truth about the matter is the gentleman had not heard from his restaurant keepers at that time and did not know he would object to the bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARAWAY. I will yield.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Does not the gentleman believe the rights of restaurant keepers are as good as lawyers?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes, sir——

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. And has not the gentleman restaurant keepers in his district?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes, sir; and the restaurant keepers of Oklahoma are being represented on this floor by the two gentlemen from Oklahoma to-day. Now, there are eight Representatives from the State of Oklahoma.

The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN] is a member of the Committee on the Judiciary, before which this bill was pending and by which it was reported. He never opened his mouth in opposition to the bill while it was pending before that committee, and no living soul ever heard from him any objection he had to this bill.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Arkansas yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I would like to know if the gentleman ever came to "the gentleman from Oklahoma" representing this district and asked him anything about this bill, whether he was in favor of it or whether he thought it was a good thing or not?

Mr. CARAWAY. I will answer that question in this way: Does the gentleman from Oklahoma want to say to the people of Oklahoma that he does not speak for them in his own committee unless some one asks him what he thinks about a matter affecting them?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. If I had charge of a bill which affected any colleague of mine on a committee, I would ask him something about it, whether he thought it was a good bill, and whether he thought it ought to be passed, before I would report it. [Applause.]

Mr. CARAWAY. And the gentleman would not oppose it unless somebody should ask him to do so? Is that it?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I do think that a gentleman in charge of a bill owes it as a courtesy to me to consult me about it if he thought it would affect me. I know, of course, that the gentleman from Arkansas does not mean any offense. I am sure the gentleman's action was thoughtless on his part. I accept the gentleman's explanation, but in this case I think the gentleman ought to have asked me about this bill.

Mr. CARAWAY. Is that the reason why the gentleman did not oppose it then, because I did not ask him about it?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I did not happen to be there when the bill was up; otherwise I would have opposed it.

Mr. CARAWAY. Is the gentleman certain that he was not in the committee room when it was reported?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I will say this, that I have no knowledge of it. If I was in the committee room I was asleep, or else I was captivated by the speeches that were made by the gentleman. [Laughter.]

Mr. CARAWAY. I will say that if the gentleman was captivated by anything it was not by a speech. No one opposed the bill then, and if the gentleman had any opposition to offer to it he failed to make it known. It was pending there for some time, and no gentleman from Oklahoma then opposed it, so far as I have ever heard.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is a rather peculiar situation here. The city of Tulsa is situated in one of the counties which it is proposed to remove from one district of Oklahoma to another, and it so happens that people living in the counties sought to be transferred could, by merely walking across the street, be in the court room if this change were made. If it is not made, they will either have to go to Enid or to Oklahoma City, in the district of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN].

Mr. THOMPSON. Guthrie and Oklahoma City are in my district. Enid is in the district of my colleague Mr. MORGAN.

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, Mr. Speaker, I did not yield to the gentleman for a speech. The gentleman has made 8 or 10 speeches already without shedding any light on the subject. [Laughter.]

Mr. THOMPSON. Oh, I shall not try to enlighten the gentleman. He is not constituted so as to receive any enlightenment. [Laughter.]

Mr. CARAWAY. What is the use of the gentleman coming in here and talking about certain court dockets when the court dockets show absolutely the contrary to what he says as to how many cases are pending at Tulsa? He knows and I know that you have to certify a case down to some court seat, and you must have it on the docket in order to try it. The judge or the district attorney do not simply go to a town and open up the docket and proceed to try the case. It has to be there long enough to be set down for hearing and have the jury summoned, get the parties into court with their witnesses, and then proceed to try the case in an orderly manner.

Mr. THOMPSON. Does the gentleman say that I am not honest about it?

Mr. CARAWAY. I did not mean to say that.

Mr. THOMPSON. The gentleman does not know what the facts are. I have practiced law there, and my colleague [Mr. DAVENPORT] knows about the situation there.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes.

Mr. DAVENPORT. That matter was gone into time and time again, and I think my colleague [Mr. THOMPSON] ought to let the gentleman from Arkansas finish his speech. The court assigns a docket for those places. That is the way they are assigned.

Mr. THOMPSON. They are assigned at Muskogee.

Mr. DAVENPORT. I do not know where they assign them, but the clerk's office is at Muskogee, the one headquarters in the entire district where the cases are assigned and sent to Tulsa for trial.

Mr. CARAWAY. And notice is sent how many days in advance?

Mr. DAVENPORT. About 10 days in advance.

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Arkansas yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes.

Mr. MEEKER. I merely wanted to know who was making the speech. [Laughter.]

Mr. CARAWAY. I was just getting ready to make it. I know that the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMPSON] is absolutely mistaken as to the procedure. In the court in which he most often appears I expect the rule there is for the justice who presides to sit where it is most convenient. He doubtless carries his docket around with him. I think that is the procedure. [Laughter.] But everybody who practices law in a Federal court knows that there must be some assignment of a case before it can be tried. In Oklahoma when a man is sued in a civil case in a Federal court he has the option of being tried in the court sitting nearest him. If he is indicted, whenever in his district it may have been returned, he has the right to have the cause remanded to the court nearest to him. In fact a man has the right there to be tried in the court nearest to him in preference to anybody else's court; he has the right to be tried in the court of his own choosing. Here we have a situation where a man in Tulsa could walk across the street and be in court in two minutes' time after he left his front door, and yet it is proposed, if this bill be defeated, to require him to go up into the district represented by Mr. MORGAN or Mr. THOMPSON, as now, to be tried. Each one of these gentlemen has denied that he is opposed to this bill because he feared it would lead to the creation of a new district court in Oklahoma, and that is right, for I will bet my head to a jew's-harp—and I have no use whatever for a jew's-harp, because I do not know how to play it——

Mr. LANGLEY. If the gentleman can not play a jew's-harp, his education has been sadly neglected. [Laughter.]

Mr. CARAWAY. But, as I said, I will bet if you did propose to-morrow to establish a new court in Oklahoma it would command the earnest support and vote of both of the gentlemen opposing this bill to-day.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes.

Mr. EMERSON. About the only objection presented to this bill is the condition of the court docket. Can the gentleman explain that?

Mr. CARAWAY. Here is the condition of the docket: They have more lawsuits down there than any place else in the world, and they are all about the same thing, and when you have tried one of them, you have tried them all. [Laughter.] They have 21,000 cases now on the docket in the eastern district, according to the statement of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMPSON], but he knows and everybody else knows that all those cases affect certain Indian rights to lease, and when you determine whether the Indian can or can not do that, the cases are settled by that one case. Of course when a lawyer gets a client down in Oklahoma he rushes into court, although he might easily sit down and say, "This case of Jones will settle your case." But of course it does not carry with it the same right to charge fees that it would if he had taken the case into court himself. [Laughter.]

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARAWAY. No; I want to finish.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I just want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. CARAWAY. Well, now, is the gentleman awake? I do not want to take advantage of him while he sleeps. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Arkansas yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. The gentleman seems to be reflecting upon the lawyers in Oklahoma, on the eastern side, and I understand that most of them came from Arkansas.

Mr. CARAWAY. I think that is true. We got after them there, and they ran away and went to Oklahoma. The sheriff followed them to the State line, but could not catch them, or they would not have been in Oklahoma.

Mr. THOMPSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes.

Mr. THOMPSON. I want to say that Chief Justice White said that the ablest lawyers who came before the court were those who came from Oklahoma.

Mr. CARAWAY. Who?

Mr. THOMPSON. All of them.

Mr. CARAWAY. That all of the lawyers from Oklahoma were the ablest lawyers before the court.

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. All right. That will be news to everybody else. [Laughter.] I think, however, that the gentleman is just as accurate in that statement as in the other statements he made about this bill.

I think he is entitled to as serious consideration on that statement as he is on any other statement made in opposition to this bill. It shows just about as much familiarity with the character of the lawyers who appear before the Supreme Court as with the facts about the court docket in Tulsa or any other court town in Oklahoma.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. CARLIN. I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. How much time has each side used? I understood the other side had only 10 minutes more.

Mr. CARLIN. I had 30 or 40 minutes, but I said I would use only 10.

Mr. CARAWAY. I want only a minute. Here are eight Members from Oklahoma. Three Members are affected. I am informed rather credibly that 90 per cent of the people affected are in favor of this bill. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMPSON] who is opposing it is in rather a peculiar situation. He was first suggesting the necessity of rearranging the entire State and giving a new judgeship to the eastern district of Oklahoma if this bill passed. He was asked over and over again if he was opposed to a new judgeship in Oklahoma, and he said he was not. Now, if he is not, what reason did he give why he was opposed to this bill? There is not a line in his statement from beginning to end that constitutes a valid reason why the people living in these counties, almost under the shadow of the court building, should not have their trials at home. Let the cases be heard by people who know them and know their witnesses. The gentleman did say that the judge in the eastern district of Oklahoma knew more about certain treaty rights than anybody else. Now, gentleman, if that is the fact, he ought to go home and have an insurance policy placed on that judge's life, because that judge might die and all the wisdom in Oklahoma die with him. [Laughter.]

It strikes me that if they have only one man who knows anything about Indian treaties, we should better transfer these two counties and commence to educate somebody else before that one judge becomes incapacitated to hear the cases, so that a little learning may be left in Oklahoma about Indian treaties.

Gentlemen, I would not have said anything about this, except that this is the report of the committee, and I happened to have made that report. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] based his entire objection to the measure on the ground that it would call for a new judge. I take it there is nothing in the record which warrants that statement. I also express it as my own individual opinion, without knowing whether the judge is or is not overworked, that the courts of this land are created for the people, and every man ought to have the right to have speedy justice. He ought to be permitted to have his cause tried where the expense incident to carrying his witnesses is not prohibitive. If you agree with me, you are going to vote to remove these two counties, so that the people living right there in the shadow of the courthouse, across the street from the courthouse, may have their causes tried at home instead of traveling up to Enid or Oklahoma City, 100 or 150 miles away, and paying railroad fare and mileage for the witnesses, and being put to all the expense incident to a trial in a foreign jurisdiction. Under the law in Oklahoma, confuse it as they may, a man has the right to have his cause tried in the court nearest to where he resides. All of us who know anything about the trial of cases in Federal courts know that if a man is indicted for a crime he has to bear the expense of carrying his witnesses to the place of trial to make his defense, and if he is acquitted he is frequently made a bankrupt by the expense incident to showing that he is innocent of any wrongdoing. The people ought to have the right to have decided these matters at home. No man living in either one of these counties has protested against the removal of the two counties from one district to the other. All the opposition arises among the people living in Guthrie, Enid, and Oklahoma City, 100 or 150 miles away. Incidentally the Federal judge said he thought he had too much to do. Well, I am not so much concerned about how much work the Federal judge does as I am concerned that the poor people living in these counties shall have speedy justice and without prohibitive expense.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman says he wants these poor people to have speedy justice?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is it true that if this change is made you put them into a district the calendar of which is already three years behind?

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, no.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I thought that was admitted.

Mr. CARAWAY. The other gentleman admitted it. I did not. They admitted it in behalf of their own case. The docket at Tulsa shows the assignment of 31 cases for trial at a court session of 30 days. There were 17 criminal cases for peddling whisky. The gentleman knows how long it takes to try one of those. The judge asks the defendant if he is guilty, and he says, "No, sir"; and the witness says he is guilty, and the court says, "$100 and 30 days." That is the trial of a whisky case in the Federal court. [Laughter.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I know nothing about this case. I heard nothing about it until the discussion began; but I understand the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DAVENPORT] admits that there are a thousand civil cases untried.

Mr. DAVENPORT. I said there were 354 cases which are known as Indian land cases; that those involve about 30,000 different defendants; and that all but about 1,300 had been settled or adjusted. That was the statement I tried to make as clearly as I could.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. All but about 1,300 have been settled.

Mr. CARAWAY. And one or two cases will settle the other 1,300.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. These two counties, as I understand, are now in a district the calendar of which is cleared up.

Mr. CARAWAY. If the gentleman will pardon me, it may be that in some of the cases where defendants have elected to have their trial near their homes, it may be two or three years before they get to trial. A whole lot of defendants in Oklahoma, you know, do not want a speedy trial. If they have got a bond, they had rather stand on their bond than have a speedy trial of their cases. At Tulsa there are 31 cases and 30 days to try them—1 a day. There are 17 criminal cases, and every one for selling whisky to the Indians. It is a thriving industry, and one not likely to fail, and I presume the same number of cases and the same defendants are liable to be on the docket next time. But it is evident that any man living in these counties can have his case set down for trial and get a speedy trial; but he can not do it if he is compelled to go to Guthrie and gets into the hands of those restaurant keepers there. He may stay a month. I think the bill ought to pass. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the enacting clause.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the enacting clause.

The question was being taken, when Mr. DAVENPORT made the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma makes the point of no quorum. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 137, nays 146, answered "present" 18, not voting 133, as follows:

For the balance of the session:

Mr. GARNER with Mr. BARCHFELD.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to withdraw my vote of "yea" and answer "present," as I am paired.

The name of Mr. PETERS was called, and he answered "Present."

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, is the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. BARCHFELD, recorded?

The SPEAKER. He is not recorded.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to withdraw my vote of "nay" and answer "present."

The name of Mr. GARNER was called, and he answered "Present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A quorum being present, the doors were opened.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment. I move to amend, in line 9, by inserting after the word "prosecution" the words "and actions."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 9, after the word "prosecution," insert the words "and actions."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 143, nays 139, answered "present" 18, not voting 134, as follows:

So the bill was passed.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. BARKLEY with Mr. LAFEAN.

Mr. FITZGERALD with Mr. GILLETT.

Mr. DOREMUS with Mr. DANFORTH.

Mr. KITCHIN with Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania.

Mr. CROSSER with Mr. FARR.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee with Mr. CHARLES.

Mr. HOLLAND with Mr. CAPSTICK.

Mr. HAY with Mr. BUTLER.

Mr. CALDWELL with Mr. CURRY.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. CARLIN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. DAVIS of Texas, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. ASHBROOK, for one week, on account of important business.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Post Office appropriation bill (H. R. 10484), to disagree to the Senate amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate, and that the Speaker appoint the conferees.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Post Office appropriation bill, to disagree to the Senate amendments and agree to the conference asked by the Senate. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Chair announces the following conferees:

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MOON, Mr. FINLEY, and Mr. STEENERSON.

CLAIMS OF THE STATE OF MASSACHUSETTS.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Speaker, I call up for consideration the bill (S. 3346) now on the House Calendar, No. 140.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 3346) conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to adjudicate the claims of the State of Massachusetts.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the State of Massachusetts for premium paid for coin with which it paid the interest and principal of its bonds issued in the year 1861 for money borrowed and used to furnish troops of the State for the service of the United States during the Civil War, and also its claim for interest and premium paid for coin used in payment of such interest on bonds issued for money borrowed and expended at the request, during said war, of the President of the United States in protecting the harbors and fortifying the coast, which claims were rejected by the Comptroller of the Treasury Department, be, and the same are hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for a determination of the law and the facts and report to Congress. The evidence of the amount of said expenditures and of the computations of such premiums made by the accounting officers of the Treasury on file in said department, as furnished by the State, may be considered by the court so as to relieve the State of the necessity of again filing said evidence in court.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Speaker, I do not understand there is any opposition to this bill. It is a unanimous report. Unless it develops there is some opposition to it, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DANFORTH] to make an explanation of the bill.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. Speaker, I dislike to take up the time of the House, but for the benefit of gentlemen present who perhaps do not know about this bill, I will say that it is the claim introduced by the State of Massachusetts based upon an expenditure made by that State for the purchase of gold with which to pay interest on these bonds which were issued in 1861 and 1862 for equipping troops, and, further, for fortifying the harbor of Boston during the war of 1861 to 1865.

Both these claims have been passed upon by the Auditor of the Treasury and both were allowed, but the Comptroller of the Treasury struck them out and refused to pass them on the ground that the purchase of gold and payment of interest on these bonds in specie was nothing but a gift by the State of Massachusetts to the holders of the bonds.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DANFORTH. Certainly.

Mr. COX. How much does the State of Massachusetts actually claim the Government owes them on the interest claim which Massachusetts makes?

Mr. DANFORTH. I have not the figures before me, but my recollection is that it is a trifle over half a million dollars on the purchase of the gold.

Mr. COX. Does the gentleman mean now by that half a million is the interest charge alone?

Mr. DANFORTH. The bonds have been paid and the interest would have been allowed and paid, as I understand it, if it had not been for the question of the purchase of the gold.

Mr. COX. I find in the report accompanying this bill an item here for strengthening Boston Harbor——

Mr. DANFORTH. Yes.

Mr. COX (continuing). And fortifying its coasts. The report says that that was at the request of the President and Secretary of War, with the understanding that the amount expended by Massachusetts should be reimbursed. The report says that that amount was $209,885.61. Now, in the $500,000 which the gentleman claims the Government owes the State of Massachusetts, is this $209,000 embraced or is the interest included?

Mr. DANFORTH. I said $500,000; that covers, as I understand it, the claims of the State.

Mr. COX. The entire claim?

Mr. DANFORTH. I may be wrong about that; I have not the figures, but that is my recollection.

Mr. COX. Where is the law or where is the authority on which the State of Massachusetts claims the President of the United States and the Secretary of War authorized the State of Massachusetts to fortify the city of Boston with the understanding that the Government would reimburse them? I can not find it.

Mr. DANFORTH. Well, I have assumed on the statement presented at the hearing before the committee that it was a fact, and I am not prepared to refer the gentleman to the law.

Mr. COX. Has the gentleman in his possession or has he ever read the law, or is there any record on file in the Department of War whereby the President—at that time Mr. Lincoln—or his then Secretary of War, agreed to reimburse the city of Boston if they would fortify that city?

Mr. DANFORTH. I have not any doubt there is such a request and that it was duly authorized to be made by the President and the Secretary of War.

Mr. COX. That is what I am trying to get at. There was an act passed in 1861 making reimbursements to the various States that would equip troops for the Army. That was somewhat enlarged by an act which passed Congress in, I think, 1862; but the two acts passed by Congress upon which this whole claim is bottomed and based do not have any reference at all to the fortifications of any city.

Mr. DANFORTH. It was not the fortification of the city. It was for the strengthening of the fortifications in the harbor, in Boston Harbor.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield a little further?

Mr. DANFORTH. Surely.

Mr. COX. Did the State of Massachusetts expend this entire $3,000,000 for the purpose of equipping troops?

Mr. DANFORTH. I do not think there is any doubt about that. Those facts are established.

Mr. COX. Did it expend any of it in equipping troops, or did it expend it in the fortifications?

Mr. DANFORTH. Bonds were issued on two different dates for the two different purposes. There is no question about that.

Mr. COX. The gentleman would not claim, would he, that the State of Massachusetts had any right to be reimbursed for the fortification of Boston Harbor unless Congress had by authority of law offered to reimburse the city of Boston, or any other city that would fortify, would he?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. DANFORTH. Yes.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say to my friend from Indiana that it does not seem to be within the bounds of reason that the State of Massachusetts would go in and fortify forts owned and controlled by the Federal Government unless with the authority and probably at the request of the Federal Government. These forts were the property of the United States, and not of the State of Massachusetts, and the State was not expending this money upon these defenses except as it was authorized and probably requested to do by the United States.

Mr. COX. I do not know what are the bounds of authority or of propriety or impropriety. What I am trying to get at is, Is there any authority, any contract, any law that was passed by Congress wherein Congress assured the city of Boston or the State of Massachusetts or any other State of the North that if they fortified their cities they would be reimbursed for their expenditure? That is what I am trying to get at.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield, and to whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. DANFORTH. I will yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT].

Mr. GILLETT. I think I can answer to the gentleman's satisfaction. That debt has been once recognized by Congress. In 1884 Congress passed a bill reimbursing the State of Massachusetts for the principal of this money, on the distinct ground that it had been advanced at the request of the Lincoln administration, and this amount that we are now asking for is not for the principal, but for the interest on that principal; and the reason why Massachusetts did not then ask for the interest is that it supposed, as the other States did, I think, that what the State had paid for interest was not to be reimbursed. But later than that the State of New York brought in a claim for interest, and it went to the United States Supreme Court, and the Supreme Court decided that interest was a valid claim. Since then interest charges have been paid to all the other States, and they would have been paid to the State of Massachusetts, except that in its claims, which were pending in 1884, Massachusetts had not said anything about interest, and in the act of Congress paying it it simply said, "Pay the claim that is on file," and the claim for interest was not on file. The principal was paid, and thus the fact was recognized that the original amount was advanced by Massachusetts for the benefit of the United States.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly.

Mr. COX. Right at that time what claim was on file? Was it only the interest claim or the claim for the fortification of the city of Boston?

Mr. GILLETT. It was the claim for the principal sums expended upon the fortifications.

Mr. COX. What is governing me is the report of the committee. It is confined to two propositions. One is upon interest, which at one time was allowed by the Auditor of the War Department and then disallowed by the Comptroller of the Treasury.

Mr. GILLETT. Yes; the auditor allowed it.

Mr. COX. But the claim of $209,000 for the fortification of the city of Boston was entirely disallowed. Where is the law that ever authorized Congress to repay that?

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman is mistaken. That claim is for interest.

Mr. COX. Then, the report is wrong. It is clearly wrong.

Mr. GILLETT. No; I think not.

Mr. DANFORTH. The report says that the amount of $209,000 was paid.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York [Mr. DANFORTH] may have five minutes more.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DANFORTH. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER. Is not this bill simply a reference to the Court of Claims for ascertainment of the law and facts?

Mr. DANFORTH. Nothing whatever but that.

Mr. GARDNER. The questions asked by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] are the questions naturally to be asked in the Court of Claims. This is not a bill for the payment of any sums. It is a reference to the Court of Claims for a finding of the law and facts in the premises?

Mr. DANFORTH. That is all.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield.

Mr. DANFORTH. Yes.

Mr. GARD. May I ask if the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] is correct in the matter of interest, or is it a question of premium?

Mr. DANFORTH. It is a question of premium on the bonds of 1861, which were issued to raise money to equip the troops. In the other matter it was the interest on the bonds which were issued to fortify or strengthen the fortifications in Boston Harbor, in Massachusetts Bay.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. DANFORTH. Yes.

Mr. GILLETT. In answer to the suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] that this was not for interest, I will say that the report states it just as I said. The report at the bottom of page 2 says:

> Another item of expense disallowed at the Treasury Department related to the amount expended by Massachusetts to strengthen Boston Harbor and fortify the coast. This was done at the request of the President and Secretary of State upon the understanding that the amount expended by Massachusetts would be reimbursed. Congress, July 7, 1884, enacted that the accounting officers should examine the claim of Massachusetts incurred for this purpose, "now on file with the third auditor," and report the amount to Congress. The accounting officers found $209,885.61 should be refunded. This did not include interest or coin payment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Evidently the gentleman did not carefully read the bill. The bill provides that this is a claim of the State of Massachusetts for premium on the gold with which to pay the interest.

Mr. GILLETT. Exactly; for the interest and for the premium on the gold with which the State paid the interest. The gentleman says we did not pay the interest.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes. It is not a claim for interest paid on the bonds at all.

Mr. GILLETT. No.

Mr. MANN. It is a claim for premiums paid for coin with which it paid the interest first, and, second, also it is a claim for interest and premium paid for coin used in the payment of such interest. The interest on the bonds has already been paid by the Government to Massachusetts.

Mr. GILLETT. Exactly; on the equipment of troops.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman to say this was a claim for the interest paid by the State of Massachusetts on the bonds.

Mr. GILLETT. No. And also for the interest on coast defenses—not for the other bonds.

Mr. MANN. I have read all the claim there is.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. I yield.

Mr. RAKER. I understand the State of Massachusetts has been paid for the principal and interest of the money expended.

Mr. DANFORTH. I believe that is true as to the interest.

Mr. RAKER. And this is for the purpose of ascertaining the amount of premium the State of Massachusetts had to pay for gold at that time.

Mr. DANFORTH. Not at all.

Mr. RAKER. With which it paid the interest and with which it paid the principal.

Mr. DANFORTH. This bill is introduced for the purpose of allowing the Court of Claims to report the facts and the law on this question.

Mr. RAKER. But covering that point. The State of Massachusetts has been paid its principal and interest on these bonds.

Mr. DANFORTH. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. And it wants to submit the question to the Court of Claims to see whether or not it is entitled to the amount of premium it paid on gold for the purpose of paying the principal and interest on the bonds.

Mr. BENNET. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. DANFORTH. Certainly.

Mr. BENNET. I find by looking at the statute of 1884 that the claim on which this was based was recognized by that Congress, and that the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department were directed to examine the claims of the State of Massachusetts for expenses incurred and paid at the request of the President and Secretary of War in protecting the harbors and strengthening the fortifications on the coast. Answering the question of the gentleman from Indiana, the fact that Massachusetts was requested to strengthen its fortifications was recognized by Congress 32 years ago. The matter was referred to the accounting officer, and under that provision $209,885.61 was recommended to be refunded. And now this additional claim is as stated by the gentleman from Illinois. Am I correct about that?

Mr. DANFORTH. I believe that is correct. Unless there are further questions to be asked in regard to the purpose of this bill, I will say that it is simply to refer it to the Court of Claims to get at the facts, determine the law, and have that court report back to Congress. I trust that there will be no opposition to it.

Mr. CARLIN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox].

Mr. COX. I read from Twelfth Statutes United States, page 276, the act upon which this bill is based. It provides:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to the governor of any State or to its duly authorized agent all costs, charges, and expenses properly incurred by such State for enrolling, subsisting, clothing, supplying, arming, equipping, paying, and transporting its troops employed in aiding to suppress the present insurrection against the United States, to be settled upon proper vouchers to be filed and passed upon by the proper accounting officers of the Treasury—

And so forth, approved July 22, 1861.

This is the organic act on which this proposed bill is based. There is not a word in this act which authorized the Congress of the United States to pay anything at all to any State for fortifying and equipping its harbors. This act proposes to reimburse the States for arming, equipping, clothing, and provisioning its soldiers, not for the purpose of paying any State that has expended money in an attempt to fortify its harbors.

Mr. BENNET. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I will yield in just a moment. On page 615 of the same volume it provides that the same act should apply to the repayment of States which had provisioned and clothed soldiers before as well as after the act. I do not believe that this bill has much merit in it. I do not care what other States have done. I do not care whether my State has ever gotten any claim back or not. I do not know if it has. But the idea of a great State, even if it be my State, coming in here and trying to get a claim more than 50 years old for premiums paid for gold upon its bonds does not appeal to me.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I agreed to yield first to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET].

Mr. BENNET. I want to ask the gentleman if his attention has been called to that statute which I read a moment or two ago.

Mr. COX. Yes; I heard it. I do not think it applies, or alters the case one way or the other.

Mr. RAKER. One question I want to submit to the distinguished gentleman from Indiana is that if this claim is just and legal, the State ought to have a right to go before the Court of Claims and present it.

Mr. COX. They have all the facts down there now. Why can they not adjust the claim now with the Treasury Department, if the Comptroller of the Treasury of the United States will pass it? It is the evident purpose to get it down to the Court of Claims in the hope of getting a special finding of facts there, so as to bring stronger pressure upon Congress to get Congress to pass it ultimately. If the claim is just and meritorious and the Comptroller of the Treasury has the power and authority under the law to allow it, and all the facts are known, why fool with this bill? Why not let them adjudicate it right now?

Mr. RAKER. It will do no harm to send it to the Court of Claims.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. CARLIN. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN].

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Indiana is clearly in error. Massachusetts is not before Congress to-day asking for a claim. Massachusetts asks for the privilege of going before the Court of Claims to establish the facts in the case; and as the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] has said, what is the harm in allowing this to go to the Court of Claims? Do you want to deny the old Bay State her day in court? I can not believe it. As has been said, if this is not a legal claim it is an equitable one, and Massachusetts asks for the opportunity to prove it. The money in question came out of the pockets of her people; the Federal Government promised reimbursement. Technicalities have thus far estopped payment of this money. My friend from Indiana not only has no confidence, apparently, in the Court of Claims, but, judging from his closing statement, he has no confidence in the Congress, to which the Court of Claims will make its report. I say to the House that the members of the Judiciary Committee gave this matter very careful consideration; that theirs is a unanimous report, and I hope the House will not waste any more time on it but vote its approval now. My State simply asks for justice—no more, no less.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the funny end of this bill is so apparent that I can not refrain from calling attention to it. The Senate has taken the trouble to pass the bill, which is entitled "conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to adjudicate the claims of the State of Massachusetts." When we read the bill it is not a bill to adjudicate the claims, but to refer the claim of Massachusetts to the Court of Claims for determination of the law and facts and to report to Congress. They have messaged that bill over to us and asked our concurrence in it. They could have done all we are asked to do by the passage of a simple Senate resolution referring this bill to the Court of Claims under the judicial title.

The statute provides that when a bill for any claim is pending in Congress, otherwise than for a pension, either House of Congress can refer the bill to the Court of Claims and have the Court of Claims report to Congress its finding of facts and conclusions of law. Our distinguished Committee on the Judiciary, to which this bill was erroneously referred, it being a claim, did not apparently remember this statute. If this bill had gone to the Committee on Claims, to which it properly should have been referred, the Committee on Claims would have known that it was not necessary to pass the bill to get this disposition of it by the Court of Claims.

Mr. DANFORTH. I want to say to the gentleman that the bill as it came to the Senate was for the purpose of adjudicating the claims.

Mr. CARLIN. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact——

Mr. DANFORTH. I am not quite through.

Mr. MANN. And I am not through, either. [Laughter.]

Mr. DANFORTH. I would like to ask the gentleman whether the provision in regard to taking evidence, and now on file with the accounting officers of the Treasury, could have been done by a simple resolution from the Committee on Claims?

Mr. MANN. It could. The Court of Claims can call for any evidence on file in the departments of this Government; not only can do that but does do it. So we are asked to pass a bill apparently unnecessary.

Mr. CARLIN. If the gentleman will yield, in the last war-claims bill which passed the House, and it was an appropriation bill, there was included a provision taking from the Court of Claims a certain part of its jurisdiction with reference to claims growing out of the Civil War, and I think perhaps it was that provision which induced the Senate to provide a separate bill.

Mr. MANN. My friend from Virginia thinks that perhaps it does, but it does not, and if our distinguished Judiciary Committee, who understood and thought that perhaps it did, had taken the trouble to look at the statute, they would have found that it did not. That repealing clause which I hold in my hand provides as follows:

SEC. 5. That from and after the passage and approval of this act the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims shall not extend to or include any claim against the United States based upon or growing out of the destruction of any property or damage done to any property by the military or naval forces of the United States during the war for the suppression of the rebellion; nor to any claim for stores and supplies taken by or furnished to or for the use of the military or naval forces of the United States, nor to any claim for the value of any use and occupation of any real estate by the military or naval forces of the United States during said war; nor shall said Court of Claims have jurisdiction of any claim which is now barred by the provisions of any law of the United States.

Mr. CARLIN. The gentleman read some of that so low that I did not hear him. Does the gentleman think that that does not apply to a claim of this sort?

Mr. MANN. Plainly this is not a claim growing out of the destruction of property nor for supplies furnished the Federal forces during the war; however, the bill is here, unnecessary though it is.

Mr. CARLIN. There can not be any harm in referring it to the Court of Claims, even in this way, although some others might have preferred a simple resolution.

Mr. MANN. The harm is uselessly bringing into the House a bill in reference to a claim which might have been disposed of by the other body—I will not say, as one distinguished Senator said somewhere, and I do not know that it would be permissible to say that he said that the House conferees had not acted gentlemanly—that it would be better to act both gentlemanly and intelligently. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. CARLIN. I did not quite catch the last part of the gentleman's remark.

Mr. MANN. I was not making any reflection on the gentleman from Virginia or any other Member of the House. This bill provides for reference of the claim of Massachusetts for the premium paid for coin; also, it says "for interest and premium paid for coin." I confess that I do not quite understand what it means when it says "interest paid for coin."

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman is mistaken. Interest does not apply to the coin. It is a claim for interest and the premium paid for coin. Those are two different things.

Mr. MANN. I suppose I know what is in the mind of the man who drew it; but what it says is "interest paid for coin used in the payment of interest on the bonds." The State of Massachusetts, so far as this bill is concerned, has been paid the principal and the interest.

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman is mistaken. It has not been paid the interest.

Mr. MANN. So far as this bill is concerned, it has been paid the interest.

Mr. CARLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. CARLIN. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. MANN. I am. The State of Massachusetts, the great liberty-loving State, raised some money during the Civil War, as other States did, and raised it by borrowing money.

It desired to pay the bonds in gold. I admire the spirit of the State of Massachusetts, standing up to pay its bonds in gold, but I would admire the spirit a good deal more if Massachusetts had preferred to pay the bonds in gold out of her own pocket, instead of asking the rest of the country to pay that expense. I remember the days when they were discussing greenbackism, the question whether we should pay the Government bonds of the United States in coin or in greenbacks, and I can remember how gentlemen from Massachusetts used proudly to refer to the fact that the great old Commonwealth of Massachusetts paid her bonds in gold. She now wants us to pay the money back to her.

A few years ago, Mr. Speaker, I believe the State of Illinois did receive some money, whether on just this account or not I do not know. I remember that I voted against the proposition. I felt for the time ashamed of my State, that having risen to the occasion during the Civil War, having paid its expenses, she should come now at the door of Congress and ask Congress to pay back to her the expense which she was proud to incur in order that the children might get back the money that their parents had paid in pride.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DUPRÉ].

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon the subject of the importation of cattle from Central and South America.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the importation of cattle from Central and South America. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER].

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, I do not know anything about this bill, not the first thing, and in that I am a good deal like the gentleman on my right.

Now, what happened? In the Civil War the State of Massachusetts was paying its obligations in gold coin. It did not repudiate the gold clause in its bonds, nor did it try to do so, but all through the war the State fulfilled its obligation to pay principal and interest in gold. We issued some bonds to take care of expenses which we were incurring in behalf of the National Government. We issued those bonds and we promised to pay gold, and when the time came we actually did pay in gold, principal and interest alike. In order to get the gold, we had to go out into the money markets and pay a premium for it, because gold was at a premium. It is the repayment of that expenditure which we seek. This bill asks for us the right to go to the Court of Claims and prove our case.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT].

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, this title, I will admit, is subject to the just criticism which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has made. It reads "Conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to adjudicate the claims of the State of Massachusetts." I wish the bill conformed to the title, as it originally did, and that the bill was to adjudicate these claims. That was the original intent, but it was changed in the Senate. So instead of adjudicating, it simply sends the matter to the Court of Claims to get the opinion of that court. I think the gentleman from Illinois should be glad of that, because if he is opposed to the bill that lessens the effect of it, and it really just gets the opinion of the court. But I think gentlemen are mistaken in the understanding of this bill. I know the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is. The bill provides for two different classes of obligations. One thing it provides for is, the repayment of interest on some bonds which were issued by the State of Massachusetts, at the request of the President, to fortify the coast. In that case the principal has been paid, but the interest has not been paid. If you will punctuate it carefully, or read it carefully, you will see that it applies to that interest. As against that I can not see any objection. That is about one-third of the claim. The reason that was not paid before was that when the claim was presented and the principal was paid the State of Massachusetts did not suppose that the interest would be paid. That point was raised and went to the Supreme Court from some other State whether the interest paid by the States should be repaid, and it was decided in the affirmative, and all claims of other States for that interest have been paid, so that Massachusetts is only asking what has been done for the other States. The balance of the claim, as my colleague [Mr. GARDNER] has said, is to pay the premium which the State paid to get gold.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Assuming this payment by Massachusetts was a voluntary act as to principal, interest, and premium, I desire to inquire of the gentleman what more obligation there is on the part of the Government to repay the premium than the interest and the principal?

Mr. GILLETT. I do not think there is any more, but the principal and interest have been paid.

Mr. BARKLEY. The whole claim, then, is simply for premium? I thought the gentleman said there was another item.

Mr. GILLETT. I do not make myself clear apparently. The State of Massachusetts issued bonds for two purposes. One was for equipping troops. On that the principal and the interest has been paid, as it has been for every other State.

Mr. BARKLEY. By the State?

Mr. GILLETT. Originally by the State, and has been refunded by the United States.

Mr. BARKLEY. Principal and interest?

Mr. GILLETT. Principal and interest. The only claim that is left unpaid connected with the bonds issued for the troops is the extra amount which the State of Massachusetts paid in order to get gold with which to pay the principal and interest of the bonds. The State has only been repaid what it would have expended if it had paid its bonds and the interest on them in greenbacks; but inasmuch as it paid them in gold it cost the State more, and it is that extra amount which forms part of the claim covered by this bill.

Now, whether that should be repaid or not is a question that is not before us. The only question before us is whether the Court of Claims shall pass upon the question and report their decision to Congress.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. What is the reason why the claim for the repair of the harbor or protecting the harbor of Boston has been deferred until the present time?

Mr. GILLETT. I am going to come to that in a moment. Just let me finish with this part of the claim first. Whether that principle of repaying the premium in gold which the State was obliged to pay is a principle that this House will adopt I do not know. But this bill is simply to refer that to the Court of Claims and get their report upon it. We do not ask the House to pay it now. I confess I do not see, personally, why, having paid it, the State is not just as much entitled in equity to be repaid as were all the other States for the expenditures for which they have been repaid. But, as I say, I put that aside now because we do not ask it.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. COX. During the war did the State of Massachusetts pay all of its claims and all of its obligations in gold?

Mr. GILLETT. It did. That is just the point.

Mr. COX. Did it pay all of its employees——

Mr. GILLETT. They paid everything in gold——

Mr. COX. Everything?

Mr. GILLETT. I presume not; but they paid all the bonds in gold.

Mr. COX. They paid only the bonds in gold?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes; only bonds.

Mr. COX. And the other employees and other debts and obligations were paid in currency?

Mr. GILLETT. I presume so; I do not know.

Mr. COX. What higher obligation was there upon the State of Massachusetts to pay its bonds in gold than to pay its other obligations in gold?

Mr. GILLETT. That is not a question that is before us now and I can not answer it. They established that policy; I do not know why. Probably for the same reasons of fiscal policy as the United States did.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. I will.

Mr. BARKLEY. Was it stipulated in the bonds that they should be paid in gold?

Mr. GILLETT. It was not stipulated in the bonds that they agreed to pay in gold. Whether they should be repaid or not is not before us now, and it is only a question of referring this to the Court of Claims.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. I will.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Have the other States been repaid the premium on the gold?

Mr. GILLETT. I do not believe any other State paid in gold, but I am not sure about that. I do not think so. I think this is a novel question.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is this the first time claim has been made for the payment of the premium?

Mr. GILLETT. It has been hanging here for a good many years. I do not know whether it has been before the House or not, but it has been pending a good many years.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. After all, what will be accomplished if this bill passes?

Mr. GILLETT. As I say, I regret it has been changed from its original purpose as indicated by the title to which the gentleman called attention, but it will get now a report of the Court of Claims. What objection is there to that?

Mr. MANN. It will get a report of the Court of Claims based wholly upon facts already ascertained in the auditor's office.

Mr. GILLETT. It will save us arguing them here, then.

Mr. MANN. No; we will argue about what the meaning of the Court of Claims is.

Mr. GILLETT. Oh, I do not know. The gentleman will, I presume.

Mr. MANN. Very likely I will if I do not know any more about it than the gentleman knows about this.

Mr. GILLETT. I claim to know all about this, and the gentleman is mistaken about it.

Mr. MANN. Well, if he knows all about this he knows that this bill contemplates the Court of Claims shall take the facts already reported in the auditor's office, practically the decision of the auditor. They are not to get any new evidence.

Mr. GILLETT. Well, they had to get the facts and report them.

Mr. MANN. Well, we could get them by passing a resolution, or the gentleman could get them from the auditor's office.

Mr. GILLETT. That might have been the better way; but this is before us now.

Mr. MANN. Any committee could get these facts. Now, what is the law. It is a question of policy as to whether we pay or not.

Mr. GILLETT. There may be some law in the auditor's office.

Mr. MANN. The facts are not disputed; it is a question of policy for Congress to determine, and it sidesteps it by sending it to the Court of Claims.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired

Mr. GILLETT. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield me some time?

Mr. MANN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GILLETT. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. WINGO. In replying now to the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] in reference to the use of this evidence, I would like to call the attention of the gentleman to the provision of the bill, in that the bill provides that this evidence shall be used only in determining the amount of the expenditures and the computation of the premium. That is the only purpose they have for using that down there.

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. And not for the purpose indicated by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. GILLETT. Exactly.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly.

Mr. GORDON. If I understand the nature of this claim, it is to reimburse Massachusetts for the premium she had to pay upon gold in order to redeem the bonds which she had issued on account of the Civil War.

Mr. GILLETT. Yes; partly. That is one part of it.

Mr. GORDON. Does the gentleman think it is a sound claim, that because her credit was bad she had to pay a premium in order to discharge her own obligations? [Laughter.] That may be funny, but it is a proper question.

Mr. GILLETT. But paying these premiums took just so much money from the State of Massachusetts, which went to the advantage of the United States. No other State did that—issued bonds, payable in gold—and why should not Massachusetts get what it cost her, just as much as the other States got what it cost them? But I will say that is not before us now. It is simply a question of referring it to the Court of Claims to report on that.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly.

Mr. GARDNER. It was because the credit of the United States was bad—not that the credit of the State of Massachusetts was bad—that the State of Massachusetts had to pay a premium?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The gentlemen are both mistaken about that. It was not a question of credit but a question of taking that action because gold was at a premium.

Mr. GARDNER. And what was the reason why gold was at a premium, I will ask the gentleman from Illinois? It was because of the doubt as to whether the bondholders would ever get their money back.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. COX. Did the bonds on their face state that the interest should be payable in gold?

Mr. GILLETT. I do not know whether it was so stated in the bonds or not. I suppose not.

Mr. PHELAN. The State of Massachusetts paid the interest in gold, whether it had to or not.

Mr. COX. The Comptroller of the Treasury disallowed this item on the ground that the payment by the State in coin was a mere gratuity to the holders of the bonds, did it not?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. COX. Now, if the State of Massachusetts paid it merely as a gratuity, in the name of common sense is there any valid reason why Massachusetts should come to the Congress of the United States and ask Congress to pay several hundred thousand dollars for that?

Mr. GILLETT. The State of Massachusetts did it because it thought it was just, because having agreed to pay these bonds in gold, as everybody understood when they were issued, then when afterwards the legal-tender act was passed by Congress allowing all debts to be paid in paper money, they still thought they ought to pay them in gold, as it was understood they would when the bonds were issued.

Mr. COX. The State could not do that unless it was written in the bond.

Mr. GILLETT. Yes; it did. It was done by the act of the legislature.

Mr. COX. It did not have to do it unless it was written in the bond. I think that part of the report gives your whole case away.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Were these bonds bought by the city of Boston?

Mr. GILLETT. I have no doubt they were sold to the people of Boston and Massachusetts, and pretty generally.

Mr. BARKLEY. This was to fortify Boston, to protect the inhabitants of Boston from attack?

Mr. GILLETT. Oh, the gentleman is again confusing two items of this bill. I would like to make that clear.

Mr. BARKLEY. I wish the gentleman would.

Mr. GILLETT. I will try. I thought I had already. There are two propositions in this bill. I have tried to separate them, but I will try again. There were two entirely different purposes for which this money went. One was to repay the premium paid for the gold to redeem the bonds which were issued, not for Boston Harbor but for the troops, for the security of the Government, as everywhere else in the United States. That is one class of claim.

Then, in addition to that, there is this other class. The President requested the State of Massachusetts—the Government of the United States being short of funds at that time—the President requested the State of Massachusetts to protect its coast. For that purpose the State of Massachusetts issued other bonds. On these bonds even the interest has never been paid back by the United States. The interest on all other bonds has been paid to the State of Massachusetts and to every other State, but upon these bonds not simply the premium has not been paid, but the interest itself has not been paid.

Now, I can not see any objection to the payment of that claim, inasmuch as a similar claim was paid to every other State, and the reason why it was not paid to Massachusetts was by reason of a verbal mistake, as you might call it, a verbal interpretation of the law of 1884, which was held only to allow the payment of the principal, whereas every other State has received both principal and interest. The State of New York brought suit, and the court held that the interest which had been paid was a debt as well as the principal, and should be repaid by the United States, and it has been repaid to all the other States. Those are the two different claims.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed one minute more.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for two minutes more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] proceed for two minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARKLEY. Now, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is there any claim in this bill for the interest on the premium that was paid for the gold?

Mr. GILLETT. No; that is not involved at all. There is no such claim.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. ROGERS. What is the amount of money involved in each of these two parts of the claim?

Mr. GILLETT. There is something over $600,000 involved for the premium on gold on the bonds issued for the equipping of troops, and there is something less than $300,000 on the other part of the claim, for the interest on the money borrowed to strengthen the defenses of Boston—about a million in all.

Now, as I say, we do not ask Congress now to pass upon this question. I wish we did. But this bill simply provides for leaving it to the Court of Claims and letting that court make a report to us upon it. Other States, including the State of Illinois, have had their money paid back. This is the last claim of this character that I know of which has not been paid.

Of course it would be noble on the part of the State of Massachusetts, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] says, not to ask it; but every State has now for many years past endeavored to receive back from the United States Government what was advanced. We are, I believe, not more selfish than the rest of the States to-day.

I know my city is sending out to-day to the troops that are traveling south money which it will never get back. My small city sent yesterday a check for $1,000 to the militia now entrained to pay for comforts and ease their way down to the southern border, and I have no doubt that in every State and city in this country money like that will be paid to their troops, which will never be asked back. But there are certain other large expenses which have been incurred for the United States and to which other States have asserted their claim and been paid. I do not think it is unpatriotic for the State of Massachusets to be placed on the same plane. [Applause.] It might have been better if the United States had never adopted the policy of paying any of these claims, but having paid all but one, I do not think we ought to suffer because we have been less pressing than other States.

Mr. MAGEE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. MAGEE. The gentleman, as I understand, has stated that the bill only provides that the Court of Claims, to which this claim is referred, shall make a report, while the bill reads "referred to the Court of Claims for a determination of the law."

Mr. GILLETT. Yes; and the facts, and report them to Congress.

Mr. MAGEE. Is it not the idea and intention of this bill for the Court of Claims to determine what the law is in the case?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes; it certainly is.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. IGOE].

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Speaker, when this bill was first referred to the committee it provided that the Court of Claims might adjudicate this claim. In the committee practically the same discussion came up as has come up on this floor. Meantime the Senate had modified the bill so that the whole matter would be referred to the Court of Claims with instructions to report back on the law and the facts, and the House committee agreed to that proposition and reported the bill in this form. There is a question of law involved in the case. It is not all settled, and it would not be possible to have a determination of the question merely on the facts alone. The claim is in two parts, as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] has stated, and the State of Massachusetts has been pressing the claim all of these years. And as late as about 1906 or 1907 the Auditor for the Treasury Department allowed the greater part of the claim, if not all of it, but on appeal to the comptroller the claim was disallowed. The comptroller said he had only authority to allow what he considered legal claims, and that if this was anything it was an equitable claim, and that those who pressed it should appeal to the Congress of the United States and have the Congress pass upon it; that it was without his jurisdiction under the strict letter of the law.

Mr. Speaker, there is no question but what the State of Massachusetts did spend this money; that it did buy this gold with which to pay the interest; that it did have to pay the premium; and the reason why it paid it was because of the passage of the legal-tender act by Congress after the State of Massachusetts had voted these bonds. The State of Massachusetts acted in good faith, spent this money for the gold with which to pay the interest, just as it spent the money for the interest and the principal. We have reimbursed the State for the interest and the principal and I, for one, can not see any distinction between reimbursing the State for the money spent for gold to maintain its credit and pay this interest and reimbursing the State for the money spent for principal and interest.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. IGOE. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I see, on the top of page 2, that the Court of Claims is given authority to make a determination of the law and the facts. That will amount to a decision, will it not?

Mr. IGOE. It will amount to a decision without an appropriation. Now, here is my position on that question. I do not believe it is proper for the Members of this House or for the Congress to question the propriety of a State in asserting a claim of this kind. The State of Massachusetts is one of the sovereign States of this Union. Whether it is proper or improper, wise or unwise, for that State to assert its claim, it comes here in good faith. It says that it has a claim, and the least that we can do is to say, "You can have the privilege of going into the Court of Claims and having that court pass upon the law and the facts"; and that is all this bill amounts to.

Mr. EMERSON. How did these other States get theirs?

Mr. IGOE. This is the only claim I know of where a reimbursement is sought for premiums paid for gold. The interest claims, let me say, were disallowed all along until the State of New York, in a case that was decided somewhere about 1900, asserted that interest was reimbursable just the same as principal, and that claim was sustained by the Supreme Court. Since that time the States have presented their claim for interest, and they have all been allowed. Even the claim of the State of Massachusetts for interest has been allowed.

Mr. EMERSON. Is the claim described in this bill similar to those of the other States?

Mr. IGOE. The difference is this: The greater part is for money which the State of Massachusetts paid for gold to pay interest and principal.

Mr. EMERSON. I understand that.

Mr. IGOE. The only difference is this: In one case it is interest, and in the other case—that is, in this case—it is both interest and money spent with which to buy gold to pay that inerest. Now, if you can draw the distinction then you have got the difference.

Mr. BARKLEY. Assuming that this is not strictly speaking a legal claim against the Government which would permit it to be paid by the auditor——

Mr. IGOE. That is his opinion. That is a question of law. He has one opinion. Maybe the court will say it is a legal claim.

Mr. BARKLEY. If that be true, is it not a fact that all the Court of Claims could report would be the amount and the facts with respect to the payment of the money, and then say it is up to Congress to determine whether it was a moral obligation which we ought to pay?

Mr. IGOE. The Court of Claims could say whether it was a claim that comes within the act under which Congress agreed to reimburse the State, whether it comes under the head of a strictly legal claim, or whether it is merely a moral and equitable obligation. For my part, I am willing to pay equitable claims.

Mr. RAKER. Did the original bonds require the interest to be paid in gold?

Mr. IGOE. My recollection is that they did not, but the Legislature of Massachusetts passed a resolution that they would pay in coin.

Mr. RAKER. And they did pay in coin?

Mr. IGOE. They did pay in coin.

Mr. RAKER. And all they ask is to have the law and the facts adjudicated?

Mr. IGOE. That is all this does. It does not make an appropriation at all.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I want to ask the gentleman a question about the title of this bill.

Mr. IGOE. I will say that the title has not been changed. It probably should be changed. It was not the intention of the committee in reporting the bill to give the Court of Claims the power to render a judgment, as was provided in the first bill that was introduced.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. This title gives the Court of Claims the authority to adjudicate. An adjudication is the entering of a judgment by a court.

Mr. IGOE. That was not the intention of this bill as reported.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. On page 2 this is referred to the Court of Claims for a determination of the law and the facts.

Mr. IGOE. That is what we intended to do.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. A determination of the law and facts is the decision of a court.

Mr. IGOE. But it does not carry a judgment. It was not the intention to do anything except to get a report from the court.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I was wondering how, with the title, the language on page 2 would be construed. The title gives express authority to enter a judgment.

Mr. IGOE. The title is not a part of the bill. It could easily be amended.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. But on page 2 there is a provision that this court shall determine the law and the facts in the case.

Mr. IGOE. That is all we intend that the court shall do.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. I yield to the gentleman one minute.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. In looking through the bill, after reading the title, two questions at once arose in my mind: First, as to how the Court of Claims would construe the language in lines 1 and 2, on page 2. The title reads as follows:

An act conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to adjudicate the claims of the State of Massachusetts.

Now, an adjudication by a court is the entering of a judgment by a court. And therefore, according to the title, the purpose of the bill is to empower the Court of Claims, in its discretion, to enter a judgment in favor of the State of Massachusetts against the Government of the United States.

And lines 1 and 2, on page 2, carry out the purpose set forth in the title. For in these lines the claims of Massachusetts are—

Referred to the Court of Claims for a determination of the law and the facts and report to Congress.

The word "determination" is defined by Bouvier as meaning, in law—

The decision of a court of justice.

Bouvier gives the following definition of "decision":

Decision.—In practice: A judgment given by a competent tribunal.

Therefore it is clear that this language, in lines 1 and 2, requires the Court of Claims to render a decision—a decision as to the facts and a decision as to the law; in other words, to enter a judgment.

The second question in my mind was whether Congress wished to go so far in this case as to confer such power on the Court of Claims.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, there are some other matters that want to be taken up on the call. Can not we make an agreement as to time when we will order the previous question?

Mr. CARLIN. I think so. There are quite a number of requests on this side, and I will agree to 12 minutes on a side.

Mr. MANN. Let us make it 10 minutes on a side.

Mr. CARLIN. I will agree to 10 minutes. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this bill be concluded in 20 minutes, and at the end of that time the previous question be considered as ordered.

Mr. COX. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COX. Will that preclude the offering of any amendment?

The SPEAKER. It would.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I think the point raised by the gentleman from Wisconsin is vital. If it be the purpose of the framers of this bill, if their only desire be to refer to the Court of Claims this claim, they ought not to insist upon referring it to the Court of Claims with power contained in the bill to render judgment.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman from Indiana want to be heard on his amendment?

Mr. COX. I am going to offer an amendment.

Mr. MANN. I will yield to the gentleman to offer an amendment.

Mr. GARDNER. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARDNER. Can the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Indiana to offer an amendment without yielding the floor?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not; he could yield to him to make a speech.

Mr. GARDNER. If the gentleman from Illinois wishes to yield the floor——

Mr. MANN. I am willing to yield the floor. I was trying to expedite affairs; but if the gentleman from Massachusetts does not want to, all right.

Mr. GARDNER. I can take the floor myself.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can not get the floor, for the gentleman from Virginia has control of the time in favor of the bill.

Mr. GARDNER. Any Member that the Chair recognizes in his own right can move the previous question.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Speaker, I will change my request so as to bring the matter to a vote. I ask unanimous consent that all debate be closed in 20 minutes, the time to be controlled as at present, and at the end of the 20 minutes the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] shall be voted upon, and after that the previous question shall be ordered on the bill and all amendments thereto.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Who is to control the time under that agreement?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia controls one half and the gentleman from Illinois the other half.

Mr. RAKER. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RAKER. How much time is remaining to the gentleman from Virginia and the gentleman from Illinois under the rule?

The SPEAKER. Twenty-two minutes to the gentleman from Virginia and 27 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. CARLIN] asks unanimous consent that general debate shall close in 20 minutes, one half to be controlled by himself and the other half by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], and at the end of the 20 minutes the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] shall be voted upon and the previous question considered as ordered on the bill and amendments to final passage. Is there objection?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Reserving the right to object, I will ask the gentleman from Virginia if he can give me three minutes?

Mr. CARLIN. I will give the gentleman a minute or two.

Mr. MANN. I will yield to the gentleman three minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARDNER. Reserving the right to object, if the previous question is ordered on the bill to its final passage it precludes the possibility of amending the title as well.

Mr. MANN. Does it?

Mr. CARLIN. There is no suggestion that I know of the desirability of amending the title.

Mr. MANN. The title is always amended after the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. That has been the practice since the Chair has been a Member of the House. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PHELAN].

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Speaker, in order to take up the point as to the allegation that Massachusetts is asking something to which it is not entitled, I want to state the facts to the House.

Massachusetts issued some bonds. It agreed to pay interest on those bonds, and at that time the only way it legally could pay interest was to pay in coin. Subsequently the United States Government passed a legal-tender act so that legal tender could be paid for debts as well as coin. When it passed that act the United States Government itself, knowing the possible injustice of paying interest in legal tender on bonds, when the understanding at the time these bonds were issued was that they would be paid in coin, made a specific exception in that act itself, so that the United States Government obligated itself in the legal-tender act to pay interest and principal on bonds in coin, not in so-called legal tender. Massachusetts simply followed the lead of the United States. It had agreed to pay interest. At the time when the bonds were issued the only way it could pay that legally was to pay it in coin. Even though the United States Government made legal tender payment for obligations, the State of Massachusetts could not morally take advantage of that act. The whole trouble was that the United States Government itself could not keep its legal tender up to par, and therefore when the State of Massachusetts passed a resolution to pay its obligations in coin it simply was dealing only with justice to the holders of those bonds. When the Commonwealth did that, when it paid that interest in coin, it was paying what the United States had agreed to pay back to them. Therefore, although they had to pay a premium for that coin, the whole thing, interest and premium, was an obligation ultimately of the United States; and if the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, in order to carry out its obligations which the United States was subsequently going to assume, was obliged to pay not only the amount of interest in legal tender but also money expended as to premium to get coin instead of legal tender, then the United States Government ought in justice to pay that whole amount. In other words, the Commonwealth of Massachusetts in getting coin to pay its interest on these bonds was simply doing what it had agreed to do, and in doing that it ought to be backed up by the United States Government. The United States Government could not back it up by paying to the Commonwealth of Massachusetts what would amount to legal tender when the Commonwealth of Massachusetts had paid coin. There is the whole proposition. There is no injustice in the claim of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. I have mentioned this, although we do not settle the question here, so as to show a very good reason why this should be referred to the Court of Claims.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I yield six minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET].

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, the suggestion of my colleague, Mr. MAGEE, it seems to me, goes to the root of the whole matter. The fact is that the State of Massachusetts from the beginning went to sleep on her rights. The State of New York, usually not more rapid in such matters than the State of Massachusetts, did not go to sleep upon her rights. We filed our claim with the Secretary of the Treasury within six years after it had accrued, and under section 1063 of the Revised Statutes, as it then stood and, I presume, still stands, we had our case referred to the Court of Claims, and in the end secured a judgment for $131,000, which the United States paid. Under the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of The United States against New York, it seems to me very clear that if the State of Massachusetts had gone about the matter properly in due time, she would have had this money long ago. What she is trying to do now in a cumbersome, bungling sort of way is not what is expressed in the resolution at all, but, as my colleague pointed out, she is really trying to get away from the statute of limitations.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. IGOE. The facts show that shortly after that decision, I think, the State of Massachusetts presented its claim and it was allowed by the auditor, but disallowed by the comptroller, and since that time the State of Massachusetts has been appealing to Congress for relief.

Mr. BENNET. If I can rely upon the report of the Committee on the Judiciary, the reason that these claims were not allowed was that they were not included in the claim.

Mr. IGOE. That is the second part. There are two claims here. The claim the gentleman is speaking about is the equipment.

Mr. BENNET. Whatever it was, it was not presented to the Treasury Department within six years after it accrued. It is barred by the statute of limitations, and what they are trying to get at by this act is to do away with the statute of limitations. Personally I believe that after we have passed this bill, if we pass it, and it has gone to the Court of Claims, the Court of Claims will be barred by the decision in the case of The United States v. New York (160 U. S., 598), from considering it at all.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER. Did the comptroller in his decision indicate that it was barred by the statute of limitations?

Mr. BENNET. This decision that I have referred to holds that unless it was presented to the Secretary of the Treasury within six years it was barred, and on the second page of the report on this bill, near the bottom, I find the following language:

> The decision was put upon the technical grounds that the claim on file with the third auditor did not mention interest or premium.

So that Massachusetts has never filed its claim with the Treasury Department for what it seeks to get under Senate bill 3346, and under this decision in the case of The United States v. New York, after this matter goes through the whole weary length of the Court of Claims, the Court of Claims will in all probability have to throw the matter out because this case holds, following other cases, that where the claim was not presented within six years, the mere reference, without waiving the statute of limitations, confers no jurisdiction on the Court of Claims, so very probably we are going through an entirely profitless performance.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GARDNER. I have here a statement of the case by the commissioner from Massachusetts, Mr. Hackett, and he makes no mention whatever of the comptroller having rejected the claim on the ground advanced by the gentleman from New York. The gentleman from New York I presume has read the comptroller's decision. Did it contain any statement to the effect that this case was barred by the statute of limitations?

Mr. BENNET. If the gentleman will allow me to put two and two together. The report of the Committee on the Judiciary on this particular bill says the decision was put upon the technical ground that the claim on file with the third auditor did not cover interest or premium. The Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of The United States v. New York (160 U. S., 598), holds that where a claim is not presented to the executive department within six years after it accrues it is barred by the statute of limitations and that the Court of Claims can not consider it. It seems to me that that is very clear and very plain.

Mr. IGOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. I will.

Mr. IGOE. It so happened that the State of Massachusetts filed the claim after that decision and was allowed the amount that was spent for interest, but this amount for premium was disallowed. Now, there is another part of it, a second claim, and the greater part comes under this——

Mr. BENNET. But inasmuch as this bill only relates to interest and premiums——

Mr. IGOE. No; it relates to two things. It relates to the equipping of troops for one thing and it relates to fortifications for another thing.

Mr. BENNET. It simply relates to interest on bonds and premium paid for gold coin——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, of course the title is no part of a bill, but it sometimes is used in construing the law. As I have already pointed out, this title confers jurisdiction on the Court of Claims in effect to enter a judgment upon the claims of the State of Massachusetts against the United States. Even if the title were changed, the language in lines 1 and 2 on the second page carries out the intent set forth in the original title. The Court of Claims is to be given the power to make a determination of the law and the facts; that is, to enter a judgment. As I said a moment ago, in law the "determination" of a court is the decision of a court. Thus we have this bill conferring unusual jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims.

If the court should enter a judgment against the United States the Committee on Appropriations would, of course, provide for its payment out of the Treasury.

The usual practice in cases of this kind is for Congress to require the court to make and report findings of facts and conclusions of law and report these to Congress.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Is not the word "determination" synonymous with "ascertainment" in this bill?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I gave the only definition that is given by Bouvier in his law dictionary, a work which long has been a standard authority. A court's determination of the law and the facts in a case is the court's judgment in the case.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. But there are other authorities on the meaning of words.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I know of no authority who differs from Bouvier in his definition of the word in question.

Bouvier's Law Dictionary is one of the foremost authorities, and the definition which it gives of the word "determination" is this:

Determination: A decision of a court of justice.

And, as I said, the word "decision" he defines as follows:

Decision, in practice: A judgment given by a competent tribunal.

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER. Assuming that the gentleman's construction of the law is right—I think very likely it is—did not the comptroller have exactly the same power to determine the law and the facts? Could not he have decided the other way and paid that claim?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman is asking me a question the answer to which I can not enter into at this time, because I do not want to be drawn away from the issue before us; that is, whether we wish to enact a law conferring authority upon the Court of Claims to enter a judgment in favor of the State of Massachusetts against the Government of the United States.

Mr. GARDNER. It is a question of whether we want to give power to review an adverse decision of a comptroller who had the power to find out what were the facts and the law.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Then we should give the Court of Claims authority simply to make and report findings of fact and conclusions of law.

Mr. GARDNER. Why should it not have the power——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. But what the gentleman wants the Court of Claims to have is the power to enter a judgment.

Mr. GARDNER. Precisely.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I thought so, and I am opposed to that.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TAGGART].

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Speaker, the State of Massachusetts is entitled to precisely what the State parted with. The State issued bonds to equip troops for the United States and to do certain fortification work. The State did not agree to pay the interest in gold, but the United States provided that the interest on all bonds of the United States should be paid in gold. When that interest was due on the bonds of Massachusetts the State made it an obligation of honor to pay it in gold.

Now, two distinguished officers of the Government have disagreed as to whether the United States in equity ought to pay the State of Massachusetts for what the State of Massachusetts was not technically and in law obliged to pay, but what the State was obliged in all honor and fair dealing to pay. It might have paid this interest in currency that was not worth more than 40 cents on the dollar.

Now, the attitude of the Government toward the States in 1861 is shown by the language that is quoted in the decision of the Supreme Court in the One hundred and sixtieth United States, which has been referred to here. On July 25, 1861, Secretary Seward telegraphed to the State of New York: "Buy arms and equipments as fast as you can. We pay all." And on July 27 he telegraphed again that "Treasury notes for part advances will be furnished on your call for them." And the interest on those notes was payable in gold. On August 16, 1861, the Secretary of War telegraphed to the governor of New York:

Adopt such measures as may be necessary to fill up your regiments as rapidly as possible. We need the men. Let me know the best the Empire State can do to aid the country in the present emergency.

And on February 11, 1862, he telegraphed:

The Government will refund the State for the advances for troops as speedily as the Treasurer can obtain funds for that purpose.

Now, in discussing this attitude of the Government the Supreme Court said:

Liberally interpreted, it is clear that the acts of July 27, 1861, and March 8, 1862, created on the part of the United States an obligation to indemnify the States for any costs, charges, and expenses properly incurred for the purposes expressed in the act of 1861, the title of which shows that its object was to "indemnify the States for expenses incurred by them in defense of the United States."

The State of Massachusetts paid gold, as it was understood to agree to pay in 1861. It was a part of the expense of that State, and the question as to whether that created a legal obligation against the United States is all that is to be decided by the Court of Claims if this bill is passed.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. TAGGART. I ask one minute more, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. GARD. I yield to the gentleman one additional minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recognized for one minute more.

Mr. TAGGART. As the distinguished gentleman from Illinois said, the Senate, by a resolution, might refer this to the Court of Claims; the House, by resolution, might refer it to the Court of Claims; but we can and should dispose of it by allowing the Court of Claims to decide whether the Auditor or the Comptroller of the Treasury was right. And this determination called for here as to the law and facts would not be a judgment but an ascertainment as to whether or not this is a legal obligation of the United States. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has again expired.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT] is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, whether this bill shall be regarded as one for a premium, for expense, or for interest, there is nevertheless abundant justification and precedent for presenting it at this time or at any time.

In the Sixty-second Congress there was passed by this House a bill reimbursing the State of Pennsylvania for a claim which was very closely parallel to this one. That claim arose in this way: President Lincoln telegraphed to Gov. Curtin, of Pennsylvania, to equip and forward a number of troops. Pennsylvania's financial resources having been exhausted, the governor borrowed the money from the money lenders of Philadelphia to pay for the equipment of the troops. Pennsylvania was rather dilatory; but nevertheless she came here with a bill and presented it to the Sixty-second Congress, and there must be here members of the War Claims Committee who passed favorably upon that measure, and certainly there must be many Members here on the floor of this House who voted for it. In any event, the interest charge was not designated as "interest," but was denominated "expense," and this House passed the bill for the expense of the use of that money which was borrowed from the money lenders of Philadelphia, $200,000, and it was paid to the State.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that that same measure of justice should be extended to the State of Massachusetts which was accorded to Pennsylvania, and surely no man will say, no man dare say, that Pennsylvania during the Civil War was not always loyal. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has one minute and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. CARLIN] has one.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] to offer an amendment in my time.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Cox: Page 2, line 1, after the word "a," strike out "determination of the law and the facts" and insert in lieu thereof "finding of facts and conclusions of law."

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, just a word. I believe that this amendment ought to be adopted by the proponents of the bill. If their only idea is in getting a finding of fact, they ought not to insist upon sending the bill down to the Court of Claims with power in the bill to enable the Court of Claims to render a judgment against the United States, and, in my candid opinion, the language contained in this bill not only empowers the Court of Claims to find the facts, but empowers the Court of Claims to render a judgment against the United States. I believe the amendment should be adopted.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Speaker, I would have no objection to the adoption of this amendment if it were material or amounted to anything, but the fact is it would mean only delay to send this bill back to the Senate again. For that reason I hope that the amendment will be voted down. I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox].

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. COX. A division, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. A division is demanded.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 37, noes 51.

So the amendment was rejected.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. Cox) there were—ayes 76, noes 17.

Accordingly the bill was passed.

The SPEAKER. The title should be amended. Does anyone wish to suggest an amendment to the title? Usually it is left to the Clerk.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, the title is all right, in view of the vote.

On motion of Mr. CARLIN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, ASHEVILLE, N. C.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union the bill (H. R. 3673) to establish a term of the United States circuit court of appeals at Asheville, N. C.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to consider in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union H. R. 3673. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. Let it be reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the judges of the United States circuit court of appeals for the fourth circuit shall annually open and hold a term of the court of said circuit at Asheville, N. C., at such time as may be fixed by the judges thereof.

SEC. 2. That this act shall be in force from and after the date of its passage.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out section 2.

Mr. CARLIN. I have no objection to that.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. CARLIN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

COMPENSATION FOR INJURIES TO FEDERAL EMPLOYEES.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider in the House as in Committee of the Whole the bill (H. R. 15316) to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to consider in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union H. R. 15316. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I do not think the gentleman ought to make that request.

Mr. CARLIN. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. MANN. I object, because if the gentleman got to consider this bill in the House, he would be lost. I object.

Mr. CARLIN. Then, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of this bill.

Mr. MANN. It is automatic.

The SPEAKER. The House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 15316, with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of a bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether there is any opposition to the bill. I am wondering if an agreement can be reached by which we may vote upon this bill this evening.

Mr. MANN. Of course, the gentleman knows that that can not be done.

Mr. CARLIN. I do not know it, because the number of requests to speak on the bill on this side have been very greatly reduced, and I did not know whether the same was true on the other side.

Mr. MANN. We could not read the bill in the rest of the afternoon. The bill ought to be read when there is a chance for consideration of it. I think we ought to get it along so that we can pass it on next Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. CARLIN. Does the gentleman want any general debate? Can we not agree to dispense with the general debate and take up the bill by sections?

Mr. MANN. Really it seems to me that a bill of this sort ought to be explained by the gentleman who introduced it and the gentleman who reported it. It is an absolute departure from what the Government has done heretofore, and I think it ought to be considered.

Mr. CARLIN. How much time is wanted on that side for general debate?

Mr. MANN. The rule provides for an hour on each side.

Mr. CARLIN. Unless it is curtailed.

Mr. MANN. I think we had better commence now and use the time.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Speaker, I will yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD].

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, the bill which has been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary and known as H. R. 15316, is in some respects, as the gentleman from Illinois has said, a departure from existing law, but it is a departure from existing law in the interest of the extension of humane legislation, and in my discussion I shall not approach it in any attitude of partisanship but in full recognition of its merit as modern progressive legislation.

I think there are many people in the United States who do not know that this country has had a compensation law for Federal employees. But there was a law passed, and there is an existing law, the law of May 30, 1908, which provides a compensation for certain classes of persons in governmental employment. The idea of that bill was conceived in the development of modern conditions. Under the old common law there was absolutely no recovery for damages for injury or death unless there could be proven that it was not caused by the negligence of the employee himself or of anyone associated with him in employment. This was probably wise in its day and time, wise when industry was small, wise when the man in charge of the business had the actual personal knowledge thereof and could look after the welfare of those employed by him; but as time and conditions changed, as development and industry grew, as from a small wayside blacksmith's shop a mammoth manufacturing plant has been developed, from the time when a few men were employed to to-day when many thousands of men are employed, radically different conditions have arisen, and so the present belief and the trend of modern thought is that a man who is injured in an accident in a manufacturing plant does not become a broken human chattel, but that industry and society owe to him the continuing duty of call and attention during disability.

It is not to place a man in the same category as a wheel or a cog that, if broken, is to be cast aside on the scrap heap, but instead of the injured man and his family having to assume all the responsibility of the injury, the responsibility is now placed on the industry. That is the distinction; that is what makes the difference between the old law and the new law.

The new law in effect is that because the United States of America is to-day the greatest employer of labor in the world that same employer should put the brunt of the disability upon the industry. This bill merely asks and has for its purpose the extension of aid to a man or his family at a time when aid is needed.

Under the existing law and the limit of existing law is that if a man be injured, or if he be killed, under certain conditions a bill may be brought into Congress, and one year's pay may be given him or his family, and under certain other conditions an additional year's pay may be given him. But the distinction this law seeks to write into the statutes and on the record of humane legislation of the United States of America is that from the beginning of a man's injury the United States seeks to protect him and seeks to protect his family.

This bill embodies the most wise and most humane provisions. In the first place, it says that when a man is injured there shall be afforded him immediate temporary relief. He shall have a physician; there shall be called at once medical attendance; he is to have hospital treatment, if necessary, all for the purpose of bringing him speedily back to health and strength.

The next proposition is that if the injury be but trivial, for some slight injury, they shall wait a time, three days, and if at that time the injury has developed, then the compensatory protection of the United States begins. This bill provides, and it is a limitation, that to receive compensation one must have been injured while in the performance of his duty. I say with entire frankness that when the bill came to the Judiciary Committee it was not the bill that is here presented, it was wider in its scope, but under the guidance of this committee the bill has been redrafted and reintroduced.

It starts with the primary idea that the injury must occur in the performance of duty. Secondly, it has an exception, that if a man be injured because of his own willful misconduct, then he may not properly recover compensation. If he be injured because of intoxication, he may not have compensation. But in all other cases subject to the provisions of this bill the aid of the Government of the United States is tendered for the benefit of the man and of his family.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. What would be the effect if the injury occurred through the negligence of a fellow servant?

Mr. GARD. Of course this bill eliminates the fellow-servant rule. In all modern legislation there is a tendency to eliminate the fellow-servant rule. The tendency of such legislation in every State seems to be to do away with this timeworn and abandoned idea of one's not being allowed to recover because of the negligence of a fellow servant. This bill starts, then, after an injury has occurred and places before the man who has received the injury two things: First, the best aid of the Government in getting him back to his health and strength; and, second, if the disability be continuing, it provides for a two-thirds payment of whatever his salary may be, with the maximum of $100 and the minimum of $50 a month, so that in no event could there be any recovery under the provisions of this bill for an amount in excess of $66.66 per month. The other amounts, based on the sum of $50 or intervening amounts, according to what a man earns, would be in the ratio of two-thirds, but never in excess of $66.66 per month. It is the idea of the law that this sum of money is to protect a man and his family and keep the family together. It is not the idea to pay a large sum of money to encourage malingering, but it is the primary object of the bill to place the benefits of what it contains for the workman and his family, in order that the man may be restored to health and strength and ability to work.

This law is administered by a commission. It provides that a commission of three shall be appointed, of whom not more than two shall be members of the same political party. It provides for the administration of this enactment under the guidance of that commission. The commission is vested with the power to employ investigators. It is vested with the power to employ physicians and with the power to afford nursing and hospital treatment, all for the purpose, I reiterate, of restoring the injured man to health. It seems to me that this bill, the outlines of which I have briefly sought to give the members of the committee, is such a bill as must be recognized as a step far in advance toward needed humane legislation. It is a legislative provision which recognizes the human right, that right whose recognition has often been made subservient to the property right. It establishes the dominant rights of life, health, and happiness, and seeks again to rebuild the man and restore him to his family.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. TRIBBLE. The bill makes no provision for those who have been injured in the service heretofore. You provide for the future, but how about those who are now living and who have been injured?

Mr. GARD. Those who have been injured before the passage of the bill are compensated according to certain existing laws, but this bill makes no provision under this law for those who have been injured before. In other words, it is not retroactive.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Does not the gentleman think it should be?

Mr. GARD. I do not see how it can be.

Mr. TRIBBLE. If a man injured in the service in the future is entitled to recover, why should not a man who has been injured in the service in the past be entitled to the same privilege?

Mr. GARD. I think until this law is passed no one would have any rights under it, and that necessarily those who were injured some time ago would have to be compensated under the existing laws.

Now, there is another provision in which the committee may be interested, and it is a very practical one. It is to know that since this law of 1908 has been in existence a great number of reports of accidents have been made, and as the existing law applies to something more than one-fourth of those who are the employees of the Government of the United States I believe that something like $1,800,000 has been paid in the five years of which accurate reports have been made under the present law.

This proposed law carries an authorization of $500,000, and the best evidence that the Committee on the Judiciary could get was that there would not be needed a larger sum of money than this for the first year's operation of the new law.

Under the old law there have been different numbers of accidents and different amounts returned as compensation with about the aggregate I have given. The new law provides, as I have said, this authorization with the idea that $500,000 will be sufficient for the first year, and with the thought that from the development of this at its maximum the amount of compensation to be paid will never exceed one-half of 1 per cent of the entire governmental pay roll. The law is comprehensive, it is one law which takes into its provisions all the civil employees of the United States of America. It provides that any of these men or women, or any persons under the age of majority, who may be injured while in the performance of their duty may be compensated as provided herein. It affords safeguards both to the person injured and the Government of which he is an employee. It provides that an application for compensation must be made, that the application be given consideration, and that a continuing examination be made of the man who has sought compensation under this new Federal law, all to the end that assistance and aid may be given him as he requires it, but that as soon as possible he be again self-sustaining.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. I do.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman inform us what length of time is given in which the man can file a claim and where it must be filed?

Mr. GARD. The law provides that the department in which the man is employed must return the fact of the injury to the governing commission. The application must be made in 60 days. But there may be a condition making it impossible to file application within that time. He may have had some severe injury; he may have had a partial stroke of paralysis, or something which would prevent him from coming within the exact words of the law; but the recognition of the application is entirely under the discretion of the governing board.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. How many employees, if this bill should be enacted in its present shape, will come within its provisions?

Mr. GARD. It is estimated that about 400,000 will come within its provisions.

Mr. CANNON. How many employees are there now under existing law that receive compensation where they are injured in a hazardous employment?

Mr. GARD. It is estimated that there are about 95,000.

Mr. CANNON. Am I correct in understanding of the existing law that Government employees are only compensated for injuries who are engaged in hazardous employment?

Mr. GARD. That is true, and that definition of hazardous has been extended to certain branches, notably in the last year to the river and harbor work and the Forestry Bureau, I believe.

Mr. CANNON. About 95,000 that are entitled to relief under existing law are employed in hazardous employment?

Mr. GARD. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. And it is proposed now to increase the number not engaged in hazardous employment by 300,000 or 350,000?

Mr. GARD. I am informed that the present Post Office appropriation bill carries some protection by a similar bill for approximately 115,000.

Mr. CANNON. That has not yet been enacted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes additional to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. CANNON. And it covers all employees of the Government?

Mr. GARD. All civil employees of the United States.

Mr. CANNON. All within the civil service. That would include the postmasters?

Mr. GARD. Oh, no.

Mr. CANNON. That is civil employment. Is there any exception in the bill—are they excepted?

Mr. GARD. As I am reminded by a member of the committee [Mr. STEELE of Pennsylvania], a postmaster is an officer. These are civil employees.

Mr. CANNON. How about the rural letter carriers?

Mr. GARD. The rural letter carriers are included within the purview of this bill.

Mr. CANNON. And the city letter carriers?

Mr. GARD. They likewise are included.

Mr. CANNON. They do not hold offices?

Mr. GARD. They are employees.

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. TAGGART. In the Post Office appropriation bill approved March 9, 1914, all post-office employees are included in an accident-insurance bill of the Government.

Mr. CANNON. Is that the present law?

Mr. TAGGART. That is the present law, but it is administered in the discretion of the Postmaster General. I have it here.

Mr. CANNON. I just wanted to find out how broad it was. So that it includes all the employees embraced within the civil service—I mean in the classified service?

Mr. GARD. No; it excludes those who would be classed as officers. It includes all who would be classed as civil employees.

Mr. CANNON. And that would be pretty well up to 400,000 in all?

Mr. GARD. That is the number which it has been thought would be covered by this law.

Mr. CANNON. And what is the maximum which is to be paid under this law, if enacted?

Mr. GARD. The maximum to be paid is a monthly amount of sixty-six and two-thirds dollars per month.

Mr. CANNON. Very well. Suppose a $2,000 clerk is injured and dies, and suppose he has a family of 10 people and a widow. What would the widow and the children draw?

Mr. GARD. They would draw compensation to that amount, sixty-six and two-thirds dollars.

Mr. CANNON. Not $100?

Mr. GARD. No. One hundred dollars is the maximum, and two-thirds of that is all that could be drawn.

Mr. CANNON. How much would the widow draw?

Mr. GARD. Thirty-five per cent of his wage in case of death. Probably I misunderstood the gentleman or his questions were complicated. The first referred, I might say, to the fact of a man being injured and not killed, and he would be paid sixty-six and two-thirds dollars per month as long as the disability continued.

Mr. CANNON. If a $2,000 clerk were injured and died and there was a widow and no children, she would draw $750 a year for life, if she does not remarry?

Mr. GARD. She would be entitled to whatever provision is made for her in the law until her death or marriage.

Mr. CANNON. Even if there are no children?

Mr. CARLIN. Yes; even if there are no children.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. During the conversation between the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] the term "civil employee" was used quite frequently, and also "those who are in the classified service." Is there or is there not a distinction between those two classes of employees?

Mr. GARD. Not so far as this particular bill is concerned.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Do I understand the beneficiaries under this bill must be engaged in the service of the Government of the United States under the classified civil service?

Mr. GARD. Not at all.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Hence an employee who is not in the classified civil service but is now operating or employed by the Government and enters that service under and by virtue of a law which permits that service and exempts them from entering therein, simply by operation of the law and not as a classified servant, still receives the benefits of this law?

Mr. GARD. Anyone who has a civil employment. That is a distinction between civil and military—Army and Navy—service. Anyone who has an employment in a civil capacity in which the United States is his employer comes within the purview of this act.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I gathered from the conversation that proceeded between the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Ohio that it was limited to those engaged in the classified civil service.

Mr. GARD. It applies to all civil employees.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. All civil employees?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. HAMLIN. The question I was going to ask the gentleman was the exact question asked by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS]. The answer has been given.

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. SLOAN. I understand from the language of this bill that where a husband was killed while in the prosecution of his duty as a civil servant of the Government, his widow would receive 35 per cent of his salary during the period of her life or widowhood.

Mr. GARD. That is correct. Section 10, paragraph A, provides the method of payment to the widow if there are no children, and that 35 per cent of his compensation shall be paid to her until her death or marriage.

Mr. SLOAN. Then, if the deceased husband had been drawing $2,000 a year, she would receive during her widowhood $700 per year.

Mr. CARLIN. Yes.

Mr. SLOAN. Now, if one of our soldier boys should go to Mexico and lose his life, his widow would receive during her widowhood possibly $12 a month.

Mr. CANNON. Well, $8.

Mr. SLOAN. Twelve dollars would be the rule, would it not?

Mr. CANNON. No.

Mr. GARD. Of course the gentleman is speaking of a military-service pension?

Mr. SLOAN. Yes; strictly as a matter of comparison.

Mr. GARD. I understand.

Mr. SLOAN. I was just developing that to see whether or not it looks like entire justice, at this particular time, that there should be the special inducement made for civil service, special rewards in certain cases, when they are denied where a large danger comes.

Mr. GARD. The gentleman knows that the amounts which are paid to widows of soldiers is entirely within the determination of Congress. Whatever amount Congress determines, they may allow as an Army or service pension.

Mr. SLOAN. Yes; but that has been determined for a number of years, with no present prospect of a material increase.

Mr. CARLIN. Let me show you this difference between the civil and the military pensions. The military pension is paid to the man whether he does any other service or engages in other work or private business or not. Under the provisions of this bill, if he is able to go back to work he must do so, and then he gets only partial disability pay.

Mr. SLOAN. I was discussing the case where a man ceased to work anywhere. I was discussing the condition of the widow.

Mr. GARD. Inasmuch as I have now occupied the time of the committee longer than I had originally intended, I conclude by saying that this bill is in the interest of the conservation of human life, health, and happiness, and that it makes its strongest appeal in providing means by which the home—that greatest element in civilization—may be maintained for a Federal civil employee who has received injury while in the performance of his duty.

Mr. CARLIN. I will give the gentleman a reason. The earning capacity of the civilian employee is, say, $2,000 a year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CARLIN. I ask to be recognized. I have charge of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. For how long?

Mr. CARLIN. For two minutes. I will say that the earning capacity of the civilian employee would be $2,000 a year, while the earning capacity of the military employee would be about $300 a year. So, when you come to adjust these payments, they must be adjusted upon the earning capacity of the person who is to receive the benefit.

Mr. SLOAN. I do not see why the gentleman uses the word "must."

Mr. CARLIN. How else can you do it? There is a difference in the earning capacity of men.

Mr. SLOAN. The whole range of figures is in the control of the committee.

Mr. CANNON. The difference is this: One man gets $2,000 a year. There are hundreds and thousands of other men agonizing to get that pay. He is killed and his widow gets $750. We are drafting men now. The man who is drafted goes in at $15 a month and his widow would get $12 a month at the highest.

Mr. CARLIN. Well, the gentleman has the privilege of offering an amendment along those lines if he wishes.

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARLIN. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER. I think the gentleman from Illinois is mistaken. It is true that the widow of the $2,000 man gets $700 if he dies of the injury occurring in the service of the United States, but he must die within six years of the time that the injury is received. While I agree with the gentleman that the soldier's widow gets too little, if the soldier incurs death as the result of service and if the soldier has being in receipt of a salary of $2,000, being an officer, his widow gets very much higher pension than $12 a month.

Mr. CARLIN. The test here is not whether they get too little, but whether we are paying too much. There may be some men in the Army who get too little and some who get too much, but that is a question that can be considered in the proper bill.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARLIN. Yes.

Mr. GARD. Does not the gentleman think that there has been some error in regard to what has been said concerning the $750? The 35 per cent which the widow gets applies to the $100 a month, which is the maximum allowance, and therefore that would be $35 per month, and twelve times $35 does not equal $750.

Mr. CANNON. I was only taking the statement of the gentleman.

Mr. CARLIN. It is simply a mistake in multiplication. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I used?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has used 34 minutes.

Mr. CARLIN. I will ask the gentleman from Minnesota to use 34 minutes, and then I will ask that the committee rise.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I can not use more than 10 or 15 minutes, but I will yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Mr. Chairman, the legislation proposed by this bill is wise, just, and economical to the Government. There are about 400,000 employees of the Government under the civil service, and the present act of May 30, 1908, under which Federal employees receive compensation for injury and death while in the service of the Government only covers about 100,000 of them. In my opinion, the act of May 30, 1908, is a reflection on this great Government. I have had plenty of chances to see how this act operates. It is my privilege to be a member of the Committee on Claims in this House, and in the report of the Judiciary Committee on this bill I observe the following language:

> Many of the States of this Union have such compensation laws which are working with most excellent results, and now it is proposed that the United States shall have a compensation law for the protection of all its employees, and thus give relief from the cumbrous and inefficient system of presenting private claims to Congress for its action, often delayed and many times insufficient, and to give its sanction to this great principle of humanity.

I can back up every word of the paragraph that I have read. It makes a man's heart heavy to sit on the Committee on Claims and see the bills for relief that come before the committee for the employees of this great Government who have been injured in the performance of their duties or of those who have been killed and left dependents behind. So, much special legislation comes before the committee because, as I have said, the present law only covers about 100,000 of the employees.

Mr. HICKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Yes.

Mr. HICKS. Did I understand the gentleman to say that the States have a law similar to this for State employees?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. No. I was quoting from the report in which it says that there are State compensation laws, not for State employees but for employees of private concerns. For the first six months of the Sixty-fourth Congress there have been introduced about 200 bills before the Committee on Claims, covering injuries that happened to employees of the Government. The total of these bills if enacted into law would amount to $713,709.79.

Mr. IGOE. Do the most of these bills cover injuries that have occurred since the passage of the law of 1908?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Some do; but some go back of 1908. It was the practice of the Committee on Claims when a bill came to them for injuries not covered by the act of May 30, 1908, to allow compensation or relief in the manner it would have been allowed had it been covered by that act.

Mr. IGOE. Has it not been the experience of the gentleman that the amount allowed under that act was very small?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I will say that it has made me ashamed to report bills carrying the amount that we did. It was all the committee could do, however, because a man in a service of the Government not covered by the law could hardly be given more than a man in a service covered by the 1908 compensation act.

I shall not go into further details now, because I have only a few moments; but I have had a chance to study just what this act of May 30, 1908, does. In my opinion it is a reflection upon this great Government, and we will be doing not only a humane thing in passing this bill, but we will be doing what is wise, just, and economical, because, after this bill is passed, it is very doubtful if the character of bills will be introduced that have been introduced in the past covering claims not covered by the law. There will be uniformity and a fair and generous law for all Government civil employees and not a part of them.

Mr. Chairman, not taking any more of the time of the committee now, I am going to conclude by asking unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD as a part of my remarks the data which I have prepared respecting bills presented to the Committee on Claims during the first six months of this Congress covering claims of injured or killed Goverament employees not covered by the present law.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman stated that before the Committee on Claims there were a great many claims of a certain character that would come under this bill. Would those claims be transferred under the terms of this bill as reported before the House to this commission that has control of the payment of the amounts due, or would they still have to be presented to the Committee on Claims?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Mr. Chairman, I would have to refer that question to the gentleman having charge of the bill. As I remember the bill, they would not, because nothing can prevent a Member from introducing any kind of a bill he desires.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Delaware to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated?

There was no objection.

H. R. 15836. An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes;

H. R. 16678. An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the Military and Naval Establishments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 242. Joint resolution to authorize the President to draft members of the National Guard and of the Organized Militia of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia and members of the National Guard and Militia Reserves into the military service of the United States under certain conditions, and for other purposes.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 22 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, July 1, 1916, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Attorney General, transmitting copy of a letter from the United States attorney at New York City, calling the attention to the need of an amendment to section 245 of the Criminal Code of the United States and submitting a tentative draft of such amendment (H. Doc. No. 1261); to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, reports on preliminary examination and survey of Tennessee River between Browns Island and the railroad bridge below the city of Florence (H. Doc. No. 1262); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

3. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting list of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims which have been presented to the Treasury Department and which require an appropriation for their payment (H. Doc. No. 1263); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

4. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue relative to six claims mentioned therein for refunding taxes illegally collected and submitting a clause for inclusion in the general deficiency bill (H. Doc. No. 1264); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

5. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of War, submitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation in the additional sum of $250,000 required for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, for disposition of remains of officers, soldiers, and civil employees (H. Doc. No. 1265); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

6. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a communication from the Assistant Attorney General, submitting a list of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims in favor of claimants in Indian depredation cases (H. Doc. No. 1266); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

7. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a record of judgments rendered against the Government by the United States District Court for the Western District of Missouri under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1887 (H. Doc. No. 1267); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

8. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting schedule of claims allowed by the several accounting officers of the Treasury Department under appropriations the balance of which have been exhausted or carried to the surplus fund under the provisions of section 5 of the act of June 20, 1874 (H. Doc. No. 1268); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

9. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on preliminary examinations of Stilaguamish River, Wash. (H. Doc. No. 1269); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

10. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, reports on preliminary examination and survey of Schuylkill River from the Delaware River to South Street Bridge, with a view to dredging to a depth of 35 feet, including consideration of any proposition for cooperation on the part of local or State interests (H. Doc. No. 1270); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed with illustrations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. HAY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 16734) to pay certain families of the men of the drafted forces of the United States a sum of money for their maintenance during the term of service of such drafted men in the service of the United States, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 903), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

By Mr. TIMBERLAKE: Petitions of E. C. Bird and others, of Boulder, Colo., against bills to amend the postal laws; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, July 1, 1916.

(Legislative day of Friday, June 30, 1916.)

The Senate reassembled at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12717) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there are very few Senators in the Chamber; not more than half a dozen. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. GORE. Will the Senator from Utah let me suggest that we need not take up the time by a call of the Senate. We are now considering unobjected amendments, and if any amendment is agreed to which is opposed it can be reconsidered on the request of any Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. I think we will save time by having a quorum here to begin with.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Gallinger	Lea, Tenn.	Smoot
Beckham	Gore	McLean	Sterling
Brady	Gronna	Martin, Va.	Stone
Brandegee	Hardwick	Norris	Sutherland
Bryan	Hitchcock	Overman	Taggart
Chamberlain	Husting	Page	Thomas
Clapp	James	Poindexter	Thompson
Culberson	Johnson, S. Dak.	Shafroth	Townsend
Cummins	Jones	Sheppard	Vardaman
Curtis	Kenyon	Sherman	Warren
Dillingham	Kern	Simmons	Weeks
du Pont	La Follette	Smith, Ga.	Williams
Fletcher	Lane	Smith, Mich.	Works

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] is detained on public business. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I have been requested to announce the absence of the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] on account of illness. He is paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN]. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-two Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. GORE rose.

Mr. CLAPP. Will the Senator from Oklahoma yield to me for a moment? I wish to note a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate committee amendment, striking out the additional proviso, lines 8 to 14, inclusive, on page 23, was adopted. I simply desire to note the motion at this time.

Mr. GORE. I yielded for that purpose. The Senator has a right to enter the motion.

I will state that through an oversight a committee amendment was omitted from the print of the bill, and I now ask leave to offer the amendment in its appropriate place.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 41, line 13, in the item for investigations of methods for wood distillation and for the preservative treatment of timber, for timber testing, and so forth, strike out "$135,200" and insert the following: "and for commercial demonstrations of improved methods or processes in cooperation with individuals and companies, $160,200."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORE. I will say that a similar oversight appears, and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY] will submit the amendment agreed upon by the committee. I ask for its adoption.

Mr. BRADY. In the item for investigations, experiments, and demonstrations in the dairy industry, and so forth, on page 13, line 24, after the words "$277,470," I move to strike out the semicolon and insert a colon, and to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That $5,000 of this sum shall be used for investigations, experiments, and demonstrations in connection with the manufacture and marketing of cheese.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was detained in the committee room all day yesterday in the consideration of an appropriation bill. I will ask the chairman of the committee if there was an understanding reached that the committee amendments should first be considered.

Mr. GORE. That is the plan we are now pursuing. We are to dispose of the committee amendments first.

The reading of the bill was resumed at page 52, line 17.

The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 52, line 19, after the words "Argentine ant," to strike out "$64,400" and insert "$74,400," so as to make the clause read:

For investigations of insects affecting southern field crops, including insects affecting cotton, tobacco, rice, sugar cane, etc., and the cigarette beetle and Argentine ant, $74,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 53, after line 16, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site within or near the corporate limits of the city of Wellington, Sumner County, Kans., said site to contain a sufficient and suitable tract of ground and the location of the site to be approved by the Secretary of Agriculture. When a good and sufficient title to said site is held by the Government of the United States the Secretary of the Treasury, acting in conjunction with the Secretary of Agriculture, shall cause to be erected thereon a suitable building or buildings for the use and accommodation of the entomological laboratory or field station of the Department of Agriculture of the Government at Wellington, Kans., said site and building or buildings complete to cost not to exceed the sum of $10,000.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that this amendment may go over for the present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

Mr. THOMPSON. When the matter is called up again I should like the Senator from Utah to call my attention to it. It is a matter of considerable importance to the wheat and corn producers in the Middle West.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Kansas that as soon as the bill is read through for action on the committee amendments and all the items objected to have been passed over we will then begin with the bill from the first and take up each of the objected items and consider them in order.

Mr. THOMPSON. I should like to be heard before the matter is passed upon.

Mr. SMOOT. I assure the Senator that if there will be a chance to get word to him, if he is not in the Chamber, I will see that it is done.

The next amendment was, on page 54, line 7, after the words "general expenses," to strike out "$464,650" and insert "$484,650," so as to make the clause read:

In all, for general expenses, $484,650.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 54, line 26, after the words "Bureau of Entomology," to strike out "$868,880" and insert "$888,880," so as to make the clause read:

Total for Bureau of Entomology, $888,880.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Biological Survey," on page 56, line 16, after the words "United States," to strike out "$25,000" and insert "$21,000," so as to make the clause read:

For the maintenance of the Montana National Bison Range and other reservations and for the maintenance of game introduced into suitable localities on public lands, under supervision of the Biological Survey, including construction of fencing, wardens' quarters, shelters for animals, landings, roads, trails, bridges, ditches, telephone lines, rockwork, bulkheads, and other improvements necessary for the economical administration and protection of the reservations, and for the enforcement of section 84 of the act approved March 4, 1909, entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States," $21,000, of which sum $2,500 may be used for the purchase, capture, and transportation of game for national reservations.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, my attention has been called to this item, and I have been reliably informed that some of the game preserves will not be looked after in case this appropriation is reduced.

Mr. GORE. I will say to the Senator that if he desires to discuss the pending amendment I will ask to have it passed over for the present. I am anxious to consider unobjected amendments first.

Mr. GRONNA. I simply wanted to give notice that I shall move to amend the amendment, not at this time but when the unobjected Senate committee amendments have been adopted. I wish to offer an amendment to restore the amount fixed by the House. My attention was called to the fact that there is a game preserve in Arkansas, for instance, the Big Lake game preserve, and the bureau was unable, due to a lack of funds, to look after it at all. We have some 70 game preserves, and the small amount of $25,000 has been appropriated. In at least one-half of these game preserves they have to keep wardens; there are about 35 of them in the different sections of the United States where a warden is being employed, and the appropriation is too small. I wish that the item may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

The next amendment was, on page 57, line 7, after the word "marten," to strike out "$400,540" and insert "$420,540," so as to read:

For investigating the food habits of North American birds and mammals in relation to agriculture, horticulture, and forestry, including experiments and demonstrations in destroying wolves, coyotes, prairie dogs, and other animals injurious to agriculture and animal husbandry, and for investigations and experiments in connection with rearing of fur-bearing animals, including mink and marten, $420,540.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 57, in line 10, after the words "public lands," to strike out:

Provided further, That of this sum not more than $5,000 may be used in investigating the disease of wild ducks in the Salt Lake Valley region of Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that that amendment go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment goes over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 57, line 13, after the word "sum," to insert "not less than"; in the same line, after the word "than," to strike out "$250,000" and insert "$125,000"; in line 14, before the words "be used," to strike out "may" and insert "shall"; and in line 16, after the words "animal husbandry," to insert:

And provided further also, That of this sum not more than $125,000 shall be used on the public lands, national forests, and elsewhere in the Western and Northwestern States for the protection of stock and other domestic animals through the suppression of rabies by the destruction of wolves, coyotes, and other predatory wild animals.

So as to make the clause read:

For investigating the food habits of North American birds and mammals in relation to agriculture, horticulture, and forestry, including experiments and demonstrations in destroying wolves, coyotes, prairie dogs, and other animals injurious to agriculture and animal husbandry, and for investigations and experiments in connection with rearing of fur-bearing animals, including mink and marten, $420,540: Provided, That of this sum $15,000 shall be used for the destruction of ground squirrels on the national forests, and other public lands: And provided also, That of this sum not less than $125,000 shall be used on the national forests and the public domain in destroying wolves, coyotes, and other animals injurious to agriculture and animal husbandry: And provided further also, That of this sum not more than $125,000 shall be used on the public lands, national forests, and elsewhere in the Western and Northwestern States for the protection of stock and other domestic animals through the suppression of rabies by the destruction of wolves, coyotes, and other predatory wild animals.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 58, line 15, after the words "general expenses," to strike out "$534,200" and insert "$550,200," so as to make the clause read:

In all, for general expenses, $550,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 58, line 16, after the words "Biological Survey," to strike out "$578,203" and insert "$594,230," so as to make the clause read:

Total for Bureau of Biological Survey, $594,230.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Division of Publications," on page 59, line 24, before the words "skilled laborers, at $840 each," to strike out "seven" and insert "eight"; in line 25, before the words "skilled laborers, at $720 each," to strike out "seventeen" and insert "sixteen"; and on page 60, line 8, after the words "in all," to strike out "$177,280" and insert "$177,400," so as to make the clause read:

Salaries, Division of Publications: One Editor, who shall be chief of division, $3,500; 1 editor, who shall be assistant chief of division, $2,500; 1 chief clerk, $2,000; 2 assistant editors, at $2,000 each; 4 assistant editors, $1,800, each; 1 assistant editor, $1,600; 1 assistant editor, $1,400; 1 assistant editor in charge of indexing, $2,000; 1 indexter, $1,400; 1 assistant in charge of illustrations, $2,100; 2 draftsmen or photographers, at $1,600 each; 2 draftsmen or photographers, at $1,500 each; 2 draftsmen or photographers, at $1,400 each; 1 draftsman or photographer, $1,300; 7 draftsmen or photographers, at $1,200 each; 1 assistant photographer, $900; 1 assistant in charge of document section, $2,000; 1 assistant in document section, $1,800; 1 foreman, miscellaneous distribution, $1,500; 1 forewoman, $1,400; 1 clerk, class 3; 1 clerk, class 2; 9 clerks, class 1; 16 clerks, at $1,000 each; 40 clerks, at $900 each; 18 clerks, at $840 each; 2 skilled laborers, at $900 each; 8 skilled laborers, at $840 each; 4 skilled laborers, at $780 each; 1 chief folder, $1,200; 16 skilled laborers, at $720 each; 1 folder, $1,000; 2 folders, at $900 each; 2 skilled laborers, at $1,100 each; 1 skilled laborer, $1,000; 2 messengers, at $840 each; 2 messengers, at $720 each; 3 messengers or messenger boys, at $600 each; 2 messengers or messenger boys, at $480 each; 2 messengers or messenger boys, at $420 each; 2 messengers or messenger boys, at $360 each; 1 laborer, $840; 2 laborers, at $600 each; 4 charwomen, at $480 each; 3 charwomen, at $240 each; in all, $177,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 60, line 27, after the words "Division of Publications," to strike out "$197,530" and insert "$197,650," so as to make the clause read:

Total for Division of Publications, $197,650.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Miscellaneous expenses," on page 63, line 14, after the word "department," to strike out "$115,000" and insert "$130,000," so as to make the clause read:

Miscellaneous expenses, Department of Agriculture: For stationery, blank books, twine, paper, gum, dry goods, soap, brushes, brooms, mats, oils, paints, glass, lumber, hardware, ice, fuel, water and gas pipes, heating apparatus, furniture, carpets, and matting; for lights, freight, express charges, advertising, telegraphing, telephoning, postage, washing towels, and necessary repairs and improvements to buildings and heating apparatus; for the purchase, subsistence, and care of horses and the purchase and repair of harness and vehicles, for official purposes only; for the payment of duties on imported articles, and the Department of Agriculture's proportionate share of the expense of the dispatch agent in New York; for official traveling expenses; and for other miscellaneous supplies and expenses not otherwise provided for, and necessary for the practical and efficient work of the department, $130,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Rent in the District of Columbia," on page 63, line 19, after the words "Department of Agriculture," to strike out "$123,689" and insert "$138,689," so as to make the clause read:

Rent of buildings, Department of Agriculture: For rent of buildings and parts of buildings in the District of Columbia, for use of the various bureaus, divisions, and offices of the Department of Agriculture, $138,689: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture shall submit annually to Congress in his estimates of appropriations a statement showing what proportion of this appropriation is paid for the quarters occupied by the various branches of the department.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be agreed to, without objection.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "States Relations Service," on page 64, line 4, before the words "clerks, at $1,000 each," to strike out "19" and insert "21"; in line 5, before the word "clerks," where it appears the second time, to strike out "8" and insert "5," and, in line 12, after the words "in all," to strike out "$127,700" and insert "$127,540"; so as to make the clause read:

Salaries, States Relations Service: One director, $4,500; 1 chief clerk, $2,000; 1 financial clerk, $2,000; 1 clerk or proof reader, $1,800; 3 clerks, class 4; 3 clerks, class 3; 1 clerk, $1,500; 9 clerks, class 2; 22 clerks, class 1; 21 clerks, at $1,000 each; 24 clerks, at $900 each; 7 clerks, at $840 each; 5 clerks, at $720 each; 1 library cataloguer, $900; 1 clerk or photographer, $720; 3 messengers, messenger boys, or laborers, at $600 each; 10 messengers, messenger boys, or laborers, at $480 each; 1 messenger, messenger boy, or laborer, $360; 3 messengers, messenger boys, or laborers, at $300 each; 1 skilled laborer, $900; 4 laborers or charwomen, at $480 each; 9 laborers or charwomen, at $240 each; in all, $127,540.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I notice in the item for the rent of buildings for the Department of Agriculture there is an increase of $15,000. Will the Senator having the bill in charge state why that increase is necessary?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, the principal reason is because of the necessity of additional quarters for the Forestry Service. If the Senator from Utah desires, I will have a memorandum in reference to that matter read which will explain it very fully.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I would like to have the letter read. I will say to the Senator from Oklahoma, however, that nearly every department has asked for increases in the appropriations for rent, and that in nearly every case, when an investigation has been made of the request, it has been found that such increases were not absolutely necessary, and in many cases where such increases were asked for in other appropriation bills they have been disagreed to. I should like now to hear just what the reasons are for this increase.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

RENT IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

NOTE.—The bill as passed by the House provides for a considerable expansion of the activities of the department, notably in the case of the Office of Markets and Rural Organization and the States Relations Service. This, of course, will necessitate the appointment of a large number of additional employees in the city of Washington. It is estimated that, in order to provide suitable accommodations for the force necessitated by the increased appropriations for these two branches alone, at least 14,000 square feet of additional floor space will be required. It is impossible to provide accommodations for the additional employees in the buildings now occupied by these bureaus.

Many other branches of the department are now seriously overcrowded, and, unless relief can be afforded, this condition will be aggravated during the next fiscal year. From time to time it has been necessary for the department to rent several buildings which are not suitable for office purposes and are not fireproof. If the increase recommended is allowed, and authority is given to enter into term leases as suggested in the next note, it is believed that the department will be able to secure the erection of another large modern fireproof office building in the neighborhood of the department grounds to accommodate the Forest Service, enable the abandonment of several nonfireproof structures, provide for the expansion of the offices now needing additional space, and relieve some of the congested conditions now prevailing. This will result in a greater centralization of the various branches of the department, will greatly facilitate the transaction of Government business, and will be decidedly economical and advantageous. It is urgently recommended that the increase be granted.

This item was not included in the estimates because it was impossible at that time to forecast the action of the Congress upon the department's recommendations and the need for additional space was not so apparent.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the fact that this memorandum states that the additional space required will be 14,000 square feet. The Government now generally pays from 32 cents a square foot to 40 cents a square foot according to the location and class of building. If it be a fireproof building, the price paid is generally 40 cents per square foot. There are, however, buildings in Washington which the Government is renting for 33⅓ cents per square foot, which are classed as modern fireproof buildings. Granting that this should be a fireproof building, and that we paid even 40 cents a square foot for it, that would amount to $5,600, while the increased appropriation asked for, and which has been allowed by the committee, is $15,000. In my opinion, Mr. President, that is entirely too much, even on the showing made by the Forestry Service.

Further, I want to call attention to the fact that in the sundry civil bill there is a provision for the creation of a joint committee of the House and of the Senate for the purpose of investigating the whole question of rents paid by the Government in the District of Columbia, and also authorizing a report to Congress of their opinion as to whether the Government of the United States should not erect its own buildings; if so, at what cost, and what the interest would amount to upon the cost, as compared with the amount of money which we pay as rent in the District of Columbia to-day. In view of that, I do not believe that we ought to enter upon any plan of having buildings erected here for any of the departments or bureaus of the Government at this time, at least not until that investigation is made and a report is submitted to Congress upon it. I ask the Senator if under the conditions an increase of $5,000 would not be ample?

I will also state to the Senator that the Department of Labor, occupying a great part of the Hay Building, across the street from the State, War, and Navy Building, secures all the space which they have there for $20,000 a year. Now, the Forest Service is asking a $15,000 increase to house a few men who will be provided for in this bill, and I think it is unreasonable and ought not to be allowed. Upon the basis that we are paying for the best fireproof buildings in the District, granting that the 14,000 square feet of space which they claim they want as additional space for that bureau is necessary, it could be procured for $5,600, and I believe that the Senator himself, after this statement is made, which I assure him is absolutely correct, will agree that the $15,000 asked for is too large.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I entirely agree with the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] in regard to the general policy which is outlined. I think that the policy of renting buildings instead of constructing buildings for the Government service is wasteful and extravagant. I think that the Government ought to abandon the policy of renting buildings. I think that it ought to construct all the buildings necessary for the accommodation of its employees and for the discharge of its functions. Acting upon that theory, the committee disallowed the proposition to lease a building for five years with the hope that a reform might be brought about in harmony with the Senator's suggestion.

The 14,000 feet of additional space required relates to the Marketing Bureau and to the Bureau of States' Relations. Fourteen thousand feet would be required for their accommodation, as I remember. In addition to that, greater space is required for the Forestry Service, and, in addition to that, the extra space required for these services, the department proposes to abandon the use of buildings which are not fireproof and substitute buildings which are fireproof for the preservation of the official records.

There is no estimate in the communication as to the amount of space that would be required for that change or as to the amount of space that would be required for the Forestry Service. I may say that I think the Marketing Division is a branch of the public service that ought to receive favorable and sympathetic consideration at the hands of the Senate. The Senator from Utah knows that the farmers of the country are feeling the keenest interest in improved marketing facilities. Our marketing facilities are not up to the standards that prevail in other countries. The bill carries a considerable additional appropriation for the expansion of the Marketing Division, and I think this bureau ought to receive favorable consideration and ought not to be handicapped for want of space. I trust this amendment will be allowed to go to conference.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator understands that in my statement I agreed that the 14,000 square feet of space for the marketing division should be provided for; but I am quite sure that they can get that amount of space at a yearly rental of $5,000; I am positive of it. I do not want to interfere with them, but I do believe that the additional $10,000 is not necessary, and that the Forestry Service can get along, at least for another year, without it, because there is no increase in the number of forests anywhere in the country; there is no increase in the number of employees of that bureau, and there is no increase of the administrative force in any particular here in Washington.

Mr. GORE. I am happy to say that is so.

Mr. SMOOT. And therefore, Mr. President, I still believe that $5,000 increase would be ample, instead of $15,000.

Mr. GORE. I hope the Senator will let the item go to conference, and I will be glad to take it up with him and the department further and limit it to the actual necessities of the case.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, this matter of rent in the District of Columbia is very familiar to us all; it has been debated over and over again. I have been of the opinion that there are abuses in the matter of renting buildings in the District of Columbia. It has seemed to me that in some instances they were not required and that in other instances the rent paid was exorbitant; in fact, I know that to be the case, and I have put in print a schedule of the rentals paid here and the percentage that the owners have received, which in some instances is inordinately high.

Realizing that the controversy ought to be seriously taken up, the Senator will find in the sundry civil appropriation bill passed only a few days ago that a joint commission is provided to take up this entire matter and report to Congress at the beginning, I think, of the next session. It will be a great work, but the commission will be composed of men who are somewhat familiar with the subject and who doubtless will go into it in a very thorough manner. I hope when that commission does its work and reports to the Congress that this annual, and I might well say almost perennial, discussion of the subject will end.

Personally I have not been able to make myself believe that in many instances these rented buildings were necessary, nor have I been able to persuade myself that those who have made the arrangements and signed the contracts have been as wise as they ought to have been in the amount of rental which they have agreed to pay.

Mr. President, I know nothing about this particular item. I should, of course, follow the committee in their recommendation if they have looked into it carefully, but I wanted to put in the RECORD the fact that the Committee on Appropriations, recognizing the importance of this matter, have taken steps which we think will reach a solution of this very troublesome question.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I desire to say that from the language of the communication which has been read it is very evident that some real estate agent desires to put up a building and rent it to the Government. I will say to the chairman we have this same question to contend with on every appropriation bill.

Mr. GORE. I will say that we refused to insert a clause authorizing a five years' lease.

Mr. OVERMAN. Then they do not need the $15,000, because the authorization to lease has not been granted. I ask the Senator to note this language in the communication which he has had read:

If the increase recommended is allowed, and authority is given to enter into term leases as suggested in the next note, it is believed that the department will be able to secure the erection of another large modern fireproof office building in the neighborhood of the department grounds to accommodate the Forest Service.

Mr. GORE. The committee did not allow that.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand the committee left out the authorization for a lease, and therefore the Agricultural Department does not need the $15,000, because they will not be able to secure the new building.

According to the estimate of 14,000 feet of additional space required, they do not need to exceed $6,000, and the provision for the lease, as I have said, having been left out, why do they want $15,000 when, according to their own estimate, they only need $6,000?

Mr. GORE. The 14,000 feet referred to was expressly limited to the marketing division and to the States Relations Bureau. In addition to that they suggest the necessity for additional space in connection with the Forestry Service and for the storing of their archives in fireproof rather than in nonfireproof buildings.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is so if they can have a new building, but the committee has not allowed the provision for the new building, and therefore the department does not need any more than the space especially needed for the marketing division, and that can be secured for not to exceed $6,000. I suggest to the Senator that he accept an amendment providing for $6,000 additional.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I am willing to accept an amendment reducing the amount to $10,000, and then in conference I should not object to reducing it to $6,000 if that is found advisable; but I should not like arbitrarily to reduce it without a little further investigation.

Mr. OVERMAN. We have given them more money than they need to secure the space they desire.

Mr. GORE. I will say that I would not object to an amendment providing that they should not pay more than a certain amount per square foot. I am willing to limit it in every possible way so as to guarantee economy.

Mr. OVERMAN. If it is limited to $10,000, that will be satisfactory to me.

Mr. GORE. I have no objection to reducing it to $10,000.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, several years ago, soon after I came to the Senate, I called attention, as the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] perhaps will remember, to the exorbitant prices that in a number of instances we were paying for buildings. We developed the fact that men erected their buildings and financed them and paid for them on 10-year leases out of what they got from the Government. Now, I do hope that we will not submit to it longer. Three years ago we appointed a committee of the Senate to look into the matter and report to us, hoping that they would give us some definite information, and enable us to bring this leasing of buildings to a close.

One of the real troubles we have had has been the desire in every instance, whenever any kind of building was erected for the Government, to put up some wonderful piece of architectural structure. I insist that in the enlargement of buildings for a department like the Departure of Agriculture we ought to adopt a plain, simple, businesslike form of construction. We have the land. We ought to put up a 400-room building, which could be done at a cost of $600,000. We ought to adopt that policy, and adopt a policy which would look forward to a general enlargement, with a well-balanced, well-constructed series of buildings—not products of wonderful architectural beauty, but using business sense upon a plan of additions and additions and additions as we need them to meet the wants of the departments. I hope we will get something from this committee, and I am glad to see this cut to $10,000.

The chairman of the committee and the entire committee were opposed to allowing the contract for any term of years. We rejected that. I hope that we will never make another. I am sure that we can save one-half the rent we pay and have better buildings if we will put them up for ourselves.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, in considering the appropriation bills we oftentimes glide over carelessly provisions that are incorporated in the bill and really do not carry the matter in our minds. I am going to take time to read the provision that was inserted by the Senate committee in the sundry civil bill, which has become a law, relating to this subject, thinking it may be well for Senators to know precisely what it is:

Public Buildings Commission: With a view to ultimately providing permanent quarters for all the governmental activities in the District of Columbia in buildings owned by the Government a commission is hereby created, to be composed of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate and one other member of said committee, to be appointed by said chairman; the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the Senate and one other member of said committee, to be appointed by said chairman; the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives and one other member of said committee, to be appointed by said chairman; the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the House of Representatives and one other member of said committee, to be appointed by said chairman; the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds, the Superintendent of Buildings and Grounds, and the Supervising Architect or the Acting Supervising Architect of the Treasury during any vacancy in said office.

The said commission shall elect one of its members as chairman of the commission, and is authorized to employ such expert clerical or other services as it may deem necessary, and shall avail itself of the advice of the Commission of Fine Arts.

The said commission shall investigate and ascertain what public buildings are needed in the District of Columbia to provide suitable and adequate accommodations, with allowances for future expansion, for all of the offices, establishments, and public services of the Government in the District of Columbia, the proper location of such buildings, the probable cost thereof, and the probable cost of such new sites as they may deem it necessary for the Government to acquire.

Any vacancies in said commission shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointments were made.

And then a small appropriation was made.

That provision does not specifically authorize the commission to inquire into the matter of rents; but it does provide a means whereby we shall, if we are wise, in the near future get rid of paying rents at all.

I have great hopes that this commission will practically solve this question, which is so often debated in the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Before the Senator from Utah took the floor this amendment had already been agreed to. Shall the vote be reconsidered?

Mr. SMOOT. I did not so understand. I was on my feet before——

The VICE PRESIDENT. We are two pages beyond this.

Mr. SMOOT. If that is the case, then I ask unanimous consent for a reconsideration of the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the vote will be reconsidered. The Chair hears no objection.

The SECRETARY. It is now proposed, in lieu of the amount proposed to be inserted, $138,689, to insert $133,689.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 66, line 11, after the words "necessary expenses," to strike out "$661,300" and insert "$651,300," so as to make the clause read:

For farmers' cooperative demonstrations and for the study and demonstration of the best methods of meeting the ravages of the cotton-boll weevil, including the employment of labor in the city of Washington and elsewhere, supplies, and all other necessary expenses, $651,300: Provided, That the expense of such service shall be defrayed from this appropriation and such cooperative funds as may be voluntarily contributed by State, county, and municipal agencies, associations of farmers, and individual farmers, universities, colleges, boards of trade, chambers of commerce, other local associations of business men, business organizations, and individuals within the State.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 67, line 9, after the words "necessary expenses," to strike out "$143,000" and insert "$165,000"; in line 10, after the word "Alaska," to strike out "$48,000" and insert "$60,000"; in line 11, after the words "Porto Rico," to strike out "$40,000," and insert "$50,000, of which sum $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be used for the maintenance of a substation for the introduction, propagation of, and experiment with tropical and other fruit trees, in the event the Porto Rican Government, either by itself or in cooperation with individuals, establishes the substation on at least 50 acres of land, with the buildings, tools, implements, live stock, etc., as may be necessary," so as to make the clause read:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to establish and maintain agricultural experiment stations in Alaska, Hawaii, Porto Rico, and the island of Guam, including the erection of buildings, the preparation, illustration, and distribution of reports and bulletins, and all other necessary expenses, $165,000, as follows: Alaska, $60,000; Hawaii, $40,000; Porto Rico, $50,000, of which sum $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be used for the maintenance of a substation for the introduction, propagation of, and experiment with tropical and other fruit trees, in the event the Porto Rican government, either by itself or in cooperation with individuals, establishes the substation on at least 50 acres of land, with the buildings, tools, implements, live stock, etc., as may be necessary; and Guam, $15,000; and the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to sell such products as are obtained on the land belonging to the agricultural experiment stations in Alaska, Hawaii, Porto Rico, and the island of Guam: Provided, That of the sum herein appropriated for the experiment station in Hawaii $5,000 may be used in agricultural extension work in Hawaii.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 68, line 15, after the words "general expenses," to strike out "$2,842,140" and insert "$2,854,140," so as to make the clause read:

In all, for general expenses, $2,854,140.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 68, line 16, after the words "States Relations Service," to strike out "$2,969,840" and insert "$2,981,680," so as to make the clause read:

Total for States Relations Service, $2,981,680.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Office of Public Roads and Rural Engineering," on page 70, line 13, after the words "road materials," to strike out "$37,780" and insert "$42,780," so as to make the clause read:

For investigations of the chemical and physical character of road materials, $42,780.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 71, line 2, after the word "conduits," to insert: "For demonstration work in irrigation from underground supplies of water through the construction of concrete or other reservoirs and the use of windmills and other appliances;" and in line 13, after the words "necessary expenses," to strike out "$103,400," and insert: "$105,900: Provided, That $2,500 of this sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be used for the establishment of an overhead system of irrigation at or near Denver, Colo: Provided further, That the United States shall be at no expense for land or water in connection with such plant;" so as to make the clause read:

For investigating and reporting upon the utilization of water in farm irrigation, including the best methods to apply in practice; the different kinds of power and appliances, and the development of equipment for farm irrigation; the flow of water in ditches, pipes, and other conduits; for demonstration work in irrigation from underground supplies of water through the construction of concrete or other reservoirs and the use of windmills and other appliances; the duty, apportionment, and measurement of irrigation water; the customs, regulations, and laws affecting irrigation; for the purchase and installation of equipment for experimental purposes; for the giving of expert advice and assistance; for the preparation and illustration of reports and bulletins on irrigation; for the employment of assistants and labor in the city of Washington and elsewhere; for rent outside of the District of Columbia; and for supplies and all necessary expenses, $105,900: Provided, That $2,500 of this sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be used for the establishment of an overhead system of irrigation at or near Denver, Colo: Provided further, That the United States shall be at no expense for land or water in connection with such plant.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I want to ask the chairman of the committee what the object of that provision is. What is the purpose of establishing this overhead irrigation system at Denver?

Mr. GORE. I will say that it relates to what is known as the Skinner system and other systems of overhead irrigation. These systems have been successfully established in New Jersey, and perhaps in other parts of the country; and I think they might revolutionize the irrigation of the country, particularly in communities accessible to large markets.

Mr. JONES. If the Skinner system is successful, why send people out to Denver to demonstrate it.

Mr. GORE. I will say that a great many provisions in this bill have that object in view—that there is more or less conservatism in people where they become accustomed to a particular system.

Mr. JONES. What is the Skinner system? What sort of a system is it?

Mr. GORE. There are, I think, two different systems. I had occasion to visit a locality in New Jersey where one of the systems was in operation. I think 10 acres had been brought under the plant. Pipes some 30 or 40 feet apart are erected some 6 or 8 feet above the surface of the ground, with little openings or orifices about 4 feet apart in these pipes, and with a small gasoline engine the water is forced through these pipes. I think it requires only 30 or 40 pounds of pressure. The water comes out of these orifices in the form of vapor, and it is estimated that you can get the equivalent of an inch of rain in about 10 hours. I will say that the increased production on this 10 acres almost surpasses the dreams of avarice. The owner gave me figures where he had realized a thousand dollars an acre from products grown in this way.

In the West I do not think this system has ever been instituted at all. I think there is more or less doubt as to the success, especially of the vast and expensive systems upon which the West has been relying. At any rate, they are very expensive, and this system costs only about $100 or $120 an acre to install. Of course, it would succeed only in densely populated communities, in the vicinity of large markets; but I think it would be of incalculable value to the arid and semiarid regions in the western part of our country.

Mr. JONES. Are they to take some private land out there and install this plant in it?

Mr. GORE. I suppose the city of Denver would furnish the ground and furnish the water. I do not know, of course.

Mr. JONES. It says, "at or near Denver, Colo.: Provided further, That the United States shall be at no expense for land or water in connection with such plant." Has any proposition been submitted to the committee through the department or otherwise?

Mr. GORE. No, sir; there has not. I will say that the system does not seem to be generally known about through the country. For my own part, I learned of it rather by accident; but I think it contains such immense possibilities that I thought it ought to be brought to the attention of the people in the western part of this country.

Mr. JONES. I will say to the Senator that, of course, anything that will develop new and efficient methods of irrigation, better than those already in use in the irrigated sections, of course, would be of value; but it seems to me that in irrigated sections like Colorado and out in my State they are pretty well up to date. Take it in my locality: It is nothing unusual to get products of a thousand dollars and even greater value an acre off of our land under our systems of irrigation. We have different systems of irrigation that we have tried and developed and put into operation.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

Mr. GORE. I will say that I happened to visit this system in New Jersey, and happened to be in Denver the following fall, and it occurred to me that it would be of incalculable value to that region; and of course, if instituted in Denver it would be given publicity over that entire region. I shall not insist on it if the Senator objects, but I should regret to see it go out.

Mr. JONES. I am not objecting to it. I am simply asking for information, and I want to know the reason why it should go in. If the committee, from the investigations they have made, and the Senators from Colorado, think it to be a wise expenditure of money, I shall not make any objection to it.

Mr. GORE. It is a very modest appropriation, and I think it might be worth multiplied millions to that region.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, relating to this matter I will say that I am a member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. This item was not proposed by myself, but at the same time I heartily concur in it. The situation is simply this: This is a system that has been demonstrated in various parts of the United States as applicable to places where there is intensive cultivation, where the amount that can be raised on a 10-acre or 5-acre tract amounts to probably two or three thousand dollars. This is a system which can be used with a little economy on their part, and on that account it is one of the tests that is going on. These people are doing it in other parts of the country. This is a general appropriation for a large sum of money, which includes an underground supply and other sources, and it seems to me Denver affords one of the opportunities to test it in as good a place as can be found. Denver, of course, is centrally located in the arid region. I believe that for testing irrigation of this kind applicable to the arid region, perhaps the best location that could be obtained would be near a large city where persons could be taken, and it could be demonstrated to them.

The appropriation is only $2,500, and it is out of a sum to be expended. It would not reduce the amount of the appropriation if it is stricken out. For that reason it seems to me that it ought to remain, and let us see if there will not be some good result from it. If there is not, they will abandon it.

Mr. JONES. I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that it does actually increase by $2,500 the amount carried by the bill, but I make no criticism on that account.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I see that is the fact.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, of course I can only express an opinion as to this Skinner system being of any advantage whatever to the western country. I am free to say that in my opinion it will never be used. Of course I am not going to object if they want to spend $2,500 to establish an overhead system at Denver; but if the statement made by the chairman is correct, that it will cost $125 an acre to establish it without the water itself, I doubt very much whether there is any land out there that is not already provided with water which could stand that wonderful expense.

But I want to call the Senator's attention to a proposition which would be of immense benefit to the semiarid and arid part of our country. I believe that before many years there will be developed all through that arid country artesian wells. The lands are of hardly any value whatever to-day. People can not live upon them, and therefore they lay there as waste land. To sink an artesian well is too expensive for a poor man hunting a home to undertake. If the Government of the United States wants to assist in irrigation and open that vast waste of land, I may call it, to the people of the United States to make homes for them, I believe there can be no better way than to appropriate money for the Government to demonstrate whether artesian wells can be found in that country or not.

I have submitted an amendment to this bill. I know it is out of order to offer it at this time, but I speak of it because I am fully convinced that there are millions of acres of lands in the intermountain country, in that arid and semiarid district of the United States, that never can be cultivated unless by the development of an underground flow of water. If the Government could go into a county and demonstrate there that it is possible to secure an artesian well of sufficient size, furnishing a quantity of water enough to develop the lands within a reasonable distance of it, then I believe capital would take hold of the proposition, advance the money to the entrymen, and that land, which is now absolutely of no use to the State in which it is located or to the Government of the United States in any way would become fertile land with homes.

At the proper time I want to offer an amendment for that purpose.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I do not think this is the proper bill to which to attach an investigation of that section with reference to wells. I think that falls under the head of the Geological Survey. The difficulty about testing for water with an artesian well is that you can not determine by sinking a well at one point ordinarily what could be accomplished 20 miles from it unless a geological study is made. We had this subject up in committee for consideration and we concluded that it would be well for the Geological Survey to map out a good deal of that territory and see if there were any number of locations of the same character occupying a position where tests in a few would give information as to all.

I think the committee were unanimously of the opinion that we would like to see something of that sort done, but they thought it was necessary to take the knowledge of the members of the Geological Survey rather than of the Agricultural Department.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator he is perfectly correct in the statement he has made, that the item rightfully should go upon the sundry civil appropriation bill. I also wish to state that in the sundry civil appropriation bill that has just passed, the conference report upon which has been agreed to, there was an item which read as follows:

> Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, of which $100,000 may be used to test the existence of artesian and other underground water supplies suitable for irrigation in arid and semiarid regions by boring wells, one-half to be immediately available.

The Senate agreed to that amendment. It went into conference, and we are all aware of the unfortunate result of our conference on the sundry civil appropriation bill.

I wish to say to the Senator having this bill in charge that I take the statement he made to me as absolutely correct, that the committee intends next year, if nothing is done under the sundry civil appropriation bill, to handle this question in some way on the Agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. There is a provision in the sundry civil bill about artesian wells.

Mr. SMOOT. It was stricken out in conference.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think the Senator is in error about that.

Mr. SMOOT. No; here is the record.

Mr. JONES. If the Senator will permit me, there has been carried an item in the sundry civil appropriation bill for the investigation of artesian and underground water. That, I think, is in the bill now, but they have held continually that they can not use that for sinking artesian wells, for boring wells.

Mr. OVERMAN. I know there is a provision in the bill.

Mr. JONES. I never could understand the theory why they could not do it, because I do not think they could investigate the underground supply without sinking a well; but that has been their holding. They never undertake to sink wells.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes, they never spend a dollar in boring for water, and it is absolutely impossible to demonstrate whether you are going to get water unless you bore a well and find out whether water will come to the surface or not.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. PITTMAN. Do I understand that the Senator from Utah intends to offer an amendment later on?

Mr. SMOOT. Of course I know a point of order would be made against it, but I was hoping the chairman would not enforce a point of order. However, I am going to offer the amendment and I am going to plead with the chairman of the committee to accept the amendment and allow it to go into conference. Of course I recognize the fact that one objection will prevent it from going upon the appropriation bill.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The Senator does not ask that now?

Mr. SMOOT. No; I am not asking that now.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The Senator expects to do it when the time comes to offer individual amendments?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, regular order.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I hope to be here when the Senator from Utah offers that amendment. I should like to urge its passage.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I am opposed to putting this work on the Agricultural Department.

Mr. PITTMAN. I think I have the floor.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Excuse me.

Mr. OVERMAN. I call for the regular order. There is nothing before the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I thought the Senator from Nevada had concluded his remark. I beg his pardon.

Mr. PITTMAN. I simply want to add my plea to that of the Senator from Utah that the chairman of the committee will not raise a point of order against it and that no other Senator will. I think it should be agreed to after our unfortunate experience with the sundry civil appropriation bill. There is no doubt that that is the proper bill. I have no doubt there are a great many proper amendments that were put on that bill, which upon proper consideration would have passed. As I had the opportunity of stating the other day, I am very sorry that the conference report on the sundry civil bill was agreed to. But it was agreed to. The Senate seemed to think it was necessary, that an emergency had arisen, and that it should be put through. Owing to the haste we were debarred from considering amendments of the kind the Senator has referred to.

I trust a point of order will not be raised against this amendment, but that we will be allowed to consider it on its merits, and I am satisfied that then the Senate will recognize its merits.

As has been said by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], we have never had available an appropriation to seek out artesian and subsurface water in those arid States. The Government owns all that vast quantity of land. It has not been taken up under the homestead act or under the desert-land act or under any existing act, and it never will be taken up unless subsurface waters can be found, waters that are unknown to-day.

If the Government will grant that land to the States the States will develop that water. The States now have no interest in it and the Government certainly should take some steps to give some value to that land, either by developing the water or turning it over to the States to develop.

I trust when this matter comes up it will be allowed to be considered on its merits.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, there are so many absurd and useless appropriations and there is such an enormous waste of public money in the Agricultural appropriation bill that it is hardly worth while to object to a small item like this. But speaking of the whole section of which the proposed amendment is a part, the absurdity of the National Government operating from Washington, undertaking to educate the people of Colorado, for example, in the matter of irrigation, must be apparent to anybody who has any knowledge of the situation.

I suppose Colorado has been one of the most active and enterprising States in the whole Union in the matter of developing and supplying water for irrigation purposes, both surface water and underground, and people there could probably teach the Agricultural Department a good deal more than that department could teach them.

Mr. President, the National Government has no ownership in the water that is devoted to irrigation. It has no control or no right to regulate the use of the water in any way whatever. It is a jurisdiction in all its parts that belongs to the States, not to the National Government. There is no earthly reason under those circumstances why the Government should be expending its money for any such purpose as is included in this particular section of the bill. If the National Government has public land that it desires to irrigate, it is perfectly legitimate for it to put down wells for the purpose of discovering artesian water or to resort to any other means of developing and supplying water for the use of its own land.

We undertook to do that in the establishment of the Reclamation Service, which, in the beginning, was perfectly legitimate and within the power and jurisdiction of the National Government. But we have extended it far beyond that. The Reclamation Service is now devoted in large part to supplying water to private land, not land owned by the Government. Some of the reclamation projects are wholly and entirely devoted to supplying water to private lands and not to publicly owned lands.

I think it is a great question, Mr. President, whether a project of that kind if devoted wholly to the supply of water to private lands is constitutional or within the power and jurisdiction of the National Government. But here is a proposition now for the Government to go into this matter of developing water, teaching the States how to develop a supply of water from underground and from surface sources. There is not any legitimate reason why the Government should do any such thing as that. While, of course, it is intended to be a benefit to the Western States, one of which I represent here, in part, I think it is an illegitimate use of the public funds and ought not to be done.

There are a great many other proposed appropriations here for the benefit, for example, of the South in the cultivation of their crops, and other sections of the country for various purposes. A great many of them, I think, are illegitimate. We have gone beyond all reason in appropriations made for the use of the Agricultural Department. I do not know where we are going to stop. We are broadening out the service constantly year after year. The amounts appropriated are increasing as we go along until after a while we will be in a situation where we are coming near bankruptcy on the part of the Government, taking this and other departments into account.

It is a matter that is a rather serious one to me, and I am not saying these few words about it for the purpose of making any attempt to defeat this appropriation, because I think that would be an idle effort. Every attempt almost that is made here to get money out of the Public Treasury for the benefit of States is successful. I have contended against it at various times with practically no success. I am not going to take up the time of the Senate now in making any argument against this particular appropriation, but I think it is time that the Congress of the United States should be considering how far we can legitimately go and how far we ought to go in making appropriations of this kind.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I wish to refer to the suggested amendment of the Senator from Utah at this time, because if nobody objects to it I shall object to it. I shall object to this work being attached to the duties of the Agricultural Department.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish to give my reasons for it.

Mr. GORE. Let us pass over the amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. While the discussion is on I wish to state my views on this question that they may go into the RECORD at this point.

I am opposed to putting upon the Agricultural Department a responsibility for which I consider it utterly unfit. The question of sinking wells for artesian water is not a farming project, comprehended by men who know how to cultivate the soil; it is a great geological problem; and the Agricultural Department has not experts who are competent to handle it; the Geological Survey has experts who are or should be masters of that subject, so far as it can be determined; and to make an appropriation for the Agricultural Department to sink wells to test out the problem of obtaining artesian water would be simply a waste of money.

That is why I shall object to tying it to the Agricultural appropriation bill. I have at all times been ready and anxious to see the Geological Survey proceed with tests of that kind in connection with their studies. My objection to putting it on the Agricultural Department is that I do not think they have any organization competent to handle it.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I wish to say a word in reference to the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia and also with reference to the suggestion of the Senator from Utah that this amendment would not be in order on this bill. I think the amendment will be in order because it has been estimated by the head of the department. There is an estimate here. The mere fact that it has heretofore been carried under the Geological Survey or some other bureau does not preclude it from being in order, in my judgment, under the rule. But that question can be considered when the time comes.

I want to suggest to the Senator from Georgia that while it is true there has heretofore been carried an appropriation for the investigation of artesian water under the Geological Survey, in my judgment there is no reason why the Agricultural Department could not do this work just as well as it is done by the Geological Survey. I know that that Survey investigates the geological conditions of the earth and so on, and makes its guesses with reference to whether or not there is artesian water here, there, or yonder. That information is available for the Agricultural Department; but, furthermore, that information is not very reliable. I myself know of one place in my State where the Geological Survey made an investigation and reported that artesian water could not be gotten, yet to-day there are 25 or 30 wells, each one flowing water enough to irrigate from 80 to 160 acres. By their scientific methods they can not tell whether or not there is artesian water. The only really efficient way to do it is to sink a well and see whether or not water is there; and the Agricultural Department is just as able to sink a well at a place where there are possibilities of obtaining artesian water as is the Geological Survey.

The Geological Survey do not send out officials from Washington, but they have people go out and get a well-drilling machine and put the well down. They do it by contract under the appropriation.

So I can not see very much force in the objection to putting the provision on the Agricultural bill. If it is an important thing to be done, if it is a necessary thing to be done, there is, in my judgment, not any bill to which it is more germane than to the Agricultural appropriation bill, which has to do with the development of agriculture, and that is exactly what the matter of developing artesian wells has to do with. So I hope when the amendment of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] comes up, I shall be able to be present.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator from Washington a question. Would not that amendment more properly go on the river and harbor bill?

Mr. JONES. In some sections of the country, possibly, from what has been said here.

Mr. KENYON. Does this provision cover the sinking of artesian wells in the bottom of some of the rivers?

Mr. JONES. I have not as yet found any reference to them. I am satisfied, however, that if there had been anything of that kind here the Senator from Iowa would have gotten his eagle eye on it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 72, line 14, after the words "necessary expenses," to strike out "$20,000" and insert "$27,805," so as to make the clause read:

For investigating farm domestic water supply and drainage disposal, the construction of farm buildings, and other rural engineering problems involving mechanical principles, including the employment of labor in the city of Washington and elsewhere, supplies, and all other necessary expenses, $27,805.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 72, line 19, after the words "general expenses," to strike out "$510,820" and insert "$526,125"; so as to make the clause read:

In all, for general expenses, $526,125.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 72, line 20, after the words "Rural Engineering," to strike out "$599,200" and insert "$614,505," so as to make the clause read:

Total for Office of Public Roads and Rural Engineering, $614,505.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Office of Markets and Rural Organization," on page 74, line 9, after the word "fruits," to strike out "and"; and in line 10, after the word "vegetables," to insert "and other products," so as to make the clause read:

For collecting and distributing, by telegraph, mail, and otherwise, timely information on the supply, commercial movement, disposition, and market prices of fruits, vegetables, and other products, $136,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 74, after line 10, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to gather from stockmen, live stock associations, State live-stock and agricultural boards, common carriers, stockyards, commission firms, live-stock exchanges, slaughtering and meat packing companies, and others information relative to the number of different classes and grades of marketable live stock, especially cattle, hogs, and sheep in the principal live-stock feeding districts and growing sections; prices, receipts, and shipments of the different classes and grades of cattle, hogs, and sheep at live-stock market centers; prices of meats and meat-food products and the amounts of such products in storage; to compile and publish such information at such frequent intervals as most effectively to guide producers, consumers, and distributers in the sale and purchase of live stock, meats, and other animal products; and to gather and publish any related information pertaining to marketing and distribution of live stock, meats, and animal by-products, the sum of $65,000: Provided, That $15,000 shall be immediately available.

Mr. WARREN. I move to amend the amendment of the committee by striking out the proviso on page 75, line 3.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Wyoming will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment of the committee by striking out the proviso on page 75, line 3, as follows:

Provided, That $15,000 shall be immediately available.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 75, line 4, after the word "For," to strike out "the investigation and demonstration" and insert "investigating, demonstrating, and promoting the use," so as to make the clause read:

For investigating, demonstrating, and promoting the use of standards for the different grades, qualities, and conditions of cotton, and for investigating the ginning, grading, stapling, baling, marking, compressing, and tare of cotton, $48,000: Provided, That of the sum thus appropriated $28,620 may be used for testing the waste, tensile strength, and bleaching qualities of the different grades and classes of cotton in order to determine their spinning value and for demonstrating the results of such tests.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 76, line 2, after the word "methods," to strike out "$20,000" and insert "$35,000," so as to make the clause read:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to cooperate with the several States in the employment of agents to acquire and diffuse useful information connected with the distribution and marketing of farm products through investigational, demonstrational, or extension methods, $35,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 76, line 7, after the words "general expenses," to strike out "$541,960" and insert "$621,960," so as to make the clause read:

In all, for general expenses, $621,960.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 76, line 10, after the words "provisions of the," to strike out "act approved August 18, 1914 (Public, No. 174, 63d Cong.), entitled 'An act to tax the privilege of dealing on exchanges, boards of trade, and similar places in contracts of sale of cotton for future delivery, and for other purposes,'" and insert "United States cotton-futures act," so as to make the clause read:

Enforcement of the United States cotton-futures act: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of the United States cotton-futures act, including all expenses necessary for the purchase of equipment and supplies; for travel; for the employment of persons in the city of Washington and elsewhere; and for all other expenses, including rent outside of the District of Columbia, that may be necessary in executing the provisions of this act, $120,750.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 76, line 22, after the words "Rural Organization," to strike out "$792,590" and insert "$872,590," so as to make the clause read:

Total for Office of Markets and Rural Organization, $872,590.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Enforcement of the insecticide act," on page 77, line 20, after the word "purposes," to strike out "$80,410" and insert "$85,670," so as to make the clause read:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of the act of April 26, 1910, entitled "An act for preventing the manufacture, sale, or transportation of adulterated or misbranded Paris greens, lead arsenates, and other insecticides, and also fungicides, and for regulating traffic therein, and for other purposes," $85,670.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 77, line 21, after the words "insecticide act," to strike out "$105,000" and insert "$110,260," so as to make the clause read:

Total for enforcement of the insecticide act, $110,260.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Federal Horticultural Board," on page 79, line 4, after the words "ordinary work," to strike out "$21,758,393" and insert "$22,178,527," so as to make the clause read:

Total, Department of Agriculture, for routine and ordinary work, $22,178,527.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Miscellaneous," on page 79, after line 12, to insert:

International Farm Congress and Soil-Products Exposition: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to cooperate with and make an exhibit illustrative of the investigations, products, and processes relating to farming in the subhumid, arid, and semiarid regions of the United States at the International Soil-Products Exposition, to be held at El Paso, Tex., in conjunction with the International Farm Congress, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, including labor and all expenses in the city of Washington and elsewhere, $20,000.

The President is hereby authorized to extend invitations to other nations to appoint delegates or representatives to the International Farm Congress, to be held at El Paso, Tex., in connection with said International Soil-Products Exposition: Provided, That no appropriation shall be granted or used for the expenses of delegates.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 80, after line 15, to insert:

That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to designate such areas on any lands which have been or which may hereafter be purchased by the United States under the provisions of the act of March 1, 1911 (36 Stat. L., p. 961), entitled "An act to enable any State to cooperate with any other State or States, or with the United States, for the protection of watersheds of navigable streams, and to appoint a commission for the acquisition of lands for the purpose of conserving the navigability of navigable streams," and acts supplementary thereto and amendatory thereof, as should, in his opinion, be set aside for the protection of game animals, birds, or fish; and whoever shall hunt, catch, trap, willfully disturb, or kill any kind of game animal, game or nongame bird, or fish, or take the eggs of any such bird on any lands so set aside, or in or on the waters thereof, except under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of Agriculture may from time to time prescribe, shall be fined not more than $500 or imprisoned not more than six months, or both.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the bill for his construction of this proposed amendment before I raise a point of order in regard to it.

Mr. GORE. I shall first have to refer to the history of the attempt to secure this legislation. I think a year ago the Senate committee recommended an amendment to enact and enforce a criminal statute in connection with certain forest reserves in the State of North Carolina. It went out, either on a point of order or otherwise. Western Senators seemed to fear the establishment of such a precedent. Now, this year the amendment has been drawn to correspond with the forest reservation acquired under what is known as the Weeks Act; it is limited to the land acquired in pursuance of that act. It is not extended by the terms of the proposed statute to all those lands, but the President, upon proclamation, can set aside reserves; and after they are so established the penal provisions authorized in this act will become applicable.

I understand that in North Carolina there is a good deal of depredation on the game in the forest reserves, and to prevent that is really the point to be accomplished by this legislation. We wished to safeguard the reserves of the West and to prevent the excitement of any apprehension on that score. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] can explain the necessity for this provision more fully and forcefully than I can.

Mr. BORAH. So far as I am individually concerned, if I can be assured that this amendment is limited to the land covered by the Appalachian Forest Reserve purchase I shall make no objection to it.

Mr. GORE. If it is not so limited, we will make it so, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. OVERMAN. It refers particularly to the Appalachian Forest Reserve act.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Let me suggest to the Senator——

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, who has the floor?

Mr. SHAFROTH. That it be amended by inserting the words "in the State of North Carolina."

Mr. OVERMAN. It might be desirable to apply it to Virginia or Georgia.

Mr. President, I will state the purpose of the amendment if I have the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to say that in the Appalachian Range the Government has acquired what is known as the Vanderbilt estate. Mr. Vanderbilt had established a game preserve there, and the only purpose of this amendment is to protect the game on that preserve.

Mr. SMOOT. At Biltmore?

Mr. OVERMAN. At Biltmore, N. C. That is all the amendment is designed to accomplish. The land purchased there constitutes a game preserve. The State of North Carolina has given its consent to this legislation; and it is proposed that the President may set aside that land. That is all that is intended, and it is to apply to that particular place. We have made it general, however, as to the Appalachian Range reservations under the Weeks bill, because there might be some land just across the line in Tennessee that it would be desirable to cover. The Senator will see that the provision is so limited, because reference is made particularly to the Weeks Act.

Mr. BORAH. When I first had my attention drawn to this amendment, I did not observe that it was limited to the lands covered by Thirty-sixth Statutes at Large, page 961.

Mr. OVERMAN. I tried to limit it to the particular land referred to in the Weeks act. It only applies to land acquired under that act.

Mr. BORAH. There is no doubt, then, as I understand, but that it was the purpose and intent of the committee to limit it to that.

Mr. OVERMAN. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. BORAH. So far as I am concerned, I shall make no further objection to it.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Will the Senator permit a suggestion? In order to make it perfectly clear, why could we not put, at the end of the section, language similar to this:

That this game preserve shall apply only to lands purchased by the Government under the act named herein?

Mr. OVERMAN. You would have to read the act and see what it means. It says here that the land to be designated is the land purchased under the act of March 1, 1911.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. That is the same act I am referring to.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is the act.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I say, why not provide that this game preserve shall be limited to the lands purchased under the act of March 1, 1911?

Mr. OVERMAN. I have no objection to that amendment. It is limited.

Mr. BORAH. I see no particular objection to the amendment. I think, if the Senator from Arizona will observe, that upon reading the first few lines of the amendment he will find that that limit is already there.

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. BORAH (reading)—

That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to designate such areas on any lands which have been, or which may hereafter be, purchased by the United States under the provisions of the act of March 1, 1911.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I think it is clear enough myself.

Mr. BORAH. I think so.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. But in order to eliminate any possible objection I made that suggestion.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, it is specifically stated in the amendment that it applies only to the so-called Weeks Act, and it can not be made applicable to any other part of the country.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. BORAH. I do.

Mr. JONES. As I understand from the Senator from North Carolina, the real purpose of this provision is to cover a particular situation in his State. If that is true, I think it ought to be limited to that, and we ought to put in the words.

Mr. OVERMAN. New Hampshire has some land——

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, it applies also to the White Mountain region in New Hampshire, where the National Forest Reservation Commission, under the so-called Weeks Act, has purchased quite a tract of land.

Mr. JONES. I know, Mr. President, that it applies to all this land, but the Senator from North Carolina said that before these lands were purchased there was a game preserve there in North Carolina, and the purpose of this is to protect that particular game preserve.

Mr. OVERMAN. In addition to that, I said that other States in this range ought to have the same protection.

Mr. JONES. I understand; but there is the situation that already exists in North Carolina. Now, there is no suggestion that there is any special need of a game preserve in any of these other places.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator from New Hampshire wants it to apply to his State.

Mr. JONES. He simply suggested that the Weeks law does apply to it. Now, I do not know whether there is any particular need for a game preserve up there or not.

Mr. OVERMAN. There may be. I do not know.

Mr. JONES. If there should be, of course I would not object to it if the Senator from New Hampshire says there is need of it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Our people are very much interested in the protection of game, and we have in New Hampshire pretty nearly all kinds of game that you will find in any part of the country. I feel very sure that they would be delighted to have a game preserve on that Government reservation.

Mr. BORAH. I shall make no objection if it is just confined to the area east of the Allegheny Mountains. I am not sufficiently informed as to the needs or conditions of that country to pass intelligently upon its needs.

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to say that my amendment that was submitted to the committee said "purchased by the United States in the western part of North Carolina." The Agricultural committee itself struck that out, so that it might apply to Virginia, Georgia, Tennessee, and New Hampshire and the White Mountains.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I shall not make the point of order against this proposition; but it does seem to me that we are placing a tremendous authority in the Secretary of Agriculture when we make a violation of his rules and regulations a misdemeanor punishable by fine or imprisonment. These rules and regulations are recommended by bureau officers, and they are changed from time to time. All sorts of rules are made, and everybody is supposed to know what those rules and regulations are, and yet they are in no statute anywhere. They are not found in any law. It does seem to me that we ought to be careful about that; but I want to suggest an amendment to this language. In line 7, page 81, after the word "such," I want to insert the word "general," so that it will read "except under such general rules and regulations as the Secretary of Agriculture may from time to time prescribe."

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator from Washington that I think it is a very great outrage to put general legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. JONES. Oh, yes. Well, we have done it many times since the Senate voted against it.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. We have failed to do it several times, too.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I have this amendment which I will offer, if there is any objection, to cover that point of order:

Provided, That this provision shall be effective only——

Mr. JONES. I am not going to make any point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 81, line 7, in the committee amendment, it is proposed to insert, before the word "rules," the word "general."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I have no objection to that; but I do not believe this amendment is subject to the criticism which is made by the Senator from Washington. If I thought so, I would not vote for it. I would have made a point of order. It is not the violation of the rules and regulations which is a crime. The statute makes it a crime to kill this game. The exceptions are established by the rules and regulations, but the violation is the violation of the statute. That is the way I construe the amendment from a hasty reading.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is all.

Mr. JONES. Oh, I see.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator from Washington does not insist on his amendment?

Mr. JONES. Yes; I think my amendment should go in. I think these exceptions should be made by general rule, and not by special rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is in.

Mr. OVERMAN. All right; I have no objection.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, beginning on page 81, line 11, with the subhead "Part A."

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I will ask that we pass to page 123, omitting the present consideration of the items which immediately follow where we are now.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator want to return to some amendments?

Mr. GORE. No. The Senator realizes that there are several riders contained in this bill. We have reached them now. I think we had better pass to page 123, where there are some items more directly connected with the bill as an appropriation bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Before that is done I want to call the attention of Senators who are more disturbed about general legislation on an appropriation bill than I am or have been to the fact that another body has placed on this bill two statutes—possibly three statutes—which we are asked to consider and approve. I think very likely they will be approved by the Senate; but in all the period that my service covers I have never known such a mass of general legislation to be put on an appropriation bill as we have now before us. It may be possibly for the public good and desirable that it should be done.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, we have this consolation in regard to it, that we still have the rules of the Senate, if it is not proper to do so.

Mr. GALLINGER. The rules of the Senate, however, would not apply to provisions incorporated in the bill by another body. We could not strike them out by making a point of order if we tried.

I thought it was well, in a few words, to call attention to this extraordinary method of legislation, because we are oftentimes met by the very body that placed this mass of general legislation in this bill with the suggestion that the Senate places general legislation on appropriation bills; and while we have sometimes put one statute on an appropriation bill, I have never known an instance where we put a code of laws on an appropriation bill, which we come pretty near doing in this bill.

Of course the legislation will remain on the bill, and will remain on the bill to be used as a precedent in the future that our custom here in both Houses to some extent in the case of contested legislation—legislation that can not get through the two bodies under debate, under discussion, and by vote—is to find an easy way, the line of least resistance, by carefully smuggling it into an appropriation bill or openly putting it there; and, in violation of the rules of both Houses, we legislate in this way.

As I have said, I have not been disturbed to the extent that some other Senators have in reference to this custom, which is contrary to our rules, and I only call attention to the fact to show that the Senate is a small offender compared to what has been done in this bill by another body.

The reading of the bill was resumed, beginning with line 25, page 123.

The next amendment was, on page 124, line 20, after the word "exceed," to strike out "$70,000" and insert "$55,000," so as to make the clause read:

That not to exceed $55,000 of the lump-sum appropriations herein made for the Department of Agriculture shall be available for the purchase, maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled and horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles and motor boats necessary in the conduct of the field work of the Department of Agriculture outside the District of Columbia: Provided, That not to exceed $10,000 of this amount shall be expended for the purchase of such vehicles and boats, and that such vehicles and boats shall be used only for official service outside the District of Columbia, but this shall not prevent the continued use for official service of motor trucks in the District of Columbia: Provided further, That the Secretary of Agriculture shall, on the first day of each regular session of Congress, make a report to Congress showing the amount expended under the provisions of this paragraph during the preceding fiscal year.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I would like to say a word about this appropriation of $70,000 in the House bill, reduced—happily reduced—by the Senate committee to $55,000. This appropriation is made as a lump sum, to be expended by the Department of Agriculture "for the purchase, maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled and horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles and motor boats necessary in the conduct of the field work of the Department of Agriculture outside the District of Columbia." How are these automobiles and these carriages, to be drawn—I presume, by dapple-gray horses—and these motor boats to be used?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, the principal use of these means of conveyance is in connection with the Forestry Service. They are necessary in the suppression of fires and patrolling the forest reserves, and the motor boats are used on the lakes of the forest reserves. The Senate committee reduced the House appropriation for this purpose from $70,000 to $55,000.

Mr. STONE. I see that and approve it.

Mr. GORE. I think the principal use is in connection with the Forestry Service. For a time they used, in connection with the hog-cholera service, the motor cycles. I am not sure whether that practice is continued or not.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, the chairman of the committee says, as I understand him, that these motor machines—automobiles, and so forth—are to be used in connection with the Forestry Service. That means they are to be used for riding around over the forest reserves and in going when it is necessary to points where there is danger of forest fires, and so on. Machines of this kind cost considerable money.

Mr. GORE. I will say they do not really use automobiles, as I understand. They use Fords, as a rule, in connection with this service.

Mr. STONE. Well, the Ford is a good machine. I can certify to that from some experience with it. The Ford machine can go into places where few other automobiles are capable of going.

Mr. GORE. I think that is the reason why they are used—because they are most serviceable in connection with this work.

Mr. STONE. I do not believe that even a Ford machine could follow a deer or a rabbit through a forest jungle. I have heard it said here in debate, off and on, that these forest reserves interfere with the development of the States where they are located, partly because the local authorities can not make roads through them so as to connect one place with another place across these large areas. So it must be that the question of roads is an important consideration. Even a Ford machine must have a road of some kind, and even a Ford machine costs from $450 to $500. Now, you can buy a mighty good horse for about $150, and I think a good horse would be more serviceable in finding one's way through a forest to a given point than an automobile.

Mr. President, we are getting very aristocratic in these days. We have now reached the point when even a forester looking after forest reserves, and whose duty it is to run here and there on his reserve to look after some little business connected with his official duty—going out from the home the Government provides for him—a Senator by my side remarks, sotto voce, "and also provides him with a uniform"——

Mr. OVERMAN. Also with a green feather in his hat.

Mr. STONE. The Senator from North Carolina says, "with a green feather in his hat." I do not know as to the exact accuracy of that, but I do know that we supply all his needs, including a decent salary. Now, when he wants to go across the hills or through the tangled forest to look after and defend his reserve against depredations or against forest fires, I would like to know if he could not use a $150 horse to better advantage than a $500 automobile?

We are getting to be too aristocratic. I think appropriations like this ought to go out of the bill.

Mr. President, I do not follow appropriation bills very closely; my time is occupied with other things; but now and then when I do look at them I find items of this kind that astound me. That great committees of the Senate and the House should put such things in appropriation bills is amazing; and yet it has been done year after year ever since I have been here. Instead of appropriating $70,000, as the House did, or $55,000, as our Senate committee recommends, I think if we would put in, say, about fifteen or twenty thousand dollars to buy horses and mules for this service we would save a lot of money to the Treasury and the people, and at the same time furnish a better means for performing a better service.

I know my friend from Oklahoma, the distinguished chairman of this committee, does not wish to throw the money of the people away idly or extravagantly, merely to comply with the whims and caprices of people who happen to be in the public service here and there. He must be opposed to that sort of policy.

Mr. President, speaking of automobiles, and of carriages drawn by pretty horses, with liveried drivers wearing plug hats, cockades pinned on them, yellow boots with breeches stuck in the tops of the boots, and all that, it is a common sight in Washington. I have nothing to remark about it when vain men and vainer women do it at their own expense; but it is a disagreeable sight to the eyes of many old-fashioned and really refined people when we see this snobbery exploited at the public expense. I have a machine; but I bought and paid for it out of my own pocket, as have other Senators who have ventured upon this extravagance. I think the business of Senators and Members of the House is just as important as the business of Secretaries or Assistant Secretaries of executive departments, and certainly as important as that of the clerks in these departments. But we Senators pay for our own transportation.

I know that I have to go almost every day from one department to another on official business, and I have been doing it for many years, and when I did not own a machine—and I did not own one until very recently—I borrowed one, if I could, or I went on the street cars or walked. I think the business I am sent here to perform—whether I perform it acceptably and well or not may be a question—but the business, in itself as a business, is as important, and indeed far more important, than that imposed upon the officials, generally speaking, who throng the executive departments in Washington.

Mr. President, for years we have been making headway in this direction. We are still progressing. Now we are proposing to go out into the forest reserves and into services of that kind to provide such officials with automobiles and motor boats to float up and down the streams that cross their reservations and to furnish them with such means of recreation and diversion. We have been doing this sort of thing from year to year for a long time, and it is getting worse and worse from year to year. If I could have my way, I would cast all such things out of these bills; but I know I can not have my way. I have seen this question tested often enough to know I can not have my way. All I can do is to express my opinion now, as I have heretofore, and leave it at that. All I can do is to protest.

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator really think it is growing worse and worse?

Mr. STONE. I am quite sure it is not growing any better.

Mr. WARREN. Sometimes an open confession is good for the soul.

Mr. GORE. I entirely sympathize with the horny-handed and practical observations of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. STONE. Not very horny-handed.

Mr. GORE. Yes; they are.

Mr. STONE. I have a pretty soft hand.

Mr. GORE. The observations are horny-handed, and the Senator deserves credit for them. I am willing to join with him in curtailing extravagance, beginning with battleships and going all the way up or down to Ford machines.

The Senator is under an erroneous impression at least as to a portion of this appropriation. Not a dollar of this entire amount can be used in the District of Columbia in connection with high official personages or liveried servants. By express terms the money is to be used outside of the District of Columbia.

The Senator from Missouri is of course familiar with the history of this struggle in the Senate. Some two or three years ago the sundry civil bill contained a provision undertaking to prohibit the purchase and use of automobiles for officials within the District of Columbia. The Committee on Agriculture followed that precedent. It happened that the succeeding year there was one machine used between the District of Columbia and some farm over in Virginia, which seemed to us to violate the terms of the preceding act, and we adopted language that would even exclude the use of that machine for that purpose. The Agricultural Committee has prevented the use and abuse as far as legislation can do it of machines by officials in the District of Columbia. This appropriation relates to the field service.

I shall not discuss the relative merits of the automobile and horse-drawn vehicles, or horses and mules, in connection with this particular service. I may say that a great many business men, that a great many department stores, that a great many grocery stores are substituting the machine for delivery purposes as against the horse and the mule, I assume on the ground of economy. I know not what other motive might inspire such a change.

Mr. President, we have had forest fires in this country which entailed losses of millions and millions of dollars. We have expended more than a half a million dollars in a single year for the prevention of forest fires. This appropriation is in the nature of an insurance. It is a species of preparedness, preparation to anticipate the ravages of forest fires, preparation to minimize their enormous losses on Government property. While the horse and the mule might serve on certain trails threading the forest, we have spent much money upon the construction of roads to aid in the prevention and suppression of forest fires. Upon these highways there can be no question as between the relative merit of the automobile and the Missouri mule, although I would not detract either from the character or the reputation of the Missouri mule. The committee reduced the appropriation from $70,000 to $55,000, the amount carried last year, and if the Senate, upon consideration of this measure shall decide to eliminate it I shall have no further protest to make.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to the fact that prior to the passage of the act which was approved on the 16th day of July, 1914, appropriations had been in lump sums without any specification as to whether automobiles should be purchased or not. There was considerable discussion of the question, and this is the provision that was put in the legislative, executive, and judicial act approved July 16, 1914:

SEC. 5. No appropriation made in this or any other act shall be available for the purchase of any motor-propelled or horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicle for the service of any of the executive departments or other Government establishments, or any branch of the Government service, unless specific authority is given therefor, and after the close of the fiscal year 1915 there shall not be expended out of any appropriation made by Congress any sum for purchase, maintenance, repair, or operation of motor-propelled or horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles for any branch of the public service of the United States unless the same is specifically authorized by law, and in the estimates for the fiscal year 1916 and subsequent fiscal years there shall be submitted in detail estimates for such necessary appropriations as are intended to be used for purchase, maintenance, repair, or operation of all motor-propelled or horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles, specifying the sums required, the public purposes for which said vehicles are intended, and the officials or employees by whom the same are to be used.

This statement is made in the House report:

In compliance with the provisions of section 5 of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act of July 16, 1914 (38 Stat., 454), a paragraph is included authorizing the expenditure of not exceeding $70,000 from the lump-sum appropriations of the various bureaus for the purchase, maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled and horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles and motor boats for the conduct of the field work of the Department of Agriculture. This paragraph does not carry any appropriation. It simply grants the specific authority required by the act of July 16, 1914.

Mr. President, there is no question but that these vehicles are a source of economy. There is not any question but what they are needed, and needed not only in that branch of the Government but also by the field agents that are sent out by the Government.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am not at all familiar with the conditions in the Forest Service, particularly in the forest reserves. I will ask the Senator if any considerable part of the forest reserves can be traversed by automobiles.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Quite a little. Those roads are built by the State, however, and many of them were built before any forest reserves were established. There are a number of roads there but not nearly as many as there ought to be.

Mr. GALLINGER. As a rule, they are trails, are they not?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No. There are parts of them that are trails. For instance, take the town of Aspen in the State of Colorado and the town of Leadville, Colo., there are roads there and good automobile roads, put there before there was any forest reserve, and they can use those in going long distances. It is almost imperative that there should be some kind of vehicle of this nature employed. It seems to me the fact that the committee reduced the amount from $70,000 to $55,000, and I doubt the wisdom of it, shows that the committee were careful in making this appropriation.

Mr. GALLINGER. Simply for information, what method do the agents employ for travel where there is merely a trail?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Horses.

Mr. GALLINGER. Horseback?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; horesback. But you can not take an apparatus of sufficient quantity to do any good for the purpose of extinguishing fire on horseback, and there are a good many of these men who are employed as supervisors and agents of the Government in the forest reserve. There are over a thousand of them and there is a limited number of automobiles that could be employed. It is not every one who has an automobile. That would be out of the question. Of course they are very limited, but there are certain places that they regard as being more important than others. Perhaps there are places where more than one agent stays, and on that account an automobile can be used to advantage in going from one part of the reservation to the other.

Mr. GALLINGER. I did not mean to express any hostility to the provision, but I wanted a little information. That is all.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It seems to me this is a wise provision if we are going to administer the affairs of the forest reserves in a proper manner.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, the amendment will go through all right. I shall not make any motion; everyone here knows it ought not to be in the bill.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I think the only question involved in this controversy would be the extent to which we furnish automobiles rather than the fact that we do furnish some automobiles. I do not know whether we are furnishing too many or not. The question which was asked by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] is based upon a supposition which very generally prevails throughout the East, and that is that these forest reserves are reserves which are covered by forests, which is a very great misapprehension. The fact is that there are thousands of acres in and hundreds of miles to be traveled through these forest reserves where the roads are practically as good for automobiles as they are here in Washington. These reserves are not all that mountainous, forest-covered region which naturally presents itself to the mind when you think of a forest reserve.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, if it is simply territory denuded of trees, what particular need is there of its being traveled for the purpose of protecting it?

Mr. BORAH. That raises a different question, a question which I have often presented here, but nevertheless they are traversed by these people who are there for the purpose of traveling over them, and they can travel much more expeditiously and cheaply in automobiles ordinarily than they can otherwise.

But I hope the Senator from New Hampshire will not be misled by the supposition that these forest reserves are of that kind which one would naturally suppose them to be by the name which they bear.

I was traveling across one of our forest reserves some three years ago in company with a gentleman from the East. After we had driven in an automobile for hours I said to him, "Now, you have been traveling across a certain named forest reserve." He said, "These jokes are all right, but this is a little exaggerated, it seems to me." I said, "This is, in fact, a forest reserve." There was not a tree in sight, unless it was some willow or some small shrubbery or something of that kind along practically a dry stream; neither had there ever been a tree upon that land. The Lord had never been able to make a tree grow on it, but it was within a very large forest reserve. That is the condition we have to deal with in regard to this matter. Of course, not all lands in the reserve are such, but vast areas are, and therein lies the "winter of our discontent."

Mr. SHAFROTH. Let me suggest to the Senator from Idaho also the fact that nearly one-third of the total area that is included in the forest reserves has been located on that line which we call above the timber line, where nature has decreed that no tree can ever grow. Yet millions and millions of acres are included in that area.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Colorado a question. He read the statute which provides under certain limitations for the purchase and use of automobiles, motor-drawn or horse-drawn vehicles. That statute also provides that there shall be an itemized estimate of each of these and showing by what officer it is to be used. I assume that itemized and particular estimate has been furnished for this year's appropriation.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think so. I have not the Book of Estimates here.

Mr. GORE. I have a letter here from the Secretary of Agriculture, which I will ask to have printed in the RECORD.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. But that would hardly form an estimate in the intention of the law. It is the intention of the law evidently that among the regular estimates to be furnished shall be an estimate in particular of these vehicles and the persons who are to use them.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state to the Senator that I do not know whether it is in the Book of Estimates, but I will examine and let him know.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Can the chairman of the committee tell me?

Mr. GORE. I intend to ask to have a letter from the department printed in the RECORD.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The letter of the department is not an estimate.

Mr. GORE. I understood the Senator desired to know what information there was in the Book of Estimates on the subject.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yes. The chairman was unable to state it at that time?

Mr. GORE. I can not do it without consulting the Book of Estimates.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state to the Senator I will examine it and let him know.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I wish to say just a word at this time.

Mr. GORE. I understand that the entire subject is set out in detail in the Book of Estimates.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I am not going to delay the consideration of this matter very long, but I can not refrain from expressing my delight that the senatorial conscience has been somewhat aroused on the question of squandering public funds to provide luxurious means of transportation for the well-paid officeholders in Washington. I think if we are going to start to cut down expenses in furnishing luxuries to the officers of the Government we ought to commence in the District of Columbia.

The vehicles provided for in this paragraph are to be used, I understand, for the protection of public property. They are not luxuries, such as are enjoyed by some of our distinguished well-paid officeholders. If we are going to begin to economize in the matter of buying automobiles and carriages, I insist that we begin where it is doing some harm or costing something to the American people. If Government property needs protection, it is the duty of Congress to provide the means of protecting it regardless of the cost. This is not the place for economy. I for one believe that we can save a good many thousand dollars a year by stopping the furnishing of automobiles to officials of this Government in Washington whose salaries are sufficient to justify them in paying for their own automobiles or horse-drawn carriages, if they desire them. It is in my opinion an unwarranted prodigality of public funds to provide these luxuries for the private use of the public officers.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I wish to say that it seems to me, as we go along, we might begin now as well as later to establish a progressive policy with respect to this governmental habit to which we are committing ourselves. In Berlin, years ago, I noticed that when the Kaiser rode in his automobile along the public streets and across the parks, he had seated in front of him a herald who blew the royal trumpet, the royal signal, and everybody else was legally obliged to get out of the way or be lawfully run over. Berlin was not the only capital where this rule prevailed. Following these examples of those who rule by divine right, I submit that in this bill or in the next we should insert a provision legally establishing the offical toot for these automobiles. We should decide by law just how and in what way to sound the official signals; and, when sounded, just what private citizens must do. It should be setttled whether the ordinary citizen, including Members of Congress, shall run into fence corners, if any there be, or slide off onto the farthest side of the road to give a clear way to the Secretary, the Assistant Secretary, the chief clerk, the Forester, or whatever it may be. It would seem to be important as we go along this path that there should be some statutory rule established to distinguish the ordinary citizen from the department clerk and the Forester.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I merely desire to observe that if our Government resolves to commit itself to militarism, to Cæsarism, to Kaiserism, we must be prepared to accept the inevitable accompaniments.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the automobile has been the subject of a great deal of fun, as well as a great deal of contention, on former occasions here. I recall a long debate not many years ago when one of the prominent Members of this body objected to the word automobile being contained in any of the appropriation bills, or the Government owning one. He said that he had never ridden in one and never expected to do so, and his State had none in its borders as far as he knew, and he hoped there would not be one there. The second day after I noticed in the newspapers where his son had bought one and had a slight collision on the streets with somebody. A week later one live-stock association in his State had bought a number of automobiles to round up the cattle on the ranges.

It is undobutedly true there have been abuses in the use of automobiles the same as in horses and carriages, but in this particular matter under debate I have no interest if it is sought to cut it out, except to say that it is not intended to apply in the city of Washington. That is prohibited by the language of the section itself.

It is true, as stated, that forest reserves have great open stretches upon which there is no timber. It is also true, however, that there are forested patches here and there, and the distances across open spaces, in case of fire, if one summons help from the other, must be made as rapidly as possible. Horses are very generally used; they are used in all the mountain trails, but in places where the forests are separated by these areas or where different forest reserves join each other it is much cheaper than having horses to have automobiles.

Furthermore, in the case of fire it is very much quicker to reach the scene of action. When there is a fire that is liable to get beyond the reach of the regular men employed, aid is always sought at the nearest village, the nearest town, or the nearest ranch. The automobile that goes there and brings the men back gets them there much more quickly and the amount and value of timber saved in that way is a great many times what this proposition of $55,000 amounts to to furnish automobiles for rapid transportation.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I would like at this moment to call my colleague's attention to the fact that less than 10 per cent of the expenditure in the Book of Estimates is for service in forests.

Mr. WARREN. It is not only the forest reserve but it is matters of hog cholera, and so forth, where there must be quick action; it is a matter of the quick prevention of the spread of diseases from one point to another. As a matter of fact agricultural pursuits are usually conducted off of railroads where there must be some mode of transportation. So they are used in all these different ways.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. My suggestion was not pointed at that position. I was only suggesting that as a matter of fact nearly all the argument that has been used in favor of this appropriation was the tremendous saving it would make by preventing destruction from forest fires, and I am also pointing out the fact that the estimates show that less than 10 per cent is used in that way.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The Senator from Wyoming asked me a short time ago whether the Book of Estimates contained a detailed statement concerning the needs of the department. I will state that in the Book of Estimates of appropriations for 1917, at pages 288, 289, 290, 291, and 292 will be found a detailed statement as to exactly what these automobiles were used for.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I will say to the Senator, I have the estimate in the book furnished me by the clerk of the committee since I made the request.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I had better make a short explanation concerning this matter. I have here the Book of Estimates, in which I find a "Statement of proposed expenditures for the purchase, maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled and horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles and motor boats for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, as required by section 5 of the act of July 16, 1914 (38 Stat., p. 508)."

Then there follows this detailed statement:

Bureau, division, or office.	Horse-drawn or motor-propelled.	Appropriation.	Number.	Description.	Amount.
Office of Farm Management	Motor-propelled	Farm management	1	Motorcycle	$150
Weather Bureau	do	General expenses, Weather Bureau	1	Launch	70
Do	do	do	1	Motorcycle	30
Bureau of Animal Industry	do	Inspection and quarantine	1	Automobile	625
Do	do	Eradicating cattle ticks	1	do	600
Do	do	do	1	do	600
Do	do	Military horse breeding	1	do	600

This statement goes on as to the various departments and extends to everything that is under the jurisdiction of the Agricultural Department—the Bureau of Entomology, the Bureau of Chemistry, the Forestry Service, and so forth.

Mr. OVERMAN. Had not the Senator better put the whole table in the RECORD? I think it ought to be there.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not think it is desirable to insert this whole table in the RECORD.

There is also a detailed statement in reference to the Forestry Service on page 290; there is a similar statement on page 292, showing, for instance:

General expenses, Forest Service—

This is the expense item for a motorcycle, which was $335. There were three of those, each of which cost $335, and there was an expenditure for maintenance of $85, $65, and $60, respectively.

Then there are launches which are used. Many of these items are for motorcycles and launches, and they, of course, are necessarily used in——

Mr. OVERMAN. Where are the launches used?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The launches are used in Alaska.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state that here is one referred to "for use in boarding ships and as a lifeboat in emergencies." That is employed at Sand Key, Fla.

The next motorcycle which appears in this table to the amount of $100 was:

For use of animal husbandmen in visiting ostrich farms in Arizona. Travel can not be advantageously performed by any other means except by automobile, and that is more expensive.

Here is another motorcycle—used in making trips to the Egyptian cotton experiment station in the Salt River Valley, Ariz.

There was also a motorcycle—used in visiting various parts of the projects and in making trips between the station and town for the purchase of supplies.

Mr. OVERMAN. I did not ask for information relative to motorcycles. I inquired as to launches. I do not know why the Agricultural Department needs launches.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I read from the Book of Estimates as follows:

Motor boats	1,540	Forest-fire protection on Kaniksu, Pend Oreille, Coeur d'Alene, Missoula, Bridger, Superior, Minnesota, Tonto, Tahoe, Wenatchee, Siuslaw, Olympic, Crater, Chelan, Madison, and Columbia National Forests.	Forest ranges and patrolmen.
Motor boat	375	General administration on Florida National Forest.	Forest supervisor and forest rangers.
		* * * * * *
Do	100	Forest-fire protection on Chugach National Forest, Alaska.
		* * * * * *
Do	250	Patrolling Klamath Lake Bird Reservation, Oreg.	Warden in charge of Klamath Lake Bird Reservation, Oreg.

I presume these are used wherever there is a large body of water which it is necessary for the employees to go over or to traverse the length of.

Mr. President, the provision is in accordance with the estimates; it is made in perfect detail and conforms exactly with the law. I doubt very much the expediency of reducing the appropriation to $55,000, in view of the necessity which is shown in these estimates.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment is agreed to, without objection.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, has the committee concluded the consideration of committee amendments?

Mr. GORE. No, sir. There are several other amendments which have been passed over, and one or two yet to be considered.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, while I am on my feet, I want to say a few words, not for the purpose of raising any question in regard to it but in order that the RECORD may contain in brief my views in reference to this amendment, on pages 80 and 81.

In so far as the amendment on pages 80 and 81, with reference to game preserves undertakes to give the National Government jurisdiction over the game preserves for the purpose of enforcing criminal laws, I do not mean by refusing to raise an objection to the amendment that I concede the proposition that the National Government can exercise that power. I think that matter belongs to the States. If those who are advocating this amendment believe that the National Government can enforce that kind of a law, and are content with it, all right; but as a legal proposition I do not believe that it is sound doctrine.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, if it is in order, I wish to ask permission to reconsider the vote by which the amendment on page 4 of the bill striking out the provision regarding the study of methods of clearing off "logged-off" lands was agreed to.

Mr. GORE. I wish to ask if the Senator from Washington merely wishes to now lodge the motion or wishes the amendment now reconsidered? I shall interpose no objection to notice being entered.

Mr. JONES. I think it will take only a moment.

Mr. GORE. I would not want to reopen the matter now. I had rather finish the committee amendments; but there will be no difficulty about opening the matter at the Senator's convenience.

Mr. JONES. It is in reference to a committee amendment, and I thought the Senator might be willing to have the matter reopened now.

Mr. PITTMAN. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if he would prefer at this time to recur to the amendment on page 14, which was passed over?

Mr. GORE. I will say that we are only lacking one or two amendments, I think, of finishing the consideration of the committee amendments. Then we shall revert, in their order, to all of the amendments which have been passed over.

Mr. PITTMAN. Very well.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 125, line 14, before the words "The Secretary of Agriculture," to insert the following side head: "Detailed estimates for executive officers, clerks, and employees below the grade of clerk."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 126, line 3, after the words "arising out of," to strike out "an outbreak" and insert "the existence"; and in line 9, after the words "the sum of," to strike out "$2,500,000" and insert "$1,250,000," so as to read:

Eradication of foot-and-mouth and other contagious diseases of animals: In case of an emergency arising out of the existence of foot-and-mouth disease, rinderpest, contagious pleuropneumonia, or other contagious or infectious disease of animals which, in the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture, threatens the live-stock industry of the country, he may expend in the city of Washington or elsewhere, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,250,000, which sum is hereby appropriated, or so much thereof as he determines to be necessary, in the arrest and eradication of any such disease.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 126, after the words "such disease," at the end of line 11, to insert:

including the payment of claims growing out of past and future purchases and destruction, in cooperation with the States of animals affected by or exposed to, or of materials contaminated by or exposed to, any such disease, wherever found and irrespective of ownership, under like or substantially similar circumstances, when such owner has complied with all quarantine regulations, and said sum shall be immediately available for the purposes specified: Provided, That the payment for animals hereafter purchased may be made on appraisement based on the meat, dairy, or breeding value, but in case of appraisement based on breeding value no appraisement of any animal shall exceed three times its meat or dairy value, and except in case of an extraordinary emergency, to be determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, the payment by the United States Government for any animal shall not exceed one-half of any of such appraisements.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I am not sure that it is now in order, but at this point I desire to move to amend the committee amendment after the word "specified," in line 19, on page 126, which I hope will be accepted by the Senator in charge of the bill.

In explanation of the amendment I will say that this provision relates only to the existence or outbreak of the foot-and-mouth disease which may hereafter occur, and makes provision for the payment of certain damages in that event. I have had some correspondence with the Department of Agriculture regarding a case which might possibly be attended to under a claims bill, but it seems that as provision is being made for this, and as the department have stated that they are not in funds to make a sufficient recompense for the losses incurred by the person to whom I refer, it might be well to provide that this particular case might be provided for out of this appropriation.

I have here from the governor of my State, who knows all the circumstances, and was very useful and instrumental in eradicating the foot-and-mouth disease, two letters regarding this amendment, which I ask that the Secretary may read, showing the very great desirability of the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, before that is done—I have no opposition to this amendment—I merely want to ask if individual amendments have been reached or whether the committee amendments have all been disposed of?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There are still committee amendments undisposed of.

Mr. GORE. I will say that we are now considering only committee amendments.

Mr. LODGE. That is what I understood.

Mr. GORE. But the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] being desirous of leaving the city this evening for that reason I have made an exception in his favor in the consideration of amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Delaware has offered an amendment to a committee amendment, which is in order.

Mr. GORE. But I have pursued the rule of passing over committee amendments where Senators desire to either amend or discuss them.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 126, line 19, in the committee amendment, after the word "specified," it is proposed to insert the following:

And of the above sum $2,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be immediately available to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to ascertain and pay the loss caused George P. Frederick, of Newport, Del., resulting from disinfecting his premises by Government inspectors during the outbreak of the foot-and-mouth disease in the fall of 1914.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, before that amendment is acted on, I want to suggest that in lines 18 and 19 the words "and said sum shall be immediately available for the purposes specified," be stricken from the Senate committee amendment.

Mr. GORE. Yes; I desire to have that done.

Mr. SMOOT. Then the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware would follow the word "regulations" instead of the word "specified."

Mr. GORE. I ask to have that proviso stricken from the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be modified to that extent.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, in explaining this amendment, I desire to have two letters from the governor of my State read, so that the committee of conference appointed on the bill may be in possession of the facts regarding the proposed amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Do I understand the chairman of the committee has accepted the amendment?

Mr. SAULSBURY. No; I do not so understand.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Is it proposed in this way on the floor of the Senate to suggest the amount to be paid for a loss and pass upon it? If so, I am obliged to object to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment does not specify the amount.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I may say that the amendment limits the amount and authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to ascertain the loss.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment does not provide the amount to be paid, but limits the amount the Secretary of Agriculture may pay.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I think it ought to take its course with all other claims of this character. It is very dangerous for us to select out one claim and legislate concerning it. I do not see why the general appropriation carried in the bill would not leave this claim subject to be considered just like any other claim.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator that he is mistaken about that, because while the provision in the bill relates to the very class of injuries to which this special one belongs, it is for future recompense, and applies only in case such injuries occur in the future. It seems to me that it would be certainly a very good thing to provide that in a case of this kind this individual should not be put to the difficulty of having a special claims bill introduced and referred to the Court of Claims, with all the resulting expense——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

Mr. SAULSBURY. If the Senator will pardon me—when there is a million and a quarter dollars appropriated for this very purpose. It seems to me there is no reason why we should legislate in favor of unknown claims which may arise in the future and refuse to act upon one that is known, is certified to by the governor of the State, and can be treated under the general provisions of this act.

Mr. SMOOT. The provision in the bill relates to claims which have been or may be filed with the Government.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, there is a fund still undisposed of in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture for handling generally the foot-and-mouth disease, and no deficiency has been reported to us. I think putting this claim from the floor in an appropriation bill unwise, and it would be a very dangerous precedent.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, the Senator is under a misapprehension regarding that; and I can read to him from letters I have in my hand from the Secretary of Agriculture showing that he has no funds in hand from which he can pay these damages. I read from a letter of the Secretary of Agriculture addressed to me on the 11th day of November, 1915.

Mr. SMOOT. Will not the Senator have both letters read to which he has referred?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I will have those letters read; but, as preliminary to answering the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia, I desire to read from the letter of the Secretary of Agriculture. The Secretary of Agriculture says:

> The solicitor of the department concurs in this view and is of the opinion that in the absence of an appropriation for paying such claims as that advanced by Mr. Frederick the department is without authority to reimburse him. It is believed that if his injury merits redress by the Government his remedy is with Congress.

That is also concurred in by the Acting Secretary in a letter to me under date of October 23, 1915, in which he says:

> The department is of the opinion, however, as stated in the Secretary's letter of March 18, that even though Mr. Frederick's claim were equitable, it would have no authority to pay it from any appropriation available to the department.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then, it does not fall under the general class of such claims under the procedure which we have been following.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I ask, in order to inform the Senator in regard to this claim and how it arose, that the letters which I have sent to the Secretary's desk from the governor of my State be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

STATE OF DELAWARE,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT, DOVER, DEL.,
Wilmington, Del., October 25, 1915.

Hon. WILLARD SAULSBURY,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have your favor of the 19th instant and am very glad that you have taken up the George Frederick matter with the department. I was in personal charge of every detail of the case of enforcing the quarantine against the hoof-and-mouth disease in 1914, and familiarized myself with the Frederick case, and I can say to you without any hesitations that Mr. Frederick's grounds for the claim of reimbursement are absolutely substantial. He was unable to conduct his business after his place was disinfected. Dr. Schauffler advised him to correct this effect by washing, but it did not in any way correct the trouble. After some months he obtained the services of a chemist, who finally was successful in reducing the odors arising from disinfection. In the meantime his business was practically destroyed. Although Mr. Frederick's plant was in bad condition at the time it was disinfected, I consider that the manner in which disinfection was applied and the personal manner in which he was treated by the department agents was outrageous and unwarranted. In conclusion, I will say that if this trouble had arisen through the fault of any official of the State of Delaware I would have seen to it that the legislature reimbursed Mr. Frederick. As it was, the matter of disinfection was entirely in the hands of the Government officials, and I could not make a just claim upon the State of Delaware.

I thank you for your cooperation in this matter, and trust that you will call upon me if I can be of any assistance.

Very respectfully, yours,

CHARLES R. MILLER, Governor.

STATE OF DELAWARE,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT, DOVER, DEL.,
Wilmington, Del., March 9, 1916.

Hon. WILLARD SAULSBURY,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Permit me to call your attention to my letter of October 25, 1915, relative to the damage incurred by George P. Frederick, of Newport, Del., by reason of the manner in which the Government agents fumigated his plant. I sincerely trust that Mr. Frederick can be reimbursed an amount commensurate with the loss which he has sustained. My letter of the 25th of October accurately and clearly states the facts. The delay in having Mr. Frederick's case settled has created such a feeling in our State that it would seriously interfere with any future action which might be necessary for the Federal authorities to take in case another epidemic would occur requiring Federal intervention in Delaware.

In Mr. Frederick's case the militant attitude of the chief Federal officer was such as to create a deep-seated and resentful prejudice against the Federal officials; and I can personally indorse this attitude, as I was cognizant with all the facts at the time the incident occurred.

I am pressing this matter for two reasons: First, I think Mr. Frederick's claim is a just one, and, second, I wish to establish a feeling of cordiality on the part of our citizens toward the national authorities, who, I know, are conscientiously and earnestly endeavoring to assist State officials and citizens in eradicating infectious diseases.

Thanking you in advance for your assistance, I shall be glad to hear from you in regard to this matter.

Very truly, yours,

CHARLES R. MILLER, Governor.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator if this item—and it is a personal claim—has ever been presented to the Senate or the House of Representatives in the form of a bill for the relief of the claimant?

Mr. SAULSBURY. No, I may say.

Mr. SMOOT. Does not the Senator believe that that is the proper course to be pursued?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I think, Mr. President, that might be the usual course; but no one knows better than does the Senator how difficult it is to get a bill of that character through the Claims Committee on account of the enormous number of claims before it; and it seemed to me, when there was an item in this bill to pay damages caused in the same way that the damage has been caused this man, and when the department has suggested that it needed additional legislation, and the whole matter was before the Senate for consideration, that this was a very proper way to close up such an account as this.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, it is obnoxious to the rule to put any private claim upon an appropriation bill; but I understand that there has been no real investigation made as to the actual amount that is due Mr. Frederick.

Mr. SAULSBURY. No; not by any department; and the amendment simply empowers the Secretary to ascertain the damage and pay not exceeding $2,500—of course, leaving everything in the hands of the Department of Agriculture, just as everything is left in the hands of the Department of Agriculture under the provisions of this special appropriation.

The Senator is doubtless very familiar with the method of settling claims of this character. I presume that in the settlement of various claims as between private individuals probably not one in a thousand comes to litigation, and they should not lead to litigation as against the Government if that can be avoided by negotiation and by proper settlement. Of course the danger would be in trusting an ordinary agent to settle Government claims; I can understand that; but there is nothing compulsory in this amendment; it simply makes an appropriation to the extent of $2,500, out of which the Secretary may make an equitable adjustment of this man's actual losses, which, according to the letters of the governor of Delaware, are shown to be substantial, and which should be settled.

I only desire to say a word more. The governor of the State was very active and very energetic, and during practically the whole time the foot-and-mouth disease was being stamped out in my State gave his personal services to the Government officials in helping them and assisting them throughout the State in their work. Senators will see from his letter that he feels that for the general good, to produce a better feeling toward the Government officials, and to insure that they shall not be arbitrary in their actions as affecting the people, this particular case should be settled. I say it would be a very good thing to let it be done, and I hope no Senator will object to it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I inquire of the Senator what steps have been taken by the department to find out just what damage was done to Mr. Frederick?

Mr. SAULSBURY. This matter has been in correspondence between the Department of Agriculture and me for a good many months, possibly running up to a year. They first sent there to make an inspection the same man who had fumigated Mr. Frederick's place, and I think, from the tone of that official's report on the situation, that it was about what usually comes from a department inspector who is sent to overlook his own work. He did not think that anything should be paid. On my request, another man was sent there, and his report led to the conclusion reached by the department that however just the claim of Mr. Frederick might be they had no funds available from which to pay it, and, therefore, it made no special difference as to whether the claim was a valid one or not.

Mr. SMOOT. Is this claim any different from other claims against the Government for the loss of cattle?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I fancy not.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator that there has been an appropriation made for the purpose of paying such claims. Whether that appropriation has been entirely exhausted I can not say, but in the appropriation bill of a year ago and in a special bill which was passed by Congress appropriating an additional million dollars over and above that which was appropriated in the Agricultural bill, provision was made for the payment for cattle which were killed because of the order of the Department of Agriculture on account of the foot-and-mouth disease.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The point made by the department may be that this is not a claim for recompense for cattle killed This man had a butcher shop in which was meat which, I fancy, came from infected cattle. The chief injury, as I understand, to this man came not from condemning and taking his meat but from leaving his place in such a condition that other meat which he brought in to sell became so affected by the odor of the fumigating material which had been used, that it was rendered absolutely worthless, and he could not sell it. It may be that the department can not recompense such injuries as that from the old appropriation. I confess that I do not know about that.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the Senator ought to introduce a bill for Mr. Frederick, and I think the claim ought to be examined into by the appropriate committees of the House and the Senate. If Mr. Frederick was damaged—and I have no doubt that he was—and if the damage was occasioned unlawfully, I do not think there will be any trouble at all in getting a bill for his relief through Congress. We have passed more claims bills at this session, I presume, than we have passed during the four or five sessions; but it is a dangerous proposition to undertake to put a claim upon an appropriation bill when there never has been even a bill introduced in Congress to provide for its payment.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Of course, the Senator appreciates that the amendment appropriates no money to Mr. Frederick; it appropriates money from which his claim, when ascertained by the department, may be paid, just as this general provision will operate as affecting claims which may arise in the future.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, if this appropriation in the bill applies to the future, it applies equally to the past.

Mr. SAULSBURY. If the Senator will read the provisions of the paragraph, I think he will find that he is mistaken.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the claim in which the Senator from Delaware is interested is one which this bill would provide for in the future, it is provided for if it happened in the past.

Mr. SAULSBURY. But if the Senator will read the terms of the provision of the bill he will see that he is mistaken.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; I am not mistaken. What I mean is that if there has been no provision in the past to meet any such claim as that presented by the Senator, then there is no provision in the future to meet any such claim. It is a different character of claim from the claims provided for in this appropriation and stands upon a different footing. I do not think it ought to be added to this appropriation bill without consideration by the committee. I think it would be a mistake to set the precedent of adopting an amendment incorporating a claim of this kind in an appropriation bill when the principle involved and the question of liability, even, have not been considered by the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is not the same phraseology used in this bill as is used in the former bill? For instance, on line 14 it reads:

> Of animals affected by or exposed to, or of materials contaminated by or exposed to, any such disease.

Is not that the same as the language of the existing law?

Mr. SAULSBURY. That would cover undoubtedly the meat of this man which had been infected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Well, is not that the same phraseology which was in the original appropriation regarding the foot-and-mouth disease?

Mr. SMOOT. I could not say as to that without referring to the law.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I am not familiar with the phraseology of that act, but I hope that no Senator will see fit to make a technical objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is making the inquiry because the Chair sees a point of order coming and wants to find out what the original act was.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I am not able to give the Senator at the moment the wording of that act. Possibly I can find it.

Mr. SMOOT. This is the provision as to the $2,500,000 in the act a year ago under the headline of "Eradication of foot-and-mouth and other contagious diseases of animals":

> In case of an emergency arising out of the existence of foot-and-mouth disease, rinderpest, or other contagious or infectious diseases of animals which, in the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture, threatens the live-stock industry of the country, he may expend, in the city of Washington or elsewhere, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,500,000, which sum is hereby appropriated, or so much thereof as he determines to be necessary, in the arrest and eradication of any such disease.

That is the appropriation that was made a year ago. Then in the conference, I suppose, there was added the following:

> Including the payment of claims growing out of past and future purchases and destruction, in cooperation with the States, of animals affected by or exposed to, or of materials contaminated by or exposed to, any such disease wherever found, and irrespective of ownership, under like or substantially similar circumstances, when such owner has complied with all quarantine regulations, and said sum shall be immediately available for the purposes specified.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is exactly the language used here; and the ruling of the department must have been made upon the theory that the fumigation of a butcher shop was not "material contaminated by or exposed to" the disease, under those constructions that you get once in a while. The Chair does not believe it is the law. A man is certainly just as much entitled to pay, if he is entitled to anything—the Chair does not say he is entitled to anything—but if he is entitled to anything he is just as much entitled to pay for the destruction by fumigation of his butcher shop as he would be for the destruction of his cleaver or any other of the appliances or material that he might have around the shop. It seems to the Chair that the Secretary of Agriculture now has ample authority and money to adjust this claim.

Mr. SMOOT. It looks that way to me, Mr. President, and I can not see why the amendment should be put in this bill. There would be some justification for putting in an amendment directing the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate all the claims made against the Government for the purposes named in the amendment of the Senator, but I do believe we ought to go to work and pick out one claim and tell the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate that and pay it if he finds that the amount is due the man for damages. I think, as the Vice President says, that under the wording of the bill itself, with the Senate amendment, the Secretary is already authorized to pay any claim against the Government for materials destroyed by fumigation on the part of the Government.

Mr. SAULSBURY. That may be very true, Mr. President, but I once heard of a man who was in jail, and he was told by his lawyer that they could not put him in jail. "But," he said, "I am here."

Now, the department rule that they have no money available to pay this claim. The only effect of adopting this amendment would be to authorize the department to investigate this claim. I do not think there was any Senator within the hearing of the Secretary's voice when he read these two letters from the governor of my State saying that he has personal knowledge of this particular matter who does not think that a technicality here is really to cause very unnecessary trouble to this man, who has been injured by the inspectors of this Government. It seems to me that in such a case as this it is hardly necessary to interpose a technical objection to an investigation by the department which is charged with such investigations, and is able to pay out millions of dollars on those investigations, for the purpose of preventing justice being done to this man, who is supported by the governor of the State, who says he desires this claim particularly to have attention by the Government for the purpose of assisting the officers of the Government in case any outbreak should occur in the future.

Mr. KENYON and Mr. GALLINGER addressed the Chair.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I will yield to the Senator from Iowa, who first rose.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I merely want to say to the Senator from Delaware that if claims of this character are to be paid by the Government, I know that in my State the claims would amount to enormous sums. I have not understood that the Secretary was recognizing this class of claims. I am not quite clear yet, because we could not hear all of the discussion, as to whether the Secretary has given any intimation that claims of this class are to be paid, as he understands it, under the law. I think there would be $5,000,000 of this class of claims from my State, and certainly the claims from the State of Illinois would even exceed that, because that is where the foot-and-mouth disease was perhaps at its worst.

I can not understand why one special class of damages should be attached to a bill of this kind, when all of these other cases have been ignored and of course will be ignored. It seems to me it is clearly a claim.

Mr. GALLINGER. I rose to ask substantially the same question as that which has been propounded by the Senator from Iowa. I was about to inquire as to whether or not the department had acknowledged the validity of the claim, but did not pay it for the reason that there were no funds available for that purpose? Am I correct in assuming that that is the case?

Mr. SAULSBURY. The ground of the department's opinion is not clear in the correspondence which I have. Therefore I can not answer the Senator's question.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I can state to the Senator that the department has ample funds to meet all liabilities under the act of Congress which was similar to the one now before us, and there could not have been a refusal to pay for lack of funds. The refusal to pay was for lack of funds to meet this kind of claim upon the ground that Congress had not provided for the payment of any claims of this character.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have had some knowledge of the procedure in these cases. It seems to me that the claim in which a constituent of the Senator is interested has substantial grounds; that the payment ought to cover a case of that kind and all cases of that kind; but I, of course, do not know what attitude the department takes, and for that reason I propounded the question.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I could not satisfy the Senator about that. I think possibly this proposed amendment might be very much improved—and I think, undoubtedly, it should cover cases of this character—by adding certain words in the amendment after the word "materials," on line 14. I do not know what the Senate will do with a claim of this kind. I think, in the form in which I have introduced it, the justice of it is absolutely manifest and there is very good reason for its adoption.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not know whether there is a point of order made here or not.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I will make the point of order, if it has not been made—I understood the Senator from Georgia made the point of order—that it is in effect a claim.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair expressed an opinion just now that perhaps the Chair had no right to express, something which the present occupant of the chair is frequently likely to do.

The Chair has no means of knowing whether the rejection of this claim comes from the construction of the statute or because the Secretary of Agriculture did not deem it a proper claim to allow. Beyond any question of doubt, as it stands now, it is a private claim on an appropriation bill, and the Chair will be compelled to sustain the point of order, if that is the point.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment. I move to insert, immediately before the word "quarantine," in line 18, page 126, the word "lawful."

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, I have no objection to the insertion of the word proposed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, may I, then, offer an amendment on such lines as to cover in a general way what has been objceted to, the objection being sustained on the point of order? After the word "materials," in line 14, I move to insert the words "buildings, shops, or other property," so that it may cover such conditions as that which I have described, and so that this claim may be presented to the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Let us get at just what that would be. On what line would it come in, and where?

Mr. SAULSBURY. After the word "materials," on line 14.

Mr. SHAFROTH. What page?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Page 126. I move to insert at that point the words "buildings, shops, or other property."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, this amendment is not changing existing law. This amendment, inserted by the committee, is a mere repetition of existing law. The proposed amendment is a change of existing law and extends the liability of the Government. I make the point that it is objectionable to the rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will be compelled to overrule that point of order. This is an appropriation to apply to certain purposes, and the Senate can make the appropriation for any purpose it pleases. This is not a general law heretofore made, but simply an appropriation for a certain purpose. The Senate can make the appropriation for this purpose if it chooses.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I desire to suggest to the Senator from Delaware that in my opinion he will not accomplish the purpose he has in view by the amendment he has offered. I am interested in the matter because, as my colleague has just said, there are claims in my State, of the general character of the one now presented from Delaware, amounting to millions of dollars. The reason those claims could not be paid or even considered under the law as it is proposed to be is that the law is limited to compensation for things that are purchased or destroyed by the Government. The claim made by the Senator from Delaware, as I understand it, is for damage to things that have not been purchased or destroyed by the Government. Therefore, simply to add "buildings or any other structure" would not reach the case, unless the former words are enlarged or modified to permit damages to be paid for things that have not been purchased or destroyed in order to meet the ravages of the disease.

If the Senator from Delaware and the Senate desire to enlarge the liability of the Government so that compensation will be made for all damages that have been brought about by quarantine regulations to farmers and butchers and all others who have been affected, I do not know that I will oppose that sort of legislation, because my State would be very deeply interested in it; but candor requires me to say that it will immensely increase the amount of the appropriation necessary to pay these claims. The $1,250,000 here provided for would hardly begin the work of compensation. I think the Senate ought to understand very clearly just what it is doing before the change in the law is made.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I will say that I have not made a point of order on the other claim. It seems to have been done by others. It seems to be a specific claim, and somewhat of the character of other claims that have been paid, although I had not given them thorough consideration. But the amendment which has just been offered seems to open the gateway for millions of claims. I may say that the Government of the United States has expended $4,500,000 in its efforts to extirpate the foot-and-mouth disease, and has paid half of the losses entailed upon the owners of cattle and other property destroyed in this crusade, when it might have destroyed them without compensation at all. I fear to insert this provision, because no man can tell the number of claims that might follow in its train.

I therefore move to lay the amendment on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to lay on the table the amendment of the Senator from Delaware.

The amendment was laid on the table.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, there is an amendment which has been suggested by the department in connection with this provision, and I will offer the amendment at this time. It is merely a proviso. The fund of $600,000 remaining over from the appropriation last year lapsed on yesterday. The provision contained in the bill relates to anticipated exigencies. The department suggests that the amount of the unexpended balance be reappropriated and made available for the payment of claims already accrued if there be such.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, did the Senate committee have that in view when they reduced the amount of $2,500,000 appropriated by the House to $1,250,000?

Mr. GORE. No, sir; I will say to the Senator that they did not. In the examination of this question it was stated that they had ample funds on hand to pay all the accrued claims and all anticipated claims during the remainder of the fiscal year. I was a little surprised at this request coming in, but it is simply in pursuance of the policy which has been deliberately adopted.

Mr. SMOOT. The amount we provide for the ensuing year would be $1,850,000, then, instead of $1,250,000.

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir; but it is of an entirely different character. The $1,250,000 relates to future exigencies, and the damages that may occur in the future.

Mr. SMOOT. No; to past and future ones.

Mr. GORE. It is not at all retroactive. There may be some claims and losses which have occurred in the past which could not be compensated for without this provision which I offer. It is to meet that situation that this amendment is presented.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not understand the situation in that way. This appropriation of a million and a quarter dollars is to arrest and eradicate "any such disease"—that is, the foot-and-mouth disease—"including the payment of claims growing out of past and future purchases and destruction." So, if we now make the $600,000 unexpended balance available for the coming year, the appropriation for this purpose will be $1,850,000 instead of $1,250,000.

Mr. GORE. Under that construction I should not have presented this amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think there is the least question but that that will be the result. I will ask the Secretary to state the amendment, and then we will see.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KENYON in the chair). The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 127, line 2, after the word "appraisements" and before the period, it is proposed to insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided further, That so much of the appropriation of $2,500,000 made by the Agricultural appropriation act of March 4, 1915, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, for the arrest and eradication of foot-and-mouth disease, rinderpest, contagious pleuropneumonia, or other contagious or infectious diseases of animals as remains unexpended at the close of said fiscal year is hereby reappropriated and made available for expenditure during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, for the objects mentioned in said appropriation act, including necessary investigations to determine whether said diseases have been completely eradicated in districts where they previously existed.

Mr. SMOOT. There is not any question that if we adopt that amendment the appropriation for the coming year will be $1,850,000.

Mr. GORE. I will withhold the amendment for the present, then, because I questioned the head of the Animal Bureau very particularly upon this point, and he answered that they had funds available for the payment of all accrued claims and for all anticipated claims during the remainder of the fiscal year.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the last fiscal year, and that ceased on yesterday.

Mr. GORE. That ceased on yesterday. I had overlooked the clause to which the Senator called my attention in the committee amendment. I withhold that amendment for the present, and will look into it further.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14303) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. BRYAN. I desire to present the conference report on the fortifications appropriation bill.

Mr. GORE. I will ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside for that purpose, if the Senator will assure me that the consideration of the report will not lead to several hours' debate.

Mr. BRYAN. I think I can assure the Senator of that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KENYON in the chair). The conference report will be read.

The Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14303) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 2, 5, 6, and 10.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 4, 7, 8, 9, 11, 12, and 14, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 1 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out "$5,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$10,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 6. That except as expressly otherwise authorized herein no part of the sums appropriated by this act shall be expended in the purchase from private manufacturers of any material at a price in excess of 25 per cent more than the cost of manufacturing such material by the Government, or, where such material is not or has not been manufactured by the Government, at a price in excess of 25 per cent more than the estimated cost of manufacture by the Government: Provided, however, That whenever in the opinion of the President an emergency exists affecting the general welfare of the United States, he may waive the limitations contained in this section."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Renumber the section to read "7"; and the Senate agree to the same.

N. P. BRYAN,
LUKE LEA,
WESLEY L. JONES,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
SWAGAR SHERLEY,
G. W. RAUCH,
F. H. GILLETT,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Florida to explain briefly what amendments the Senate has receded from, and also what amendments the House has receded from.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, the Senate receded from the first amendment in disagreement, which was an appropriation by the House of $250,000, the Senate amendment being for $225,000, for the protection, preservation, and repair of fortifications.

The Senate also receded from the increase of $54,000 for the construction of mining casemates, cable galleries, and so forth.

The Senate also receded from the amendment for the purchase, manufacture, and test of sea-coast cannon, in which the amendment of the Senate increased the amount to the estimate of the department.

Mr. SMOOT. That is, from $2,700,000 to $6,000,000?

Mr. BRYAN. No; it is on page 4, the last paragraph. The House provided for $1,284,500. The Senate raised that to $1,764,500. The Senate receded on that and on the item at the bottom of page 4, increasing the House appropriation by half a million dollars.

Mr. SMOOT. Did the House recede from that amendment?

Mr. BRYAN. No; the Senate receded.

Mr. SMOOT. What did the Senate do in relation to the——

Mr. BRYAN. I am going through first with what the Senate did. I will explain to the Senate the action of the House when I have done that.

Then the Senate receded from amendment numbered 10, with reference to the Clark invention.

The House receded from the increase by the Senate in disagreement on page 4. The Senate increased the House item from $2,700,000 to $6,000,000, and the House receded.

For contract authorizations, the Senate increased the House authorizations by a million and a half dollars, or to $3,000,000, and the House receded.

The House receded from the Senate amendment on page 5, by which the Senate increased the appropriation for the purchase, manufacture, and test of ammunition from $400,000 to $480,000.

The House receded from the amendments with reference to the Hammond invention, found on page 7.

Mr. SMOOT. The House receded?

Mr. BRYAN. The House receded.

The House receded from section 3, on page 15.

Mr. SMOOT. That is in relation to the services of skilled draftsmen?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes.

The House receded from the disagreement on section 4, with an amendment to increase the amount to $10,000. Then section 4, as it appears here of the House language, which was stricken out, was restored, with the proviso that the limitation could be waived whenever, in the opinion of the President, it was necessary for the public welfare.

The total amount of reduction in the appropriations put on by the Senate is half a million dollars. The Senate had put on some additional amounts of over $3,000,000—nearly $4,000,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12717) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended on pages 126 and 127.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 127, after line 2, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to ascertain and pay the damages due William Blair, of Hominy, Okla., resulting from the dipping of his cattle by the Bureau of Animal Industry in August, 1915, $18,293, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, this is a private claim on an appropriation bill, and similar to the amendment which was offered by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY]. Does not the Senator having the bill in charge believe that that ought to go through Congress the same as other claims?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I should like to make a statement in connection with this provision. I may say that my colleague [Mr. OWEN] introduced a bill covering this claim, which for some reason was sent to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry rather than to the Committee on Claims.

The proposal was discussed in the committee. I stated to the committee that I would not move to attach this amendment to the bill. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA], who is a member of the committee, was so much impressed with its justice that he made the motion and the motion was agreed to by the committee.

Now, I should like to state briefly the character of this claim which I think places it really upon exceptional ground. This man Blair owns some 900 head of cattle. We passed a law which requires the dipping of cattle under certain circumstances. The Department of Agriculture sent down an inspector to superintend the dipping of this herd of cattle. In mixing the chemicals too much of some element was retained or contained and the result was that a number of the cattle were burned to death. Some 50 or 60 of them died outright and all the others were seriously damaged; the owner was obliged to carry them over for the period of a year.

When they were being dipped the owner of the cattle, Blair, protested to the inspector that he was killing his stock, and made an effort to have him change his methods; but in despite of that the inspector persisted with the dipping, and this damage resulted. The inspector I do not think was under bond, but at any rate, he has left the United States.

The department has made an investigation of this occurrence and has recommended that Blair ought to be paid the sum of $18,000. Of course he insisted that he was entitled to some $30,000, but there were elements of loss which the department did not take into account. But the department admits that it was done through its agent in compelling a citizen to submit to the laws of the land, and by the administration of the law by the department this citizen has sustained a loss of some $18,000. I may say that it has resulted, I understand, in the bankruptcy of Blair.

As the Government has done this itself, through its own representative, compelling its citizens to submit to the dipping of the cattle under the law, and the dipping was carried on over his protest at the time the stock was burned to death, and serious damage was entailed, damages admitted by the department, which I have no doubt resulted in the bankruptcy of this man, it seems to me that it really places it upon exceptional ground and that as the department confessed its own error, confessed the loss, he ought not to be obliged to be subjected to the additional cost, time, and delay of pursuing the ordinary route of obtaining redress against the Government of the United States.

There is no doubt but that the amendment is liable to a point of order. It is merely a question as to whether or not the circumstances rescue it from that necessity.

Mr. SMOOT. I really believe, Mr. President, on a claim of this kind, after just a few moments' consideration by any committee it would be reported favorably. There is not any doubt but that the money is due Mr. Blair on the statement made by the Senator from Oklahoma, and I am not going to interpose a point of order against the amendment, because it seems to me that not only has the man been damaged to the amount of $18,000 but a great deal more than that.

Mr. GORE. I think more.

Mr. SMOOT. From the statement of the Senator I feel justified in withholding any point of order. I am perfectly willing that the claim shall be placed in this bill.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I trust no Senator will interpose an objection to this item. It was very carefully considered by the committee. As the chairman of the committee has stated, this man has sustained an enormous loss through no fault of his own, but through the fault of the Department of Agriculture or through that of the department's inspector. The claim is a small one in comparison with the tremendous loss which the man has sustained, and we ought to allow the amount which was placed in the bill by the committee.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I know of no reason why this individual claim should be singled out and paid in this extraordinary manner. There may be a hardship imposed upon the stock owner. Undoubtedly there are numerous cases where all the Government may be able to do and all the several States may do will not compensate the owner of the live stock for the loss. That is one of the things beyond remedy. The Government can not at its own expense undertake to even up all those processes.

In my own State I am quite sure more than $8,000,000 would be required if property owners were compensated for the stock destroyed by either State or Federal authority, or both. About a million and a half dollars has been paid out in that State by the Government, either for the value of the stock itself, the expenses incurred, or the destruction of property that was unavoidably connected with the infected stock and required to be destroyed.

These matters, though, Mr. President, would not justify making out separate bills for each of the property owners to be compensated here in the manner of this particular item on page 137. If this process were followed in the one case it ought to be followed in others. I know of a single case, that of one of my constituents, living in Lake County, Ill., not far from Waukegan, where a herd was destroyed by 27 Federal inspectors, who went in with guns and by intimidation destroyed a herd that had been bred for many years. The stock was slaughtered and left lying on the premises for 48 hours after destruction to spread the infection. A reasonable valuation put on the single herd is more than $300,000. The uniform sale made for many years past out of the herd for breeding purposes would indicate the value of the property destroyed to be $300,000. The herd is all gone. It is an absolute destruction.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. GRONNA. In the case to which the Senator from Illinois refers, did not the department offer to pay a certain amount? I ask the Senator if the Agricultural Department did not in that case offer to pay a certain amount?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir; they offered to pay the beef value on the market.

Mr. GRONNA. Which was rejected by the owner of the stock. This is a different case, I will say to the Senator. The cattle were killed, and they were killed by an officer of the Government, but no pay has been offered to the farmer who lost the stock, and the amount appropriated in the bill is not one-fourth of the value of the stock.

Mr. BRADY. And they were killed by an officer of the Government.

Mr. GRONNA. Against the protest of the owner of the cattle.

Mr. BRADY. Against the protest of the owner.

Mr. SHERMAN. That does not add any virtue to it whatever. There is not a stock owner in the country who did not protest. If the mere idle form of a protest shall attach some right or impose upon the Government the duty of appropriating without going through the ordinary course of a claim in the department, then the Senate will be swamped with claims of a like kind. The fact that a protest was made would not stop the Government operation. The protest was made in every instance in my own country. Mrs. Durand, in the particular instance to which I called attention, went to the circuit court, a court of general jurisdiction, and obtained an injunction against the destruction of the property on the ground that it was an irreparable injury, because neither the Government nor the State ver proposed to pay more than the beef value. The injunction was disregarded by the officers of the department or their representatives who went upon the premises and destroyed the property, as I have already stated. So that was an aggravated case. Still, I apprehend that even the beef value of the herd, if put in here on page 127 as a particular provision, specifying Mrs. Durand by name and providing ten, fifteen, or twenty thousand dollars for her payment, would be subject to a point of order. If not subject to a point of order, it would be subject at least to the argument that it had no place in that form in this bill. Let whatever in the discretion of Congress is a proper sum be fixed, and then let the claim be filed in the department like all the other claims and be paid.

These cattle were dipped, I understand, and some of them died as a result. They were dipped by the Government. Why?

Mr. NELSON. Is the Senator familiar with what occurred in Chicago at the time they had what they called a fat-cattle show, where they gathered in blooded cattle from all over the country and then quarantined them and killed some of them? Is the Senator familiar with that occurrence?

Mr. SHERMAN. Somewhat, but not in great detail. I know that during a part of the time some of my friends were there.

Mr. NELSON. Some of the people of Minnesota were caught in that, and lost their blooded cattle, fine short-horn cattle, and they only proposed to pay the same as for ordinary steers for beef purposes.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is correct. There were some male cattle at that point whose value, of course, will be said to be speculative—that would be regarded as a fancy price. For people who are familiar with this grade of cattle, those that are registered, it is not a fancy price, as any stock raiser knows. The bulls that sell at $5,000 are not disposed of at an exaggerated value at all. Many of those animals were destroyed. Many others were kept in quarantine. Many others were so handled or exposed to suspicion because of the quarantine or misfortune that the sales that would have resulted were entirely destroyed and the business of that herd was broken up at least since that time, and probably it will interfere somewhat for several years to come. Of course, these prospective sales are purely a speculative value. They are not an element of damages in any claim that is to be made; to say the least of it it is the direct damage to the property owner.

I know of no reason why this particular claim should be put in this form. The mere fact that the property owner lost something does not justify, to my mind, its being embodied in this bill. Why should he not take his chances with the rest of the live-stock owners? I do not know the fact that he lives in Oklahoma attaches any particular virtue to the cattle or the owner thereof.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. GRONNA. I do not wish to be understood in any manner to say that the department were justified in doing what they did in the case the Senator has referred to in his own State. But this is a different case. The department did not enter upon the premises of this man and offer to buy his cattle for the purpose of slaughtering them. They entered upon the farm and against the protest of this farmer proceeded to dip them.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then what is the difference?

Mr. GRONNA. And the cattle died. This man has not been remunerated in any way, because, as the Senator knows, under the law the department could not reimburse him for the loss or pay him for the damages he sustained.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let it be added under an appropriate wording that if the cattle were not killed directly by slaughter in order to eradicate disease, if they were treated in a manner which resulted in their damage or death, it would be included. Put it on the same basis that other property owners are paid who lose live stock.

I assume that when the cattle were dipped it was for some specific purpose; that they had some disease—probably the foot-and-mouth disease. I make the inquiry. It may be that they had cattle tick or some contagious disease which the department did not want to spread to neighboring herds.

Mr. GORE. I will say that the owner was prepared to ship them to market, I understand, and the cattle were not diseased; they were dipped for the purpose of disinfecting them, through fear of fever.

Mr. SHERMAN. What was the nature of the disease?

Mr. GORE. They had no disease, I will say to the Senator. My understanding is that the cattle were prepared for market and the owner was arranging to ship them to market at that time, and the dipping was required because they were going, I suppose, from an infected territory to an uninfected territory.

Mr. SHERMAN. Might I inquire what kind of disease was apprehended.

Mr. GORE. Fever tick.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is a contagious complaint, or, rather, the tick is contagious like the ordinary parasite that belongs to other animals or the human body. Whenever you are around in the neighborhood where it can reach you it does so. It has predatory instincts like these evil trusts which are continually going about in order to obtain sustenance.

I understand the southern cattle fever is the result of being bitten by the tick, and it communicates the disease to the animal so bitten. So if the animal would desire to scratch itself on some adjacent fence stake or building, if it was successful in its operation it would leave the tick and keep the fever; and when another animal came along the tick would immediately take up its headquarters on this other animal not so infected, and so the disease spreads. It is a question of the activity of the tick.

I do not know any difference between dipping an animal in the particular part of the United States subject to the Texas fever, as we call it, when it comes into the stockyards, and killing it as the result of dipping and shooting it outright in order to prevent it from infecting by the foot-and-mouth disease and transmitting it to other yards in the neighborhood. I fail to see any difference. It does not make any difference whether I lose my stock by being shot by the Government inspector because it has foot-and-mouth disease or dipping my cattle just before I ship them in order to disinfect them from Texas fever before they are received in interstate trade for packing houses in Chicago. What is the difference? It is a distinction without a difference, and it is a distinction that applies peculiarly to Oklahoma. It does not apply any place else.

I do not know how many high-toned bulls were killed in my State—not the bulls on the Chicago market, but genuine ones. They were slaughtered at the hands of Government agents ruthlessly. It did not make any difference how distinguished their pedigree or how desirable they were, they all went the same way.

Mr. GRONNA. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. SHERMAN. All right.

Mr. GRONNA. I suggest to the Senator from Illinois that there is a difference. If this herd had had the foot-and-mouth disease, the Department of Agriculture would have been authorized under the law to pay certain damages. There is no law that I know of permitting the Department of Agriculture or anyone else to pay anything for animals virtually killed by the department.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have already suggested, Mr. President, that a few apt words be added here by which in such cases the damage may be paid. Whatever the object of the dipping, it was to enable the live-stock owner to make his shipment. Otherwise the cattle that were ready to go into the market could not have been put into interstate trade. Undoubtedly the dipping could have been prevented by the property owner if he had refrained from shipping his cattle.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I have looked into the matter further, and I find that, instead of being prepared for shipment in Oklahoma to some market, they had been brought from a Texas point below the quarantine line, I understand, into a portion of Oklahoma north of the quarantine line, and for that reason they were being dipped, but it was insisted by the owner that they were not infested with ticks.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let me inquire: The dipping was supposed to be for the purpose of enabling the live-stock owner to ship the cattle?

Mr. GORE. No; that was my impression; but I find, on looking at the record, that they had been shipped from a point in Texas below the quarantine line to a point in Oklahoma north of the quarantine line, and for that reason they were being dipped in order to render them immune in that section.

Mr. SHERMAN. But the dipping in any case was necessary if they continued in interstate trade. They could have been returned to the shipper.

Mr. GORE. They could, of course, have been returned to Texas. The owner insisted that they were not infested with ticks.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then there would not have been so much loss as to have them die as the result of the treatment.

Mr. GORE. I say the owner insisted that they were not infested with ticks. He had veterinarians examine them who said they were not infested with ticks. Notwithstanding that, they were still dipped.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not see the justice of adding a claim of this sort to this bill. I shall vote to sustain the point of order when made.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, before the Senator does that, permit me to say a few words. Of course, I realize the fact that this man lives in Oklahoma, and that the cattle were killed in Oklahoma constitutes no special exception in favor of the claim. The Senator is undoubtedly correct in that contention; but I wish to bring this matter to his attention:

Under the quarantine laws of the United States the Government can destroy diseased cattle in certain cases without any compensation to the owner. It does that constantly now; it destroys a great deal of live stock without any compensation whatever to the owner. When the foot-and-mouth disease broke out it raged with its peculiar virulence in the Senator's State and adjacent States, and the department felt called upon to slaughter those cattle for the protection of the live-stock industry of the United States. The losses were so extensive and so serious that the Government departed from its general practice and made an exception in favor of this outbreak and compensated the owners of those cattle, at least in part, and, in conjunction with the States, supposedly in full. It could have slaughtered many of those cattle without any compensation to the owners; no owner would have had even the color of a case for damages against the Government; but the Congress of the United States departed from the established custom and voluntarily compensated those owners. It did not remit them to the ordinary course of obtaining reparation through a private claim.

Now, this is an exceptional case, of course not so extensive, but it seems to me that the equities back of the payment to the owner of the cattle infected with the foot-and-mouth disease in the Senator's State obtain in favor of this man who, without any fault of his own, was subjected to serious losses. His situation would have been much better if these cattle had been infected with the foot-and-mouth disease. In that case he would have been compensated, he would not have been compelled to go to the Court of Claims, he would not have been compelled to come to Congress and go through the tedious process of securing the passage of a private-claims bill. That is the only reason.

The Senator is entirely correct in his insistence that this is obnoxious to the point of order. It seems to me that there is a species of equity which has been extended by the Government to citizens of his own State in cases less entitled in some respects to consideration, an equity which might at least be justified in the adoption of this amendment. I hope the Senator will be able to see it in that light.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I shall make a point of order against the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator make a point of order?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir; I will when I conclude my remarks. I wish to say a little something before I take my seat on the general merits. This may be a hardship, but it is one of a very great number of hardships growing out of the diseased condition of cattle. There is even less equity in this application than in the case where, contrary to the wishes of the owners, the animals were slaughtered. There it was known that there was to be a destruction. Here there was an effort to cure a diseased condition of cattle or at least to disinfect them and make them proper for further shipment. The difficulty is, it seems to me, like making this an exception to the general rule. It could be obviated by some proper amendment to this section or to the committee amendment which is proposed to the section that would avoid the precedent here for making particular claims in this form in an appropriation bill. It seems to me that we can avoid that precedent by doing so.

On the question of hardship I do not care to take very much time. I can only say that a great many stock raisers in the West and in the northwestern part of the country are out a great many hundreds of thousands of dollars, some of them having been brought almost to a point of bankruptcy by their misfortunes. Some of them still have notes at the bank representing the purchases of stock killed by Government inspectors. They have received the appraised value, some part of it from the State, 50 per cent of it from the total amount allowed, and the remaining part from the Government. Altogether about $1,450,000 has been paid out in my own State, the total losses in property in that State would aggregate more than $8,000,000. A great many of these herds were owned by tenant farmers whose ability to continue successfully their business was tied up in their stock. So when this misfortune came it was a most serious matter for them. They have lost and will not recover for some years to come. Those are more equitable claims than anything that this property owner presents, who would undertake to ship cattle through and over a given State line and then they were taken by the Federal inspector and dipped, and in the process some of the cattle died. I know in this difficulty of last year, at the live-stock show in Chicago, values aggregating many millions of dollars passed from a quick asset either into a slow asset or totally disappeared.

There is a good deal of prejudice—I find it in some of the hearings before the committee—that a blooded animal ought not to be paid for at any more than its beef value. If that could be announced as a general rule, then there is an end of all live-stock improvement in the live-stock industry; you put an end to all incentive to breed the better class of cattle in the United States.

Mr. GORE. I should like to say to the Senator that the pending bill contains the provision that breeding cattle can be paid for at the rate of three times their beef value.

Mr. SHERMAN. I understand. That is supposed to be a sort of just compromise between the actual value sold in the ordinary course of trade of blooded animals and the mere beef value or the scrap stock value put upon the animal. I do not know whether three times the value will prove at all adequate. It may be that that is the only practical basis on which an agreement can be reached; but I know that the Herefords, the Guernseys, the cattle that are distinctly bred and their pedigrees followed year after year, with a view of developing the largest amount of carcass in the slaughterhouse, that animals of that description, both male and female, sell for prices that are out of all proportion, apparently, to their value. Still the beef raisers in the corn and clover country inevitably tend to get the blooded cattle as beef producers. They find that it is money in their pockets to do so.

I know there is some feeling against a blooded bull. I remember some years ago there was great prejudice in my part of the country against the animals that were pedigreed. It was said that a crabapple bull was just as good as any other, and it was a discrimination against the right of the common people to interfere with the scrub bull. They have gotten over that notion in every part of the country where they breed either for beef or milk.

I only refer to this to show the manifold hazards the stock raisers not only in my State but in the adjoining States of Iowa and of Missouri and generally in the live-stock producing States have incurred.

I want to have printed in the RECORD at length, without reading, Mr. President—for I do not want to take much time—the history of the origin and development of the foot-and-mouth disease, discovered about August 18 to August 23, 1914, at Niles, Mich., and running on through to the present time, including the difficulty at the Live Stock Show at Chicago last fall.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

HISTORY.

1. Suspicious cases discovered about August 18 to 23, Niles, Mich. Dr. Clemo, local veterinarian, called to David Muruk's farm. Dr. W. T. Graham, local veterinarian, called to William Hoadley's farm.

2. Dr. Graham sent special-delivery letter to State Veterinarian Dumphy.

3. Dr. Dumphy notified Federal Inspector E. P. Shaffter at Detroit.

4. Dr. Fess, assistant inspector, was sent to Niles September 1. He and Dumphy took samples of diseased tissue and contents of vesicles and sent them to the Bureau of Animal Industry at Washington. Eight days later experts reported to the Detroit inspector that it was a noncontagious disease—mycotic stomatitis. (Read bulletin by Dr. J. A. Moore, director New York State College of Veterinary Science.) The cases at Niles ran through the entire herd. Also read pamphlet issued by Bureau of Animal Industry, November 28, 1908, "Differential diagnosis," and still Dr. Ward, of the Pathology Division, said cases at Niles, Mich., were mycotic stomatitis.

5. September 19, with disease increasing and no action or quarantine or interest displayed by the Bureau of Animal Industry, after one month, Dr. Hallman, Michigan College of Agriculture, went to Niles, obtained specimens, and he and State Veterinarian Dumphy inoculated a calf at East Lansing. They had results in four days and concluded the disease was infectious, which mycotic stomatitis is not.

6. Again Federal inspectors were notified at Detroit, but not until October 5 did Federal Inspector E. P. Shaffter go to Niles, Mich. When he arrived there, six weeks later than he should, he became convinced it was foot-and-mouth disease. He got samples, sent them to Washington, and asked for experts to come on from Washington, but put on no quarantine. Cattle were shipped to Chicago Stock Yards, farmers were coming and going on infected farms. Dr. Adolph Eichorn, who had had considerable experience in Europe, was sent to Michigan, almost two months after cases were first reported to the Bureau of Animal Industry. Why was not Eichorn sent there August 26? Dr. Adolph Eichorn was sent to Niles, Mich., October 6, but although he reported by wire at once that the disease was probably foot-and-mouth disease, not until October 13, a week later, did Dr. A. D. Melvin, Chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry, call Dr. U. G. Houch and tell him to go to Niles, Mich., as they likely had foot-and-mouth disease there. He, with J. R. Mohler, H. E. Smith, and B. A. Gallagher, went to infected section and pronounced the disease, after two months' delay, foot-and-mouth disease.

In the meantime shipment of hogs from the Michigan district had infected the Union Stock Yards at Chicago. That square mile of pens became rotten with the disease. The disease has since been proven to have been in the stockyards prior to October 15.

Serum was made from infected hogs for weeks. Several hundred of the most valuable dairy animals in the world were permitted to be shipped into the annual dairy show October 20, and yet it was known to exist among serum hogs of the Chicago Serum Co., at Union Stock Yards, November 20, when about 120 of these hogs were destroyed on account of this disease, Veterinary Inspector Bennett permitting cattle to come and go and dairy-show cattle arriving. October 27 Federal Inspector Bennett absolutely denied there was a single case of foot-and-mouth disease at the stockyards to the dairy-show officials, but the following day advised the manager of the dairy show to spread in aisles and approaches saturated shavings with disinfectants.

October 30 dairy-show cattle put in quarantine.

October 31 disease found in dairy-show herd. Shipments of feeders continued for four days after from the stockyards to various counties in Illinois and adjoining States, so that by November 6 reports poured in showing 19 counties in Illinois infected.

November 1, although disease was known to be in the cattle of Darlington & Co. and Ronan & Kelly, the yards were still open to visitors who visited pens and tramped about without restriction over all the premises. It was doubtless due to visitors the week previous that brought the disease from the yards to the dairy-show cattle at the Coliseum.

By December 10 Connecticut, Delaware, Indiana, Iowa, Illinois with 46 per cent, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Montana, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Virginia, Wisconsin, Kentucky, and Kansas had the disease.

January 27, 1915, three loads of infected hogs reached Philadelphia from the Chicago stockyards, showing disease still at yards with shipments made.

June 26, 1915, entire State of Illinois lifted from quarantine, except Union Stock Yards.

August 7, 1915, fresh outbreak of disease from hog cholera serum started on the farm of Henry Pearson, near Wheeling, Ill. Thirty hogs in herd of 124, 2 cattle in herd of 4 being found infected.

August 10, 1915, outbreak in hogs near Wyanet, in Bureau County.

August 16, 1915, but for outbreak, it was the intention to open the Union Stock Yards to free movement of feeders on this date; something significant in this, a new epidemic.

August 19, 1915, nine herds in Cook County, Ill., one in Bureau, one in Warren, two in McDonough Counties infected on this date, as well as one herd in Dodge County, Minn., in Posey County, Ind., and one in Saginaw County, Mich.

From this date, August 19, 1915, to present date, March 23, 1916, with the disease still in evidence in Christian County, Ill., hundreds of herds have been slaughtered, bringing anxiety and distress upon the owners.

The serum which caused this latter outbreak, which has cost the lives of thousands of head of live stock and hundreds of thousands of dollars, besides bringing upon the owners of the cattle untold suffering and deprivation was due to eleven hundred dollars' worth of hog serum produced by the Chicago Serum Co. at the stockyards some time prior to October 20, 1914, and through Department of Agriculture was permitted to be kept and after a questionable test in July, 1015, was sent on sale.

The first animal of the Crab Tree herd was taken August 16, 1915, at once isolated, and State veterinarian sent for. State veterinarian was at Half Day, Ill., 15 miles away, combating a fierce raging of the disease from the first case on August 7 at Wheeling, a few miles distant. He did not know what disease the animal had, he said, although for 10 days working in infected herds. The following day brought Federal Inspector Lavery, and although the animal was by himself, one man to attend him, the cattle barns thoroughly disinfected, the Federal inspector pronounced this case (the worst case in the Crab Tree herd) "weed poisoning," and said no precaution from infecting the herd need be taken. In 10 days animal was as well as ever and pegged in alfalfa field.

September 7, Federal Inspector L. E. Eppla in making the rounds found the young stock barn with aged bulls completely recovered from the foot-and-mouth disease; all lesions healed; so light was the attack that not one animal showed any sign of disease or sickness, some young calves not even having it.

The milking herd of 36 head had one-third recovered, one-third just starting. By September 19 not one trace of foot-and-mouth disease could be found in herd. September 17 a thorough examination by State and Federal inspectors found but one lesion and by September 19 that had healed.

September 24, Dr. Joseph Hughes was permitted to inspect herd, and Dr. Hughes, who had so successfully carried the dairy show cattle through the disease, could not tell that there had ever been any foot-and-mouth disease, as no evidence showed.

October 1, the family started to use the milk and make butter out of the cream. Calves were born healthy, vigorous, wonderfully fine; milking herd coming back to full milk; not one case of abortion; butter fat higher than before disease, even with fresh cows.

November 8, milk records and cream tests show herd in normal condition, and had been for three weeks.

November 9, herd never as fine; 7 cows ready to drop their calves; young stock slick and beautiful; 15 splendid young bulls, vigorous and strong; dams in advance registry; as fine imported Guernsey blood as ever brought to America.

Twenty-six armed men came upon the premises, although enjoined by circuit court injunction, imprisoned the men and Mrs. Durand, shot the animals in the stanchions, 140 years of pure-bred breeding of the finest dairy strains the country ever possessed.

Twenty-seven hours before the Federal men took last animal from stable.

Forty-eight hours a single animal was buried.

Dragged across the paddock, through the pasture one-third of a mile and left in a heap, a trail of blood to mark the way. But well animals taken from clean, sanitary, disinfected stables—the birds, squirrels, rabbits, and dogs carried no infection away, for there was none; and not one animal contracted the disease from the Crab Tree herd, notwithstanding the outrageous handling of the operation.

With an expenditure of over $300,000, and building up of one of the highest milk, cream, and ice-cream businesses in the country, the breeding and selling of pure-bred cattle, through the carelessness, ignorance, and, one might add, criminal intent of the Bureau of Animal Industry the entire enterprise has been completely eliminated and one of the finest dairy farms in America, an example to dairy farmers, has laid idle for six months.

Is the Department of Agriculture created to destroy rather than to encourage the American farmer, breeder, producer? Is the Bureau of Animal Industry operated for the benefit of the packer exclusively? Wholly inefficient, that branch of the Department of Agriculture has lost the respect and confidence of the entire farming element of America. For the first time in the history of the United States, American breeders and farmers are organizing in various States for protection and recognition.

In cases of an epidemic such as the recent outbreak of foot-and-mouth disease, caused absolutely through the incompetence of the Bureau of Animal Industry, the breeder asks not only adequate compensation for cattle killed but also for all losses and expenses relative to and incurred through the malady. The patience and good humor of the breeder have been exhausted and a radical reformation in the operation of the Bureau of Animal Industry is now asked for.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I should like to make the point of order that this appropriation for an individual claim is not properly incorporated in the bill, but is contrary to the rules of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order that this is a private claim on an appropriation bill will be sustained.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Illinois if he thinks that the Senate conferees ought to recede on this proposition to pay this value on the 3 to 1 basis for cattle slaughtered under the foot-and-mouth extermination policy and to remit such owners to their remedy through private claims bills?

Mr. SHERMAN. No; I am making no point of order against that amendment.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, notwithstanding it is a committee amendment, I will make that point of order. I will say that that proposition went out in the other House on a point of order, and I make the point of order against it now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Oklahoma specifically state his point of order?

Mr. GORE. I refer to the amendment authorizing the payment for animals slaughtered in such cases on a basis of 3 to 1.

Mr. SHERMAN. The claim of Mr. Blair for $18,293?

Mr. GORE. That has already been acted upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Oklahoma make his point of order more specific, pointing out the exact language to which he refers?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the provision might go out in the other House on a point of order and yet not be subject to a point of order in the Senate. Our rules here are very different with reference to points of order from those in the other House.

Mr. GORE. I think the amendment would be subject to the point of order here. It is legislation proposing to fix the basis for the liquidation of private claims, and it is undoubtedly subject to the point of order.

Mr. SMOOT. Has the amendment been agreed to, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It went out on a point of order.

Mr. SMOOT. Was the point of order made against the whole amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order was made against the amendment commencing on line 3, on page 127.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, the amendment referred to by the chairman of the committee has already been adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes; that amendment has been adopted; but the amendment to which the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] refers, the Chair presumes, was the one which went out on the point of order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will ask, Is it the last amendment against which the point of order has been made?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order just sustained was made against the amendment, on page 127, beginning with line 3. The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] now makes the point of order against the amendment on page 126.

Mr. GORE. I merely ask to have the amendment stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment has been adopted.

Mr. GORE. Then I move to reconsider the vote by which it was adopted; or I will bring the matter up in the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. The ruling of the Chair was undoubtedly correct as to the amendment on page 127. It is evidently subject to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendment on page 126 was agreed to.

The motion was rejected.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I will renew my motion in the Senate.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 127, line 8, after the words "Department of Agriculture," to strike out "$24,673,393" and insert "$23,929,320," so as to make the clause read:

Total carried by this bill for the Department of Agriculture, $23,929,320.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I understand that that is the last of the amendments reported by the committee, and I ask the Senator from Oklahoma if he will not consent to adjourn at this time? It is Saturday afternoon, and everybody is tired out.

Mr. GORE. There are a few amendments of not very considerable importance which I think may be disposed of in a few minutes. It is not my purpose to hold the Senate very late.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I should like, if the Senator from Oklahoma and the Senator from Utah will consent, to return to an amendment on page 53. I do not expect to be present on Monday, as I shall be obliged to be absent on some business of the Senate in connection with one of the Senate committees, with my colleague [Mr. THOMPSON], and should therefore like to have the amendment to which I refer now disposed of.

Mr. GORE. In view of the statement on the part of the Senator from Kansas, I ask that the amendment to which he refers be now stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment referred to by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The amendment referred to, which was passed over, was, on page 53, after line 16, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site within or near the corporate limits of the city of Wellington, Sumner County, Kans., said site to contain a sufficient and suitable tract of ground and the location of the site to be approved by the Secretary of Agriculture. When a good and sufficient title to said site is held by the Government of the United States the Secretary of the Treasury, acting in conjunction with the Secretary of Agriculture, shall cause to be erected thereon a suitable building or buildings for the use and accommodation of the entomological laboratory or field station of the Department of Agriculture of the Government at Wellington, Kans., said site and building or buildings complete to cost not to exceed the sum of $10,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I now find that the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has not had time to examine the statement which I gave him in reference to the amendment, and he says he would rather have the amendment go over. If the chairman has no objection, I will ask that the amendment may go over and that we may dispose of it later.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the chairman of the committee that it will not take any length of time to discuss the amendment. I simply desire to ask the Senator from Kansas a few questions in relation to the necessity for it.

Mr. GORE. I have no objection whatever to the amendment going over. I consented to its immediate consideration for the convenience of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. SMOOT. I recognize that.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, in connection with this amendment, I desire to say that I have here a letter from the Chief of the Bureau of Entomology, which I should like to have inserted in the RECORD, without reading, showing the purposes of the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. It would be very helpful to have the letter in the RECORD, and then I can read it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letter will be inserted in the RECORD.

The letter referred to is as follows:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
BUREAU OF ENTOMOLOGY,
Washington, D. C., November 30, 1915.

Hon. WM. H. THOMPSON,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: Your favor of the 26th instant is received, and in reply I am glad to furnish you with the following information:

This bureau has an entomological laboratory and field station located at Wellington, Sumner County, Kans. The territory covered by the entomologists connected with the field station comprises Kansas, southern Nebraska, southwestern Iowa, western Missouri, western Arkansas, Oklahoma, and northern Texas. This is one of the two strongest field stations of the section of cereal and forage insect investigation. There are employed at this station five permanent assistants, a stenographer, and janitor, and in summer the force is increased by the addition of two or three temporary assistants.

The beginning of field work in the vicinity of Wellington was in the spring of 1907, in connection with the green bug outbreak of that year. A permanent station was established there in August, 1908, since which time it has been necessary to move the laboratory three times.

At this point the most important insects under investigation, with relation to their control by the farmers are the Hessian fly, the chinch bug, the fall army worm, the false wireworm, the white grub, the true wireworm, the green bug or spring grain aphis, and the alfalfa webworm. In addition to these major projects, and simultaneous with them, a large number of minor investigations are being carried on. These minor investigations dovetail, so to speak, with the more important ones, and are therefore conducted at practically no expense.

In reply to your inquiry as to whether or not the work at the Wellington station has been, or is likely to be, of sufficient value to justify the establishment of a permanent station at that point, one or two specific instances may be mentioned which bear on the work already done there.

In 1908 there occurred in Kansas a disastrous outbreak of Hessian fly. The matter was at once taken up by our assistants in cooperation with prominent millers, grain men, farmers, and others, and a campaign was inaugurated which resulted in the prevention of a fall attack of the pest, in its consequent elimination from the grain fields the following spring, and in a saving to the wheat growers of that section of more than a half million dollars, this figure being given as a conservative estimate by Mr. George H. Hunter, a very well-known miller and grain dealer of southern Kansas. With reference to more recent work with the Hessian fly, Mr. W. L. English, supervisor of agriculture for the St. Louis & San Francisco Railway, under date of August 27, 1915, writes as follows:

"I wish to say that your field assistants at Wellington, Kans., have done some exceptionally good work in our territory, and we appreciate the efforts being put forth to arouse farmers to a realization of the situation that confronts them with reference to the Hessian fly. We appreciate very much the cooperation we have received from your office relative to this work."

There have always been carried on at this point extensive and important investigations with the chinch bug which have enabled the farmers of this section to reduce greatly, and in many cases to prevent entirely the losses previously caused by this well-known pest.

The work of this station will, it is expected, be continued along similar lines to those followed in the past. Some of the investigations under way, such as those dealing with false wire worms and white grubs, will eventually result in enabling the farmers to control the ravages of these very destructive pests by thoroughly practical measures.

But while, as may be seen from the foregoing, much work of great value to the farmer and to the State has been done at the Wellington station, and while much more is under way which must result in equal profits to all concerned, it is but fair to say that many investigations which should have been taken up long ago remain still untouched because of the lack of facilities for conducting them. For instance, the thrice-repeated necessity of changing the laboratory location has effectually prevented the investigation of subterranean insects—that is, such insects that pass the larval stage below ground—because in many cases this period covers a series of years. For the same reason we have been unable to secure, for permanent use, grounds upon which to carry on experimental plat tests. You will understand that such tests are inaugurated for the purpose of testing thoroughly certain proposed measures for the elimination or control of insects, that the real, practical value of such measures may be demonstrated before they are advocated for public use. Such tests are without value, and indeed impossible of accomplishment, unless they can be continued in the same field for a reasonable period of years. I have cited these instances to indicate the difficulties under which the work at Wellington has been conducted, and to indicate also, in some measure, the need for a permanant establishment at that point.

I trust that this, in a general way at least, embodies the information you desire.

Very respectfully, yours, L. O. HOWARD,
Chief of Bureau.

Mr. SMOOT. Now, I will renew my request to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE]. It being Saturday afternoon and it being impossible to secure the presence of a quorum, I suggest to the Senator that he now move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. GORE. I had rather return to the passed-over amendments. Let us make what progress we can for a little while. It is still early. Any seriously contested amendment, of course, I shall not make an effort to have considered, for we should probably lose a quorum; but at this early hour I should not like to consent to delay the consideration of amendments which might not consume much time, for when we next meet, fresh and invigorated after adjourning over Sunday, everybody will be full of oratory.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not think the Senator from Oklahoma ought to say that, because I do not remember an Agricultural appropriation bill which has gone along so smoothly as has this one. There has been no oratory indulged in at all, and I do not think there is any disposition to debate the bill at length.

Mr. GORE. I was making no reflection on the Senator from Utah, but I simply had in my memory incidents that occurred here yesterday.

Mr. SMOOT. Those were in connection with an entirely different bill.

Mr. GORE. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first amendment passed over will be stated.

The first amendment passed over was, on page 13, line 24, after the word "markets," to strike out the figures "$272,470" and to insert "$277,470," so as to make the clause read:

For all necessary expenses for investigations and experiments in dairy industry, cooperative investigations of the dairy industry in the various States, inspection of renovated-butter factories and markets, $277,470.

Mr. WARREN. Has the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY] been heard from in reference to that amendment? The amendment was passed over because the Senator from Idaho, who is now in a meeting of the Committee on Military Affairs, asked that it might go over.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Idaho offered his amendment to the provision, and it was agreed to by the Senate.

Mr. WARREN. Has he done so since then?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; he did so to-day; and I do not think there is now any dispute about the matter.

Mr. WARREN. If the amendment of the Senator from Idaho has been offered and agreed to, I know of no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The committee amendment has not yet been agreed to. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over is, on page 14, line 9, to strike out——

Mr. SMOOT. Is not the first amendment passed over at the bottom of page 4? I think that amendment was passed over at the request of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES. I will say to the Senator that that amendment was adopted while I was engaged on another matter, and there will have to be a motion made to reconsider it before it can be taken up.

Mr. SMOOT. Why would not this be a good time to take it up?

Mr. JONES. I will be glad to have that done if the chairman of the committee is willing.

Mr. GORE. I did not understand the Senator.

Mr. JONES. I shall be glad to make a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the amendment at the bottom of page 4, striking out the item for studying the methods of clearing off "logged-off" land was agreed to, and will do so whenever the chairman of the committee is willing.

Mr. GORE. I think it would be perfectly proper at this time.

Mr. JONES. Very well.

Mr. GORE. I hope the motion to reconsider will be agreed to.

Mr. JONES. I make the motion to reconsider the vote whereby that amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Washington to reconsider the vote whereby the amendment at the bottom of page 4 and top of page 5 was agreed to.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I hope that that amendment will not be agreed to. It was stated yesterday that it was stricken out on a report from the department. The clerk of the committee has kindly procured for me a copy of the House hearings with relation to this item, and I find, on page 45, that, while Mr. Spillman, of the Agricultural Department, came before the committee and stated substantially what the chairman of the committee said yesterday, he also said something further with reference to this matter. Without reading all that he said, I will read a portion of his testimony near its conclusion:

The CHAIRMAN. Is it your expectation to have this item an indefinite item or do you expect to reach final conclusions in the near future?

Mr. SPILLMAN. On certain phases of the problem I think we have reached final conclusions, or approximately final. They probably will never be absolutely final—that is, as to methods and as to cost of using these different methods we have reached approximately final conclusions. As to the conditions under which any given method is justifiable we have not reached final conclusions yet; but we have made, I think, important progress in that direction this past year, and we can use that fund to very great advantage at least for a year or two more. I can not say now just how much longer, but we certainly can use it this next year to advantage.

Mr. President, it seems to me that that warrants a continuance of this appropriation for a year or so. I know that in my section of the country, where there are thousands of acres of land on which timber has been cut, the question of getting the stumps out is of very great importance. In some cases it costs, under the methods now employed, $125 or $150 an acre; but after it is cleared the land is very productive; and any method or any system by which the clearing of these lands can be facilitated and cheapened is one of very great importance to our people. I hope that the Senate will continue this appropriation for the coming year, at any rate, and let the department see if they can not further assist us in the matter, especially along the lines Mr. Spillman indicates in his statement.

I do not want to take the time of the Senate further. I know the Senator from Oregon is very much interested in this matter. He is not here, and I hope the chairman of the committee will not be disposed to insist upon the committee amendment at this time.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the language which has been stricken out, it appears to me, is of rather an extraordinary nature, and I feel that it ought to be stricken out. We are going to appropriate money for what?

For studying methods of clearing off "logged-off" lands with a view to their utilization for agricultural and dairying purposes; for their irrigation; for testing powders in clearing them; and for the utilization of by-products arising in the process of clearing.

Why, Mr. President, if the Senator from Washington, instead of living in the Northwest lived in New Hampshire, he would know that we think we have solved the problem of getting rid of rocks of various sizes, some of them weighing tons, which we are obliged to clear off if our lands are to be worth anything for agriculture. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] suggests, so that the sheep can get their noses in the grass. Why it should be necessary in this age of the world to test powders to find out what kind should be used to blow rocks and stumps out of the ground surpasses my comprehension. We use dynamite.

Mr. JONES. Yes; but we use a different kind of powder in getting stumps out than is used in getting rocks out.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, dynamite will blow stumps out. I have seen it done over and over again, and we have stumps, as well as rocks, in the section of the country from which I come.

Mr. JONES. It is a question of economy—of ascertaining the cheapest method.

Mr. GALLINGER. In other words, it is another one of the propositions to spend money to investigate what has been demonstrated by the good old farmers for the last 50 years.

Our land has all had to be cleared. The people who came into New Hampshire came on horseback from Essex County, Mass., and they settled in a wilderness. Their first duty was to clear off trees enough to build cabins, and, of course, they had to fight Indians while they were doing that.

The next duty they had to perform was to get the rocks off the land so that they could raise something to support their families. We have built stone walls enough in New Hampshire to almost encircle the United States, and we learned how to get rid of the rocks and how to get rid even of the stumps in the early days when the settlers did not have high-power powders and did not have dynamite; but in this enlightened age they understand what powder will do, they know what dynamite will do, and they know what log pullers will do, and they clear their lands. Now, why we should put into the hands of a theorist an appropriation to tell the farmers how to get rid of stumps I can not for the life of me understand. I think it is a waste of money to undertake anything of this kind.

But, Mr. President, I want to address myself—and I prefer to do that on Monday rather than to-day—to this entire paragraph concerning farm management. I believe it is the greatest humbug that ever was thought of in connection with agriculture, and that we are wasting not only the sum of $5,000 proposed to be appropriated for this item, but the much greater sum which, I believe, is proposed to be appropriated elsewhere in this paragraph. I desire at least to satisfy myself by a little discussion of that paragraph, because I shall feel that I have neglected a duty if I do not call attention to what I think to be an inexcusable waste of public money in appropriating to enable a man who knows little about agriculture, and who has 40 clerks in his office, and 3 photographers—and nobody knows whether they photograph fields before they are planted or after the crops are up—to go around the country with 3 photographers and some slides, I believe, and tell the farmers how they can best farm their little parcels of land.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. GALLINGER. With pleasure.

Mr. NELSON. I want to call the attention of the Senator to an appropriation that immediately precedes this, and which, to my mind, is even——

Mr. GALLINGER. Even worse?

Mr. NELSON. Yes; which is even worse.

Mr. GALLINGER. I did not suppose that was possible.

Mr. NELSON. I refer to the paragraph which reads:

To investigate and encourage the adoption of improved methods of farm management and farm practice, $230,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; that is another illustration of the fact that we are putting in the hands of men, who perhaps never did a day's work on a farm in their lives, large sums of money to enable them to tell farmers how to farm.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. GALLINGER. With pleasure.

Mr. WORKS. Does the Senator think that that is any worse than the attempt to teach the people of the Western States how to irrigate their land?

Mr. GALLINGER. I think not. I think it is along the same line. These things remind me of what John B. Gough said. Some of you perhaps have heard John B. Gough, the temperance orator, a man who understood the art of gesture as no other man has in my time. A theological student came to him one day and said, "Mr. Gough, I should like to have you teach me gestures." "Teach you gestures," Mr. Gough replied, "I would just as soon teach a dog how to wag his tail." It is just so with these things. We are enabling theorists, men who have comfortable quarters in Washington, making it necessary for us to rent great buildings, men surrounded with 40 clerks and 3 or 4 messengers and 3 photographers, to go around the country teaching the farmers how to farm! But I wish to discuss that more at length when I have time, and I hope I will have an opportunity to do so on Monday.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I should like to say to the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] that this bill carries an appropriation for investigating diseases of citrus fruits and for the extermination of the Mediterranean fly and other pests which infest and infect citrus trees. That is done on the supposition that the General Government ought to assume that expense and lend that assistance and service to the citrus-fruit growers in his State and in Louisiana and in Florida. Now, if the Senator will say that that is an idle appropriation for my part I shall be glad to accept an amendment that none of it shall be wasted in his State.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, the Senator from Oklahoma will not be able to intimidate me in any such way as that. Of course if these diseases are such as to give the National Government jurisdiction because of their interstate character and because of their transmission from one State to another, such expenditures can be justified, but they can not be justified on any other ground.

Mr. GORE. I think that is true.

Mr. WORKS. You may apply it to my own State if you will. If it were simply a question of taking care of and protecting the trees of California, and the other question did not enter into it, I should say it was a wrongful appropriation of money. The people of California should pay for those things and not the National Government; but the Federal activity has always been attempted to be justified on the ground that it is an interstate question, and sometimes it is. That is the only justification for it. I am not asking anything for the State of California that I would not be willing to grant to any other State.

Mr. GORE. I entirely agree with the Senator as to the principle he lays down. I think it applies to the irrigation plant at Denver. The method of irrigation to be employed there has not been elsewhere introduced in the West, as I understand. If its success is demonstrated there, it can be applied generally throughout that section with incalculable advantage.

The department introduced drought-resisting wheat, and it has been a great success throughout the arid region. Senators may say that it ought to have been left to the States, to the localities, and to the farmers themselves; but the Government and the farmers have thought otherwise; and experience has abundantly justified the wisdom of Congress and the expenditure of that slight amount of money.

Now, it is easy for Senators to criticize particular items in this bill, and I own to having done so myself. The Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] criticized in a moderate way the proposed irrigation plant at Denver, notwithstanding its success, if demonstrated, would be of incalculable service to a number of States; yet he insists upon retaining a provision to demonstrate the processes of clearing "logged-off" land when the department officials say they have pretty well exhausted the known means and appliances, although their statement, of course, would not foreclose the possibility of new inventions in the future. They have explained before the committee the different processes of clearing logged-off land. Those who were supposed to know, said it was a matter of common knowledge, and did not require expert skill or experience.

I mention this now because Senators manifest a tendency—and I suppose it is justifiable, in the main—to criticize particular items, when there are other items of the same character which they would undoubtedly justify. I remember that on yesterday the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] resisted the insertion in this bill of the provision in regard to investigations affecting the Hessian fly, and he may have been right in that; but it was followed the next moment by a motion on the part of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], who I think volunteered a suggestion a moment ago, that a provision for investigating the chinch bug be put in this bill. I say that, to illustrate that, Senators who criticize, sometimes with full knowledge and sometimes perhaps with insufficient knowledge, are not themselves quite in a situation always to cast stones.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. GORE. I do.

Mr. WORKS. I hope the Senator from Oklahoma will take notice of the fact that the only item in the bill which I have criticized is one that is supposed to be of benefit to my own State.

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir; I understand that; and I am sure the Senator will rejoice one of these days that the Senate voted it in.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I desire to say, with regard to the Senator's suggestion about my opposing the item for irrigation at Denver, that I did not oppose that item. I simply made some inquiries to get information with reference to it, and when I got the information I made no opposition to the amendment.

Mr. GORE. I may have done the Senator an injustice; and if so, I beg to apologize for it.

Mr. JONES. I know the Senator did not intend to do so, of course. I assume that there are probably a great many items in this bill that, strictly speaking, may not be justifiable, and I know several members of the committee hold that view; but the item for studying methods of clearing "logged-off" land, while not a matter of national importance, in the sense that it affects the whole country, has been carried in the bill for two years; the department have done a good deal of work; and Mr. Spillman, while he thinks they have finished the investigation of certain phases of the work as nearly as they can, says there are some other questions in the study of which they can use this money very advantageously during the next year or two.

I am not, of course, an old pioneer like the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], but I do remember the time, when I was a boy, when I helped to clear some land in the State of Illinois of timber and helped plow the land after it was cleared, and I know that the problem of clearing in that State—and I think probably it would be true in New Hampshire—is entirely different from the problem in the Northwest.

I know that in Illinois when the trees were cut down and the land was plowed in two or three years the stumps were all gone. In our country that is not the case. The stumps do not rot, and after the trees have been cut down for 10, 12, 15, or 20 years there will be stumps 8, 10, and 15 feet in diameter, just as solid as they were when the trees were cut. So that the problem of clearing our land after the timber has been cut is entirely different from the problem in the East and in the Middle States. It is not a poor man's proposition; it is not a cheap proposition; and the question of getting the kind of powder that can be used efficiently and economically in the clearing of that land is a very important question. Possibly they might blow the stumps out with dynamite, but I do not think so. The stumps will split, and they are pretty nearly as hard to get out after they are split as when they are solid. So that the question of getting the stumps out is a very important one.

I think this item is quite as justifiable as many of the other items in the bill. I recognize the force of the criticism of the Senator from New Hampshire with reference to many of these items; but I think, from my knowledge of the situation out in the West and of what the people there have to do, that this item is justifiable; and in view of the work which has already been done and of the hope expressed by Mr. Spillman that in the next year or two some other important developments may be brought about I do hope that the Senate will continue this item.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator if it is not a fact that the stumps in his country can be gotten rid of more readily than they can in the Eastern States?

Mr. JONES. Not in any of the Eastern States that I have been in or had any experience in.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have traveled through the Senator's State and through Oregon, where the inhabitants are said to be web-footed, and I have found that the character of taproots that we have in the East are not found, as a rule, in the trees of the West, especially in the States where they have very heavy rainfall. Am I correct about that?

Mr. JONES. There are not so many taproots, but there are many other kinds of roots that go all over the country. Take the cedar trees. There they have, you might say, a great many taproots going away down into the ground.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. I want to say to the Senator that when they logged their lands out there, their cedar trees and so forth, they cut the stumps very high; they cut the tree and left a long stump. In recent years they have been cutting off those stumps and making shingles out of them, and a good many of the cedar shingles and cypress shingles that we get in our country are made from those dead stumps.

Mr. JONES. They make just as good shingles as the tree.

Mr. GALLINGER. I observed, in a little trip I made from Seattle to the Canadian city on the seacoast, that there was the most reckless kind of cutting that I supposed intelligent human beings ever practiced, and I did not know why it was. I was told by some one that it was because the high winds shivered the tree near the base. I do not know whether there is anything in that or not.

Mr. JONES. I never heard of anything of that kind in my State.

Mr. GALLINGER. But the trees were cut several feet from the ground. I do not wonder that they are making shingles out of them, because I thought then that if we in the Eastern States could only have what is wasted in those parts through which I traveled, we would be a very happy people.

Mr. JONES. In reference to that, I just want to say that it is true that they used to cut the cedar trees, especially quite high up, and now, as the Senator from Minnesota says, they are using the cedar stumps. The cedar is just as solid and makes just as good shingles now as in the days when they thought, I suppose, that there was an unlimited supply of cedar, and they cut it as they did because it was more easy to cut it in that way, I suppose.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, sometimes I wonder—and I think I have expressed it once or twice before in the Senate—whether I am not neglecting the interests of the people whom I try to represent. We have rivers in New England that if they were in the South would demand very large appropriations. In fact, we have creeks in New England that would call for appropriations if they were in another section of the country, but we do not ask for appropriations for them. We have rocks where the Senator's constituents have stumps, and I want to give a little personal experience. I am not much of a farmer, but I have a little rocky farm on which I amuse myself. I do my farming chiefly in a hammock when I am there in the summer time. I thought I would break up 1 acre of land that I imagined probably never had been plowed—if it had been, it had not been to my knowledge in 60 years—on a corner of a field where I found my hay crop was not doing very well. The breaking up of that 1 acre of land and the removal of the rocks cost me $225, and I do not believe I could sell the acre of land for $10.

Now, I did not think of coming here and asking to have an item put in this appropriation for farm management to the effect that this distinguished Prof. Stillman or Spillman, or whatever his name is, should come to New Hampshire at the expense of the Government and tell us how to get rid of those rocks.

In other words, my impression is—and I do not want to be too positive about it—that we are appropriating money for things that have been demonstrated over and over and over again. It seems inconceivable to me that the great country represented by the Senator who has just spoken and by other Senators on this floor, having been inhabited as long as it has by intelligent men, by men who have worked out a living on the land, should not to-day know how to get rid of stumps.

It is inconceivable to me; and I do not believe any man in an office here in the city of Washington, surrounded by 40 clerks and 3 photographers and 4 messengers, carrying an appropriation of $230,000 for that one little establishment, can go to the State of Washington and tell the Senator's constituents how to get rid of stumps to any better advantage than they can get rid of them themselves. I can not bring my mind to feel that it is a possible thing.

But, Mr. President, as I said before, I want to spend a few minutes—not very long, because I have gotten over making long speeches in the Senate—in the discussion of this entire item, and I should like to do so on Monday. I hope that the question now under consideration will pass over for the present.

Mr. RANSDELL. There is no objection to that, Mr. President.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, may I ask if the next amendment passed over is not on page 14?

The SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over is on page 14.

Mr. RANSDELL. I understand that is the next one that was passed over.

The SECRETARY. From line 1 to the proviso in line 11.

Mr. PITTMAN. I offer an amendment which I should like to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 14, line 9, it is proposed to strike out "$214,320" and insert "$189,320;" also to strike out the proviso beginning with the word "Provided," in line 9, down to and including the word "purposes," in line 11, and to insert, at the end of line 16, the following:

The sum of $200,000 is hereby appropriated, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purchase and maintenance of stallions for the production of horses for agricultural and military purposes: Provided, That all expenditures authorized under this act shall be made by the Bureau of Animal Industry, Department of Agriculture.

Mr. PITTMAN obtained the floor.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I am requested by the chairman of the committee, in charge of the bill, to ask that this matter be passed over until Monday. Will the Senator consent to that?

Mr. PITTMAN. Very gladly.

Mr. JONES. As I undersand, the amendment on page 4 has gone over at the request of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. RANSDELL. That is correct.

Mr. JONES. That is entirely satisfactory to me.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over is on page 21, relative to investigating the handling, grading, and transportation of grain, and so forth.

Mr. GRONNA. I ask that the amendment go over. I have an amendment to offer to the appropriation which I want to consider in connection with this amendment.

Mr. RANSDELL. I have no objection at all, Mr. President, to the amendment going over until Monday.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over is on page 25.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the seed provision. I ask that it go over. We can not dispose of that question to-day.

Mr. RANSDELL. I have no objection at all.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over is on page 53, line 17.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. It was agreed that that amendment should go over until Monday.

Mr. RANSDELL. Does the Senator allude to the amendment on page 53?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. RANSDELL. The Senator asks that that go over?

Mr. SMOOT. That goes over until Monday.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over is on page 56, for the maintenance of the Montana national bison range.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I do not see the chairman of the committee in the Chamber. I do not feel like taking up this matter while he is absent.

Mr. WARREN. Let it go over.

Mr. GRONNA. I want the amount appropriated by the House restored; but I ask that it go over until the Senator returns to the Chamber.

Mr. RANSDELL. I have no objection.

Mr. SMOOT. The amendment on page 57, which went over at my request, I should like to have go over until Monday, too.

Mr. RANSDELL. I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Those are all the amendments passed over.

Mr. THOMPSON. I desire to offer an amendment and have it lie on the table, relative to the development of the sugar-beet seed industry in this country.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I will say that in the case of the so-called grain-grades rider there have been several amendments suggested by the department, and I wish to present them now and have them adopted, so that this particular portion of the bill can be reprinted, and we will have it on the desks of Senators who are interested in it on Monday.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator mean that he offers certain amendments?

Mr. GORE. I am going to offer them and have them adopted now if I can.

Mr. SMOOT. That will lead to the discussion of the whole subject.

Mr. GORE. I do not think so. It will take only a few minutes, after which we propose to adjourn.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the amendments be stated.

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir. I have them arranged here.

The SECRETARY. On page 101, line 14, it is proposed to strike out "grades" and insert "standards"; on the same page, line 17, it is proposed to strike out "grades" and insert "standards"; atfer the word "act" and before the period, it is proposed to insert:

The word "person," wherever used in this act, shall be construed to import the plural or singular, as the case demands, and shall include individuals, associations, partnerships, and corporations; the words "in interstate or foreign commerce," wherever used in this act, mean "from any State, Territory, or District to or through any other State, Territory, or District, or to or through any foreign country, or within any Territory or District." When construing and enforcing the provisions of this act, the act, omission, or failure of any official, agent, or other person acting for or employed by any association, partnership, or corporation within the scope of his employment or office shall in every case also be deemed the act, omission, or failure of such association, partnership, or corporation as well as that of the person.

Mr. SMOOT. That seems to be a far-reaching amendment, and I will ask the Senator to allow it to go over and be pending and take it up on Monday.

Mr. GORE. I will say that if it suits the Senator I would rather it would be adopted and printed in the body of the bill, which will make it somewhat more intelligible. Of course I would consent to a reconsideration if the Senator desired it.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will consent to a reconsideration, I shall have no objection at all.

Mr. GORE. There will be no trouble about this or any other amendment that I am now offering. I think Senators have a right to a reconsideration.

Mr. SMOOT. That is all right, then.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator to have these amendments printed in italics, so that we can find them more easily in the bill?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMOOT. They will be printed in italics.

Mr. GORE. My understanding is that they will be so printed, because they are not committee amendments; but if I am in error about it I will ask to have that done.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, under the ordinary method of printing a bill they will not be printed in italics. They will be a part of the bill.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma permit me to suggest that he simply offer the amendments and then ask to have them printed?

Mr. GALLINGER. As pending.

Mr. NORRIS. They are offered as pending amendments, and can be printed in that way. If they are adopted, they will become a part of the bill.

Mr. GORE. I will say to the Senator that the only objection I could urge to that is that it is so much more difficult to consider them and to appreciate their real significance. I have just stated to the Senator from Utah that any amendment that is adopted under this request will, of course, be subject to reconsideration at the instance of any Senator. I desire to have them offered now and adopted, so that they can be printed in the body of the bill. The bill can be then much more intelligently considered.

Mr. NORRIS. The suggestion that I made was to print them in the body of the bill, if the Senator is going to have a reprint of the bill, as I understand it, and let them be printed as amendments in italics. Then we can take them up and they will show on their face just what they are.

Mr. GORE. I will say that the most of them are verbal and inconsequential changes. If there is any amendment in regard to which the Senator particularly desires to have that course pursued I will consent that it be done.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not know what the amendments are going to be.

Mr. GORE. I assure the Senator that there will be no difficulty whatever in securing a reconsideration.

Mr. NORRIS. But there will be nothing on the face of the bill to show that they are amendments.

Mr. GORE. I have requested that they be printed in italics.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course I doubt whether the Senator can accomplish that in the way he desires, because if he should have them adopted as a part of the bill, and if they were printed as amendments, then the other amendments to the bill that are printed in italics would mean one thing and the italics in another part of the bill would be part of the bill. It seems to me it would lead to some difficulty.

Mr. GORE. Very well.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator will not lose anything by having them printed in italics as amendments.

Mr. GORE. I should like to suggest, then, that we pursue the reading of the amendments; and that in the case of any amendment where any Senator desires that course taken, we, of course, will do it. There are some that are purely verbal in character, and we might as well get them behind us now. I want to speed the consideration of the bill as much as I can without inconvenience or without assuming too much risk in the haste.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will request that the last amendment read, which seems to be a pretty important one, be simply printed in italics as an amendment pending.

Mr. GORE. I ask that that be done, Mr. President. That may also be done with any other amendment that any Senator desires.

The SECRETARY. On page 102, lines 12, 13, and 14, it is proposed to strike out "from any State, Territory, or District to or through any other State, Territory, or District, or to any foreign country," and to substitute therefor "in interstate or foreign commerce."

On page 103, line 4, after the word "shipped," it is proposed to insert the words "in interstate or foreign commerce."

On page 104, line 24, it is proposed to strike out "which has been" and to substitute therefor a comma.

On page 104, line 25, at the beginning of the line, before the word "shipped," it is proposed to insert "which has been."

On page 106, line 4, after the word "for," it is proposed to insert the words "shipment or delivery for shipment in," and strike out the word "and" and substitute therefor the word "or."

On page 106, line 9, at the beginning of the line, it is proposed to insert the words "shipment or delivery for shipment in."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, what was the amendment on page 102?

The SECRETARY. On page 102, lines 12, 13, and 14, it is proposed to strike out "from any State, Territory, or District to or through any other State, Territory, or District, or to any foreign country," and to substitute therefor "in interstate or foreign commerce."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. All right.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the fact that I wish he would have all these amendments which are offered printed in italics whether they are agreed to or not, so that we can tell just what they are.

Mr. GORE. The Senator from Nebraska suggested that that would still be confusing.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Have all the committee amendments been adopted?

Mr. GORE. There are a few——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Then there would be no way of telling the proposed amendments from the committee amendments which are already printed in italics.

Mr. GORE. There are no committee amendments to the grain-grading section, as I believe.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not know about the section, but if there are any in the bill——

Mr. GORE. The printing of these amendments in italics would serve the Senator's purpose. There are no other amendments.

Mr. NELSON. There are no other amendments; and if these are printed in italics, that will identify them, if the Senator will have that done.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not want to be techincal, Mr. President, but if these amendments appear in the bill printed in italics they will appear as pending amendments—absolutely so—so that can not well be done. I have thought that the Senator would not lose any time if he allowed them all to appear in the bill as pending amendments. We will agree to them just as quickly.

Mr. GORE. I know; but the Senator will see, from the character of the amendments already proposed, that most of them are simply clarifying the meaning; and to have the bill cluttered up with them, so to say, renders it more difficult to appreciate the really important parts of it.

Mr. GALLINGER. It will not take five minutes to agree to all those.

Mr. GORE. My only purpose has been to facilitate the consideration of the bill and to enable Senators to arrive at the real points involved.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then I will appeal to the Senator to let them be printed as pending amendments, and printed in italics. There will be no trouble about agreeing to them in a very few minutes.

Mr. GORE. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Chair understand that the Senator desires a reprint of the bill?

Mr. GORE. Only that part of it relating to grain grades.

Mr. CLAPP. If the Senator will pardon me, I will suggest that he take this section and have it printed by itself, with the amendments that he is proposing, and bring it in Monday morning in concrete form; and it will then show on the face of it the amendments that he proposes now, and thus avoid all confusion. He can have that done. The chairman of a committee can always have that done.

Mr. GORE. My request was that this section relating to grain grades should be printed separately. I have no objection to indicating these amendments as pending amendments. What I desire is to have this section of the bill in convenient form for Senators to consider Monday and in the most intelligent form for their consideration.

Mr. GALLINGER. That will be done in that way.

Mr. CLAPP. All that the Senator will have to do—and he will not have to have the consent of the Senate for it, either—will be to take the section, prepare his amendments to it, take it to the clerk, and have it printed in that form, showing the proposed amendments.

Mr. GORE. I understand that; but I thought that it would be better to adopt a lot of these verbal amendments to-day. I think it would be less confusing, when the bill is printed, to be rid of all these amendments substituting "interstate commerce" for the great rigmarole "between States, Territories, and Districts." It would simplify it a good deal; but if Senators prefer the other course, I have no objection. It was purely their convenience that I was considering. So I will ask to have this section reprinted separately from the bill, with the amendments which I have offered as pending amendments, including an amendment which I now send to the desk, but which need not be read under this arrangement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection it will be so ordered; and Part B will be printed in amended form, showing amendments proposed by the committee printed in italics and pending.

Mr. CLAPP. I understand the chairman to say he did not care to have the last amendment read. Is that correct?

Mr. GORE. Yes.

Mr. CLAPP. Then I ask the attention of the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] and inquire whether he would have any objection at this time to voting pro forma to reconsider the vote by which the amendment on page 23 was adopted and then have it passed over? In the interim I have no doubt he and I can arrange some terms that will fix it satisfactorily; and if we can not, he can later move again to adopt the amendment. I have no doubt that unless it can be amended——

Mr. GRONNA. I will say to the Senator that I have no objection to a reconsideration at this time, but I would not like to waive final action on it.

Mr. CLAPP. No; I do not mean that. I suggest reconsidering the vote and having it passed over, and in the interim let us see if we can not agree on an amendment. I move, then, that the Senate reconsider the vote by which the amendment on page 23 was agreed to, beginning with the word "Provided," on line 8——

Mr. GRONNA. That is perfectly agreeable to me.

Mr. CLAPP. And terminating with the word "purposes," on lines 13 and 14. I move that the vote be reconsidered by which it was adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be reconsidered.

Mr. GORE. Now, Mr. President, I understand that a number of amendments were passed over a few moments ago, when I happened to be absent from the Chamber.

The VICE PRESIDENT. They were passed over the second time.

Mr. CLAPP. If necessary, I suggest that the amendment to which I have referred be passed over for the present.

Mr. GORE. On page 91 there is a committee amendment which I should like to have considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 91 it is proposed to strike out section 11, which includes down to the words "pursuant to this act," on page 94.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I agree with the report of the committee to strike out section 11 and section 11a; but I wish to call attention to the effect of section 11 as it was found in the bill which we passed in August, 1914.

Section 11 placed a tax of $10 a bale upon sales of cotton made by persons in the United States in foreign exchanges unless those exchanges used the contract prescribed by the act of August, 1914, which was substantially the contract provided in this bill. During last fall and winter and during the past spring cotton has usually sold very much higher in Liverpool than it sold upon the American exchanges, and the impression has existed that the $10 a bale tax upon sales made in the United States on those exchanges had caused an injury to the cotton trade in this country by preventing, except on payment of a tax on $10 a bale sales on the Liverpool exchange. It has been thought by many that the Liverpool market was much higher than the American market and that the difference in price was not made up by the cost of shipment to Liverpool.

Through the aid of the Agricultural Department I have had compiled a table showing the relative prices upon the New Orleans exchange day by day of cotton sales, and upon the Liverpool exchange. I have also had prepared a table day by day showing the cost of shipment during these periods from New Orleans and from New York to Liverpool. The result of this work discloses the fact that the cost of transportation to Liverpool, added to the cost upon the New York exchange or the New Orleans exchange, nearly every day for the past 12 months, was such that the total of the price here plus the cost of delivery in Liverpool made a sum larger than the price of the Liverpool sales, and that really, had there been no $10 a bale tax on transactions upon the Liverpool exchange, the proposed use of the Liverpool exchange amounted practically to nothing as a means of profit.

I ask leave of the Senate to put some of these figures in the RECORD, making comparison of prices—only a few of them that I will select—in demonstration of the statement I have made with reference to the matter. The report of the department showed comparison day by day. I will only print the statement of conclusion by the department and figures one day in each month.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

REPORT FROM DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

TABLE 1.—New Orleans spots and Liverpool futures.

This table covers the period of time from April 6, 1915, to April 29, 1916. It shows the price of cotton in New Orleans as represented by the spot quotations of that market, the estimated total approximate cost to deliver cotton from New Orleans on future contracts in Liverpool, the estimated value of cotton landed in Liverpool and delivered on future contract, the Liverpool future quotations for the month of delivery, and the difference between the value of the cotton and the price received on contract.

It will be observed that at no time, except on January 4, 1916, could cotton be purchased in New Orleans and landed at Liverpool and delivered on future contract without thereby incurring a loss. A discount of Liverpool futures under the true value of spot cotton as determined by its cost to purchase in New Orleans and deliver on contract in Liverpool is represented by the sixth column, the word "minus" being profixed to the figures that show the relative discount of the Liverpool contract. It will be noted that during the greater part of the period under consideration Liverpool contracts were more than 1 cent per pound below the parity of American markets, but during April, 1916, the discount narrowed to an average of about 60 points. Under such conditions as disclosed by this table, it can not be maintained that the inability to hedge cotton in Liverpool was of serious detriment to the American cotton exporters.

TABLE 2.—New Orleans spots and Liverpool spots.

This table covers the period of time from February 1, 1915, to April 29, 1916. It shows the price of spot cotton in New Orleans, the approximate cost to land cotton at Liverpool from New Orleans, the approximate value of the cotton landed at Liverpool, the current Liverpool spot quotations, and the difference between the Liverpool spot quotations and the value of the cotton landed at Liverpool.

An examination of these figures discloses that cotton might have been purchased in New Orleans on spot terms and sold on spot terms at published quotations at Liverpool occasionally at a profit, but that normally the Liverpool spot quotations were at a discount as compared with the cost of cotton purchased in New Orleans plus the charges to land it in Liverpool. At times this discount of Liverpool spot quotations was more than 1 cent per pound, but the average discount seems to have been about one-half cent per pound. As Liverpool spot prices are thus shown to be below the parity of spot cotton in New Orleans, it does not seem rational to conclude that Liverpool was the logical market in which to place a hedge or to consign cotton.

1 Date.	2 New Orleans spots.	3 Approximate cost to land at Liverpool (in cents).	4 Approximate price landed at Liverpool (in cents) (sum of columns 2 and 3).	5 Liverpool spot quotations (in cents).	6 Difference between Liverpool spot quotations and approximate price landed at Liverpool (in cents).

This table covers the period of time between January 2, 1914, and April 19, 1916. It shows the quoted freight rates on cotton in cents per hundred pounds from New York to Liverpool and from New Orleans to Liverpool. It is understood that each quotation is in effect until the date of the next succeeding quotation.

It will be noted that the freight rates have increased more than tenfold over the normal rate that existed prior to the outbreak of war in Europe. This great increase in freight seems to have been the chief determining factor for the increase in the value of cotton in English over American markets.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Oklahoma what his purpose is in the further consideration of this bill?

Mr. GORE. I will say to the Senator that I was under the impression that the pending amendment to strike out section 11 could be passed upon without any discussion and without any delay. It has been very thoroughly considered by the committee, and very thoroughly considered by the Senators who reside in the cotton States. Of course, that would not be conclusive; but generally their wishes are shown a great deal of deference in the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. Possibly there is no objection to it.

Mr. GORE. I do not think there is.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the question be put.

Mr. GORE. I suppose it would have been put if the Senator had not propounded the interrogatory. I will say if there be any objection to the adoption of the warehouse-act amendment I shall move a recess, but I know of no controversy on that. The uncontroverted points I wish to finish, and nothing that involves any debate or controversy will be taken up. I hope we can take a recess in a few minutes.

Mr. GRONNA. May I ask the Senator from Oklahoma if the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] is agreed to this provision?

Mr. GORE. I am not sure as to what the Senator's plans were. He offered no amendment to this in committee. If the Senator returns, however, on Monday, or before the conclusion of the bill, of course the matter could be reconsidered at his instance. There will be no difficulty about that.

Mr. GRONNA. I know he was very much opposed to this provision. That was my understanding at that time.

Mr. GORE. The Senator is mistaken; he was very much in favor of it, but desired to offer a substitute for section 5. We discussed it; he did not offer it in committee. I do not think that section 5 has any relation to section 11, which the Senator from South Carolina heartily favors.

Mr. SMOOT. Why not let it go over?

Mr. GORE. I would rather dispose of it now if we can do so.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There is no objection from any Senator to striking out section 11 and section 11a. The trade generally seems to desire the sections stricken out. One reason we put section 11 into the original bill was that there was a fear that the operators of the New York Cotton Exchange might move over to Canada to get rid of the tax and to continue their illegal speculative contracts; but now the large majority of the members of the New York Cotton Exchange recognize the fact that they can do business under an honest contract—a contract that gives the manufacturer who buys for future delivery something that he can spin—and there is no necessity for the section to prevent that danger.

While the Agricultural Department still approves the sections and hopes to force the Liverpool Exchange and other foreign exchanges to adopt our contract, the trade generally believes the Agricultural Department is mistaken about it. They think it is unwise to keep the two sections, and the Senate committee yielded to what we understood the trade wanted and most of the farmers preferred. I think the farmers were mistaken in supposing the provision injured them last year, and I myself do not believe it did injure them at all.

The figures I put into the RECORD show that the differences between the Liverpool prices and the New Orleans and New York prices were made up in the varying cost of transportation. That was not fully appreciated by the farmers of the country; but we all agree, I think, that sections 11 and 11a may be stricken out. I know the Senator from South Carolina is very anxious to have them stricken out.

Mr. SMOOT. Why can we not agree to the committee amendment?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Everybody agrees to the committee amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORE. I will say that the warehouse-act amendment is of considerable length. It is substantially a bill that was passed through the Senate a couple of years ago. If Senators, however, think it will involve any discussion, I shall not insist on its consideration now.

Mr. SMOOT. Let it go over.

Mr. GORE. My desire is to dispose of any other item that can be got rid of now.

Mr. GRONNA. I do not see the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] here. I talked with him this afternoon, and he stated to me that he is very much interested in that provision. I ask that it may go over until Monday.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then let us adjourn.

Mr. GORE. I know of no other matter to be considered this afternoon, and I am ready to move that the Senate take a recess.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3346) conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to adjudicate the claims of the State of Massachusetts.

The message also announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate on the bill (H. R. 14303) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SHERLEY, Mr. RAUCH, and Mr. GILLETT managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 3673. An act to establish a term of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals at Asheville, N. C.; and

H. R. 11148. An act transferring the counties of Osage and Pawnee from the western judicial district of the United States court, in the State of Oklahoma, to the eastern judicial district of said court in said State, for judicial purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 6923. An act to authorize the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across Little River at a point where the line between townships 12 and 13 north, range 8 east, crosses said river;

H. R. 7617. An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes;

H. R. 9615. An act to reimburse certain Indians for labor done in building a schoolhouse at Queets River, Quiniault Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington;

H. R. 10849. An act granting the consent of Congress to Ashley County, Ark., to construct a bridge across Bayou Bartholomew;

H. R. 10925. An act authorizing Ashley County, Ark., to construct a bridge across Bayou Bartholomew;

H. R. 12197. An act authorizing Ashley County, Ark., to construct a bridge across Bayou Bartholomew; and

H. R. 14484. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. PHELAN presented a petition of the Department of California and Nevada, Grand Army of the Republic, praying for the enactment of legislation to provide a Civil War Volunteer Officers' Retired List, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Redlands, Cal., praying for an appropriation for the construction of a military road from the Atlantic to the Pacific coasts; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a memorial of the Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis, of San Francisco, Cal., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to prohibit employees of the Public Health Service from becoming members of medical or health societies, which was referred to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BORAH, from the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 12365) to promote the reclamation of arid lands, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 578) thereon.

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 6540) to repeal section 4411, Revised Statutes, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce; which was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. HARDING:

A bill (S. 6553) granting a pension to Robert W. Irvine; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. TAGGART:

A bill (S. 6554) granting an increase of pension to Sandford Peter Coan; and

A bill (S. 6555) granting an increase of pension to Nathan Reeder; to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. REED submitted an amendment providing that in any State which has or which may hereafter have a State grain-inspection department established by the laws of such State the Secretary of Agriculture shall issue licenses to the persons authorized and employed to inspect and grade grain under the laws of such State, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Agricultural appropriation bill (H. R. 12717), which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

Mr. SMOOT submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $100,000 to enable the Secretary of the Interior to investigate the existence of artesian water and other underground water supplies suitable for irrigation in the arid and semiarid regions by boring wells, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Agricultural appropriation bill (H. R. 12717), which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment providing that the parcel of ground west of Ashmead Place and between it and Rock Creek, and the parcel of ground west of Twentieth Street NW., and between it and Rock Creek, be included as a part of the connecting parkway between Potomac Park, Zoological Park, and Rock Creek Park, intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill (H. R. 15774), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SAULSBURY submitted an amendment proposing to include Philadelphia, Pa., Camden, N. J., and Wilmington, Del., in the list for specific plans for improvements of the harbors and connecting channels and for the defense of harbors, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill (H. R. 15947), which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

Mr. GRONNA submitted an amendment providing that no inspector or deputy inspector licensed by the Secretary of Agriculture to inspect or supervise the grading of grain shall, during his term of service, be interested, directly or indirectly, in the handling, storing, shipping, purchasing, or selling of grain, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Agricultural appropriation bill (H. R. 12717), which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

Mr. THOMPSON submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $10,000 for the development and improvement of American strains of sugar-beet seed and for the establishment of a permanent sugar-beet-seed industry in the United States, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Agricultural appropriation bill (H. R. 12717), which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. PITTMAN submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $200,000 for the purchase and maintenance of stallions for the production of horses for agricultural and military purposes, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Agricultural appropriation bill (H. R. 12717), which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were each read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

H. R. 3673. An act to establish a term of the United States circuit court of appeals at Asheville, N. C.; and

H. R. 11148. An act transferring the counties of Osage and Pawnee from the western judicial district of the United States court in the State of Oklahoma to the eastern judicial district of said court in said State for judicial purposes.

RECESS.

Mr. GORE. I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock Monday morning.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m., Saturday, July 1, 1916), the Senate took a recess until Monday, July 3, 1915, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, July 1, 1916.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou whose sacred influence has guided us and whose strong right arm has upheld us as a Nation through all the vicissitudes of the past, forsake us not, we beseech Thee, in the trying ordeals through which we are now passing, but let Thy spirit be in us, that we may be guided to a happy and peaceful solution of all the problems which confront us to the betterment of all mankind, and we will ascribe all praise to Thee, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing the speech delivered by the President before the Press Club in New York on yesterday.

COMPENSATION TO CERTAIN FAMILIES OF THE DRAFTED FORCES OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill H. R. 16734, with committee amendment, together with an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill H. R. 16734, reading into it the committee amendment and also the amendment which he sends up. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 16734) to pay to certain families of the men of the drafted forces of the United States a sum of money for their maintenance during the term of service of such drafted men in the service of the United States.

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $2,000,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, for the support of, at a cost of not more than $50 per month, or so much of said amount as the Secretary of War may deem necessary, and not more than such enlisted man has been contributing monthly to the support of his family at the time of his being drafted, the family of each enlisted man of the National Guard called or drafted into the service of the United States until his discharge from such service, which family during the term of service of such enlisted man has no other income, except the pay of such enlisted man, adequate for the support of said family: Provided, That the action of the Secretary of War in all cases provided for in this act shall be final, and no right to prosecute a suit in the Court of Claims or in any other court of the United States against the Government of the United States shall accrue to such enlisted man, or to any member of the family of any such enlisted man, by virtue of the passage of this act: Provided further, That this act shall not apply to any such enlisted man called or drafted into the service of the United States who shall marry after the 1st day of July, 1916; and the word "family" shall include only wife, children, and dependent mothers.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the word "or" ought to be inserted in line 8, at the beginning of the committee amendment, so it would read, "$50 per month or so much of said amount."

Mr. HAY. I think that the gentleman is correct. I ask the Clerk to insert the word "or."

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the word "month," in line 8, the word "or."

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if the age of children ought not to be specified, not over 16 or 15 years of age. Suppose a child is 20 years old, a young man, abundantly able to work. I would like to suggest that the age limit ought to be specified in there.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I will state to the gentleman from Indiana that this provides for dependents wholly in the discretion of the Secretary of War, and I hardly think he would authorize the payment of any of this money to children who are supporting themselves or who are able to support themselves.

Mr. CULLOP. The word "dependent" would not altogether excuse one who is well able to work not under 21, because the obligation of parent would exist there. I make this suggestion to the chairman for his consideration at least.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DUPRÉ. May I inquire whether under this proceeding under suspension of the rules there will be a possibility to have a separate vote on the amendments reported by the committee?

The SPEAKER. No; there will not.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I want to ask the gentleman from Virginia if it could not be possible for him to obtain unanimous consent that would permit us to operate under some proceeding of the House that will allow some of us, who think the committee amendment striking out the provision for discharge ought to be tested in the House, to make a motion.

Mr. HAY. So far as I am personally concerned, I would be very glad to have the House discuss the whole proposition under the five-minute rule, and if the gentleman will ask unanimous consent I will not object.

The SPEAKER. Unanimous consent for what?

Mr. DUPRÉ. I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be considered under the five-minute rule.

The SPEAKER. Yes; but this is under suspension of the rules.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I am trying to avoid that. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] says he would have no objection to its being considered in that way, so that an opportunity may be afforded to Members of the House to express their views on this amendment.

The SPEAKER. They have 20 minutes in which to express their views.

Mr. DUPRÉ. But they can not register their views unless they vote against the whole bill, as I understand the rule.

The SPEAKER. All the Chair knows is that the gentleman from Virginia moves to suspend the rules and pass this bill. Is a second demanded?

Mr. SMALL. I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. SMALL. I am.

Mr. HAY. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered. Is there objection to the request that a second be considered as ordered? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I ask unanimous consent that an opportunity be given to vote as a separate proposition on the amendment offered by the committee striking out the provision in regard to the discharge of enlisted men under certain conditions.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Virginia wishes to modify the bill to that extent, he can make a motion to do so, but the House can not vote piecemeal on a bill under suspension of the rules.

Mr. HAY. "The gentleman from Virginia" is opposed to the provision that the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DUPRÉ] wants to put into the bill.

Mr. DUPRÉ. But the gentleman is not opposed to opportunity being given the House to pass upon it?

Mr. HAY. No.

Mr. MANN. The regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded, and the regular order is that the gentleman from Virginia has 20 minutes and the gentleman from North Carolina has 20 minutes.

Mr. RAKER rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from California rise?

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HAY. I can not yield out of my time.

Mr. RAKER. I think there will be no objection. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that I may proceed for two minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, was a second dispensed with?

The SPEAKER. Yes; a second was dispensed with, and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I do not think it necessary to consume the time of the House in advocating this resolution, which has already been passed upon by the House without a dissenting vote.

I desire to ask unanimous consent to put into the RECORD a statement of the laws of other countries with regard to giving aid to dependents of soldiers. These countries include Austria-Hungary, Belgium, France, Germany, Great Britain, Italy, Roumania, Russia, Sweden, and Switzerland.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HAY. Under the leave to extend remarks, I state that I have been requested by Mr. LITTLEPAGE and Mr. NEELY, of West Virginia, to state that they were unavoidably absent and were in favor of this bill.

The SPEAKER. There is no objection about it.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I thought the gentleman asked unanimous consent to insert a statement in the RECORD.

Mr. HAY. I asked unanimous consent to incorporate a statement of the laws referred to in my remarks.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Are they not the same statements, or composed of the same extracts, as were printed in the Senate proceedings a day or two ago?

Mr. HAY. I do not know.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. If so, I do not see any use in printing them over again. There is no use in doing it if they are already in the Senate proceedings; but I do not object, nor am I opposed to this proposition.

Mr. MANN. Will not the gentleman from Virginia ask unanimous consent that Members may have leave to print on this bill within five legislative days?

Mr. HAY. Yes. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that all Members may have leave to print remarks on this bill within five legislative days.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] asks unanimous consent that all gentlemen shall have the privilege of printing remarks in the RECORD for five legislative days on this bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAY. Now, Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HAMILL].

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. HAY. I can not yield.

Mr. DYER. I wanted to ask the gentleman if his request to print these laws has not been granted?

Mr. HAY. I supposed it was.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Allowances to the families of soldiers in European countries.

(Translated from Bulletin de la Statistique générale de la France T. IV, 1914–15, pp. 237–241, 365–367.)

AUSTRIA-HUNGARY.

I. AUSTRIA.

Under the act of December 26, 1912, the parents and relatives (wife, legitimate children, father, mother, father and mother in law, brothers and sisters, illegitimate mother and children) of a soldier called to the colors in case of mobilization are entitled to an allowance, provided they are dependent for their living on the soldier's work. The rate of such allowance is fixed and announced every year in advance.

In time of peace the parents and relatives (wife, legitimate and illegitimate children, father, mother, brothers, and sisters) of a soldier recalled to the colors for a drill period are entitled, if they are dependent for their living on the soldier's work, to an allowance which is fixed for all the parents and relatives together at 50 per cent of the ordinary pay of a day laborer in the place of residence of the soldier.

II. HUNGARY.

The granting of allowances to the destitute families of soldiers recalled to the colors is governed by the act of June 10, 1882. A law similar to the Austrian law of December 26, 1912, was contemplated in 1913.

BELGIUM.

I. IN TIME OF PEACE.

Under the act of March 21, 1902, personal service as militiaman entitled one to a monthly allowance of 25 francs in the infantry, 30 francs in the cavalry; the allowance is 30 francs for all short-term volunteers and 35 francs for long-term volunteers. Fifteen francs a month is deducted from this allowance, if necessary, to be paid to the father and mother (or grandparents, as the case may be); to the wife, if the soldier is married; to the person who cares for the children, if the soldier is a widower with children.

II. IN CASE OF MOBILIZATION.

Soldiers recalled to the colors under mobilization orders receive the allowance which was granted to them for effective service. When the mobilized soldier is the head of a family he receives 0.50 francs a day for one child and 1 franc for several children. Such allowance is paid to his wife or to the person who cares for the children.

FRANCE.

I. IN TIME OF PEACE.

Under section 12 of the act of August 7, 1913, the families of persons serving either with the army or the navy who, before being called, were actually the indispensable breadwinners of their families are, upon application, entitled to a daily State allowance of 1.25 francs a day, increased by 0.50 franc for every child under the age of 16 years who is dependent on the breadwinner of the family.

II. IN TIME OF WAR.

According to the act of August 5, 1914, such allowance shall be paid out by the State for the whole duration of the war, irrespective of the position of the person called or recalled to the colors.

GERMANY.

I. IN TIME OF PEACE.

Under the act of May 10, 1892, assistance is granted upon application to the families of soldiers called to the colors for a period of instruction as follows:

(a) For the wives, 30 per cent of the local salary of the male adult workmen at the place of residence of the men called. Such local salary is officially determined with a view to insurance against accident.

(b) For each of the other persons entitled to assistance (children, parents and grandparents, brothers and sisters, if dependent on the man called), 10 per cent of such salary.

In addition a special allowance is granted to the families having or having had three sons in the army, or in the navy; these families receive an allowance of 240 marks a year every time a new son is called to active service.

II. IN TIME OF WAR.

The act of February 28, 1888, as amended August 4, 1914, governs allowances to the destitute families of the men of the reserve, of the landwehr, of the ersatzreserve, of the reserve of the navy and of the landsturm.

The following persons are entitled to allowances:

(a) The wife of a soldier and his children under 15 years of age.

(b) His children above 15, his parents, brothers, and sisters; but only if dependent on the soldier and destitute as a result of his incorporation.

(c) His illegitimate children, if the soldier is under the acknowledged obligation, as their father, to provide for them. Subject to the conditions stated under letter (b), the parents of the wife, as well as her children from a former marriage, may be granted assistance. More distant relatives and wives separated from their husbands are not entitled to allowances.

The minimum allowance is: For the wife, 9 marks a month from May to October, 12 marks a month from November to April; for each child or person designated above letters (b) and (c), 6 marks a month.

For the money allowance may be substituted in part a supply of breadstuffs, potatoes, fuel, etc., which is payable in advance, semimonthly. Payments are made by the Lieferungsverbande (combines for furnishing provisions), created in pursuance of the act of June 13, 1873, on military requisitions, which are refunded out of the Imperial treasury. The minimum allowance above determined is granted regardless of the relief which may be extended by private associations or persons.

The minimum allowance paid by local administrations and refunded by the Empire has been increased and completed by rent allowances, relief in kind, etc., in certain cities.

III. MATERNITY BENEFIT.

The ordinance of December 3, 1914, grants for the duration of the war a maternity benefit to any woman whose husband—

1. Performs military, sanitary, or other analogous service, or is prevented by death, injury, sickness, or captivity from continuing to render such service or from exercising a profession.

2. Was insured against sickness under the Imperial insurance code, or through a miners' sick fund, for at least 26 weeks during the 12 months preceding his departure to the colors or for at least 6 weeks immediately preceding such departure.

The maternity benefit consists of—

1. A cash payment of 25 marks to cover the expenses of the confinement.

2. An allowance of 1 mark a day, including Sundays and holidays, for a period of 8 weeks, not less than 6 of which shall fall after delivery.

3. A sum of 10 marks for the services of a midwife, or for medical attendance, should such be necessitated by pregnancy troubles.

4. In the case of women who nurse their infants, a nursing allowance of one-half mark a day, including Sundays and holidays, for a period of 12 weeks after delivery.

The ordinance of April 23, 1915, has extended the maternity benefit to women in destitute circumstances. Women shall be considered as such—

1. If during the year, or tax-assessment year, preceding the entry into the service, the combined incomes of the woman and her husband did not exceed 2,500 marks.

2. If the income remaining to the woman after the husband's departure does not exceed 1,500 marks for her own benefit, nor 250 marks for the benefit of each child under the age of 15 years.

GREAT BRITAIN.

I. ARMY.

The "allowance of the army" comprises "separation allowances to families" in time of peace as in time of war.

The rates have been so increased, beginning with October 1, 1914, that the total weekly income from such allowance and from the minimum allotment which the married soldier must make from his pay is as follows:

a. For the wife of a private or corporal, 12s. 6d. and 2s. 6d. for each of the three first children and 2s. for each other child.

b. For the wife of a noncommissioned officer, the weekly allowance varying, according to the grade, from 15s. to 23s., and 3s. for each of three first children and 2s. for each other child.

The extra 3s. 6d. a week is issuable to London families, and the special compensation allowance granted to families on the married establishment will continue to be paid as heretofore.

The separate allowance for motherless children will be at the rate of 3s. a week for each child, with the regulated allotment from the soldier in addition.

II. NAVY.

According to the royal ordinance of October 29, 1914, the weekly separation allowances to families of sailors and marines are:

1. For the wife, 6s., 8s., or 9s., according to the husband's grade.
2. Two shillings for each of the two first children.
3. One shilling for each of the other children.
4. Motherless children, 3s. each.

The payment in respect of children will be made to boys under 14 and girls under 16 years of age. Families residing within London are entitled to an additional allowance of 3s. 6d. per week.

No separation allowance is paid unless an allotment of at least 20s. a month is declared by the husband.

ITALY.

I. IN TIME OF PEACE.

By virtue of a ministerial order of 1899, modified in 1907 (Atto. No. 118 del 3 uglio 1907, Giornale militare ufficiale), relief is extended to the destitute families of soldiers recalled to the colors for drilling, the restoration of public order, or any other cause.

The following persons are entitled to relief: The wife and the legitimate or recognized children under 12 years of age, or the children above that age whose incapacity to do any profitable work is evidenced by a medical certificate.

The daily allowance is 0.50 franc for the mother, 0.25 franc for each child in the capitals of Provinces or districts, and is reduced, respectively, to 0.40 franc and 0.20 franc in other communes.

As regards the destitute families of men called to the colors under conscription, the ministerial circular of November 8, 1911, No. 1340, grants, subject to certain conditions, a monthly allowance of 15 lire to the family of a married soldier.

For these two categories of allowances the appropriation asked for under item 80 of the army budget for 1913–14 was 800,000 lire.

II. IN TIME OF WAR OR MOBILIZATION.

Prior to 1914 there existed no special provisions, and the rules applicable to the soldiers recalled to the colors had necessarily to be applied. At the time of the war with Turkey the council of ministers decided on January 16, 1912, to double the amount of the daily allowances to the destitute families of recalled soldiers (classes of 1888 and 1889), and that in cases particularly worthy of interest a daily allowance of 1 lire could be granted to the father and mother of the unmarried recalled soldiers. (War ministry circular of Jan. 19.)

The royal decree of September 20, 1914, determines the daily allowance to be granted to the destitute families of soldiers recalled to the colors, as follows:

(a) 1.70 lire for the wife and 1.35 lire for each child under 12 years of age (or above 12 if unable to work), residing in the capital of a Province or district.

(b) 1.60 and 1.30 lire if they reside elsewhere.

(c) The destitute father and mother over 60 years of age dependent on an unmarried soldier recalled to the colors receive the same allowance as the wife, when one parent only is concerned. The father and mother who both fulfill the aforesaid conditions receive in all 1.10 lire in the capital of a Province or district, 1 lira elsewhere.

ROUMANIA.

The act of December 23, 1914 (January 5, 1915), authorizing the adoption of exceptional measures provides for an allowance to families of mobilized soldiers.

Under section 22, the State grants to the families of mobilized soldiers (privates or nocommissioned officers), from the day of mobilization to the fifteenth day following the declaration of a state of peace, an allowance of:

Fifteen francs a month per family in rural communes.

Twenty francs a month per family in urban communes.

In addition, families may receive assistance in the form of work to perform, issues of food and other articles of first necessity, medical relief, care of children in homes and infant asylums; they may even obtain a supplementary money allowance. There is created for this purpose a foundation called the "Fighters' family," with the privileges of a corporation, managed by a central committee established at Bucharest and by departmental and communal committees.

Under section 20 of the act, merchants and manufacturers whose establishments remain open during mobilization, who employ more than five workmen or clerks, either married or having a family dependent on them, who have been not less than two years in their service, are obliged to pay to such workmen or clerks, as long as mobilization lasts, one-half of their salary, as assistance extended to the family of the mobilized soldier. Such workmen or clerks have necessarily no right to an allowance from the Government.

Other sections deal with the assignments of pay to the families of officers and reenlisted men of the active army, officers of the reserve, and functionaries entitled to their salaries during mobilization.

RUSSIA.

The ordinance of June 25 (July 8, 1912) governs the conditions under which allowances are granted to soldiers of inferior rank and to their families (pensions to soldiers, widows, and orphans, relief, etc.).

An allowance is granted to the wife and children of a soldier of inferior rank in active service in the army or navy, in the first or second reserve; to his parents, grandparents, brothers, and sisters, if they are dependent upon his work.

Such persons are entitled to a maintenance grant in kind, corresponding to at least 1 pound and 28 pounds of flour, 10 pounds of groats, 4 pounds of salt, and 1 pound of hempseed oil per month and per person.

Children below 15 years of age are entitled to one-half of such grant, children above 17 years of age are not entitled to an allowance, unless incapable of work; married daughters are likewise excluded therefrom.

The value of the provisions comprised in the food allowances is fixed by the competent provincial authorities after the commencement of hostilities, and is revised on the 1st of September each year, and whenever there occurs a notable change in the prices of provisions.

According to an ordinance of the council of ministers of August 9 (22), 1914, the families of salaried persons called to the colors receive: The whole salary for the wife and more than five children, three-fourths of the salary for the wife and four or five children, two-thirds of the salary for the wife and no more than three children, one-half of the salary for the wife alone, one-third of the salary if the family consists of parents or grandparents or brothers and sisters dependent upon the mobilized soldier.

According to the same ordinance the families of workmen, salaried persons, and servants in Government establishments, factories, shops, and other similar undertakings, receive in addition to the food allowances above mentioned: One-half of the salary for the wife and more than three children, one-third of the salary for the wife and no more than three children, one-fourth of the salary for the wife alone.

In both cases, when in addition to the mobilized soldier's wife and own children, the family includes also parents or grandparents or brothers and sisters, each one of them is considered as a child.

SWEDEN.

I. IN TIME OF PEACE.

Assistance to the destitute families of soldiers called to the colors is governed by the royal ordinance of June 1, 1912, as amended September 17, 1914.

The amount of the allowance is fixed as follows for each day of service:

	Öre.
For the wife able to work and 1 child	75
For the wife able to work and no more than 2 children	100
For the wife whose capacity for work is limited	75
For the wife whose capacity for work is limited and 1 child	100
For the wife whose capacity for work is limited and no more than 2 children	125
For 1 child whose father is divorced or is a widower	75
For 2 children or more whose father is divorced or is a widower	100

Able-bodied wives without children receive no allowance.

The allowance is increased by 40 per cent when the soldier is on drilling periods of the reserve or of the landsturm.

Soldiers must contribute to the allowance to which their wives and children are entitled by paying such portion of their pay as exceeds 20 öre a day.

II. IN CASE OF MOBILIZATION.

The royal ordinance of August 13, 1914, governs the granting of allowances during all the time that a soldier is called in defense of the Kingdom or is retained for this purpose after his term of service in time of peace has expired. His family, in needy circumstances, receives from the Government an allowance of 1 crown per day, as well as an additional sum of 25 öre per day for each child under 15 years of age.

SWITZERLAND.

The ordinance of January 21, 1910, governs the granting of relief to families in destitute circumstances owing to their breadwinners serving in the army.

The wife and children of a soldier and the parents or relatives he supports or who are members of his household are entitled to allowances. They must be proportioned to the needs of the family and not exceed the average daily pay of the soldier, after deduction of an appropriate sum (1 franc, for instance) for his personal needs. For the purpose of determining such allowances the social position, number, age, and earning capacity of the entitled persons must be taken into account.

The daily allowance can not exceed 2 francs for the wife and 0.70 franc per child in cities; 1.50 francs for the wife and 0.50 franc per child in the country.

The allowances are paid by the communes; the cost is borne for three-quarters by the confederation and for one-quarter by the canton.

RÉSUMÉ.

In Great Britain the Government allowance to families is added by right to the allotment which soldiers or sailors must make from their pay.

In Belgium the previous deduction from the pay of militiamen is paid to the parents irrespective of their circumstances.

In other countries where military service is compulsory, allowances are granted only to families in destitute circumstances.

A. BERNARD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HAMILL] is recognized.

Mr. HAMILL. It is a surprising thing that any opposition should be voiced against this bill or that any argument should be deemed necessary to bring about its enactment. To the ordinary American sense of fairness the proposition is so clear; it is so self-evident in its justice, propriety, and moderation as to call forth immediate and instinctive approval.

The theme of all the complaints we have heard in opposition simmers down to this statement, that it would, first of all, impose an unwise demand upon the Treasury at the present time, and that, furthermore, it would establish a practice which would cause these payments to be continued under the guise of pensions in the future. As to the last objection, I am sure we can safely refer that matter to be disposed of at the sessions of Congress which will come after us. They will deal then better than we can now with the situation if it arises. We need not anticipate and legislate with regard to a contingency which may or may not actually happen. At best it is only a speculation that it will happen.

Those guardians of our money vaults who condemn this appropriation because of cost should exercise discrimination and consider the purpose of it. This is one of the legitimate expenses of national defense. It is, after all, one of the lightest obligations the people are called upon to assume. To uphold the honor of our flag and to preserve our territory inviolate from the footsteps of the bandit and the spoiler may demand the expenditure not only of treasure but of life as well.

A few weeks ago I was one of the throng that lined the sidewalk to see the regiment of my home city marching out to its mobilization camp. The long lines of well-drilled guardsmen in their uniforms and accouterments were followed by files of youths who still wore civilian dress—new recruits who had enlisted a day or two before.

It was a thrilling sight, and the applause of the multitude broke forth in successive peals all along the route. It was a part of the great scene the American people were witnessing in every section of the country. It was the minutemen of 1916 answering in the spirit of 1776 the summons of the President. [Applause.]

Had the opponents of this bill been spectators of any of these scenes, I have no doubt they would have rent the sky with their cheers of encouragement. And such encouragement is commendable, so far as it goes; but the defect in it is that it does not go deep enough. It reaches only to the lungs, whereas it ought to extend deeper and reach the pocket as well.

Several of these men whom I personally know relinquished positions in the post office paying not less than $100 a month. They are men with families, whose support is derived solely from their salaries. Most of the other soldiers had abandoned good positions in civil life, and were in a similar predicament.

Now, what about the loved ones these men have left behind? What about the true-hearted mothers and sisters and daughters and wives who encouraged them to go forth under the flag, who greeted them possibly for the last time, and who may yet be called upon to mourn the loss of their unreturning brave?

There is neither excuse nor argument for withholding this appropriation. The great business houses of the country have decided to hold on their pay rolls at full salary the men who have gone to the front. These corporations who in theory of law own no soul have demonstrated by their generosity that they do possess a heart. The Government can not do less. The American people will not tolerate less. The overwhelming demand of the American people is for the passage of this bill. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, when the so-called drafting bill was before this House several days ago I voted for it, although it contained the substance of this bill. I did so because of the exigency which existed for the drafting of the National Guard into the regular service. But now that we have this question concretely presented in a separate bill, I feel free to voice my opposition to it and to express the reasons which actuate me.

I realize full well the fine sentiment behind the members of this House who favor this bill. I realize the force of their appeals to patriotism; but I insist that we should also appeal to the cool, sober judgment of ourselves and of the American people, and that this bill is not in the interest of real patriotism.

Mr. Speaker, this bill involves an unwarranted and unnecessary expenditure. No man can prophesy the amount which will be ultimately involved in it, even as applicable to the National Guard. In the debate at the other end of the Capitol it was said that from 10 to 25 per cent of the members of the Guard would make application under such a law for the support of their families. If you say 10 per cent, 10,000 out of the 100,000 men that it is supposed the National Guard will furnish, you have $6,000,000 annually required to support their families under the provisions of such a law. When the bill was originally here $1,000,000 was sought to be appropriated. Now, for some reason not explained by the committee, it has been increased to $2,000,000. I ask in all sincerity, why has it been increased? What is the basis upon which the increase was made? And can any Member say that the amount named in this bill is sufficient for the purpose?

Mr. HAY. Does the gentleman want an answer to that?

Mr. SMALL. I will yield.

Mr. HAY. The reason it was increased was because after making careful inquiry the committee thought that this $2,000,000 would be amply sufficient until the meeting of the next session of Congress.

Mr. SMALL. I will come to that part of it upon another phase of this question in a moment.

This bill does not provide for the Regular Army. I know it will be said that the Regular Army is composed of men who were enlisted without the burden and expense of a family upon them. Whether that is literally true or not I do not know; but I have, and I doubt not every Member of this House has, from time to time received applications from the families of men in the Regular Army asking for their discharge because the presence of the soldier was necessary for their support. And I take it there are instances—how numerous I do not know—in the Regular Army where, if this principle is to be applied, it ought to be applied to them. The result of any such legislation as this would be the demoralization and the disorganization of the Regular Army.

Some weeks ago we passed a bill increasing the Regular Army by 20,000 men, calling for volunteers to enlist. It has been stated, and I presume authoritatively, that up to this time less than 12,000 of the 20,000 men asked for have enlisted, although strenuous efforts have been made to secure them. Why was it? I have not the time or the inclination to go into the reasons for it, but I do insist that such legislation as this will not have a tendency to create a disposition upon the part of our citizens to enlist in the Regular Army, and that it will increase many fold the difficulties of securing sufficient enlistments to make up the larger Army which has been authorized in the national-defense act. This bill does not provide for volunteers. Gentlemen may say, "If volunteers are necessary, we will meet that question when we reach it"; but I contend that it ought to be reached now, that this is the time to perfect such legislation as will be applicable to every phase of this necessity which is said to exist, and which undoubtedly in time of war will exist.

Mr. MEEKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMALL. For a question.

Mr. MEEKER. What suggestion has the gentleman to offer for the caring for these needy families? If this is not done, how would you take care of them?

Mr. SMALL. I will endeaver to answer the gentleman directly. Further, this bill does not provide for the family of a soldier killed in action. We are seeking here to provide support for families——

Mr. HAY. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. SMALL. Certainly.

Mr. HAY. The drafting resolution which was passed the other day provided for that.

Mr. SMALL. How much did it provide?

Mr. HAY. The pension law.

Mr. SMALL. Twelve dollars a month is the maximum, is it not?

Mr. HAY. That depends. I do not know. I am not sufficiently familiar with the pension law.

Mr. SMALL. We are seeking to provide a maximum of $50 a month for the support of families of the National Guard actively engaged in the service; but if they shall surrender their lives in the service of their country, then they are relegated to the general pension law, and, as I understand, the maximum amount which the family can receive under such circumstances is $12 a month. That is another illustration of the inconsistency of this proposed law.

Mr. DUPRÉ. The gentleman recognizes that that pension is for the remainder of the widow's life, while it is contemplated that this will be only during the service in this particular emergency.

Mr. SMALL. That is obvious in itself. Mr. Speaker, this legislation has not been requested by the National Guard, although the National Guard have been neither timid nor modest in asking for legislation which they desired of Congress. They were in evidence when we were framing the national defense act, and I was in sympathy with them; but they made known their wishes at that time, and I take it if any such exigency existed as would make this law necessary, there would have been evidence of some demand on the part of the National Guard for this legislation.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMALL. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GORDON. The law authorizing the President to draft these men into the Army had not yet been passed nor even considered at the time the national defense act was passed.

Mr. SMALL. Oh, the gentleman is wrong about that.

Mr. RUBEY. Is not the very fact that the National Guard have not asked for this legislation the strongest argument in favor of it?

Mr. SMALL. It would not do to apply that formula to legislation generally in the House. How much time have I consumed, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. Ten minutes.

Mr. SMALL. I want to hurry along. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON] is wrong with regard to the enlistment of the National Guard. In the Dick bill, which we passed in the Fifty-seventh Congress in 1901 and 1902—I have not time to look up the date, but I have the bill before me—the President was given specific authority to draft the National Guard into the service, and the National Guard were not content with that.

But the Dick bill was amended in 1908, upon the insistence of the National Guard, to the effect that the National Guard should be first called to the service, ahead even of the volunteers. So that we have had for more than 10 years a statute authorizing the President to draft into the service the National Guard of the States.

Mr. HAY. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. SMALL. Yes.

Mr. HAY. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that the Attorney General declared that act to be unconstitutional?

Mr. SMALL. The Attorney General did not hold it to be unconstitutional except in this respect: He held that the President was not authorized to draft them into the service outside of continental United States. That was the opinion of the Attorney General, agreed to by the Judge Advocate General. With the exception of that construction of the act the President has had authority since the enactment of the Dick bill, and by the amendment of 1908, to draft the National Guard into regular service in time of emergency.

Mr. QUIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMALL. Yes.

Mr. QUIN. Have we not authority under the present act, passed on the 3d of June, to take the National Guard to Chapultepec or to Mexico City?

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, there is no precedent that I know of for this legislation. I am willing to admit that when it is necessary for the national defense that we should wage a war, a war of duration and of magnitude, that provision ought to be made, some equitable, fair provision, for the support of the dependent families of soldiers. But while there is no precedent for this, while it may be necessary in time of emergency, yet it ought to be well-considered legislation.

Let me point out some evidences familiar to the House that this bill has not been considered. It was brought in the other day with an appropriation of $1,000,000, with no provision for the discharge of enlisted men in the guard who had dependent families. The chairman on yesterday introduced a bill increasing it to $2,000,000, and continuing a provision by which men in the National Guard with dependent families might be discharged.

But the committee, in considering that bill, struck out the provision for the discharge of soldiers with dependent families, and although that provision was in the bill introduced by the chairman, yet the chairman to-day says he is opposed to it. And, after, as we may suppose, careful deliberation on the part of the committee drawing the bill of yesterday, to-day even we have committee amendments offered, amendments suggested by Members of the House which are accepted by the members of the committee—all indicating that this is half-baked legislation and does not properly meet such an exigency as it is intended to meet.

This bill leaves its administration to the War Department. We have had a demand from the Secretary of War which came to us a few days ago for additional appropriations for increase of clerical force, and now we are adding to the burdens of that department by the administration of this law. If it is to be passed at all the administration ought to be imposed on the Bureau of Pensions. Let them find the facts and let them reach conclusions, and, if necessary, leave the final approval with the War Department.

Mr. Speaker, the theory of this bill is based on compensation for service. I say deliberately, based on the glorious history of our own country and of every other country whose people have waged righteous and defensive wars, that compensation and patriotism do not go together. In the great Civil War, so far as the South was concerned, men upon both sides admitted the high principles which actuated the soldiers of the South, men on both sides admit the high patriotism which actuated those who fought for the preservation of the Union. That was patriotism with no thought of compensation behind it. Every war which we have fought, the men who stood by the flag and who exemplified the courage and high type of American citizenship, were actuated, not by thought of compensation, but by the high patriotic impulses. You can not mix the two together.

This country, through Congress, has been generous and liberal to the volunteers of the Civil War who fought for the Union. As a Southern man I have always voted for every piece of legislation which was brought in here, though some times reluctantly, for any increase of pension or recognition of those soldiers, but who will stand up to-day and contend that the type of patriotism of the country, of the sons from which these soldiers came has been heightened or increased by this liberality on the part of the Government?

Upon the contrary, the abuses which have crept into the administration of the pension law have evoked criticism from some of the most patriotic men of the country.

Mr. Speaker, these men who enlisted in the National Guard volunteered for service, and not for dress parade. Is there any member of that Guard or any Member of this House who will intimate that any member who enlisted in the National Guard did not enlist for actual service in time of war if this country demanded it? And yet it is said of them that they did not expect to serve in actual war, and that we must enact this half-baked legislation, which, I insist, is not in the interest of real patriotism nor does it make for the welfare of the Republic.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMALL. Yes.

Mr. DYER. Would the gentleman be in favor of dependent families to be covered by this legislation being the recipients of the bounty and charity of the various cities and communities, or does he think that the Government owes the men who are serving the duty of looking after the people who are so unfortunate as to have no support?

Mr. SMALL. The gentleman will not induce me to commit myself to any suggestion that these families ought not to be cared for. I do insist that service in our Army, whether it be the Regular Army, the National Guard, or the Volunteer Army, must be based on the highest patriotic impulses of a true American citizen and not upon the idea of compensation. If legislation is necessary at this time for the support of dependent families of soldiers we should so draft and frame a law that it shall meet every contingency in the future, so that the dependent families may have whatever is right and proper on the part of the Government.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMALL. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. Does the gentleman believe that the patriotism of one who enlists is affected if the General Government takes care of his family during the time he is engaged in the service?

Mr. SMALL. I will answer that question by saying that there is such a thing as pauperizing a citizen, chilling his patriotism with the thought of compensation.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. STEDMAN]. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. STEDMAN. Mr. Speaker, as I listened to the discussion of the bill under consideration by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL], in which State both he and I had the good fortune to be born and reared, events which happened in that State more than 50 years ago have crowded thick and fast upon my memory. The unhappy Civil War was raging, and a supreme effort was being made by the people of North Carolina, directed by the consummate ability of their great war governor, Zebulon B. Vance, to provide for the comfort and efficiency of the North Carolina soldiers in the army of northern Virginia. How well that work was done is recorded in history. That was not all. Under the directions of this great governor, the people of North Carolina bestowed the same care and labor and effort to take care of the women and children and the helpless families of Confederate soldiers in North Carolina that they bestowed upon the soldiers who went to the battle field. [Applause.]

The soldiers of North Carolina who slept upon the battle fields of northern Virginia and dreamed at night as they looked up at the stars of those they loved at home rested calmly, for they knew that their helpless families who were left at home would be cared for by the great State which is represented in part by the gentleman and myself. That was not all, Mr. Speaker. There were many hundred Federal prisoners in Salisbury, N. C., in prison. From the depots of supplies which were furnished the families of soldiers in the Confederate Army those wives and children, the people left at home, at the request of the governor of North Carolina, took a part of their substance and carried it to the prison at Salisbury, did it constantly, and supplied the necessities of the Union soldiers, which were made inevitable by the result of the great Civil War. [Applause.]

Can it be possible that this great Government, standing for courage, for heroism, for advanced civilization in every civilized land, is unwilling to provide for its own soldiers, members of the National Guard, drafted on a few days' notice into the Regular Army, with the same comfort and care and kindness that the State of North Carolina bestowed upon its soldiers when it sent them to the Army of Northern Virginia more than 50 years ago? I have thought that if any Member of this House had a doubt as to how he should vote, if he would read the history of North Carolina, from which my friend comes and which I know full well, and then would go out to Statuary Hall and look at the bronze image of that great man who directed the efforts in behalf of humanity, he would discard all doubt and come back here and vote for this bill with joy, with delight, and with enthusiasm. [Applause.]

My heart prompts me to say just one word about the National Guard. I can not speak of the National Guard throughout the country at large, but I can speak for the National Guard of North Carolina, and I know all about that guard. I have seen some criticism with reference to the National Guard generally, comparing it with the Regular Army. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that the National Guard of North Carolina, and I hope what I say is not improper or inappropriate, is equal, man for man, to any battalion of troops in the Regular Army of the United States, it matters not from which section of the country they come. [Applause.] That National Guard is faithful in its allegiance to this country. It is ready to carry the flag as far to the front as any troops in the Regular Army, and it will return that flag without tarnish and blemish when the war is ended to the people who sent them to the battle field. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five minutes.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I join in that.

The SPEAKER. The time is limited under the rule to 40 minutes.

Mr. STEDMAN. I ask for two minutes additional.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. Several gentlemen ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from North Carolina may proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will not ask that. We have some other business that we ought to attend to.

Mr. STEDMAN. Two minutes is all I desire.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman takes two minutes, other gentlemen will want the same privilege accorded them.

Mr. RAKER. As the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] is going to yield two minutes to me, I will relinquish it in favor of the gentleman from North Carolina. [Applause.]

Mr. HAY. Then, Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes more to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. STEDMAN. Mr. Speaker, the sentiment expressed here so eloquently by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] in discussing this same subject a day or two ago found a responsive echo in my heart. I desire now to read two extracts from a message sent by Gov. Craig of North Carolina to the President of the United States on last Wednesday, which I find in a North Carolina paper this morning:

> The National Guard of North Carolina is ready to obey the orders of the President of the United States and volunteer to go into Mexico, or elsewhere, as they may be ordered, regardless of the technical provisions of the Army reorganization bill. * * * Every man, from the brigade commander down to the private in the ranks, is ready to sign any enlistment volunteering his services to the United States anywhere and at any time.

This bill ought to be passed enthusiastically, without a dissenting voice. [Applause.]

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. Speaker, I want for a few moments to call attention to the remarkable record just established by Anderson County, S. C., which is in the congressional district that I have the honor to represent.

According to the census of 1910, Anderson County had a population of 69,568, of whom 43,232 are white. Since the President issued his call for the mobilization of the militia, Anderson County has sent into camp three companies of Infantry, a machine-gun company, and a regimental band—one of the best that I ever heard, by the way—all recruited to the required strength. On top of this another company has been organized and will be ready to go forward if there should be a call for volunteers. In other words, in a county of less than 45,000 white population, approximately 500 young men have responded to the call of their country to duty. This is a remarkable record. I am sure that I am safe in the assertion that no other county of equal population in the United States has made a record that comes anywhere near it.

Practically all of these young men who have volunteered are sons or grandsons of Confederate soldiers, and in looking over the roster of the companies I have noted with pride the names of quite a number of men who served with me in the First South Carolina Regiment in the War with Spain, in 1898.

Anderson County is one of the greatest counties in the United States. Its population is more than 99 per cent native born, and of the purest Anglo-Saxon stock. It is a great county in agriculture, a great county in manufacturing, a great county in civic righteousness, educational progress, and all that goes to make for good citizenship, and it has just shown in the most striking manner possible that it is a great county in patriotism and love of country.

It is a high honor, gentlemen of the House of Representatives, to represent such a constituency in the American Congress. I would be recreant to my duty if I did not make this statement here to-day, so that there may be preserved in the pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, for as long as our civilization shall stand, this slight tribute to the greatness of Anderson County and her splendid people.

This bill is right, and should be passed unanimously, for it is our duty to provide liberally for the dependent ones of our patriotic men who have gone to the front. [Applause.]

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE].

Mr. MCKENZIE. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, a few days ago the Members of this House passed with practical unanimity this identical proposition as an amendment to the bill providing for drafting the National Guard into the Federal service, but forces outside of this House willed that it should be stricken from the bill. I hope that to-day this bill will pass with such an emphatic vote that even those who opposed the other proposition will consent that this measure become a law. I do not know whether it is wisdom to have a military system that permits married men to be enrolled in time of war before the single men are all exhausted, and I have not time now to discuss it; I do not know that the President of the United States has the power to call single men first by draft, and I have not the time to discuss that; but the fact remains that there are many married men in the National Guard in the several States, and they have been drafted into the Federal service by the President. What is the result? They are taken from their usual vocations, many of them remunerative, and put into the Army at $15 a month. Their wives and children and dependent mothers are left at home. What must follow? They must have assistance from some source. I am glad to know that many patriotic men of the country are offering to pay their men full salaries while they are in the service of the country, but should we ask that of them? Many patriotic societies are being organized to assist in the charitable work necessary to provide support for the wives, children, and dependent mothers of the soldiers. Many people are ready to give of their substance to aid them.

But, gentlemen of the House, is this the policy which our Nation should pursue toward the men called to arms as volunteers or drafted into the service? Shall we permit the humiliation not only of the soldier but of his dependent loved ones by refusing to assume the burden of their support while he is in the ranks serving the Nation, but leave it to the charitably inclined people in each community to carry in a little food or perhaps dole out a few dollars to the wife or mother, thus putting them in the class of dependents, and causing a blush to come to the cheeks of the wives and mothers when compelled to accept such charity. Surely many a proud-spirited mother or wife would want before accepting such aid from those who remain at home. More than that, it is wrong to place them in such a position. The soldier who leaves a wife or dependent mother and goes to the front, to do and to die, if necessary, for our common country, has troubles enough to bear without suffering the humiliation of knowing that his loved ones are in need on account of his absence, or compelled to take from the hand of charity the things necessary to sustain life. Is it not enough for the wife or mother to bear, to surrender the son or husband to the service of our country, without having added to their other sad thoughts as the shades of night fall about their abode the thought of food and fuel for the morrow? Surely their sacrifice is sufficient without this unnecessary and cruel requirement. Let us away with all subterfuge, all maudlin talk about patriotism and free service and sacrifice on the part of the soldier. This is a mighty Nation. Rich beyond all measure. Millions are wasted annually in one way and another by unwise and reckless appropriations of the public money, and now shall it be said of us as a nation that when we called into the service of the country men to serve as soldiers, taking them from their walk in life, where they have been permitted to support those dependent upon them, we will not care for their dependent ones? Shame on the Nation that would pursue such a course, and may God grant that it shall never be said of our country.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DUPRÉ].

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Speaker, I, of course, am in favor of this bill. I think it will have a very healthy effect for the Government of the United States to set such an example and that private employers throughout the country, who are already acting very liberally, will be stimulated to continue their patriotic course toward their employees who enlist. I regret the committee has seen fit to strike out that section giving authority to the Secretary of War under certain conditions to permit the discharge of men with dependent families. Such authority ought to be vested in him, because there are exceptional cases where unforeseen contingencies and extreme hardships may arise for which relief should be provided. It is not a reflection on the National Guard to make such a request. Such a privilege will not be abused, but I think some power, some authority, should be given that will make possible release from the service. The Senate has gone on record in its favor and this House should have been given an opportunity to express itself on this subject. [Applause.]

For the benefit of those who think the Secretary of War can now discharge members of the National Guard, even on proper showing, I insert copy of a letter this day received by me from The Adjutant General. According to him, "regardless of the merits of a case, the department has no discretion in the matter." If that be true, then Congress should act, and act quickly:

> WAR DEPARTMENT,
> THE ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
> Washington, June 30, 1916.
> Hon. H. GARLAND DUPRÉ,
> House of Representatives.
> DEAR SIR: In response to your letter of the 28th instant, inclosing three telegrams (returned herewith) relative to ——— ———, for whom it is desired to secure a release from military service or an indefinite leave, I beg leave to advise you as follows:
> The department has received a considerable number of requests for the discharge of members of the National Guard who have been mustered into the service of the United States, and with respect to whom it is claimed that their discharge would be either in the personal interest of the men themselves or in the interest of their dependent families or relatives. The subject has received careful and thorough consideration as to what might be done by the department in the way of granting relief in cases of this kind, and after such consideration the conclusion has been reached that there is no authority in existing law under which men of the class referred to can be released from military service.

You will see, therefore, that regardless of the merits of a case the department has no discretion in the matter and that all requests for discharge in cases such as that of ——— ——— must be denied.

An indefinite furlough can not be granted to an enlisted man.

Regretting that I am unable to advise you favorably in this matter, I remain,

Very respectfully, H. P. MCCAIN,
The Adjutant General.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I will yield one minute to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I believe that those who stay at home in safety ought to provide for the families of those who risk their lives by going to the front. We ought not to make war at the expense of the wives and children [applause] of those who fight for the common honor and rights of us all. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, the greatest commercial association in this world, I believe, is the Chicago Association of Commerce. The great heart of Chicago, speaking through that association, sends this message to Congress:

The Chicago Association of Commerce urges upon Congress the desirability of enacting legislation providing suitable allowances for the dependents of our enlisted men.

JOHN W. O'LEARY, President.

[Applause.]

I am proud of the association and happy of the opportunity to help by contributing my little mite—staying here—to help take care of those dependent on the ones who go to the front. [Applause.]

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. Five minutes.

Mr. HAY. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER].

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I concur heartily in the idea that the Federal Government make some provision for the dependents of those who are called out to the border of our country and may have to engage in war. In the city in which I live a company enlisted and is now in the service, and many of those were men who labored by the day for a living. They regretted the fact that they must go and leave their families dependent, but the citizens of that city said, "You go, and we will take care of your family until you return." [Applause.]

An association has been formed in that little city providing for a liberal contribution of the money of the citizens for members of the family of those soldiers whose families are dependent. Three other companies have gone from other towns of the district, and I have no doubt their citizens are equally generous with those left at home who were dependent. I am glad, my friends, to see that this House is making a precedent which is looking toward humanity in time of service of the boys of the country. It is easy to talk patriotism here, but let those who remain at home help pay for care of the families of those who are in the service. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS].

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, the bill under consideration provides relief for dependent families of militiamen who were covered into the Regular Army by operation of law and went to the front to defend the country. When war is imminent it is necessary for certain of the citizenship to go to the front and defend the Nation. It always requires the very flower of the country to perform this patriotic and dangerous task; it selects from among all of us the bravest, the most patriotic, the most capable, and the ones who are well equipped in health, strength, and mental vigor. Harsh as this may seem, it is true, for certainly in a time of great stress it is never the weaklings who can defend us, but the strongest ones instead.

To every thoughtful man war is a terrible thing; to every thoughtful man it is a terrible thing to drag a citizen from his daily task of accomplishment and accumulation and put him into the war at a great sacrifice; but even worse than this is to make him suffer the dissolution of family and leave his loved ones behind that he may go to the front, that he may hazard his life, hazard his future, and run every risk and hazard known to man.

Inasmuch as it is necessary for them to go, inasmuch as the Congress has already decreed that they must go, we all must of necessity feel keenly their going. While our poor words of sympathy, praise, and admiration will perhaps suffice to cheer them on to endurance, valor, and success, something far more substantial is needed for the wives and children and dependent ones left behind. For me and for mine, I reluctantly give my consent that these brave young, patriotic men should go at all to the front in defense of our country, thereby leaving us behind in health and strength with full opportunities for the betterment of our condition. For me and for mine, I shall not be content, I am not content, I never expect to be content, to allow these boys to go to the front without the one consoling fact that the great Government of the United States will not allow those left behind to suffer destitution, want, and degradation brought about by the absence of their loved ones who are defending the Nation. [Applause.]

Members here and Members in the other body oppose this legislation. They have asserted, and are making every effort to carry conviction with it, that to look after the helpless and dependent families left behind is a comingling of patriotism with money matters and sordid things. I assert all such argument is fraught with ignorance or hypocrisy. I assert such statements are far from the truth. I assert that it is pitiable that any such sentiments should prevail. The American Nation is to-day not only the richest Nation of all the world both in patriotism and wealth, but it is more capable now than ever before to look well after the wants not alone of our defenders at the front but of those left behind. I insist that it is the duty of Congress this day to take this step toward the protection and maintenance of our defenders' families left behind. I assert it is not too much for them to expect or us to do; I assert it is only what a great, patriotic Nation is willing to do, desirous to do, and ought to do in a time of great stress like this. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] stated the National Guard is not asking for this legislation. No, they have not asked for it, because they are too busy getting ready to go to the front to make a demand upon the Congress. The whole country believes Congress ought to do its duty without being asked. [Applause.] The gentleman says that this will affect enlistments in the Regular Army. Never in the history of this country, when there were militia and volunteer organizations to enlist in, have its people enlisted in the Regular Army. They prefer to enlist and serve with their friends and their brothers from their own communities. This legislation will not affect enlistments in the Regular Army. This legislation is intended for the purpose of letting these men go to the front with the knowledge that their loved ones at home are being taken care of, and that they can render arduous service with a free heart and an open mind without agonizing upon what may be occurring at home.

I therefore hope that this House will, by a unanimous vote, record its voice in favor of this legislation, which, whether it is a precedent or not, ought to be enacted into law now. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing this bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of suspending the rules and passing this bill will, when their names are called, answer "yea"; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 299, nays 2, answered "present" 5, not voting 129, as follows:

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call my name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. CLARK of Missouri, and he answered in the affirmative.

So, two-thirds having voted in the affirmative, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

For the session:

Mr. DEWALT with Mr. MCFADDEN.

Mr. GARNER with Mr. BARCHFELD.

Mr. STEELE of Pennsylvania with Mr. GRAHAM.

Mr. SCULLY with Mr. BROWNING.

Until further notice:

FORTIFICATIONS.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report on the fortifications appropriation bill, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ALEXANDER). The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a conference report on the fortifications appropriation bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the statement of the House conferees may be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement of the House conferees.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 915).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14303) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 2, 5, 6, and 10.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 4, 7, 8, 9, 11, 12, and 14, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 13: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 1 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out "$5,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$10,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 15: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 6. That except as expressly otherwise authorized herein no part of the sums appropriated by this act shall be expended in the purchase from private manufacturers of any material at a price in excess of 25 per cent more than the cost of manufacturing such material by the Government, or, where such material is not or has not been manufactured by the Government, at a price in excess of 25 per cent more than the estimated cost of manufacture by the Government: Provided, however, That whenever in the opinion of the President an emergency exists affecting the general welfare of the United States, he may waive the limitations contained in this section."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 16: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Renumber the section to read "7"; and the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14303) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report as to each of the said amendments, namely:

No. 1: Appropriates $250,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $225,000, as proposed by the Senate, for protection, preservation, and repair of fortifications.

No. 2: Appropriates $200,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $254,060, as proposed by the Senate, for mining casemates, cable galleries, etc., necessary for the operation and care of submarine mines.

Nos. 3 and 4, relating to the purchase, manufacture, and test of field-artillery ammunition: Appropriates $6,000,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $2,700,000, as proposed by the House, and authorizes contracts in addition thereto in the sum of $3,000,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $1,500,000, as proposed by the House.

Nos. 5 and 6, relating to the purchase, manufacture, and test of seacoast cannon: Strikes out the increases, proposed by the Senate, of $480,000 in cash and $500,000 in contract authorizations.

No. 7: Appropriates $480,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $400,000, as proposed by the House, for practice ammunition for field artillery.

Nos. 8 and 9: Inserts the language, proposed by the Senate, requiring the President to approve the report of the special board of Army and Navy officers to be appointed to investigate and test radiodynamic torpedoes before the purchase of the invention is made.

No. 10: Strikes out the provision, inserted by the Senate, requiring the special board appointed to investigate radiodynamic torpedoes to report upon the "Clark and other similar" inventions.

No. 11: Provides, as proposed by the Senate, that the Chief of Coast Artillery shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of a major general.

No. 12: Inserts the section, proposed by the Senate, authorizing the use of $50,000 of the sums appropriated in the bill for the services of skilled draftsmen and others in the office of the Chief of Ordnance.

No. 13: Appropriates $10,000 instead of $5,000, as proposed by the Senate, for the rent of space in Washington for the drafting force of the office of the Chief of Ordnance.

No. 14: Changes the section number as proposed by the Senate.

Nos. 15 and 16: Restores the matter stricken out by the Senate limiting the cost of material purchased to not to exceed 25 per cent of the cost of manufacturing the same at Government arsenals or not to exceed 25 per cent of the estimated cost of manufacturing at Government arsenals, modified so that the President may waive the limitations of the section whenever in his opinion an emergency exists affecting the general welfare of the United States. The amendments also change the section numbers of the bill.

SWAGAR SHERLEY,
GEO. W. RAUCH,
FREDK. H. GILLETT,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, the bill as it passed the House carried cash appropriations of $22,368,050 and contract authorizations of $12,300,000, a total of $34,668,050. The amount added by the Senate was: Cash, $3,889,060; contract authorizations, $2,000,000; or a total of $5,889,060; making a grand total of $40,557,110 as the bill passed the Senate.

The House receded on cash sums amounting to $3,380,000 and on contract authorizations of $1,500,000, making a total of $4,880,000. The Senate receded on cash items of $509,060 and on contract authorizations of $500,000, or a total of $1,009,060.

The bill as agreed upon now carries, cash $25,748,050, and contract authorizations of $13,800,000, or a total of $39,548,050.

The increase as agreed upon over the bill as it passed the House amounts in cash and contract authorizations to $4,880,000, which is largely the result of one increase by the Senate touching field-artillery ammunition. The bill as it passed the House carried for field-artillery ammunition $2,700,000 cash, and contract authorizations of $1,500,000, or total cash and authorizations of $4,200,000. The bill as it passed the Senate and as agreed to in conference carries $6,000,000 cash and $3,000,000 in contract authorizations, or a total of $9,000,000 for this purpose.

When the bill was being considered by the Committee on Appropriations, the Treat Board report, touching the amount of Field Artillery and the ammunition therefor to be accumulated as a reserve, had not been approved by the War Department, and the committee allowed all the estimates that were then asked. Since that time the report of the Treat Board has been approved, subject to certain modifications by the War Department, and in order to carry out with a reasonable degree of rapidity the recommendations embodied in that report it was believed by the War Department that the item as it passed the House should be increased. In view of the situation that confronts us, the fact that ammunition for field guns might be very necessary to have in sufficient quantities, the House conferees felt constrained to yield to the Senate in that particular.

The only other large amendment made by the Senate related to the manufacture of seacoast cannon, where they increased the cash appropriation of the House from $1,084,500 to $1,764,500, and increased the authorization for contracts from $3,000,000 to $3,500,000. That increase was made by the Senate evidently under a misapprehension as to the amount of money that would be needed at this particular time, and after a reconsideration of the matter the Senate receded from its position, and the items as they passed the House were restored to the bill.

The Senate agreed to the provision of the House touching the appointment of a board to report upon the Hammond torpedo and to purchase the same in the event that that report was favorable, with a slight modification. They provided that the money should not be expended until a favorable report by this board had been approved by the President. The House provision simply provided that the money should not be expended until and unless a favorable report had been made by this joint board of Army and Navy officers. The Senate required the approval of the President, and the House conferees were very glad to acquiesce in that further safeguarding of the provision.

The Senate also adopted a provision calling upon this joint board to investigate an invention alleged to have been made by a Mr. Clark, or any others that might be offered touching such weapons; but inasmuch as there had never been any report made on any of those inventions, and nothing was known of them except what was obtained from the statement of a Senator that he understood there were such inventions, we did not believe this joint board should be called upon to investigate them, especially in view of the fact that we carry a $300,000 appropriation for the Board of Odnance and Fortifications, which is a statutory board created for the express purpose of investigating and passing on all inventions of this character. So that it is perfectly possible for these or other inventors to have a report made by the Board of Ordnance and Fortifications in the usual manner. The Senate accordingly receded from that amendment.

The Senate struck out of the bill a provision that was found in section 4, which provided that in the expenditure of the moneys appropriated in the bill contracts should not be let for a price in excess of 25 per cent more than the cost of making in the arsenals, where such articles had been made, or in excess of 25 per cent more than the estimated cost where such articles have not been made. The conferees restored the provision, with a proviso in the following language:

Provided, however, That whenever in the opinion of the President an emergency exists affecting the general welfare of the United States he may waive the limitation contained in this section.

In other words, it was believed that it might be desirable, in case of any emergency confronting the country, to give to the President the right to waive that limitation as to cost, in order that we might not be deprived of the opportunity of procuring munitions that might be of great value to the country. The Senate also inserted two provisions, one authorizing the services of clerical draftsmen to be used by the chief of ordnance and to be paid for out of the funds appropriated in the bill, not to exceed $50,000. That was an amendment that would have been put on the bill by the Committee on Appropriations in the House, except that under a misapprehension they thought that the matter had been sufficiently cared for in the legislative appropriation bill. The House, therefore, receded from its disagreement to that Senate amendment, and it is let in the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Did this provision result from a subsequent recommendation of the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance?

Mr. SHERLEY. It did.

Mr. STAFFORD. Because, when we framed the legislative bill, we granted to the department everything that was asked for and besides carried into the bill provisions adopted under the emergency resolution that passed the fore part of the session.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman is correct. In that legislative bill we carried a provision of $140,000 for that purpose, but we have put 300 or 400 per cent more work on the ordnance people than heretofore by the increases in this bill and the Army bill. It did not seem the part of wisdom to handicap the ordnance people in doing the necessary drafting work in order to be in a position to spend these sums, and the House, therefore, receded.

The Senate also put in a provision authorizing not exceeding $5,000 of the funds to be spent for renting suitable space in Washington for draftsmen. It had been believed when the legislative bill passed that under the rearrangement in the Army and Navy Building provided for, that space might be found necessary for the ordnance people. That has not proved to be practicable, and under representations made by the chief of ordnance the House agreed to the Senate amendment with an amendment increasing the amount to $10,000. It requires a good deal of floor space in order to enable the draftsmen with their large tables to do their work and the House conferees believed it proper that they should have facilities to do this important work.

One other amendment of importance that was placed by the Senate upon the bill was the amendment which provides that hereafter the Chief of Coast Artillery shall have the rank, pay, and allowance of a major general. When the Army reorganization bill was up in the House there was an amendment offered on the floor by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FIELDS], in this same language, and it passed the House unanimously. The bill went to the Senate, and that provision was stricken out, and stayed out, as the result of the conferees' action.

The Senate on its own initiative placed this provision in the bill, and while it is not customary, as a rule, to carry such provisions on the fortification bill, inasmuch as the Senate insisted on its amendment and the House had already by its action at this session passed a provision in the same terms, the House conferees yielded, and the provision remains in the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that I have enumerated every important amendment, and if any gentleman wishes to ask a question I will yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman explain why the Chief of Coast Artillery should have the rank and pay of a major general?

Mr. SHERLEY. The reason, in my judgment, is that the Chief of Coast Artillery is not merely a staff officer, but he is also practically a line officer; he has under him 40,000 men; he has under him all the management and control of fortifications of all of our coasts and of our insular possessions and Panama. His duties are analogous to those of department commanders. He has control of all of the mine fields and mine operations, and it is believed that his duties are the duties of a line officer as much or more than they are the duties of a staff officer, and that his position is one of sufficient magnitude to warrant the rank that would correspond to a commander in the line having even a less number of troops under him.

Mr. Speaker, if there are no further questions, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14303) entitled "An act making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD two letters received from prominent citizens of my district who are officers in labor organizations composed of railroad employees. These letters are in the nature of protests against congressional action or interference in a controversy now being had between the railroad and railroad employees involving the hours of labor—or the eight-hour-a-day proposition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing the letters referred to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT CALENDAR.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the special order the Unanimous Consent Calendar is now in order, and the Clerk will read the first bill.

REVISED STATUTES OF THE UNITED STATES.

The first business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 7619) to repeal section 3 of section 1342 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, enacted July 27, 1892.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

AMENDING ACT TO REGULATE COMMERCE.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 722) to amend section 20 of an act to regulate commerce approved February 4, 1887, as amended, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

INVESTIGATION OF INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was Senate joint resolution 60, creating a joint subcommittee from the membership of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce and the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to investigate the conditions relating to interstate and foreign commerce, and the necessity of further legislation relating thereto, and defining the powers and duties of such subcommittee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

AVIATION SERVICE, UNITED STATES ARMY.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was Senate joint resolution 65, creating a joint commission of Congress to investigate the Aviation Service of the United States Army.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

OVERISSUES OF SECURITIES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 563) to amend section 20 of an act to regulate commerce, to prevent overissues of securities by carriers, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have that go over.

Mr. ADAMSON. Very well. I ask that it be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it will be passed over without prejudice.

There was no objection.

PROTECTION OF STREAMS, ETC., IN CALIFORNIA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 1351) providing for the discovery, development, and protection of streams, springs, and water holes in the desert and arid public lands of the United States in the State of California, for rendering the same more readily accessible, and for the establishment of and maintenance of signboards and monuments locating the same.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

Subsequently,

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (S. 1351) providing for the discovery, development, and protection of streams, springs, and water holes in the desert and arid public lands of the United States in the State of California, for rendering the same more readily accessible, and for the establishment of and maintenance of signboards and monuments locating the same, be passed over without prejudice. It is No. 132 on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman asks that it shall remain on the calendar?

Mr. RAKER. That is all.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MINING ON INDIAN RESERVATIONS, ARIZONA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 12426) to authorize mining for metalliferous minerals on Indian reservations in the State of Arizona.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask to have the bill passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be passed over without prejudice.

There was no objection.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER AT MEMPHIS, TENN.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 12999) extending the time for the completion of the bridge across the Mississippi River at Memphis, Tenn., authorized by an act entitled "An act to authorize the Arkansas & Memphis Railway Bridge & Terminal Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mississippi River at Memphis, Tenn.," approved August 23, 1912.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I have not been furnished with the amendments that were suggested, and I ask unanimous consent that temporarily we may pass this over, so that the amendments can be furnished later.

Mr. MANN. I think it would better be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to passing the bill over without prejudice?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Possibly the gentleman can return to it later.

Mr. ADAMSON. In case the amendments are presented before the end of the day I will ask unanimous consent to return to it.

MARCUS A. JORDAN.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 888) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to confer upon Marcus A. Jordan the life-saving medal of the first class.

The SPEAKER pro tempore Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not see the author of the bill in the Chamber, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the bill going over without prejudice?

There was no objection.

NATIONAL PARK, GETTYSBURG, PA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 13342) to improve and maintain certain public roads and parts thereof included within the limits of the national park at Gettysburg, as defined by the act of Congress entitled "An act to establish a national military park at Gettysburg, Pa.," approved February 11, 1895, and making an appropriation therefor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming objects.

DAMS ACROSS NAVIGABLE WATERS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3331) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters," approved June 21, 1906, as amended by the act approved June 23, 1910, and to provide for the improvement and development of waterways for the uses of interstate and foreign commerce.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

CUTTERS FOR THE COAST GUARD.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill S. 2719, providing for the construction or purchase of cutters for the Coast Guard.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

THE LIGHTHOUSE SERVICE.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 14340) to furnish all seagoing vessels in the Lighthouse Service and all other seagoing vessels of the Department of Commerce with radio equipment and auxiliary power for the operation thereof.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

CUTTERS FOR THE COAST GUARD.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 515) providing for the purchase or construction of cutters for the Coast Guard.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

THE LIGHTHOUSE SERVICE.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 14338) to authorize aids to navigation and for other works in the Lighthouse Service, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have no objection to the general purpose of the bill except I question the propriety at this time of providing by omnibus provision for the increase of the salary of the lighthouse inspectors from $2,400 to $3,000. If the gentleman is willing to eliminate section 6, I have no objection to the remainder of the bill.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman that the department appeared through the Secretary of Commerce and strongly urged that, and gave reasons the committee thought good. Of course if the House thinks differently, it has the right to vote it out.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would like to say to the gentleman that we had this same recommendation when we were considering the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and the committee did not think it was wise at this time, in view of the condition of the Treasury, to make such a liberal increase in salaries. I shall be constrained to object unless we can have an understanding about the elimination of section 6.

Mr. ADAMSON. Will not the gentleman relieve me of the necessity by moving it himself? Will not the gentleman move it?

Mr. STAFFORD. No—well, I will move it if I have an understanding——

Mr. ADAMSON. I will not resist it.

Mr. STAFFORD (continuing). That it will not be resisted by gentlemen on the other side.

Mr. ADAMSON. Well, make the motion; I will not resist it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, this bill is on the Union Calendar. I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Commerce is hereby authorized to establish, provide, or improve the following aids to navigation and other works in the Lighthouse Service, under the Department of Commerce, in accordance with the respective limits of cost hereinafter respectively set forth, which shall in no case be exceeded:

Light keepers' dwellings and appurtenant structures, including sites therefor, within the limit of cost for each item fixed by the act approved February 26, 1907 (34 U. S. Stat., p. 996), $75,000.

Constructing and equipping light vessels for general service on the Great Lakes, or for general service, $150,000.

SECOND LIGHTHOUSE DISTRICT.

Constructing and equipping a lighthouse depot for the second lighthouse district, $85,000.

THIRD LIGHTHOUSE DISTRICT.

Constructing or purchasing and equipping a lighthouse tender to replace tenders worn out in service in the third lighthouse district, or in the Lighthouse Service generally, $150,000.

Improvement of the offices and laboratory at the general lighthouse depot at Tompkinsville, Staten Island, N. Y., $21,000.

Improving the aids to navigation on the East River, N. Y., $16,000.

FIFTH LIGHTHOUSE DISTRICT.

Constructing and equipping a light vessel for station off Cape Charles, Va., or for general service, $130,000.

Improving lights and fog signals leading to Cape Charles, Va., $12,800.

Improving aids to navigation and establishing new aids on the eastern shore of Chesapeake Bay and tributaries, Md. and Va., $29,000.

NINTH LIGHTHOUSE DISTRICT.

Removal and rebuilding on another site of the light station and dwelling at or near Point Borinquen, P. R., $85,000.

TENTH LIGHTHOUSE DISTRICT.

Aids to navigation at Huron Harbor, Ohio, $4,500.

Improving the aids to navigation at Fairport Harbor, Ohio, $42,000.

ELEVENTH LIGHTHOUSE DISTRICT.

Improvement at Detroit, Mich., lighthouse depot, $53,000.

Light station and fog signal at or near Sand Hills, Mich., $75,000.

Improving aids to navigation and establishing new aids at or near the entrance to Keweenaw Waterway Harbor of Refuge, Portage River, Mich., $110,000.

TWELFTH LIGHTHOUSE DISTRICT.

Improving the light and fog-signal station at Manitowoc North Breakwater, Wis., $21,000.

Removing and rebuilding Chicago Harbor Light Station, Ill., and establishing lights on the new breakwater in Chicago Harbor, $142,000.

Establishing and improving aids to navigation at Indiana Harbor, Ind., $100,000.

SIXTEENTH LIGHTHOUSE DISTRICT.

Aids to navigation and improvement of existing aids in Alaska, $60,000.

NINETEENTH LIGHTHOUSE DISTRICT.

Constructing and equipping a temporary lighthouse depot at Honolulu, Territory of Hawaii, pending the establishment of a permanent depot, $5,000; and authority is hereby granted to erect such temporary depot on land to be leased.

Construction and equipment of a lighthouse depot for the nineteenth lighthouse district, $90,000.

SEC. 2. Hereafter the Secretary of Commerce is authorized, whenever he shall deem it advisable, to exchange any right of way of the United States in connection with lands pertaining to the Lighthouse Service for such other right of way as may be advantageous to the service, under such terms and conditions as he may deem to be for the best interests of the Government; and in case any expenses, not exceeding the sum of $500, are incurred by the United States in making such exchange the same shall be payable from the appropriation "General expenses, Lighthouse Service," for the fiscal year during which such exchange shall be effected.

SEC. 3. Hereafter post-lantern lights and other aids to navigation may be established and maintained, in the discretion of the Commissioner of Lighthouses, out of the annual appropriations for the Lighthouse Service on the Mobile, Tombigbee, Warrior, and Black Warrior Rivers, Ala.

SEC. 4. Hereafter the appropriation "General expenses, Lighthouse Service," shall be available for the purchase, equipment, repair, and operation of motor-propelled vehicles for transporting passengers or freight for use of the Lighthouse Service in the Hawaiian Islands.

SEC. 5. Hereafter light keepers and assistant light keepers of the Lighthouse Service shall be entitled to medical relief without charge at hospitals and other stations of the Public Health Service under the rules and regulations governing the care of seamen of the merchant marine: Provided, That this benefit shall not apply to any keeper or assistant keeper who receives an original appointment after the passage of this act, unless the applicant passes a physical examination in accordance with rules approved by the Secretary of Commerce and the Secretary of the Treasury.

SEC. 6. Hereafter the annual salaries of lighthouse inspectors, excepting the inspector of the third lighthouse district, shall not exceed $3,000 each.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out section 6.

Mr. ADAMSON. I will not resist that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, strike out lines 20, 21, and 22, inclusive.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. Furnishing all seagoing vessels in the Lighthouse Service with radio equipment and auxiliary power for the operation thereof, $60,000.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, some portion of this bill has already been enacted in a separate bill, and therefore I move to strike out sections 8 and 9 without having them read, and that section 7 be renumbered by making it section 6. I ask unanimous consent to do that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to strike out sections 8 and 9 without reading. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. And to renumber section 7, making it section 6. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE AT NAVY YARDS, GUN FACTORIES, ETC.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11168) granting 30 days' leave of absence each year, without forfeiture of pay during such leave, to employees at United States navy yards, gun factories, naval stations, and arsenals.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want a little information, if the gentleman from Maryland is in shape to give it. How much is this going to cost the Government?

Mr. FARR. About a million dollars, I think, on paper.

Mr. COX. What does the gentleman mean by saying a million dollars on paper?

Mr. FARR. I think the rest, recreation, and so forth, that these men will get will more than compensate for the cost in money, and it will be doing justice to a lot of men rather than have them discriminated against as they are to-day.

Mr. DYER. Equalize them with the others.

Mr. COX. Is it the intention to go forward with other legislation giving all Government employees 30 days' leave of absence?

Mr. TALBOTT. This will apply to a number of men working in the navy yards and arsenals.

Mr. COX. It applies to 40,000 men now.

Mr. TALBOTT. Thirty thousand, I think, originally.

Mr. COX. And it will cost the Government a million dollars a year if enacted into law?

Mr. FARR. On paper.

Mr. COX. Oh, well, it does not make any difference whether it is on paper or not; the cost will have to be paid by the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. TALBOTT. These are high-class mechanics, most of them.

Mr. DYER. Who work hard.

Mr. TALBOTT. Work hard and render this Government substantial service, and it puts them in equality with other people who are getting like salaries. They go down to these gun shops; they are intelligent people, and they do all kinds of important work for the Government; and the Committee on Naval Affairs, after due consideration, unanimously came to the conclusion that these people were entitled to this 30 days' leave of absence.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TALBOTT. Yes.

Mr. MANN. How much leave of absence do men in Washington get in the departments?

Mr. TALBOTT. I think they get 30 days' leave.

Mr. MANN. What does that mean—30 calendar days? Does not the law provide for 30 days' leave of absence?

Mr. BORLAND. I will say to the gentleman that the comptroller recently made a ruling that that meant 30 working days. The comptroller recently made a ruling, in reference to the Government Printing Office, that it meant 30 working days.

Mr. MANN. I am talking of men in the departments. I do not think the comptroller has made a ruling which means 30 working days. Men who work by the day get paid by the day and get 30 working days' leave of absence, but men who work by the month, as most of them do, get a month's leave of absence. That is what they get. Why would it not be perfectly fair to give these men 30 days' leave of absence?

Mr. TALBOTT. If the gentleman will offer an amendment to that effect.

Mr. MANN. Instead of 30 working days give them 30 days' leave of absence.

Mr. TALBOTT. If the gentleman will offer an amendment of that kind I will accept it.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to giving them 30 days' leave of absence.

Mr. TALBOTT. We will accept that.

Mr. COX. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, do I understand the gentleman from Illinois will offer such an amendment?

Mr. MANN. Yes; to strike out the word "working," so that it will stand "30 days' leave of absence."

Mr. STAFFORD. I understand that the comptroller has construed "30 days" to mean 30 working days, so that these employees would be granted something like 35 or 36 days in a year for the vacation period.

Mr. TALBOTT. We have accepted the amendment to be offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is not a question of accepting the amendment. It is a question as to the real purposes, as to the number of days to be granted to these employees. This would mean that we would grant the employees in our arsenals and navy yards a furlough with pay for one-eighth of the working days in the year.

Mr. DYER. Thirty days including Sundays.

Mr. STAFFORD. At the present time Federal employees in mechanical pursuits get something in the neighborhood of 18 days and two or three Sundays and holidays in addition.

Mr. TALBOTT. They have now 15 days, and they ought to have 15 days more. It is a unanimous report from the committee. I do not want to take up the time of the House in discussing it. We accept the amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Would the gentleman accept, after the word "granted," "not exceeding 30 days"?

Mr. KEATING. No. They want 30 days' leave of absence. They want to be placed on an exact equality with the clerks.

Mr. STAFFORD. The phraseology, then, would be that each and every employee of the navy yards, arsenals, and repair stations "are hereby granted not to exceed 30 days' leave of absence each year."

Mr. KEATING. They might be granted only five days' leave of absence under that.

Mr. DYER. The department might grant them only 10 days.

Mr. FARR. Or only two days.

Mr. HOWARD. That would be all they might get.

Mr. STAFFORD. Would the gentleman say "30 days, including Sundays"?

Mr. KEATING. Why not treat them exactly as the clerks are treated?

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, there is a different rule between the clerks and these men in the arsenals and workshops. The reason why these clerks in the departments are granted 30 days' leave of absence is because there is not as much work in the departments at the time of their vacation period, and for humanitarian reasons they grant them a leave of absence when their work is not so pressing.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I am willing to withdraw my objection to it.

Mr. TALBOTT. We are willing to accept the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. STAFFORD. I understand you are willing to accept the amendment to strike out the word "working"?

Mr. MANN. They have already accepted that an hour ago. [Laughter.]

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman should not be so impatient. The intention is to grant these employees 30 days in a year?

Mr. TALBOTT. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. FARR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have the bill considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FARR] asks unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill. The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That each and every employee of the navy yards, gun factories, naval stations, and arsenals of the United States Government is hereby granted 30 working days' leave of absence each year, without forfeiture of pay during such leave: Provided, That pro rata leave with pay shall be allowed to those serving fractional parts of a year: And provided further, That in all cases the heads of divisions shall have discretion as to the time when the leave can best be allowed.

With a committee amendment as follows:

On page 1, line 7, after the word "Provided," strike out the words "That pro rata leave with pay shall be allowed to those serving fractional parts of a year," and insert "That it shall be lawful to allow pro rata leave only to those serving 12 consecutive months or more."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out, in line 5, the word "working."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 5, strike out the word "working."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Speaker, having myself introduced a bill granting 30 days' leave of absence to the several classes of employees named in the pending bill, it almost goes without saying that I am heartily in favor of this legislation. It is surprising to me that this just and proper action was not taken long ago and the unjust discrimination removed in the matter of leave of absence to these employees of our Military Establishments by placing them upon an equality with the 40,000 Government employees in the service here in Washington and elsewhere who are enjoying the benefits of 30 days' leave without forfeiture of pay. Why this discrimination should ever have existed, or why it should have been allowed to exist for so long a time, is more than I can understand. I suppose when the original leave of 15 days was allowed to the men who labor hard in our navy yards, naval stations, arsenals, and so forth, opposition was encountered from men who would save money to the Government at the cost of denying recreation to these artisans and laborers, and rather than lose all holidays these employees were content to take what they could get. There is no good reason now, if any ever existed, why we should not accord to the men, both skilled and unskilled, who work in Government establishments the same degree of consideration for their health, comfort, and happiness as is shown toward those who perform clerical services in the departmental service. This is a humanitarian proposition. These men literally earn what they get by the sweat of their brows. I know that the employees at the United States Naval Academy and at the Indianhead Proving Ground, in my district, perform hard, manual labor under hazardous conditions. They need and require respite for the period of at least 30 days in a year. To give them this rest from labor, with pay, conserves their physical and mental resources and produces a greater degree of efficiency, of which the Government will get the benefit.

I sincerely hope this bill, that will bring joy, renewed hope, and vigor into many homes, will pass this House and become law at this session.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. TALBOTT, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

WAGES OF EMPLOYEES IN NAVY AND WAR DEPARTMENTS.

Mr. GRAY of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the next bill (H. R. 9548), to regulate the wages of certain employees in or under the Navy and War Departments of the Government, be passed over without prejudice. It is the next bill on the calendar, No. 185.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GRAY] asks unanimous consent that the next bill, Calendar No. 185, be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next one.

WOMAN'S TITANIC MEMORIAL ASSOCIATION.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the resolution (H. J. Res. 104) granting permission to the Woman's Titanic Memorial Association to erect a memorial on public ground in the city of Washington, D. C.

The title of the resolution was read.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

The Clerk will report the next bill.

EXCLUSION OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS FROM NATIONAL PARKS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 6814) to exclude intoxicating liquors from national parks and national forest reserves.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. McDERMOTT. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

MOQUI AND NAVAJO INDIAN RESERVATIONS, ARIZ.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10115) authorizing the adjustment of the rights of settlers on the Moqui and Navajo Indian Reservations in the State of Arizona.

The title of the bill was read.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

FEDERAL AID TO INDIGENT TUBERCULOUS PERSONS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11864) to provide Federal aid in caring for indigent tuberculous persons, and for other purposes.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The Clerk will report the next one.

COPYRIGHTS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 13981) to amend the copyright law.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 12 of the act of March 4, 1909, entitled "An act to amend and consolidate the acts respecting copyright," be amended by adding thereto the following proviso:

"Provided, however, That in the case of any work referred to in this section wherein copyright has been secured by publication of the work with notice of copyright which by reason of its character, bulk, fragility, or because of dangerous ingredients can not expediently be filed, the register of copyrights may determine that there shall be deposited in lieu of two complete copies of such work such identifying photographs or prints, together with such written or printed descriptions of the work as he shall find sufficient to identify it: And provided further, That in the case of motion-picture photoplays and motion pictures other than photoplays, whenever deposit has been made as required by the provisions of the act of Congress (Public, No. 303) approved August 24, 1912, and registration has been secured thereunder, such deposit and registration shall hereafter be held to be sufficient for all purposes, and copies of such photoplay or motion picture if it is later reproduced in copies for sale; and the provisions of the amendatory act of August 24, 1912, are hereby made to apply to motion-picture photoplays and motion pictures other than photoplays that have been reproduced in copies for sale or otherwise published."

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 8, strike out the word "Numbered" and insert the word "Number."

The amendment was agreed to.

Page 2, line 10, after the word "nineteen" insert the word "hundred."

The amendment was agreed to.

Page 2, line 12, after the word "sufficient" strike out the words "for all purposes."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MANN: Page 2, strike out all after the word "Act," in line 8, down to and including the word "three," in line 9, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "entitled 'An act to amend sections 5, 11, and 25 of an act entitled "An act to amend and consolidate the act respecting copyrights," approved March 4, 1909.'"

Mr. MANN. That is to give a proper description of the act which they refer to in the bill as "Public, Numbered 303," which means nothing, because every Congress has a different series of numbers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

COMPENSATION FOR INJURIES TO FEDERAL EMPLOYEES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 15316) to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this bill is under consideration on Calendar Wednesday, and I think it should go off this calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. MANN. I object to its present consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The bill will be stricken from this calendar.

NATIONAL PARK SERVICE.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 15522) to establish a national park service, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, those in charge of this bill have agreed to reduce these salaries somewhat. If they will offer such an amendment and will agree to do their best to hold the amount in conference as it passes the House, reducing the salary of the director to $4,500, I shall not object.

Mr. LENROOT. It is my purpose to offer such an amendment.

Mr. COX. And I suppose the gentleman will hold that in conference if he can?

Mr. LENROOT. We will attempt to follow the wishes of the House, of course.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. KEATING. Reserving the right to object, I shall have to object to the present consideration of the bill—although I am very much in favor of the measure as a whole—unless some provision can be made by which isolated monuments which are entirely within the forest reserves may continue under the jurisdiction of the Agricultural Department.

Mr. LENROOT. It is my intention to offer an amendment to accomplish that very purpose. I shall offer an amendment striking out the words "and the Department of Agriculture," so as to leave the monuments within the national forests still within the jurisdiction of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. KEATING. I withdraw my objection, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman inform the House whether it was the purpose, under the proviso to section 3 on page 4, to permit the Secretary of the Interior to impose terms when he grants the privilege to graze live stock within any national park?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I wish gentlemen would speak a little louder, so we can hear them.

Mr. STAFFORD. I was inquiring of my colleague whether it was the purpose, under the phrase "under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe," to grant authority to the Secretary of the Interior to impose terms for the grazing privilege in national parks.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Oh, yes.

Mr. KENT. The idea is this: A number of these parks have large areas where the grass goes to waste, and where it is beneficial to the park to have a certain amount of grazing. The intention is to put such areas as that, where the grazing would be no injury but a benefit, under such rules and regulations as are common to all the national forests.

Mr. STAFFORD. But the intention is to make a proper charge for the grazing privilege?

Mr. KENT. Oh, yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. And the phraseology "under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe" would cover the terms for the use of the privilege?

Mr. KENT. Oh, yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is another provision for one assistant director at $2,500. What is the pressing need for that? We have not created assistant directors of other bureaus, and I can not see any urgent need for one in this case, though I realize that the director may for a good portion of the time be called away from his post of duty here in Washington.

Mr. LENROOT. That is the reason for it. There are 13 national parks, comprising over 4,000,000 acres of land. The director, in fact, will be absent from Washington during a very large portion of the time. That is not true of any other department of Government here at Washington. That is the reason in this case why we provide for an assistant director.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of an objection.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, the bill is on the Union Calendar, and I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read section 1 of the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby created in the Department of the Interior a service to be called the national park service, which shall be under the charge of a director, who shall be appointed by the Secretary and who shall receive a salary of $5,000 per annum. There shall also be appointed by the Secretary the following assistants and other employees at the salaries designated: One assistant director, at $2,500 per annum; one chief clerk, at $2,000 per annum; one draftsman, at $1,800 per annum; one messenger, at $600 per annum; and, in addition thereto, such other employees as the Secretary of the Interior shall deem necessary: Provided, That not more than $8,100 annually shall be expended for salaries of experts, assistants, and employees within the District of Columbia not herein specifically enumerated unless previously authorized by law. The service thus established shall promote and regulate the use of the Federal areas known as national parks, monuments, and reservations hereinafter specified by such means and measures as conform to the fundamental purpose of the said parks, monuments, and reservations, which purpose is to conserve the scenery and the natural and historic objects and the wild life therein and to provide for the enjoyment of the same in such manner and by such means as will leave them unimpaired for the enjoyment of future generations.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment to section 1.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 7, strike out "$5,000" and insert "$4,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, I have another amendment to section 1.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 2, strike out the words "the Secretary of the Interior shall deem necessary" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Congress may from time to time provide for by appropriation or other act."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 20, strike the words "and the Department of Agriculture"; also on page 2, line 25, strike out the words "situated within or."

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin what his idea is about this matter?

Mr. LENROOT. I will state frankly that I ought to have consulted the gentleman from Colorado, but the chairman of the committee consulted with me and found there was a considerable degree of objection to including national monuments within forest reserves.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. If they are wholly within the reserve that might be true.

Mr. LENROOT. That is what this does.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Does it apply to monuments wholly within the forest reserve or partially within the forest reserve?

Mr. LENROOT. It applies to both cases. It permits cooperation of the Secretary of Agriculture with the Secretary of the Interior where the monument is contiguous to a forest reserve.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. How about monuments that are not connected at all with forest reserves?

Mr. LENROOT. They are left with the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The committee decided unanimously to put national monuments under the jurisdiction of the Interior Department. We want to have a systematic distribution of improvements and the expenditure of money under the service. If the monuments are left with the forest reserve, they may not be improved as rapidly or systematically in the way of roads and otherwise as if they were put under this park service and all of them provided for in an orderly way.

Mr. LENROOT. I consulted with various members of the committee; I did not consult with the gentleman from Colorado, but when it was learned that there was objection to the action of the committee in that respect, the members individually thought it wise to meet that objection by eliminating that feature from the bill.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. As far as any one small monument is concerned entirely within the forest reserve, it is all right, but the general policy of a systematic control of improving the monuments as parks and places of amusement ought to be under the Interior Department, and the committee agreed to that proposition.

Mr. LENROOT. As far as any monument is concerned partially within a forest reserve, the President may by proclamation at any time take it out of the forest reserve, and it would then fall under the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. HAYDEN. If the gentleman will permit me, I wish to say that the President has authority to transfer the jurisdiction of national monuments from one department to another. I sincerely hope his amendment will be adopted. I have given the matter some study.

Mr. MANN. These amendments were agreed upon in order to get the bill up.

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; objection would have been made to the bill unless we agreed to make these amendments.

Mr. BORLAND. I would like to ask the gentleman who has charge of the bill if there is not a bill before the Public Lands Committee, or possibly on the calendar, making the Grand Canyon a national park instead of a monument.

Mr. HAYDEN. I can answer that question. The Secretary of the Interior prepared such a bill and gave it to me for introduction. I have not introduced it because of an objection by the Secretary of Agriculture who now has jurisdiction over the Grand Canyon National Monument. There is a disagreement between the two departments as to where the boundary lines should be. I have been informed, however, that the interested officials have practically agreed upon the limits of the proposed national park. As soon as a definite understanding is reached I shall introduce the bill, because I am heartily in favor of transferring the Grand Canyon to the jurisdiction of the Interior Department.

Mr. BORLAND. The Grand Canyon ought to be a national park, for it is adjacent to and surrounded by a national forest. The two ought to be separate. The Grand Canyon ought to be under the jurisdiction of the park department.

Mr. HAYDEN. I can say that everybody, not only the departments but the people throughout the country generally, are in favor of making the Grand Canyon a national park. You will remember, however, that when the last national park in Colorado was established there were serious disagreements, but finally an arrangement was made that was entirely satisfactory to the people of Colorado and to the department officials.

Mr. BORLAND. Then the gentleman thinks the bill is practically agreed upon and will soon be ready for passage?

Mr. HAYDEN. I understand so, except for some details.

Mr. KENT. Will the gentleman permit me to read a paragraph from Secretary Houston's report?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. KENT (reading)—

Unquestionably the Grand Canyon should be established as a national park and placed under the direct administration of the national park service. Such a plan and measure would meet with the department's earnest approval. In addition, the Mount Olympus national monument, which is the only other monument under the administration of this department embracing any considerable area, should be given careful consideration as a possible national park, and if not included in such park by congressional action should be restored to its original status as national forest land. If it should eventually be found desirable to transfer to the park service any of the other nine national monuments in the national forests, this may be accomplished at any time for any particular area by the issuance of a presidential proclamation vacating the national forest withdrawal in so far as it covered the national monument area. This would have the effect of transferring jurisdiction to the national park service.

Mr. BORLAND. There is no question about that, and I think it should be done.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I will state that I have taken this matter up with the governor of my State, with the State land commission, and the board of supervisors of the county wherein the Grand Canyon is located. I find that everyone is favorable to the creation of such a park, if its boundaries are properly limited. There has been some objection upon the part of persons who are now grazing live stock within the monument and the adjacent national forest, but I am sure that an arrangement can be made that will properly protect their interests, because the use of the adjacent range can in no way interfere with the scenic beauties of the canyon. I am also satisfied that the water power and mineral resources of the Grand Canyon can be made available for use without detracting from its grandeur in the slightest degree.

Mr. BORLAND. I am very glad that that is true.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior shall make and publish such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary or proper for the use and management of the parks, monuments, and reservations under the jurisdiction of the National Park Service, and any violations of any of the rules and regulations authorized by this act shall be punished as provided for in section 50 of the act entitled "An act to codify and amend the penal laws of the United States," approved March 4, 1909, as amended by section 6 of the act of June 25, 1910 (36 U. S. Stat. L., p. 857). He may also, upon terms and conditions to be fixed by him, sell or dispose of timber in those cases where in his judgment the cutting of such timber is required in order to control the attacks of insects or diseases or otherwise conserve the scenery or the natural or historic objects in any such park, monument, or reservation. He may also provide, in his discretion, for the destruction of such animals and of such plant life as may be detrimental to the use of any of said parks, monuments, or reservations. He may also grant privileges, leases, and permits for the use of land for the accommodation of visitors in the various parks, monuments, or other reservations herein provided for, but for periods not exceeding 20 years; and no natural curiosities, wonders, or objects of interest shall be leased, rented, or granted to anyone on such terms as to interfere with free access to them by the public: Provided, however, That the Secretary of the Interior may, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, grant the privilege to graze live stock within any national park, monument, or reservation herein referred to when in his judgment such use is not detrimental to the primary purpose for which such park, monument, or reservation was created.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. STAFFORD: Page 4, line 7, after the word "regulations" insert the words "and on such terms."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, I do not think it adds anything, but I have no objection to it.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. It is not necessary. They will regulate it enough.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. The last proviso in section 3, down to and including line 12, answers practically all of the objections that have been made in regard to national parks, and in this bill in particular, that the parks, monuments, and reservations shall be used and live stock may be permitted to graze therein when it will not in any way interfere with the general park purposes.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed: Provided, That nothing in this act contained shall affect or modify the provisions of the act approved February 15, 1901, entitled "An act relating to rights of way through certain parks, reservations, and other public lands."

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, lines 13 and 14, strike out the words: "That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed: Provided,"

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LENROOT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BERKSHIRE TROUT HATCHERY.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 218) authorizing the acceptance of the gift of the Berkshire trout hatchery, Berkshire County, Mass.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the House joint resolution?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. This resolution is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the United States of America hereby accepts from Mrs. Mary E. Scully, as a memorial to her husband, title to the lands known and to be known as the Berkshire Trout Hatchery, located in Berkshire County, Mass., together with the buildings, ponds, and other improvements located thereon and the water and other rights pertaining thereto, and the Secretary of Commerce is hereby authorized to receive from Mrs. Mary E. Scully a deed for the said property. The title to said property is accepted upon the terms and conditions prescribed by the donor, namely, that it shall be used by the United States Bureau of Fisheries, Department of Commerce, as a fish hatchery and for experimental work in fish culture.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the House joint resolution.

The House joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BURKE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the House joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

FORT ASSINNIBOINE MILITARY RESERVATION.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3646) to amend the act of February 11, 1915 (38 Stat. L., 807), providing for the opening of the Fort Assiniboine Military Reservation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois that the bill be passed over without prejudice?

There was no objection.

RACE-GAMBLING BETS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 15949) to prevent the nullification of State antigambling laws by international or interstate transmission of race-gambling bets or racing odds.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COADY. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland objects, and the bill will be stricken from the calendar.

SHOSHONE TRIBE OF INDIANS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 489) authorizing the Shoshone Tribe of Indians, residing on the Wind River Reservation, in Wyoming, to submit claims to the Court of Claims.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. LOBECK. Will the gentleman withhold his objection for a minute?

Mr. MANN. No; it is too late. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the bill is stricken from the calendar.

LANDS FOR EDUCATIONAL PURPOSES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 15096) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend sections 2275 and 2276 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, providing for the selection of lands for educational purposes in lieu of those appropriated," and to authorize an exchange of lands between the United States and the several States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

FLANDREAU, S. DAK.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 14944) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to make transfer on certain conditions of the south half of lot 14 of the southeast quarter of section 21, township 107, range 47, Moody County, S. Dak., to the city of Flandreau, to be used as a public playground.

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

FISH-CULTURAL STATIONS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill H. R. 15617, to establish fish-hatching and fish-cultural stations in the States of Alabama, Louisiana, Florida, Georgia, South Carolina or North Carolina, Maryland or Virginia, Oregon or Washington, Texas, Oklahoma, Illinois, Washington, Arizona, New Mexico, Michigan, Idaho, Missouri, Pennsylvania, Delaware or New Jersey, and Minnesota.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the bill is stricken from the Calendar.

STANDARDS OF CLASSIFICATION FOR COTTON.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill H. R. 15913, to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to establish uniform standards of classification for cotton; to provide for the application, enforcement, and use of such standards in transactions in interstate and foreign commerce, to prevent deception therein, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

INTERSTATE USE OF AUTOMOBILES, ETC.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 208) to regulate the interstate use of automobiles and all self-propelled vehicles which use the public highways in interstate commerce.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.
The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. COADY. Mr. Speaker, I object.
Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman withdraw his objection?
Mr. COADY. I am sorry, but I can not accommodate the gentleman.
The SPEAKER. This is not debatable. The Clerk will report the next bill.

PUBLIC LANDS IN THE STATE OF OKLAHOMA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 15156) granting public lands to the State of Oklahoma.
The Clerk read the title of the bill.
The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman from Colorado desires to have this bill passed over.
Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado asks that the bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

BUREAU OF WAR RISK INSURANCE.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 13224) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914.
The Clerk read the title of the bill.
The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, when does this authority expire under the law? I do not happen to recall it at this second.
Mr. ALEXANDER. About the 1st of September; on the 2d of September, the report says.
Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] was giving some attention to this and was making some investigation of it.
Mr. ALEXANDER. It is of vital importance to our shipping interests to continue it if the war continues.
Mr. MANN. I do not think it is. I think perhaps there would be time—the gentleman from Pennsylvania is not here——
Mr. ALEXANDER. I hope the gentleman will not object. I want to get this off my mind.
Mr. MANN. Well, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who is not here to-day, I think, did not know this bill would be reached to-day. Of course this is not the usual unanimous-consent day. I do not like to stand in the way——
Mr. ALEXANDER. Well, of course I think the bureau ought to be extended, in view of the conditions in Europe at this time; but the only concern I have is that it may become a law before Congress adjourns.
Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the question may be submitted to the House on the bill H. R. 13224 next Wednesday right after the reading of the Journal as to whether there is objection to the consideration of the bill or not.
Mr. ALEXANDER. That is all right; I have no objection.
The SPEAKER. What was the request of the gentleman from Illinois?
Mr. MANN. That on next Wednesday, after the disposition of the business on the Speaker's table, the Speaker shall submit to the House the question whether there is objection to the immediate consideration of H. R. 13224, the war-risk insurance bill.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that next Wednesday, after the reading of the Journal, and so forth, that the Chair submit to the House a unanimous-consent request to take up the war-risk insurance bill referred to. Is there objection?
Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman, Will that take any considerable portion of the time of the House that day if there is no objection?
Mr. MANN. Well, I should say it would not take any time at all whether it is objected to or not.
Mr. DYER. The McGillicuddy bill——
Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken in that; the McGillicuddy bill is not up on Wednesday. Yesterday was next Wednesday in the House.
Mr. DYER. I have no objection.
The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

CLASSIFICATION OF SALARIES, VETERINARY INSPECTORS, ETC.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 16060) providing for the classification of salaries of veterinary inspectors and lay inspectors (grades 1 and 2) employed in the Bureau of Animal Industry, Department of Agriculture.
The Clerk read the title of the bill.
The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I object.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman objects, and the bill is stricken from the calendar.

THE VIRUS, SERUM, AND TOXIN.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 15914) to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to license establishments for and to regulate the preparation of viruses, serums, toxins, and analogous products for use in the treatment of domestic animals, and for other purposes.
The Clerk read the title of the bill.
The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask to have the bill passed without prejudice.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks to have the bill passed without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

HOURS OF SERVICE FOR RAILROAD EMPLOYEES.

The next business on the calendar for unanimous consent was the bill (H. R. 9216) to amend sections 2, 3, 4, and 5 of an act entitled, "An act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by limiting the hours of service of employees thereon," approved March 4, 1907.
The Clerk read the title of the bill.
The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. COLEMAN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

LANDS WITHIN CRATER NATIONAL PARK.

The next business on the calendar for unanimous consent was the bill (H. R. 14868) to accept the cession by the State of Oregon of exclusive jurisdiction over the lands embraced within the Crater National Park, and for other purposes.
The Clerk read the title of the bill.
The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.
Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.
The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.
The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of the act of the Legislature of the State of Oregon, approved January 25, 1915, ceding to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the territory embraced within the Crater Lake National Park, are hereby accepted and sole and exclusive jurisdiction is hereby assumed by the United States over such territory, saving, however, to the said State the right to serve civil or criminal process within the limits of the aforesaid park in suits or prosecution for or on account of rights acquired, obligations incurred, or crimes committed in said State but outside of said park, and saving further to the said State the right to tax persons and corporations, their franchises and porperty, on the lands included in said park. All the laws applicable to places under the sole and exclusive jurisdiction of the United States shall have force and effect in said park. All fugitives from justice taking refuge in said park shall be subject to the same laws as refugees from justice found in the State of Oregon.

SEC. 2. That said park shall constitute a part of the United States judicial district for Oregon, and the district court of the United States in and for Oregon shall have jurisdiction of all offenses committed within said boundaries.

SEC. 3. That if any offense shall be committed in the Crater Lake National Park, which offense is not prohibited or the punishment for which is not specifically provided for by any law of the United States, the offender shall be subject to the same punishment as the laws of the State of Oregon in force at the time of the commission of the offense may provide for a like offense in said State; and no subsequent repeal of any such law of the State of Oregon shall affect any prosecution for said offense committed within said park.

SEC. 4. That all hunting or the killing, wounding, or capturing at any time of any wild bird or animal, except dangerous animals when it is necessary to prevent them from destroying human lives or inflicting injury, is prohibited within the limits of said park; nor shall any fish be taken out of the waters of the park in any other way than by hook and line, and then only at such seasons and in such times and manner as may be directed by the Secretary of the Interior. That the Secretary of the Interior shall make and publish such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary and proper for the management and care of the park and for the protection of the property therein, especially for the preservation from injury or spoliation of all timber, mineral deposits other than those legally located prior to the passage of this act, natural curiosities, or wonderful objects within said park, and for the protection of the animals and birds in the park from capture or destruction, and to prevent their being frightened or driven from the park; and he shall make rules and regulations governing the taking of fish from the streams or lakes in the park. Possession within said park of the dead bodies, or any part thereof, of any wild bird or animal shall be prima facie evidence that the person or persons having the same are guilty of violating this act. Any person or persons, or stage or express company, or railway company, who knows or has reason to believe that they were taken or killed contrary to the provisions of this act and who receives for transportation any of said animals, birds, or fish so killed, caught, or taken, or who shall violate any of the other provisions of this act or any rule or regulation that may be promulgated by the Secretary of the Interior with reference to the management and care of the park or for the protection of the property therein, for the preservation from injury or spoliation of timber, mineral deposits other than those legally located prior to the passage of this act, natural curiosities, or wonderful objects within said park, or for the protection of the animals, birds, or fish in the park, or who shall within said park commit any damage, injury, or spoliation to or upon any building, fence, hedge, gate, guidepost, tree, wood, underwood, timber, garden crops, vegetables, plants, land, springs, mineral deposits other than those legally located prior to the passage of this act, natural curiosities, or other matter or thing growing or being thereon or situate therein, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be subject to a fine of not more than $500 or imprisonment not exceeding six months, or both, and be adjudged to pay all costs of the proceedings.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RAKER. Is this bill open to amendment now?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. I want to offer an amendment at the end of section 4; I think that is an oversight.

The SPEAKER. Send the amendment up.

Mr. RAKER. Page 4, line 19, strike out at the end of the line the words "and be," and all of line 20. The provision stricken out is as follows:

And be adjudged to pay all costs of the proceedings.

I wish the Clerk would report it.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, lines 19 and 20, strike out the following language, beginning after the word "both," in line 19, "and be adjudged to pay all costs of the proceedings."

Mr. MANN. It has been in all these other bills. Do not the costs follow the convictions always?

Mr. RAKER. That is what I wanted to find out. The committee has spent a good deal of time on the other bills that went through, but somehow or other this has not been called to our attention.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will look at the report of the Secretary of the Interior he will find that the Secretary reports that the provisions of this bill are identical, except as to the necessary changes of the name, with the Crater Lake and Mount Rainier bills.

Mr. MANN. I think it would be the case, regardless of putting it in this bill.

Mr. RAKER. If that is the case in the other bills, I shall not object.

Mr. LENROOT. It is now the same as in the law with respect to Glacier National Park.

Mr. MANN. It was in the bill that we passed the other day.

Mr. RAKER. By unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, I ask to withdraw the proposed amendment.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman withdraw his amendment?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That all guns, traps, teams, horses, or means of transportation of every nature or description used by any person or persons within said park limits when engaged in killing, trapping, ensnaring, or capturing such wild beasts, birds, or animals shall be forfeited to the United States and may be seized by the officers in said park and held pending the prosecution of any person or persons arrested under charge of violating the provisions of this act, and upon conviction under this act of such person or persons using said guns, traps, teams, horses, or other means of transportation, such forfeiture shall be adjudicated as a penalty in addition to the other punishment provided in this act. Such forfeited property shall be disposed of and accounted for by and under the authority of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] whether the language of this section is identical with the language of the similar section in the Yosemite Park bill, if he knows. I want particularly to call his attention to the word "shall," in line 25, page 4. The language is the same as the language in the case of the Glacier National Park bill.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes; and the Mount Rainier bill.

Mr. MONDELL. I am not sure that is the same as the language in the Yellowstone Park bill. It seems rather drastic. It provides that all teams, horses, means of transportation, guns, and traps shall be forfeited on conviction.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. It seems to me that is unnecessarily drastic. But we do not know anything about the comparison with the Yellowstone National Park bill. It seems that the guns and traps should be confiscated, but a man's horses and wagons should not be confiscated unnecessarily.

Mr. MANN. It would only happen where a man deliberately goes in for that purpose.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. I think the Yellowstone Park bill is prior to the Mount Rainier and Glacier Park bills. Those two bills were the first ones, and this is intended to follow those two bills. The committee and the various departments have gone over it fully.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move, in line 17, page 4, to strike out the word "situation" and insert the word "situated."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. That all process issued by the commissioner shall be directed to the marshal of the United States for Oregon, but nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to prevent the arrest by any officer or employee of the Government or any person employed by the United States in the policing of said reservation within said boundaries without process of any person taken in the act of violating the law or this act or the regulations prescribed by said Secretary as aforesaid.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend, page 6, line 25, by inserting, before the word "Oregon," the words "the district of."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 25, at the beginning of the line, insert the words "the district of."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. That the commissioner provided for in this act shall be paid an annual salary of $1,500, payable quarterly: Provided, That the said commissioner shall reside within the exterior boundaries of said Crater Lake National Park, at a place to be designated by the court making such appointment: Provided further, That all fees, costs, and expenses collected by the commissioner shall be disposed of as provided in sections 11 and 12 of this act.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this bill is now being read for amendment. There are two amendments in section 9. By the way, I think we did not agree to the committee amendment in section 4.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 3, line 2, by striking out the word "personal."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 7, line 14, by striking out the word "sections" and inserting the word "section."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 7, line 14, by striking out the words "and twelve."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk proceeded with and concluded the reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SINNOTT, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next one.

BRIDGE ACROSS FLINT RIVER, GA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 16287) granting the consent of Congress to the county of Sumter, or to the county of Dooly, both of the State of Georgia, acting jointly or separately, and their successors and assigns, to construct a bridge across the Flint River.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the county of Sumter, or to the county of Dooly, both of the State of Georgia, acting jointly or separately, and their successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Flint River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Murrays Ferry, Ga., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CRISP, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next one.

UNCOMPAHGRE INDIAN RESERVATION.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 43) in relation to the location, entry, and patenting of lands within the former Uncompahgre Indian Reservation in the State of Utah, containing gilsonite or other like substances, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The bill will be stricken from the calendar.

Mr. HOWELL. Will the gentleman allow it to be passed without prejudice?

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to passing it without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Utah asks unanimous consent to pass over the bill without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SIOUX TRIBE OF INDIANS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 4371) authorizing the Sioux Tribe of Indians to submit claims to the Court of Claims.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. GANDY. Has the gentleman any objection to letting the bill go over without prejudice?

Mr. MANN. I do not think so.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman from South Dakota any request to make?

Mr. GANDY. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GANDY. The next bill on the calendar, numbered 282 (H. R. 10774), is identical, being the corresponding House bill. I make the same request as to that.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the bill will be passed without prejudice.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER, KANSAS CITY, MO.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 16097) to extend the time for constructing a bridge across the Missouri River near Kansas City, Mo., authorized by an act approved June 17, 1914.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge authorized by the act of Congress approved June 17, 1914, to be built across the Missouri River near Kansas City is hereby extended to one year and three years, respectively, from the 17th day of June, 1916.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. BORLAND, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PUBLIC LANDS FOR PARK PURPOSES, GUNNISON, COLO.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 20) authorizing the county of Gunnison, Colo., to purchase certain public lands for public-park purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the county of Gunnison, Colo., is hereby authorized for a period of five years and after the passage of this act to purchase, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to convey to said county for public park purposes, for the use and benefit of said county, the following-described lands, or so much thereof as the said county may desire, to wit: The southeast quarter of southwest quarter, section 11, the east half of the northwest quarter, the southwest quarter, and the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section 14; the west half of the northeast quarter, the northwest quarter, the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter, the west half of the southeast quarter, and the southwest quarter of section 23; and the southeast quarter of the northeast quarter, the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter and west half of the southeast quarter of section 22, all in township 48 north, range 5 west, New Mexico principal meridian, in Gunnison County, containing 1,000 acres, more or less.

SEC. 2. That the said conveyance shall be made of the said lands to the said county by the Secretary of the Interior upon the payment by said county for the said land, or such portions thereof as they may select, at the rate of $1.25 per acre, and patent issued to said county for the said land selected to have and to hold for public park purposes, subject to the existing laws and regulations concerning public parks, and that the grant hereby made shall not include any lands which at the date of the issuance of patent shall be covered by a valid, existing, bona fide right or claim initiated under the laws of the United States: Provided, That there shall be reserved to the United States all oil, coal, and other mineral deposits that may be found in the land so granted, and all necessary use of the land for extracting the same: And provided further, That said county shall not have the right to sell or convey the land herein granted, or any part thereof, or to devote the same to any other purpose than as hereinbefore described; and that if the said land shall not be used as a public park, the same, or such parts thereof not so used, shall revert to the United States.

The Clerk read the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 4, after the word "years," insert the word "from."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next committee amendment, as follows:

Page 2, line 14, after the word "patent," insert the word "be."

Mr. MANN. That certainly does not improve the language any, notwithstanding the department recommended it.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I think the gentleman is right; but the department recommends it, and the committee thinks it does not hurt anything to put it in.

Mr. MANN. Some clerk up there who did not understand grammar recommended it.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I think that is correct.

Mr. MANN. If you want to deface your bill by agreeing to the amendment, I shall not object. It was properly drawn by the gentleman in the first instance.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The gentleman thinks it ought not to be agreed to?

Mr. MANN. I think it ought not to be inserted in the bill.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I ask that the House disagree to the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read the following committee amendment:

In lines 15 and 16, strike out the words "subject to the existing laws and regulations concerning public parks."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend line 17 by striking out the words "and that" and insert the word "but."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 2, line 17, by striking out the words "and that" and inserting the word "but."

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I accept the amendment, Mr. Speaker.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS BLACK RIVER, BENNETTS FERRY, ARK.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 16068) to authorize the construction, maintenance, and operation of a wagon bridge across the Black River at or near Bennetts Ferry, Ark.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the county of Clay, in the State of Arkansas, be, and it is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Black River at or near Bennetts Ferry at a place where the public highway leading from Corning to Piggott crosses said river, and at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 1, in line 7, strike out the word "and."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

By unanimous consent, the title of the bill was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across the Black River at or near Bennetts Ferry, Ark."

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

COAL LANDS, KAYCEE, WYO.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3986) granting certain coal lands to the town of Kaycee, Wyo.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, what does the gentleman expect to do with this bill?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I will state very frankly to the gentleman——

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not wish to have a derivation of the words "Kay Cee," but what is the purpose of the bill under consideration?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The town of Kaycee, Wyo., as I understand it, desires to either purchase or lease 40 acres of coal land for the use of the inhabitants of the town. It is a long ways from a railroad, an interior place, and they desire to lease or buy this tract of land.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes; certainly.

Mr. MANN. There was at one time a very celebrated man and horse in the State of the gentleman from Wisconsin called K. I. C. I wanted to know whether they stole that name from him.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Oh, the gentleman from Illinois is not a good sport. That horse was J. I. C.

Mr. STAFFORD. It was a horse bearing the initials of the famous J. I. Case.

Mr. MONDELL. For the gentleman's information, I will state if he will yield——

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield to the gentleman who is an authority on Celtic names.

Mr. MONDELL. A citizen of my native State of Missouri years ago, wandering northwest in search of a better country, established a ranch and used as his brand the letters K. C. In the course of time a small village grew up at the ranch and the letters Kay Cee were written as written in the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Was there any trade-mark on it?

Mr. MONDELL. No; no trade-mark as far as I know.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object to the bill, I want some information in regard to it.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Will the gentleman permit an additional statement on my part?

Mr. MANN. Gladly.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I will say that so far as the city of Grand Junction, Colo., is concerned, I have had a bill here for a number of years authorizing the city of Grand Junction to open a municipal coal mine. That city is situated near a large coal belt, and there is one tract especially advantageous for the use of the town. The coal companies have been more or less practicing extortion on the inhabitants of the city for many years. It is a city which is operated under a commission form of government. It desires to open up a coal mine of its own and see if they can not work it economically and advantageously.

In view of the fact that the committee has several times favorably reported the bill, I was authorized to add this provision to the Wyoming bill that has already passed the Senate, and I feel that it is along the line of wise and beneficial conservation and the economical use of the coal, especially when the city is in the midst of coal land, it would look as though the inhabitants of the town should have a right to relieve themselves from unnecessary expense. I can not see how anyone can object to this bill, and I hope the gentleman will not object to the Wyoming bill or the Grand Junction provision which is an amendment to the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I have always been in favor of public utilities owned by a municipality. I think it is a wise thing for cities to own their waterworks, but it is perfectly evident, I think, to everyone that a municipality or Government and private parties can not compete in furnishing the same thing. If the municipality or Government is to do a thing, it is inevitable that it must have exclusive control. You can not have the private individual or corporation successfully compete with the governmental agency, because they will not permit it.

Here is a proposition at the very start that where private parties want to furnish coal they have to pay the Government for it. But when you let the municipality do it you give it to them for nothing. If you are going to do a thing of that sort, it means in the end that you are going to endeavor to put out of business those engaged in it privately, and have the governmental agency do that business. If you undertake that policy, you have to consider whether you will discriminate in favor of the municipality that gets coal as against one that can not get coal or own a coal mine close by.

It is a very intricate and very important subject. I do not believe that we ought to enter into it without knowing what we are doing. I know that in the bill we recently passed we undertook to discriminate in favor of the municipalities owning coal mines. I also know that that bill has not yet passed.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. And probably will not.

Mr. MANN. My recollection is, although I may be mistaken, that certain gentlemen occupying very distinguished positions in various States around Colorado, and possibly including Colorado, have not been fretting themselves into a fury in an effort to get the bill passed.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I think the gentleman's surmise is correct.

Mr. MANN. My friend from Colorado did not vote for it when it was in the House.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I did not vote for a general law for the Government to lease everything that we have in our western country; of course not.

Mr. MANN. I am not criticizing the gentleman.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Will the gentleman permit another suggestion?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I want to say that the very reason that the gentleman from Illinois gives, namely, that the municipality can not compete in cost of production with the coal company, is the reason that the land is to be leased to them without a royalty, because if we compelled the municipality to pay the same price as a private company pays for the coal land, of course they could not compete at all, in most cases.

But my thought about this coal land and water power for municipalities free of royalty is that the mere possibility of competition will be sufficient to benefically reduce the charges for coal to these various municipalities on the public domain in the West. My idea is that if a city adjoins a hundred thousand acres of coal land, and can mine coal at a dollar and a half or $2 a ton, where it is now being charged $6 a ton, it is no discrimination to a city 100 miles away that would have to pay for it anyway. I can not see any reason why a city advantageously located like that should not have cheaper coal for its inhabitants if it can get it.

Mr. MANN. I do not know what they charge for coal in the district represented by my colleague Mr. FOSTER—in fact, I am not sure that they have coal mines in his district.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, yes.

Mr. MANN. But all over the State of Illinois I am sure that you can buy coal at the mines for $1.25 or $1.50 a ton.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. You can not in many places in Colorado.

Mr. MANN. You can wherever a private individual is permitted to open a coal mine.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. In many places the coal companies will not sell you coal at the mines; moreover, the inhabitants of a city can not go to a coal mine off several miles and buy coal.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes; they will.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I do not think the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. will sell coal at the mine by retail at $1.25 or $1.50 a ton or at all.

Mr. MANN. That may be.

Mr. FOSTER. I hope the gentleman does not quote the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. as an example of what other coal companies in the country do. I think they are a law unto themselves; at least they have been up to within a very short time since in the State of Colorado.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I am simply trying to prevent extortion by coal companies and to let one town which has an abundance of coal land near it have a municipal coal mine. It seems to me there can be no higher or better use of that coal than that. If the coal companies are not charging more than they should, they can not be hurt by this bill.

Mr. MANN. I suppose it is possible that the people in these towns may put themselves under the pleasure of reading what the gentleman says and the burden of reading what I say about this; but if they want to get this permission, I would suggest to those gentlemen that they use their influence to get the general leasing bill enacted into law.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Oh, well, the gentleman would have them swallow Federal bureaucracy, with all its evils, and surrender our State's birthright to get a little cheaper coal.

Mr. MANN. They do not swallow anything. It does not hurt them. They want it for themselves, but they do not want it for anyone else.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Millions of acres of Government coal land are lying idle. We want all the people to be given an opportunity to obtain fuel at a fair price and not be held up. If they could buy coal as they ought to be able to, I would not ask for this kind of legislation.

Mr. MADDEN. I suppose they might influence the gentleman to vote for the general leasing law.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. No. I would not correctly represent the sentiment of my district if I voted for the general leasing bill on everything we have out there, and put all our resources on a Federal royalty basis. It is not, in my judgment, fair or just or reasonable to ask us to accept or burden our country with that kind of a proposition.

Mr. MADDEN. Did I understand the gentleman to say that no person could buy coal at the mines in his State?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Oh! They might at some of the mines.

Mr. MADDEN. Unquestionably anywhere else in the United States they can do it.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. This bill is intended to obviate this very condition. To bring about a situation whereby the people can get coal at what is a fair price, considering the cost of production.

Mr. MADDEN. What is the matter with the State laws of the State of Colorado that you can not do that?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. You can not regulate everything by State laws.

Mr. MADDEN. Anybody can buy coal at the mines if they want more than a ton—if they want a carload.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. If the coal companies charge you $6 a ton for it, it does not do you any good.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman knows that they do not charge any such price as that.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. They charge twice what they ought to.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Does the gentleman say that the consumers of coal in a city adjacent to a coal mine can not get the coal for that community from this coal mine near by?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. They can not get it without paying what the companies that produced the coal charge for it, and what they believe to be at least twice what they could mine it for themselves.

Mr. MADDEN. What could they mine it for?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. They think they can mine it and sell it for about $3 a ton.

Mr. MADDEN. How do they know what they can mine it for?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The coal company pays only about 75 cents a ton to mine it, and it would not cost much to haul it into town.

Mr. MADDEN. How much does it cost the coal companies to mine it?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. In many cases I understand it is from 75 cents to a dollar a ton.

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, you can not mine it for that. They might pay that to the labor, but there is a charge other than the amount paid to the miner.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I understand, but at the same time there is no reason why they should charge $6 a ton for it. This town had to pay $6,000 for coal at one time several years ago, and they have been appealing to me five or six years to pass this bill and relieve that situation.

Mr. COX. What is the population of the town?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. About 8,000.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I trust the gentleman will not object to this bill.

Mr. MANN. Well, if the gentleman wants to make a demand for the regular order I will make a point of no quorum. The gentleman wants unanimous consent for something for himself; that is the only way the gentleman can get up his bill. I think we ought to know——

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I hope in the interest of these towns the gentleman will not object, because it is certainly beneficial to both, and we have adopted this policy in the House in the general leasing bill and why should not we be consistent?

Mr. MANN. Oh, we have not adopted this policy in the House.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes; we passed the general leasing bill providing all cities, municipalities, and so forth, shall have coal mines free of royalty.

Mr. MANN. That is true; and the gentlemen was opposed to it.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes; but I was not opposed to that provision. In fact, that provision allowing towns to mine coal free was my own amendment to the bill.

Mr. FOSTER. Does not my colleague think the gentleman from Colorado ought to be encouraged a little bit in his ideas of conservation?

Mr. MADDEN. I think the gentleman from Colorado ought to be consistent. He ought not to be opposed to a measure which gives the very privilege he seeks here and then come in and ask for an exception to be made to a rule which he helped to make himself.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I was the author of that provision in both the coal-leasing bill and the water-power-leasing bill, allowing cities and towns to have both without paying royalties.

Mr. MADDEN. But the gentleman voted against the provision of which he was the author.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. No; I voted against the whole bill. The bill contained a hundred things besides that.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman certainly was not very consistent.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. If there had been nothing else in the bill but that, I would have certainly voted for it. If the bill was going to pass, as I knew it would, I wanted to get at least one good feature injected into it.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman voted against the bill, and then he comes in here and asks the same thing to be done to a town in his State.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I do not see anything inconsistent. I am in favor of all cities and towns having the freest possible right to mine and sell coal as cheaply as possible to its inhabitants. I see nothing wrong or inconsistent in that.

Mr. MADDEN. I think the gentleman is proud of his consistency in being inconsistent.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I think the chances are that the city will never be required to open this mine at all. I think when this bill is passed the coal companies will promptly drop the price of coal about $3 a ton. I think that is what it amounts to.

Mr. MADDEN. I think if the gentleman is refused the privilege of having this law passed, the House will be doing a great favor to the community it is presumed to be trying to favor, because when they undertake to mine coal, if they get the privilege, they will discover it will cost twice as much as they pay now, and then they will be taxing the poor men who have little homes on the outskirts of the town to pay the losses.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Oh, no; the people of Grand Junction are willing to take chances on that.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman might think so in Illinois, but not in Colorado.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Both gentlemen from Illinois object.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Will the gentlemen allow the bill to remain on the calendar?

Mr. MADDEN. I have no objection to the bill remaining on the calendar, but I would like to be here when it is called up again.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman object to the bill being passed without prejudice?

Mr. MADDEN. No.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

H. SNOWDEN MARSHALL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following letter from the Sergeant at Arms.

The Clerk read as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
June 26, 1916.

Hon. CHAMP CLARK,
Speaker of the House of Representatives, United States:

Pursuant to the command of the warrant of the House of Representatives, signed by the Speaker of the House and dated the 22d day of June, 1916, I arrested H. Snowden Marshall at the city of New York on the 26th day of June, 1916, and immediately after said arrest I was served with a writ of habeas corpus, issued by the Hon. Augustus N. Hand, one of the justices of the District Court of the United States for the Southern district of New York, requiring me to produce the body of the said H. Snowden Marshall before said court, and the said justice made a direction upon said writ that, pending the said habeas corpus proceedings, the said H. Snowden Marshall should be at liberty to go upon his own recognizance.

Thereupon I produced the said H. Snowden Marshall before Mr. Justice Hand, sitting in the said district court, and made a return to the said writ, whereupon further proceedings on said writ and the hearing in the said habeas corpus matter were adjourned by the said court to the 30th day of June, 1916, at 9.30 o'clock a. m., and the justice of the court directed that the said H. Snowden Marshall be permitted to go on his own recognizance to appear in said court at the time last above mentioned.

Respectfully submitted.

R. B. GORDON,
Sergeant at Arms, House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. Ordered filed.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RAKER. Should not that communication from the Sergeant at Arms be printed in the RECORD, instead of being filed?

Mr. MANN. It will be printed, having been read.

Mr. RAKER. But the Speaker said it was simply to be filed.

The SPEAKER. That is the only order for the Chair to make, because, being read, it goes in the RECORD anyway.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 7617. An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes;

H. R. 14484. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war;

H. R. 12362. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Dallas & Southwestern Motorway Co. to construct a bridge across the Brazos River, in the State of Texas;

H. R. 15347. An act to amend existing laws relating to the use of alcohol, free of tax, by scientific institutions or colleges of learning;

H. R. 7256. An act providing for the refund of duties collected on certain tobacco cuttings;

H. R. 12954. An act for the establishment of Northport, Chopaka, and Laurier, in the State of Washington, as ports of entry for immediate transportation without appraisement of dutiable merchandise;

H. R. 14303. An act making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 13715. An act granting the consent of Congress to C. M. Simpson, Z. T. Hedges, J. C. Hackney, and Mark Brown to construct a bridge across Bayou Bartholomew, Ashley County, Ark.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 6068. An act authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to cancel and remit a certain income tax assessed against Charles L. Freer, of Detroit, Mich.; to the Committee on Claims.

BRIDGE ACROSS SAVANNAH RIVER.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 16641) granting the consent of Congress to Julian B. McCurry, A. G. McCurry, P. W. Walton, and J. J. Fretwell to construct a bridge across the Savannah River. This is a bridge bill that did not reach the Unanimous Consent Calendar in time. It is very important, and I ask unanimous consent that it be called.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 16641, Calendar No. 291, a bridge bill, which was not put on the calendar three days in advance. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Let it be reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to Julian B. McCurry and A. G. McCurry, of Hartwell, Ga.; P. W. Walton, of Madison, Ga.; and J. T. Fretwell, of Anderson, S. C., and their successors and assigns to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Savannah River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation at or near McDonalds Shoals, between McDonalds Shoals and Hanks Ferry, in the county of Hart, State of Georgia, on the west, and the county of Anderson, State of South Carolina, on the east, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

Amend, page 1, line 5, by striking out "J. T. Fretwell" and inserting "J. J. Fretwell."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the title will be amended in accordance with the text.

There was no objection.

ISSUANCE OF LAND PATENTS TO MYTON AND DUCHESNE, UTAH.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the request of the Senate for the appointment of conferees on Senate bills 35 and 36 be granted, and I ask that the conferees whose names I send to the desk be reported to the House.

Mr. MANN. The bills will have to be laid before the House first.

The SPEAKER. Of course. What is the number of the bills?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Senate No. 35 and Senate No. 36.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bills by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 35) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents for certain lands to the town of Myton, Utah.

A bill (S. 36) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents for certain lands to the town of Duchesne, Utah.

Mr. MANN. What are the Senate amendments?

Mr. MAYS. They are House amendments. The amendments were offered in the House and the Senate refused to concur.

Mr. MANN. Did the amendments provide that they should pay $1.25 an acre?

Mr. MAYS. That is one of the amendments.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman if the amendments go out in conference there will be no more bills of that kind passed by the House by unanimous consent while I am here.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The gentleman will give the conferees credit for the action they have taken.

Mr. MANN. I should think the Senate took action without consultation with the Members of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] asks that the House insist on its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate. Is there objection?

There was no objection; and the Speaker announced as the conferees on the part of the House Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, Mr. FERRIS, and Mr. LENROOT.

STATE ANTIGAMBLING LAWS.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 15949) to prevent the nullification of State antigambling laws by international or interstate transmission of race gambling bets or racing odds.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order, Mr. Speaker, that there is no quorum present.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] makes the point of order that there is no quorum present, and the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] moves that the House do now adjourn. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned, pursuant to the order previously made, until Wednesday, July 5, 1916, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of communication of the Secretary of State submitting an urgent estimate of appropriation for the relief and transportation of destitute American citizens in Mexico (H. Doc. No. 1271); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of communication from the Secretary of War submitting supplemental estimates of appropriations required for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, for fortifications, Panama Canal (H. Doc. No. 1272); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of communication from the Secretary of War submitting additional estimates of deficiencies required by the War Department for the service of the fiscal year ended June 30, 1916 (H. Doc. No. 1273); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and a joint resolution were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. BEAKES, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6915) granting indefinite leaves of absence to superannuated employees of the Postal Service, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 907), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. LONDON, from the Committee on Labor, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 250) to provide for the appointment of a commission to prepare and recommend a plan for the establishment of a national insurance fund and for the mitigation of the evil of unemployment, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 914), which said joint resolution and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. ESCH, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 16380) granting the consent of Congress to the board of supervisors of Highlanding Township, Pennington County, Minn., to construct a bridge across Red Lake River, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 908), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. DOREMUS, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 6242) authorizing the counties of Nassau, Fla., and Charlton, Ga., to construct a bridge across the St. Marys River between Florida and Georgia, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 909), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. PARKER of New York, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 16554) to extend the time of the Hudson River Connecting Railroad Corporation for the commencement and completion of its bridge across the Hudson River in the State of New York, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 910), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. RAYBURN, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 16185) to give the consent of the Congress to the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River near and above the city of New Orleans, La., and for other purposes, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 911), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. DEWALT, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 16534) to authorize the commissioners of Lycoming County, Pa., their successors in office, to construct a bridge across the West Branch of the Susquehanna River from the foot of Arch Street, in the city of Williamsport, Lycoming County, Pa., to the borough of Duboistown, Lycoming County, Pa., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 912), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 16604) to authorize the commissioners of Lycoming County, Pa., and their successors in office, to construct a bridge across the west branch of the Susquehanna River from the borough of Montgomery, Lycoming County, Pa., to Muncy Creek Township, Lycoming County, Pa., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 916), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. MONTAGUE, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 15736) to provide for aviation in the Coast Guard, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 917), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. MILLER of Delaware, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 3296) for the relief of Gertrude Becherer, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 913), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

MOTION TO DISCHARGE COMMITTEE.

Under clause 4 of Rule XXVII, motion to discharge committee was filed as follows:

By Mr. GORDON: To discharge the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 4713) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to sell the United States Marine Hospital reservation in Cleveland, Ohio.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. KITCHIN: A bill (H. R. 16763) to increase the revenue, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. LESHER: A bill (H. R. 16764) to authorize the commissioners of Northumberland and Union Counties, in Pennsylvania, their successors in office, to construct a bridge across the West Branch of the Susquehanna River from the borough of Watsontown, Northumberland County, Pa., to White Deer Township, Union County, Pa.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. CRAGO: A bill (H. R. 16765) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the Waynesburg Park Association, Waynesburg, Greene County, Pa., two bronze cannon or fieldpieces; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SPARKMAN: A bill (H. R. 16766) to further amend an act to amend an act to amend section 4400, title 52, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, concerning the regulations of steam vessels, approved August 2, 1882, and also to amend section 4414, title 52, of the Revised Statutes, "Regulation of steam vessels," approved March 1, 1895; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma: A bill (H. R. 16767) for relief from forfeiture to purchasers of the unallotted lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. ASWELL: A bill (H. R. 16768) to provide for the establishment of a military post or permanent mobilization camp at Camp Stafford, Alexandria, La.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KITCHIN: Resolution (H. Res. 289) for the consideration of H. R. 16763; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. DUPRÉ: Resolution (H. Res. 290) for a reprint of the soil survey of the New Orleans area, Louisiana; to the Committee on Printing.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ADAIR: A bill (H. R. 16769) granting an increase of pension to Charles M. Kiger; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ALLEN: A bill (H. R. 16770) for the relief of the estate of John H. Piatt, deceased; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. DYER: A bill (H. R. 16771) for the relief of the Knight Motor Co., a corporation; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. FARR: A bill (H. R. 16772) granting an increase of pension to Mary Lahey; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KEARNS: A bill (H. R. 16773) granting an increase of pension to George N. Taylor; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LESHER: A bill (H. R. 16774) granting a pension to Sarah E. Burns; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 16775) granting a pension to Emma Crewitt; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McKELLAR: A bill (H. R. 16776) for the relief of W. K. Ellis; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. MOONEY: A bill (H. R. 16777) granting an increase of pension to Stephen Devol; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RICKETTS: A bill (H. R. 16778) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Donnells; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi: A bill (H. R. 16779) for the enrollment of A. O. Mallory and others as citizens by blood of the Choctaw Nation; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. STOUT: A bill (H. R. 16780) to validate the homestead entries of Anna W. Thrailkill; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. SUTHERLAND: A bill (H. R. 16781) granting an increase of pension to W. K. Brown; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SWEET: A bill (H. R. 16782) granting an increase of pension to Albert Lincoln; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TAGGART: A bill (H. R. 16783) granting an increase of pension to Francis M. Miller; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 16784) granting an increase of pension to Lewis Paul; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 16785) granting an increase of pension to Samuel Dragoo; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 16786) granting an increase of pension to Bernard Hardy; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. THOMAS: A bill (H. R. 16787) granting a pension to James G. Whalin; to the Committee on Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER (by request): Memorial of committees representing men in engine and train service on the Frisco Railroad, relative to eight hours of work; to the Committee on Labor.

By Mr. DYER: Petition of Mary B. West, vice president National Probation Association of Memphis, Tenn., indorsing Senate bill 1092 and House bill 42; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Mrs. J. Malcolm Forbes, executive board Massachusetts Branch of Women's Peace Party of Boston, in re ultimatums; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. FARR: Memorial of Industrial Board of the Department of Labor and Industry, Harrisburg, Pa., favoring House bill 16207, relative to creation of a woman's division in the Federal Department of Labor; to the Committee on Labor.

By Mr. STEPHENS of California: Petition of the Friday Morning Club of Los Angeles, Cal., and M. M. Starr and 12 others, of Los Angeles, Cal., favoring freedom of the press and opposing House bill 13778; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, petition of S. W. Mudd and 15 others, of Los Angeles, Cal., favoring Senate concurrent resolution 12; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, resolutions of State Board of Equalization and County Auditors' Association of California; Board of Supervisors, Alameda, San Mateo, Contra Costa, Monterey, and Ventura Counties, Cal., protesting against Federal inheritance tax; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE.

MONDAY, July 3, 1916.

(Legislative day of Friday, June 30, 1916.)

The Senate reassembled at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12717) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, there are only half a dozen Members present, so I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gallinger	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ga.
Beckham	Gore	Overman	Smoot
Brady	Gronna	Page	Sutherland
Brandegee	Husting	Pittman	Swanson
Broussard	James	Poindexter	Taggart
Bryan	Johnson, Me.	Pomerene	Thomas
Catron	Johnson, S. Dak.	Ransdell	Thompson
Chamberlain	Jones	Reed	Vardaman
Clapp	Kenyon	Saulsbury	Walsh
Clark, Wyo.	Kern	Shafroth	Warren
Culberson	La Follette	Sheppard	Weeks
Cummins	Lane	Sherman	Williams
Fletcher	McLean	Simmons	Works

Mr. WALSH. I wish to state that my colleague [Mr. MYERS] is absent on account of illness. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I was requested to announce the absence of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON], who is absent on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-two Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

The pending amendments are the amendments offered by the committee to part B of the bill.

Mr. GORE. I desire to revert now to the first amendment passed over and to take up the amendments passed over in the order in which they were passed over. I will say that I desire to dispose of the amendments to the bill as an appropriation bill before considering amendments that are so-called riders.

Mr. REED. I did not hear the statement.

Mr. GORE. I was suggesting that I desire to consider the several amendments passed over for further consideration, and I wish to consider all the amendments pending to the bill as an appropriation bill properly before proceeding to the consideration of the amendments which are so-called riders.

Mr. PITTMAN. In view of the statement made by the chairman of the committee, I suggest that on Saturday we reached the amendment on page 14. In view of the notice given by the chairman, I call his attention to the fact that the first amendment passed over and not disposed of is the committee amendment on page 14 and the amendment I offered to it.

Mr. GORE. I will say that I referred to committee amendments and not to amendments that have been presented by Senators. Where any Senator has offered an amendment to a committee amendment that committee amendment will be passed over for the present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The first amendment passed over will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 14, line 9, the committee report to strike out "$208,320" and insert "$214,320," so as to read:

For all necessary expenses for investigations and experiments in animal husbandry, etc., $214,320.

Mr. GORE. I will ask that that be passed over in view of the fact that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] desires to present an amendment to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed over.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over is, on page 21, line 9, to strike out "$88,770" and insert "$109,920," so as to read:

For investigating the handling, grading, and transportation of grain, including the grain sorghums, and the fixing of definite grades thereof, $109,920.

Mr. GORE. I will make the same request with reference to this amendment, that, in view of the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota, it be passed over until the grain rider is considered.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over is, on page 23, to strike out lines 8 to 14, inclusive.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Before passing to that, I wish to ask for information as to the amendment on page 22 for the sugar-beet investigation. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], who is not present, proposed an amendment to that paragraph. I wish to ask if that section will be still open to amendment, or has the amendment been acted upon?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has been agreed to.

Mr. GORE. Not the amendment to which the Senator from Wyoming refers. That has not been agreed to, although another amendment has, and the matter will stand over.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That is the information I wanted to get. It is still open?

Mr. GORE. It is still open. I expect to accept an amendment which will be tendered by the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. THOMPSON. I also have a slight amendment to that section I shall want to take up at a future time when the section is considered and also at the same time when the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] is considered.

Mr. GORE. This amendment will be passed over and Senators will be given an opportunity to present amendments to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary has it agreed to, and that is all the Chair knows about it.

Mr. THOMPSON. The committee amendment was agreed to, but not the amendments offered by individual Senators.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There are amendments of Senators to the committee amendment.

Mr. THOMPSON. They have been agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; the Chair would like to know whether the proposed amendments are amendments to the committee amendment.

Mr. THOMPSON. They are.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then here we are again acting in violation of the rules, which do not permit these motions to reconsider. We have reconsidered some of these amendments three times now.

Mr. GORE. I think that is hardly the status of the amendment. The committee reported in favor of inserting the words "and beet seed," which was agreed to. The Senator from Michigan intends to offer an amendment at a later stage increasing the amount of the total appropriation, with the proviso that $10,000 shall be expended in experimentation with beet seed, which will come properly at the later stage as an amendment to the bill.

Mr. THOMPSON. I am interested in the same amendment and also in other amendments of the same section.

The VICE PRESIDENT. We are either going to pass over the amendment now or act upon it.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming and Mr. CLAPP addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. CLAPP. I understand we are now on the amendment on page 23.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair recognized the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. CLAPP. I beg pardon.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I merely made the statement and the inquiry I did because of the absence of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], with whom I have conferred upon the subject matter of the amendment. I had hoped the matter would not be foreclosed so as to prevent him from offering that amendment.

Mr. CLAPP. I desire to say to the Senator in charge of the bill that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] and myself, have not been able to work out any solution of the amendment on page 23 striking out lines 8 to 14, but as the bill is going to be before the Senate for some time I will ask that it be further passed over, and I hope we may come to some conclusion about it.

Mr. GORE. Of course, as was suggested by the Chair a moment ago, it is about the third time we have been passing over the amendment. I apprehend it will be impossible for the Senator from Minnesota and the Senator from North Dakota to agree because they represent entirely antagonistic views, but I merely say that in passing, and I am willing to have this amendment passed over for the third or fourth time as the case may be.

Mr. CLAPP. The Senator from North Dakota and myself have within the last few minutes, I think, agreed, without any difficulty, the only matter being to frame the proper language. I have no doubt at all that we shall be able to agree.

Mr. GORE. In view of the diplomatic negotiation I ask that the amendment be passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be passed over.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over is, on page 25, to strike out under the side head, "Purchase and distribution of valuable seeds," from line 17 to line 6, on page 28.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, this is the usual seed-provision part that we have every year and that the Senate strikes out, but when it comes out of conference it is generally inserted.

I wish to say just a word about it, Mr. President. I realize that when a large appropriation comes along it is too important a matter to object to, and if a small appropriation comes along it is entirely too trivial to object to. So, in fact, there is no appropriation in any of these bills that can apparently with propriety be objected to.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I wish the Senator would speak so that we can hear him. There is so much competition with him in the Senate Chamber that I can not hear anything he says.

Mr. KENYON. There was so much confusion during the Senator's remark that I could hardly understand his request.

Mr. VARDAMAN. It is difficult to hear the Senator. Would it be too great a strain upon his vocal cords to speak loud enough to be heard above the din?

Mr. KENYON. I am willing to speak loud enough to be heard above an ordinary din, but not the usual senatorial din.

I think that this free-seed appropriation that goes on year by year discredits Congress. It creates in the minds of the people, while it is a small matter, the notion of getting something for nothing, and to regard the Government as a great Santa Claus, who can simply pass out presents to everyone.

I am not contending against the distribution of rare plants and bulbs and seeds, a custom which, I think, originated a century ago. There may be merit in that; but this sending out of twenty-five or thirty thousand packages of garden seed to the constituents of Members of Congress is simply a silly farce that has cost the people of this country, outside of the loss in postage and the burdening of the Postal System of our country, in the four years from 1909 to 1913, according to Senate Document No. 1104, $1,110,933. The number of packages sent out during those four years was 48,568,801. If postage had been paid thereon, it would have amounted to $467,759.04; in other words, it costs about $250,000 a year to carry on this system, which is nothing but a system of political seed—that is all—to make the constituent feel that he is in very close relationship with his Member of Congress.

I ask to have inserted in the RECORD a little statement showing this expense of distributing these seeds for these four years, the cost of postage, and the number of packages sent out through the mails. I shall not take time to read it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission to do so will be granted.

The statement referred to is as follows:

Expense of distributing seeds for the years 1909–1910 to 1912–13, inclusive.

VEGETABLE AND FLOWER SEEDS.

Purchasing	$556,102.00
Packeting and mailing	$383,459.00
Total cost	$939,561.00
Number of packages	48,204,521
Other miscellaneous seed purchased amounting to	$173,372.00
Total cost	$1,110,933.00
Total number of packages sent out through the mails	48,568,801
Cost of postage to the Government on the above amount of seed sent through the mails and for which no postage was collected	$467,759.04

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I know the arguments that are presented every year for the system; they are that it is a good thing for the farmer; that we can afford to do something for the farmer; that it is trivial to object to it; that it tends to the development of the love of the beautiful; that the back yards are adorned with flowers; that the school children get an incentive to develop the beautiful in their lives and in nature; that it makes wives happy; that it makes the children happy; that it keeps the boys on the farm, brings the blush of health to the cheeks of children, and it is for the benefit of agriculture. If all this were so, it is very strange that the Department of Agriculture should have repeatedly asked to have this practice stopped, for the Department of Agriculture is about as much interested in the development of agriculture as is anybody or any institution.

I do not know, Mr. President, that we can ever stop spending money. This bill is carrying appropriations for every conceivable kind of proposition—chasing every kind of bug that anybody could ever think of. This Government is getting into all kinds of business; and, as the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations said the other day, that if the matter does not stop pretty soon, the Government will be a bankrupt institution. I do not know where all this money is to come from to pay these bills. The sundry civil bill, which we passed a few days ago, has in it appropriations for buying sites and for the continuation of public buildings in towns of less than a thousand people. We ought, if we can, to pay some attention to where the money is to come from.

I think this congressional seed distribution brings Congress into disrepute. It is a joke throughout the country. A few little packages of garden seed are sent out, when you could go to the store and buy for 5 cents better garden seeds than are sent out by the Government, because it is seldom that many of these garden seeds ever grow anyway. One Congressman received a letter from one of his constituents, to whom he had sent a package of these garden seeds, which read as follows:

Send me another package of beans. My wife made bean soup out of the last ones you sent, and we had it last night for supper. It was great.

[Laughter.]

That is about the way the garden-seed business is regarded in this country. It can hardly come under the head of "Preparedness," although beans are considered a very essential factor in military warfare.

In this connection, before the lobby committee, as I find on page 3304 of their report, Senator REED asked Mr. Mulhall a question concerning a statement in a letter which he had written, and which letter seems to me to illustrate this seed business. Mr. Mulhall says in this letter:

I sent out two days ago 24 sets of books to all the members of our executive board, and I sent you yesterday a large bag of seeds, and I will send to Mr. Boudinot and yourself this afternoon a number of packages of flower seeds. I have been keeping myself busy for the last 10 days in getting a corner on seeds in this city. At the present time I am promised 2,000 packages; and if you know any farmers in our organization who wish to cultivate any vegetables or flowers this coming season, I would be very glad to have them franked out to any address you may give.

This is one of the eminent gentlemen who were doing lobbying work around Congress. I have here an editorial from the Wallace Farmer, one of the great farm papers of the country, on this subject, which I send to the desk and ask the Secretary to read at this time in connection with what I have to say.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

FREE SEEDS.

We felt like throwing up our hat and shouting a few hallelujahs when we read in the report of the Secretary of Agriculture that he would ask Congress not to make an appropriation for the free distribution of garden seed as usually conducted. We hope he will be able to persuade Congress to give up this hoary graft.

Long years ago, before there was any Agricultural Department, Congress made an appropriation for the free distribution of seeds. There was necessity for it then; there is no such necessity now. Ever since that time Congress has been appropriating, we don't know how much money, but probably, including the expense, from a quarter to a half million each year, to enable Congressmen to frank some common garden seeds—which sometimes would grow—to farmers who had exactly the same kind of seeds growing in their own gardens year after year.

It was a very nice, easy way for the Congressman to make the lady of the farm believe he was thinking of her and sending her a present through the mails each year.

The Secretary proposes to carry out the original idea of the grant—to get rare and valuable seeds and plants for different localities, which can be tested out in these localities, to ascertain whether they are suitable to the soil and climate. The best way to do this is through the experiment stations.

Speaking generally, the farmers have been disgusted with this business, to our certain knowledge, for about 20 years, yet it still continues. It is nothing but a bit of congressional graft which the Congressman is not willing to give up. We doubt whether the present administration, with all its power, will be able to shut off this petty, little, picayunish graft, this delicate reminder to the voter that his Congressman at Washington is lying awake nights thinking about him and his wife and his family and his farm. We certainly wish the Secretary success in this most desirable reform. The good wife on the farm will have no trouble in getting beans and peas and carrots and raddishes and "yarbs" and "garden sass" without any help from Congress or the Congressman, and without any obligations to him. (Wallace Farmer, Des Moines, Iowa, Jan. 11, 1914.)

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I send to the desk, and ask to have read, a statement from the Daily Journal-World, of Lawrence, Kans., on this subject.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

LAWRENCE, KANS.

The Daily Journal-World of this city, of February 12, says: "The senate yesterday afternoon passed a resolution by Davis, of Bourbon, to request Kansas Congressmen and United States Senators to quit sending free seeds to their constituents in Kansas. The resolution sets forth the fact that the growth of agricultural colleges and the general knowledge of the people regarding the advantages of using good seeds has put an end to the need of the old time-worn congressional practice. In addition, the resolution stated that this practice loaded up the mails and constituted a heavy and needless expense to the Federal Government and the mail service. The resolution also requested the Kansas Congressmen to use their influence toward securing a bill putting an end to the distribution of free seeds by Members of Congress. The senate passed the resolution without a dissenting vote."

Mr. KENYON. So we find the State of Kansas trying to protect its citizens from receiving these seeds, and it is not a matter of much wonder in the mind of anybody who has ever had any of these seeds sent to him that there is a movement to protect the public from them. There is not any more reason for sending out free seeds than there is for sending out clothespins, safety pins, colic remedies, or anything else. I send to the desk, and ask to have read, a statement from the Marshalltown Times-Republican on the same subject.

The Secretary read as follows:

[From the Marshalltown (Iowa) Times-Republican of Mar. 26, 1915.]

By their seeds ye shall know them. Congress has adjourned. It has passed the usual appropriation bill and made the customary distribution of worthless seeds to the voters as a cheap sop for past loyalty.

If every recipient of garden seeds would plant them and then vote accordingly at the next congressional election, what a world of new faces would be noticeable in the halls of Congress. We tried planting some of them several years ago with the following result:

AND WHAT CAME FORTH.

The lettuce seed brought forth fruit in the form of leaves about as thick as a cabbage leaf and of a texture resembling a palm-leaf fan. We had had visions of the tender, succulent variety, but, although I had just paid a $50 dentist bill, I was unable to make any noticeable impression. We took some to an old lady who had the reputation of having more jaw action than any one in town and told her if she liked it to come over—we had a plenty. She never came. I spoke to a friend that owned a corn shredder, but he refused to give it a try out, as the machinery was not guaranteed against anything tougher than a dried corn stalk. We then conceived the idea that a valuable forage crop had been overlooked and so fed some to the cow, and for weeks we could see her, even in her leisure moments, in a masterly attempt to put it away for keeps. The result was that we fed her on bran mash for two weeks to enable her to rest up and be normal.

RADISH OF HOLLOW VARIETY.

The radishes were of the not uncommon hollow variety. If you ate them without peeling you were apt to come to the conclusion that you were eating horseradish. If you peeled them you wondered how the wood-pulp manufacturers had overlooked such a promising raw material.

The onions were in size about like a school boy's assortment of marbles, but what they lacked in size they made up in strength. If you would give it a moment's thought, you would probably come to the same conclusion that I did, and that is Congress had them bred up to take the place of whisky killers.

One day we had congressional salad from these selfsame vegetables, with appropriate dressing. They say time dulls all memories, but that salad still holds a vivid place in my memory, and I never will forget the Congressman responsible for sending the seed except when in the election booth. By their seeds ye shall know them.

[Laughter.]

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, if I may ask the Senator a question, one of the articles which he has just had read stated that at one time it was deemed prudent and profitable to distribute these seeds. How could it be more profitable at any other time in the history of this country than it is now, if the seeds which are sent out shall be from an improved variety of the plant? Certainly I can not understand how the Secretary of Agriculture would send out any other seed or would buy any other seed than those of the very best variety? This is an age of progress in agriculture, and we should be careful lest we may do something to hinder or retard this progress which is doing so much and promising still more for the good of mankind.

I want also, in this connection, to ask another question. How can the distribution of seed be graft on the part of Congressmen, when it only means for the Congressman more work, more trouble, a little larger office force, and in very many instances, I dare say, an outlay of money from his own pocket? Of course the seed are sent to the farmers of the country and to the people in towns who desire to plant them for their good, for their benefit, to improve the variety of the plants they grow and for their individual betterment. For the life of me, if the seed to be distributed are the character of seed that ought to be selected by the Agricultural Department, and which this bill contemplates should be purchased, I can not see how their distribution can fail to be beneficial to the entire country.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, if the argument of the Senator is good, then the seed ought to be sent out by the Agricultural Department as a part of their business, and not be sent out by Members of Congress as a part of the business of a Member of Congress.

Mr. VARDAMAN. So far as I am personally concerned, I should be very glad to have that system adopted. I take it that the Members of Congress only desire the distribution of the seeds to their constituents for the benefit of their constituents. I really do not think the distribution of seed has ever secured a vote or influenced a man to cast a vote; and I think it is a reflection upon the intelligence and the patriotism of the farmers of this country to say that they could be influenced by so trivial a thing as a few packages of seed, especially when we consider the fact that the seeds belong to the voter and not the Congressmen who distribute them.

Mr. KENYON. Well, the intelligence and the patriotism of the farmers of this country are such that they know a cheap little graft when they see it, and they know that this practice is of that character.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Well, how does the Senator make it out to be a graft upon the part of Representatives and Senators?

Mr. KENYON. I make it out to be a graft because we are spending the public money for the purpose of trying to help reelect some Member of Congress.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The men to whom the seeds are sent pay the expenses, and not the Congressmen. The Member of Congress gets nothing from it, and the men who pay the expenses get the seeds.

Mr. KENYON. The men who pay the expenses?

Mr. VARDAMAN. Yes; the men who pay the expenses—the men for whom the department buys the seeds—receive the seeds.

Mr. KENYON. And those men would like to stop that expenditure, if it be possible to do so. Of course I realize that it is not possible to stop any kind of expenditures. This is one of the little things that has grown up in this country from a very worthy beginning, when Benjamin Franklin sent over here from France bulbs and rare plants to send out among the people to be developed; but now to send out 5 cents' worth of radish seeds or onions or parsnips, or some such fool proposition as that, is an entirely different matter.

Mr. VARDAMAN. If the Senator will allow me for a moment, he says we can not stop this abuse.

Mr. KENYON. I do not think we can.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I think it is a matter which we can safely leave to the representatives of the people; and I dare say that the Members of Congress, who are so sensitive to the public will and so desirous of winning the approval of their constituents, would not send out these seeds or appropriate a penny for them if they had any idea that their constituents did not want them.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I will have to differ about that. I ask that the article which I have sent to the desk be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested, in the absence of objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

WHEN WILL THEY ABOLISH IT?

The congressional garden seed is due in the same old packet, perhaps the same old seed. A few kernels of corn, a bean or two, some salsify, perhaps a teaspoonful of beet seed. That's enough. It's a packet of congressional seeds.

The little pack of flower seeds that accompanies it sometimes comprises a few zinnia seeds, a meager pinch of nasturtiums—any old thing handy. What's the difference? It's only a pack of congressional garden seeds.

Nobody pays any attention to it at either end of the route. The Congressman orders it sent out. The receiver oftener than not throws it aside as not worth bothering with. Its seeds are no better or worse than those sold two packages for a nickel, probably not as good as those sold in bulk, whereof a nickel buys a nickel's worth. Friendless, unnoticed, except by the postal clerk, who curses it, the congressional seed slinks about like a poor relation at a rich wedding.

It is one of the best illustrations of how hard a graft dies; for in this day that's all it is—a petty graft. There's no reason for it, except that it carries a reminder of the Congressman in the frank written across the corner of the packet. Nobody wants it. Everybody would be pleased to abolish it. Still it lives on—one of the perquisites.

The congressional garden seed is an example of run-down decency. There was a time when it actually meant something, when new varieties were thus introduced, and people welcomed Government seeds, planted them, and passed on the variety; but that was long ago, and matches 1914 as Daniel Webster's chaise compares with a six-cylinder car.

It isn't a very expensive matter; it doesn't amount to as much as other unnecessary expenditures, but the utter worthlessness and foolishness of it annoy those who receive it. They don't want it. Abolish it.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. KENYON. I yield.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I have always believed that the make-up of the people of the United States was much the same in honesty of purpose the country over; and I can not understand how there can be such a wide difference between the farmers of Iowa and the farmers of New Jersey. The Senator says the farmers of Iowa, if I may judge from the articles which he has had read from Iowa and Kansas papers, do not want free seed; that it is the same old seed.

I will say that from the State of New Jersey I have received no protest from any farmer or from any individual, whatever his occupation may be, against receiving free seeds; but, on the contrary, I have received very many earnest solicitations for seeds, and I have received very many letters speaking most approvingly of the results obtained from planting the seeds which were sent in other years. For one, I believe that they are of infinite advantage. They are not all the same old seeds, as one of the articles read has intimated. The Agricultural Department has tested the seeds in almost every, if not in every, instance; they know the character of them, and they know the reasonable probability of their germination. Of course, everything depends upon climatic conditions and soil. A man could not sow them into the middle of a macadamized road and expect them to germinate and to be fruitful; but, under ordinary care, I assert that the intimation made by the Senator, and contained in these articles, is far from the truth.

The Senator says the free-seed distribution costs a quarter of a million dollars or more every year, and doubtless it does. There is no question about that; but at the same time the Senator has no way of computing the benefits that come from it. I do not believe the Senator will stand in his place and say that this is an absolute loss, that no benefit has come to the country from the distribution of these seeds. I stated last year, and I state again, that in very many instances in my own lifetime and in my own experience seeds that were sent from the Agricultural Department have been of real and positive benefit; and the ridiculous little articles that some newspaper man may write in the little narrow corner of his back office in Kansas or in Nebraska, ridiculous stories about selling one's birthright for a mess or pottage, and things of that kind, do not appeal to me, nor do they appeal to the people of the State in which I live.

Now, in response to the idea that nobody wants seeds——

Mr. KENYON. Is the Senator through with his question?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey (continuing). I have said that everybody wants seeds, and I regret very much to see the Senator take the position that he does.

I find here on page 46——

Mr. KENYON. Will the Senator let me know when he is through the question?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Well, it is a long proposition [laughter], this matter of agriculture; and the Senator has been a good while promulgating his theory and his ideas against these appropriations on the ground that the farmers laugh at us and think we are but fools and that we are trying to capture their votes with a few seeds. I do not know of any farmers in my part of the world who are so cheap as to be captured by seeds, and they would scout the proposition that they are in any way influenced by their distribution.

If I may be permitted, I find here on page 46——

Mr. KENYON. What part of the question is this, now?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I beg pardon.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator rose to ask me a question. I should just like to keep the run of it. What part of the question is the Senator now propounding?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. The question is the general proposition of expending public moneys for the benefit of the farmer, if we choose, and I am speaking apropos of that.

I find here on page 46, beginning at line 16, an item in regard to which I hear no protest from the Senator, for investigating the preparation for market, handling, grading, packing, and so forth, of poultry and eggs. The Senator might say that that was simply spending the public money for no particular avail; but all this information is of infinite value to the farmer.

I do not understand why the Senator early in the session inveighed against the appropriations for all the little water channels of our country, our harbors, and little rivulets for the purpose of improving them, and now he has gotten off on the other tack, to attack everything that shall affect the farmer in the matter of seeds. I think he is most unfortunate in his course. With the Senator's ordinarily generous, genial, and lovable type of mind, he has utterly gone astray, it seems to me, this morning.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I can, of course, understand how anybody who votes for the waterless Trinity River can vote for the seed proposition. I am not finding fault with anybody who does it, however. I can also point out a distinction to the Senator when he asks the difference between the Iowa farmer and the New Jersey farmer, or between the Iowa farm and the New Jersey farm. Of course I realize that with a few of these packages of seeds you might seed an entire New Jersey farm, but they would not go very far on an Iowa farm. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, I am sorry the Senator from New Jersey has gone out, as one of the uses to be made of the seeds there might have appealed to him in his State.

I ask permission to insert in the RECORD, without reading, an article on this subject by Oliver Owen Kuhn.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

UNCLE SAM, ESQ.—CONGRSS AND FREE SEEDS.

[By Oliver Owen Kuhn.]

One of the time-honored annual "institutions" of Congress—the regular spring distribution of free vegetable and flower seeds by Members of both Houses of Congress—has been about completed.

The annual distribution of seeds began away back in the days when the Department of Agriculture, now perhaps the largest and certainly one of the most important departments of the Federal Government, was nothing but an obscure bureau, occupying a couple of rooms and with not more than three or four employees besides the chief. From its beginnings as a gratis distribution of a few hundred samples of seeds of various kinds it has grown into one of the biggest things—in point of size, remember, and not of actual importance, economic or otherwise—of annual recurrence.

This year of grace 1916 about 80,000,000 of small packets of assorted vegetable and flower seeds were sent out in the names of Senators and Members of the House of Representatives. In packages containing five small packets each, these seeds went to every congressional district in the United States, 16,000,000 of packages being the total number mailed on request of Members of both Houses of Congress from the office of seed distribution of the Department of Agriculture.

Estimating the weight of each package, containing its five smaller packets, at 2 ounces when in its heavy envelope ready for mailing, the seeds sent by Members of Congress to admiring constituents this year weighed just about 2,000,000 pounds. If each package had borne a 2-cent stamp instead of the frank of a Member of Congress, the postage bill would have been something like $320,000. But Senators and Representatives do not pay postage on free seeds any more than on copies of speeches, public documents, and official mail; so the Post Office Department was not a penny better off for carrying this tremendous bulk of matter as first-class mail.

NO SMALL OUTLAY REQUIRED FOR PROGRAM.

Extensive preparation and no small outlay are required for this pleasant little program of sending annually to practically every voter in the United States a package of garden and flower seeds. Each Senator and each Member of the House is allotted the same number of packages for the congressional distribution. This year the number allotted to each Member of Congress was about 30,000 packages. It frequently happens that a Representative or a Senator whose constituency is almost entirely urban has little use for his whole allotment, in which case it is easy to arrange with another Senator or Representative from an agricultural section to "swap" excess seeds for something else.

Each Member of Congress supplies the office of congressional seed distribution with the names and addresses of those to whom packages are to be mailed. Franks are also supplied in the required number, to be pasted on the envelopes containing the seed packets. The office of seed distribution does the rest; the Members of Congress don't even know what kind of seeds go into the packages, except in rare cases where individual requests for certain seeds are complied with.

A newspaper published in a city not far from Washington recently contained a notice calling attention to the fact that the proprietor of the paper had received a large consignment of free Government seeds from the Representative from that congressional district. The seeds, the article said, were from blue-blooded aristocrats of the vegetable and floral world, grown by Uncle Sam's experts, and absolutely the ne plus ultra of their kind, and the newspaper announced flamboyantly that these seeds would be given, as long as they lasted, to patrons of the paper. Nearly half a column of space was devoted to extolling the quality of the seeds, the article repeating several times the statement in regard to them having been produced on Government farms and by the Government's scientific agricultural experts.

GOVERNMENT-GROWN SEEDS SELDOM SENT.

As a matter of cold fact, the Government doesn't distribute a pound of Government-grown seeds a year, on an average. About the only real Government seed that has been distributed in recent years—and this only in relatively small quantities and to certain favored sections—was the durum wheat introduced several years ago and now grown extensively in certain regions of the West especially adapted to its cultivation. Practically every ounce of seed that is sent out in the annual congressional distribution is bought from seedsmen in every part of the United States. More than this, the Government in all its branches is required to make its purchases on the basis of competitive bids, and naturally this is true in the matter of garden and flower seeds.

Each year the department makes up lists of the seeds, indicating varieties and quantities desired, and submits these lists to seedsmen everywhere—in all parts of the United States and Canada, and even in England, France, Belgium, Holland, and other countries of Europe. Bids for supplying the seeds are asked, the recipients of the lists and letters being asked to bid on the entire list or on any part of it, and to submit tenders on larger or smaller quantities. As is the case in awarding contracts for other Government supplies, successful bidders are required to give bond for the satisfactory execution of the contracts they may be awarded, but the Department of Agriculture goes a step further, stipulating that seeds to be supplied to the Government for distribution must be grown under a sort of governmental regulation and inspection, if required, and that all seeds must be able to pass rather strict inspection and tests. This is just about as far as the Government has anything to do with the actual production of the seeds distributed at the request of Members of Congress.

It sometimes happens that the Department of Agriculture is conducting experiments with new varieties or new species of plants that promise to be valuable additions to American agriculture. This was the case with the durum wheat referred to, the original seed being brought to the United States from Siberia, where it was found by an agent of the department. In such cases Members of Congress may obtain larger or smaller quantities of seed of such plants to be sent to a constituent for trial.

DILEMMA FACED BY ONE CONSTITUENT.

Not many years ago a Member of the House learned of experiments being conducted by the department with a new and promising variety of clover. Thinking the new plant might be valuable in his part of the country, and desiring to please a certain constituent with a mark of his distinguished consideration, the Representative had a bag of the clover seed sent to said constituent. It arrived all right and the recipient was duly elated until he happened to notice the tag bearing the address and the frank of the Representative, on which appeared in black lettering the stereotyped warning, "$300 fine for private use."

The recipient of the seed read this to mean that he would be subject to a heavy fine if he sowed the seed on his own land. So, after consultation with neighbors, who agreed with his interpretation of the warning, the clover seed was sown along the roadside. That, the farmers agreed, was not private use, though they couldn't see where much benefit was to come to the community from such use of the fine Government seed.

Later the same man received other consignments of seeds from the Representative, all bearing the Member's frank and each frank with the warning against private use. At last, when a bushel or so of packages had accumulated—vegetable seeds, farm seeds, bulbs, and flower seeds—the farmer wrote to his Representative:

"Please don't send me any more seed," he said in his letter, "it doesn't do me any good, as there's no place where I can plant or sow it. I sowed the clover seed on a strip along the road, as I didn't want to have to pay $300 fine for using it privately, but flower seeds and melons and the other things you have sent me would do no good that way, and it says on the package $300 fine for private use. So the seeds and things are doing me no good, so please don't send any more."

An explanation, of course, promptly went out the farmer, but it was several months before his suspicions were entirely allayed.

In addition to the garden and flower seeds distributed each spring the Department of Agriculture distributes each fall for Members of the House and Senate assortments of bulbs of flowering plants. Last fall about 10,000 boxes of bulbs were distributed, each box containing from 10 to 15 bulbs of tulips, hyacinths, narcissi, etc. These bulbs are obtained in the same manner as are the seeds for congressional distribution; that is, they are bought from the people who grow them. The Government hasn't a thing in the world to do with their production; all it does is to buy them and send them out for Members of Congress.

Mr. KENYON. I also ask leave to insert in the RECORD a little statement showing the population of certain towns provided with public buildings, sites, and continuations in the sundry civil bill recently passed, which, of course, does not relate to the subject in hand, but bears on this question of throwing away public money. Also an editorial from the Des Moines Register on the subject of free seeds. I ask to have those inserted without reading, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Painesville, Ky., is given in the census as Painesville town, Johnson County.

Population:

1890	506
1900	541
1910	942

Bill carries $4,000 for a site.

Pikeville town:

Population:

1890	456
1900	508
1910	1,280

Bill carries $7,000 for site.

Newcastle town, Wyo. (p. 1111):

Population:

1890	1,715
1900	756
1910	975

This bill carries $1,400 for a site.

Basin, Wyo. (p. 1111):

No population given in 1890.

1900, no population given.

1910, population, 763.

Bill carries $5,000.

The House of Representatives has just voted with its usual gusto to send out $240,000 worth of free seeds to the constituents of Congressmen—to which is added the expense of carrying them post free.

Congressional zeal in the advancement of agriculture is always marked when free seeds are under discussion, but should it be proposed to have the Department of Agriculture distribute these seeds pro rata among the congressional districts, Congress would suddenly be stricken with a sense of economy and all the ciphers would be stricken from $240,000. Even the dollar sign might be eliminated.

Free seeds could be made of immense value in the furtherance of agriculture. Were these seeds distributed by the Agricultural Department or the colleges of agricultural, it would be possible to obtain reports on the results obtained from new varieties of seed that would definitely determine their value.

As it is, they are a free gift from the Government and nothing more—save as they influence votes in the next congressional election. Free seed distribution could be a blessing and a benefit. As practiced it is a graft. (Des Moines Register.)

Mr. KENYON. I also send to the desk a poem on this subject from the New York Press, which I will ask to have read, and with that I will conclude my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

TO A CONGRESSMAN.

(After receiving a letter promising many packets of free seeds.)

[From the New York Press.]

Dear Sir: I got your little note,
But if you want to keep my vote
Don't send the seeds you mention there,
But drop them in the empty air.
Last year you sent me quite a pack,
And, trusting fool, I broke my back
To plant them in the yawning ground
And make for each its little mound.
I watered them with tender care,
Protected them from crow and bear,

And plowed between the long, straight rows—
Oh, could I punch you in the nose!
Tobacco came where beans should be.
Now, as I never smoke, you see,
The crop was not a welcome one;
Tobacco worms had lots of fun.
The taploca wildly grew
Where I had looked for green peas new,
And rhubarb raised its horrid head
In what I thought a parsley bed,
While rank alfalfa made a muss
Where should have bloomed asparagus.
I stuck up frames to hold tomatoes,
And on them crept some sweet potatoes.
Worst of all, wild turnips popped
Where I the melon seedlets dropped.
Please send your seeds to far Peru,
Or Mexico, or Timbuctoo;
But kindly wipe me off your slate,
Or you won't be my candidate.

[Laughter.]

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, while I have always favored the striking out of this provision, I can not help but realize that we have always come back after the conferees have reported and accepted the language in the bill and provided for the distribution of these seeds.

It might be well to note that elsewhere in this bill provision is made—very wisely, I think—for the investigation of new, rare seeds and bulbs and plants. I think it is generally conceded by everybody that we can wisely expend public money for the development of plants that are new and for experiments to be tried in various localties in the country for the purpose of developing new seeds and bulbs. Ample provision is made outside of this provision for such work, and the striking out of this language will not interfere in any way with the carrying on of that kind of work by the Agricultural Department.

It does not seem to me, however, that we ought to expend the amount of money appropriated in this item for the purpose of purchasing and sending out under congressional frank the ordinary, common garden seeds, that can be bought anywhere at any grocery store in the country. It does not do any particular good. It is a great waste of money, not only of the money that we spend for the purchase of seeds, but it costs an enormous amount of money to distribute this seed over the country. That is not included in this item.

The item here that the Senate committee seeks to strike out appropriates $252,540. That is for the purchase of ordinary, common, vegetable, and flower seeds, that can be purchased anywhere across the counter of any grocery store in the United States in the proper season.

The argument has been made very often, and is made in the defense of this item by those who believe in it—and I mention it in perfect respect; I am not finding fault with the argument; I think it is the only argument that can be made in favor of this item—that a great many poor people, who have small plats of ground, raising small vegetable gardens in their back yards, are thus enabled to supply themselves and their families with vegetables.

If it went no further than that, I do not believe there would be any serious objection to the item. I want to call attention briefly to what I believe would be a fair solution of the problem. If Senators and Members of the House defend this item on the ground I have stated—and I think principally they do—that it enables poor people over the country to get a few vegetables, then they will have no objection to the amendment that I am about to propose.

If we will take away the power to send out seed excepting as it is requested, then no one will get seed who is not interested in it, who does not need it, and who does not want it; and before I offer my amendment I want to call attention to what I believe is an illustration of the fact that the large bulk of the people do not want this distribution to take place.

Mr. JAMES, a Member of the House of Representatives, represents a district in Michigan. It is, he says, a district composed mostly of poor people, men who work in the mines, and farmers. Practically all the population of his district is composed of these kinds of people. It is a district where there probably would be the largest demand for distribution of this kind. In order to determine just how many people in his district really wanted seeds, he inserted in every newspaper published in his congressional district an advertisement in which he called attention to the fact that he had these seeds for distribution, and asked those who wanted them to write to him and make a request, and he would see that they were supplied.

After that advertisement had been inserted in every newspaper in his district, Mr. JAMES said that he received about 1,000 requests. He had 25,000 packages of seeds to send out, and he received, from that extensive method of advertising, requests for 1,000 packages. Then he sent out 40,000 printed slips to teachers in schools and asked the teachers to give these slips to the pupils. The slips were printed and contained instructions similar to the advertisements, stating how they could get seeds for nothing if they would send to the Congressman. After sending out 40,000 slips that were distributed among the school children in his district and taken home to their parents, and after inserting in all these papers the advertisements I have described, he received altogether about 5,000 requests for seeds.

Mr. President, it is probable that Mr. JAMES reached the most of the people in his district who wanted these seeds. He went to a great deal of pains and considerable expense in order to ascertain who it was in his district that did want them. That enabled him to send out about 12½ per cent of the packages of seeds he had.

Mr. President, if seeds were sent to people who needed them, who were poor, even though they were seeds of the common variety, I for one would have no objection. It does not seem to me that the Congressman ought to be made the means of this distribution. Something has been said here about the votes of the people, and it has been stated that votes are not secured in this way. I agree with that. It seems to me that very few votes are so secured. But whether or not there are any votes in it for the Congressman or the Senator, it is not a fair way to get votes. It is not a fair way to attempt to induce people to vote.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KERN in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. Without combating at all the attitude which the Senator has taken and is about to take on this question, I will ask him if it is not absurd for anyone to say that these seeds are sent out for the purpose of procuring votes? They are sent out by and to Democrats and Republicans and Progressives.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; but Democrats and Republicans and Progressives all have votes to cast.

Mr. GALLINGER. All have votes to cast; but is it not absurd, is it not wild talk, that any man is influenced in his vote by receiving a package of seed?

Mr. NORRIS. I think so, and on that line I will read a letter that a Representative from the State of Oregon received and which was printed in the RECORD on the 18th day of last April. Representative MCARTHUR, of Oregon, received the following letter——

Mr. GALLINGER. I have heard that letter read.

Mr. NORRIS. The letter is short, and I will just read it.

PORTLAND, OREG., February 15, 1916.

Hon. C. N. MCARTHUR, M. C.,
Seed Distributor, Department of Agriculture.

DEAR SIR: I received the seeds which you sent. I will let you know how they grow. I will vote for you on election day.

Mr. GALLINGER. He probably belonged to the same party the Representative did.

Mr. NORRIS. He might have voted for him anyway. I do not think that Congressmen send these seeds out with the idea that they are getting votes. I am not charging that.

Mr. GALLINGER. On the other side I have heard it stated that in fact letters have been written to men in public life scolding them for sending them seed on the ground that they did not grow. They would be much more likely to lose votes than to get them when that is the case.

Mr. NORRIS. I think as a rule the department get the best seeds they can, and I think they will grow if properly planted in the right kind of soil.

Mr. GRONNA. If the seeds were inferior when he found it out he might change his mind and vote against him.

Mr. NORRIS. That might be. He wrote the letter before the harvest came on.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska if his proposed amendment indicates that the applicants for seed should write their Representatives or write to the department?

Mr. NORRIS. I will answer the question and I am going to have the amendment read now in a few minutes, after I have made the preliminary remarks I expect to make. I only want to say before offering it that I am in favor of the Senate committee amendment striking this provision out of the bill, but we all realize that in the past while taken out in the Senate it has gone back in conference, and it seems to me to be the part of wisdom instead of striking it out to insert a provision that to my mind meets the objection of all those Congressmen who are insisting that seeds should be sent out. I send it to the desk and ask to have read the amendment which I propose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 26, line 3, strike out "$252,540" and insert "$75,000"; and after the word "Provided," in line 12 on the same page, strike out down to and including line 6 on page 28, and in lieu thereof insert the following:

That said seeds, bulbs, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants shall be sent only to such persons as shall make request therefor: And provided further, That all such requests made of Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress, if transmitted to the Department of Agriculture, shall be complied with by said department.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the part I propose to strike out is the language that makes provision for turning over to Congressmen their respective quotas of the seed, and my amendment provides that anyone who wants a package of seed shall write to the Agriculture Department and it will be sent to him, or if he should write to a Senator or Representative, as I presume they would sometimes, because they have been sent out by Congressmen in the past, that the request, if transmitted to the department, shall be complied with as though the request were made directly to the department.

Mr. JONES. I suggest to the Senator whether there should not in the amendment appear the words "in the order in which they are received."

Mr. NORRIS. I have no objection to that amendment. If the Secretary will send me the amendment, I would be very glad to add that language. I will add it at the end of the amendment.

Mr. JONES. Then the question would be whether they would only comply with the request when sent in by Senators and Representatives.

Mr. NORRIS. I will say to the Senator from Washington that I will add it so that it will read this way:

That said seeds, bulbs, shrubs—

And so forth—

shall be sent only to such persons as shall make request therefor in the order of the receipt of such request: And provided further, That all such requests made of Senators—

And so forth. I offer this amendment because I believe, if it is agreed to by the Senate, it can be retained in the bill in conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I dislike to take the time of the Senate, but I am opposed to this amendment. I am opposed to this sort of economy, because it is economy that makes in the end for waste. Every once in a while some Senator or Representative attacks the distribution of seeds, and he nearly always tells us that seeds are only distributed because Members of Congress desire thereby to get votes. Not every Senator puts his opposition upon that ground, but nearly always he, by innuendo, conveys the impression that the real reason for the distribution of seeds is the desire of the Congressman to secure votes.

Mr. President, if this amendment was to pass it would save each person in the United States approximately one-quarter of a cent. The amount of money that would thus be put in the pockets of the people is truly startling. The advocates of such a plan of economy surely have a fine issue upon which to parade their interest in the plain, common people.

I do not believe that the original proposition for the free distribution of a limited amount of seed by the Federal Government was initiated for any such small or contemptible reason as that some one figured that thereby he could secure favor with his constituency. I believe that the distribution of seeds in this country was begun and has been maintained because by sending out over the country a variety of seed, which are supposed to be of the best varieties and types of our grains and of our vegetables and of our flowers, there is scattered broadly throughout the entire country samples of these particular products, and that thereby the old principle of making two blades of grass grow, or two flowers grow, or two ears of corn grow, or two stalks of grain grow where one grew before is being carried out.

I call attention for a moment to a contradiction in which the advocates of the abolition of free distribution of seeds are involved. It is claimed, in the first place, that Congressmen want to send these seeds to curry favor with their constituency. It is claimed, in the second place, that their constituency do not want the seeds. Now, you can not make both arguments stand up at the same time. Unless the seeds are desired by the constituency, then it will do nobody any good to send them out. If they are desired by the constituency, then that is abundant evidence that they are of benefit to the constituency, because the farmers, the wives of men living in small villages who raise some of their own garden stuff, and the wives of men in cities and towns who raise flowers, will not favor a Congressman and vote for a Congressman who sent them something they do not want. The very fact that a Congressman sends out seeds to please his constituency must be bottomed upon the idea that the constituency has use for the seed and are grateful to those who send them. It has been urged that seed should only be sent to those who write for them.

The idea of a seed distribution is not bottomed upon the thought that the seeds are to be sent to people who have discovered that the Government is in the possession of some seed of improved variety and therefore write for something they desire. It is based upon the fact that the welfare of all the people in the United States rests in part upon the prosperity of the agricultural classes and because the promotion of agriculture is of benefit to everybody in the country. So the Government does not send out seed merely to please some man who has heard of something that he wants and accordingly asks for it. The object is to generally introduce into the country improved varieties of cereals, vegetables, plants, and flowers.

Now, let us see how it works. Unfortunately it is one of those things that never can be checked up, but, applying the common observation of men, we all know it is true that if a good farm wife has raised in her garden a tomato that is better than that raised by anybody else in the community, it is but a little time until all the other neighbor women will have gotten hold of that particular tomato. If a farmer has an improved variety of corn, in a short time his neighbors have learned of it and have obtained some of his seed. In a little time after if a flower of a peculiar or a rare variety is blossoming in front of some farmhouse or some village home the neighbors secure the seed or the slips. Thus there is gradually disseminated throughout every community the benefits of improved varieties of all plant life. I have not the slightest doubt but that every dollar that has been expended in seeds by the Government has brought back a hundredfold to the country.

The last thing we ought to be paring is this Agricultural bill. I agree with one side of the speech the Senator from Oklahoma made the other day—that side of it in which he complained that we were not sufficiently liberal in our Agricultural appropriations.

The startling fact is that the entire appropriation for agriculture does not equal the cost of two battleships.

I agree that we must put this country in a condition of defense. Yet I can not overlook the fact that every battleship we buy is a dead loss except as it may be and is, of course, necessary to defend the country. That necessity only arises because of the barbarous condition of the world in which we live. It is the use of that much steel, iron, and wood for a purpose that never produces another penny. When it is out of date it must be "scrapped," and that much of wealth is gone. The money we pay for the maintenance of the men in our Navy withdraws that many men from the useful arts and avocations where they would be creators of wealth, and makes of them consumers instead of producers. Every dollar we pay for the manufacture of a cannon is that much money laid away in a nonproductive instrument. Every dollar we pay for the purchase of powder and rifles and uniforms and equipment, and the maintenance of our armed forces, means that much money consumed, that much money so invested that it never brings back a dollar except—and I fully grant the exception—it is necessary to have these armed forces to protect the integrity and peace of our Nation. But if all the world would keep the peace, what an immense waste could be saved.

We have appropriated, and have properly appropriated, hundreds of millions of dollars in the direction I have indicated. But let me point the contrast between that kind of an expenditure and an expenditure for the improvement of agriculture. The man who can produce a condition that will enable the farmers of this country to raise 1 bushel of corn more an acre has contributed to the wealth of this country an incalculable sum. The chairman of the committee tells me it would mean an increase of 100,000,000 bushels per annum in the United States. The man who could produce a condition that would give us 5 bushels more corn an acre would increase the wealth of this country a half billion dollars annually.

I need not take the time of the Senate to extend that illustration to the other farm products, for every man's mind will at once travel over the ground upon the mere suggestion.

So, likewise, everything that we can do that will check farm pests will result in an equal or a proportionate benefit. I say that I am willing to vote every dollar that reasonably promises a return. I am not in favor of any cheese-paring policy on the Agricultural bill.

Senators tell their experience. This is mine: It has been my habit generally to send these seeds to some man interested in agriculture in each county or in each community, and to ask him to distribute them among the people who will make use of them. When I sought to change, and did in part change, that method last year I had almost innumerable complaints. The question asked by these people was if they were no longer to get seeds, and I was told that the people who had been in the habit of getting seeds for years in this way were clamoring and wanting to know why they did not get their distribution of seeds.

Some of these seeds are probably wasted; some are not properly planted; some seeds may never go into the ground; I grant that; but if 10 per cent of them go into the ground, if 10 per cent of them produce results, then the aggregate advantage to the country is far and away beyond the cost of the collection and distribution.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. If what the Senator from Missouri says be true, if we assume that he is right—I have no means of knowing what per cent of these seeds are used——

Mr. REED. I am not assuming that is right; I am assuming that as the most extreme view anybody could take.

Mr. NORRIS. I suppose the Senator is; but does not the Senator think that it is of very doubtful propriety for Congress to provide for this seed distribution, if we go on the theory that 90 per cent of the seed for which we provide the distribution is going to be wasted?

Mr. REED. No, Mr. President. If one seed falls in good ground and "brings forth an hundredfold," it pays ten times over for the seed that might be wasted.

Mr. NORRIS. Would we not accomplish that result if we adopted this amendment and sent these seeds only to those who wanted them?

Mr. REED. No. I have already answered that argument. But I repeat that I have not said that only 10 per cent is properly utilized. I suppose that 80 or 90 per cent is so utilized; what I said was that if only 10 per cent were utilized, that if in every community out of every 10 packages of seed you sent of an improved variety of beets, an improved variety of cabbage, an improved variety of corn, an improved variety of millet, an improved variety of cotton, or an improved variety of any farm product—if 1 seed out of 10 that is planted and grows, the result is to introduce into that community an improved variety, and in a little while everybody who is alive and up to date will have that improved variety. If you improve the variety, as I have undertaken to say, even by increasing the yield 1 bushel an acre, you vastly benefit the people of the country.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri further yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. NORRIS. I concede what the Senator from Missouri has just said, but I believe the Senator must likewise concede that this particular item, which the Senate committee seeks to strike out, does not propose to send out a single solitary improved variety of seed; it is just the common, ordinary seed which one can buy anywhere.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I will answer that statement in a few moments. Just at this time I want to discuss the proposition to cut out the House provision. I am not in favor of striking out the House provision at all. The last place you ought to economize is on a thing that reproduces itself a hundred times over. If a man had one grain of wheat that would grow and produce twice the crop of wheat now raised, that man would have in that grain of wheat more of wealth, more of possible advantage to the world, than is contained in all the gold mines in existence and all that ever will be discovered. When you cut off a distribution of seed you are cutting off at the point of re-creation; if you cut off the re-creation, you cut off a benefit that would otherwise have been multiplied by millions.

Why, Mr. President, it is only a few years ago, within my lifetime, when the common hog could outrun an ordinary race horse; when it was generally stated that a thoroughly developed razorback hog could reach his nose though a knot hole and eat three rows of corn inside the fence—an exaggeration, of course, but one which nevertheless in a way told the fact, although in an extreme form. Private individuals many years ago brought improved varieties of pigs to the United States. If the Government at that time had at a reasonable price distributed to every community in the country these improved breeds and thus given the country the superior animal 10 or 15 years earlier than it obtained them through private venture, the benefit to the country would have been immeasurable.

The same thing is true of cattle; it is true in a large degree of sheep; it is true especially of cereals and grasses. There was a time when there were large strips of country that were regarded as arid which are to-day bearing great crops of grasses and corn, because the Agricultural Department made investigation and brought seed to this country. In everything on the farm—and I do not stop to go into details—there has been a constant improvement, and if it had not been for that constant improvement the farms could not at this time feed the people of the cities.

Let us not commence our economies by cutting off seeds. Let us not for the sake of saving a few dollars in that way stop development. I hope that the Senate committee in its efforts to save money will not undertake to do it by cutting off an investment that makes for the creation of wealth.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. I have finished.

Mr. THOMPSON. I merely want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that I think his statement as to the cost of the distribution of seed is higher than it really is. It only involves an expenditure of about a quarter of a cent per capita instead of a cent and a quarter, as suggested by the Senator. I have figured it out, and I think that is correct. It is only proposed to appropriate $250,000 for this purpose, as I understand.

Mr. REED. Very well. I will accept the mathematics of the Senator from Kansas.

I think the Senator is right. I had figured it out in my head while I was on my feet, and probably got a decimal point wrong.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I am glad, for the good of the Republic, that the able Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] has not a corner on all the patriotism and all the desire to protect the National Treasury. Patriotism is a common attribute, and love of country is as natural to the heart of the citizen as the love of the child for its parents. It is quite fortunate that men may differ about questions of policy, even in matters of principle, without necessarily imputing improper motives. It would be well if all Senators should avail themselves of that privilege. It never strengthens one's position to impute unworthy motives to others. I do not think that there is anything in this appropriation for the distribution of seeds that savors in the least of graft. Certainly the Member of Congress who distributes the seed derives no pecuniary profit from it. It only means more work for him and even the outlay of his own funds in order to have the seed distributed to his constituents. If the distribution of the seed were made only from the common, worthless varieties of seeds which are produced in this country, of course, there would be no excuse or justification for this appropriation, but I am going to indulge in the presumption that the Secretary of Agriculture is going to carry out the law and obey the mandate of Congress. The law provides that—

> The Secretary of Agriculture is hereby directed to expend the said sum, as nearly as practicable, in the purchase, testing, and distribution of such valuable seeds, bulbs, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, the best he can obtain at public or private sale, and such as shall be suitable for the respective localities to which the same are to be apportioned.

If he sends out any other than the best of seed, which are developed after years of culture and intelligent selection, seed that are tested, then he fails to do the will of the Congress.

As has been so pertinently stated by the eloquent Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], the profits which are derived by the farmers from the planting of proper seed and the results which flow therefrom can not be overestimated. I have an instance in mind down in the State of Mississippi which illustrates what I want to impress upon the Congress. You will remember that for years the opinion prevailed throughout the land that corn could not be cultivated profitably in Mississippi. I am personally acquainted with a gentleman—a farmer—who devoted years to the development of a certain variety of corn. He went over his field and selected from the best hills of corn the most prolific; and year by year, after planting this selected corn, he succeeded in developing a variety that yielded more than twice the amount of ordinary corn. That man is a benefactor to his day and generation. And although his work was for his own selfish aggrandizement, still the result of his work will prove of inestimable benefit to the entire country. To my mind such service is of the highest order of altruistic endeavor.

The Department of Agriculture is doing a very great work for the American people, and what it has already accomplished is but an augury of what it may do. Whenever an acre of ground is made to yield more foodstuffs this year than it did last year the man who accomplishes that becomes a real benefactor; he becomes one of the saviors of the world; and the Nation owes to that man a debt of gratitude.

I was amazed some weeks ago when, while we were discussing the question of establishing a nitrate plant, it was stated upon the floor of this Chamber that scientists had made the statement before the committee that sufficient fertilizer could be developed by a plant that might be established at some point in the United States where the power was ample which would increase the wheat crop 3,000,000 bushels every 24 hours, which amount—as I remember making the calculation at the time—would more than double the wheat crop of America to-day.

Mr. President, the man who wants to promote the welfare of the American people will not hesitate on split hairs when it comes to making appropriations which are going to bring about such beneficent results. If the Agricultural Department does its duty and sees to it that the seeds which are distributed under the terms of this section are of the proper quality, it will greatly increase the profits of agriculture in this country; and, after all, the products of the farmer furnish the base upon which all the superstructure of commerce rests. By his labor the farmer produces the things that feed and clothe the world. When he prospers the whole superstructure of commerce prospers. When the wheat fields yield an abundant harvest the railroads are running their trains on full time, the factories are busy, and there are no bread famines. When the cotton farmer is successful in his labor and propitious seasons favor his endeavors the banks are filled with money, the merchants pay their bills, and prosperity abounds throughout the Southern States of this Republic. But paralyze the strong arm of the farmer, sterilize the soil, withhold from him propitious seasons, and all other branches of trade in the country languish and the commerce of the Nation dies. Agriculture is the great heart of commerce, which gives life and strength and stability to our entire business fabric.

I do not believe that any money carried in this bill will bring larger returns to the American people, without regard to vocation or calling, than the money appropriated in this paragraph, if it shall be prudently and intelligently invested. As I said a moment ago, I am going to indulge the presumption that the Agricultural Department is going to do its duty. I sincerely trust that in the matter of economy we may not begin here. Giving, in this instance, is hoarding—extravagance is economy. Giving for a purpose such as is provided in this bill will bring prosperity; it will bring money to the Treasury; it will bring wealth to the American people. It is an investment that is going to bring large returns in prosperity, preparedness, peace, and plenty for all the people.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I merely wish to say that some Senators seem to overlook the fact that there is another provision in the bill, carrying an appropriation of $60,000, under which new and rare seed are purchased and distributed. The provision under consideration now relates not to new seed; it relates not to rare seed nor to improved seed. It relates purely and simply to garden seed—the ordinary vegetables that are planted and cultivated in the gardens. The point which has always had the greatest force with me has been that the distribution of garden seed really did not have the effects ascribed to it by the Senator from Missouri. It does not start anything. It is a perpetual round. It is a sort of a wine press, a treadmill. We start everywhere just where we started the year before. I doubt if any of these seed are saved and garnered for planting the succeeding year.

I believe that this amount could be wisely expended if it were devoted to the purchase and distribution of new and rare and improved seed. All the arguments presented in favor of this provision would apply if it contained a provision that it should be devoted to the purchase and distribution of new and rare seed, or of improved seed; but I doubt whether it has this force with respect merely to garden seed or to vegetable seed.

I trust that the committee amendment will prevail, and that the matter will be sent to conference. Of course, it is vain to prophesy, and I do not know what might emerge from the conference; but I trust the Senate committee amendment will prevail, and that the item will not be restored.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me a moment, just in the interest of accuracy and also in reply to a statement by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], I call attention to the fact that the House text does not apply to just ordinary seeds.

Mr. VARDAMAN. It applies to testing valuable seeds.

Mr. REED. Let me read it:

> And the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby directed to expend the said sum—

That is, $252,540—

> as nearly as practicable, in the purchase, testing, and distribution of such valuable seeds, bulbs, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, the best he can obtain at public or private sale, and such as shall be suitable for the respective localities to which the same are to be apportioned, and in which same are to be distributed as hereinafter stated, and such seeds so purchased shall include a variety of vegetable and flower seeds suitable for planting and culture in the various sections of the United States.

Then follow other provisions.

Mr. President, that does not mean the ordinary haphazard seed. I agree with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] in his statement that if the Secretary of Agriculture does his work correctly—and, like the Senator from Mississippi, I am going to assume that he does—then this provision means that there is constantly to be sent out from the Agricultural Department the very best that can be obtained, so that there is being poured into each community of the United States some of the best seed that the country affords, which means inevitably an improvement.

The Senator from Oklahoma, who is the chairman of this committee, has been such a consistent friend of the agriculturist that I regret that he is inclined to take the view he does of this particular provision.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me——

Mr. REED. And I hope that, in view of this discussion, he will not insist on the Senate amendment. I know he will not, unless his judgment is to the contrary.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I feel that I ought to say, in behalf of the department, that at least, in my opinion, they exercise a great deal of care in the selection of these seed. I do not believe that the seed are subject to the criticism which has been advanced against them in certain parts of the country. I believe, as a rule, they are satisfactory in their yield, and I want to protect the department, so far as I can, against that particular criticism.

I trust that I am a friend of at least two classes of our people, if we have any right to differentiate them into classes. One is the farmer and the other is the taxpayer. I do not know that their interests ever come into collision, but it has sometimes seemed to me that this provision might very well be dropped, and that we might be able to work out something in conference that would guarantee the results which Senators assume flow from this provision now, and which I trust do, or will in the future. It seems to me that that, probably, would be the best course for the matter to take.

Mr. REED. I want to say that the Senator from Mississippi rose to ask me a question. I did not mean to decline to answer any questions or to permit any interruption he meant to make. The Senator from Oklahoma, not knowing that the Senator from Mississippi had risen, began speaking, and this is my first opportunity to yield.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I was going to make a suggestion, but it has escaped me just at this moment. I was listening to the colloquy with the Senator from Oklahoma, and I do not recall it just now.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator from Oklahoma suggests that the Senate agree to striking out this provision with a view of allowing it to go to conference and, further, with the hope that something can be worked out that will be satisfactory both to those opposed to the seed distribution and to those who are in favor of it.

I am one of those who believe that this legislating in conferences and by conferees has already gone too far. If there is any legislation to be acted upon, it ought to be decided upon by the Senate or the House and not left to the conferees. Legislation by conferees, which is so common to-day, is a violation of the rules of both Senate and House and against the practice in the past. The practice now is to secure the passage of a bill in some form, and then have conferees appointed. They in turn write an entirely new bill, bring it back in the shape of a conference report, and it has to be agreed to or rejected as a whole. No amendments can be made to it and no part of it disapproved unless as a whole. I think the time has come when that kind of legislating should cease.

A few years ago I was of the opinion that the distribution of seeds was almost a waste of money, and I then took the position that it would be very much better if it should cease entirely. During the last two or three years, however, I have changed my opinion, and it came about in this way:

In my State, I dare say, 90 per cent of all of the seed that is distributed by the Congressmen and the Senators of that State is sent to the schools of the State, and I will say frankly that I have never yet sent any of the seed to any of the schools in the State unless it had been by request from the school. The reports that come to me from the distribution of seed in this way are most gratifying, and it is for that reason that I am going to vote against the committee amendment striking out the House provision and allow the continuation of the distribution of seed, for I am positive that in the way the seed in being distributed now it is doing an immense amount of good among the people of this country.

If it were a mere matter of the distribution of garden seed, such as radishes, cabbage, or turnips, that would be one thing; but, Mr. President, there is more involved in the practice of distributing seed to school children by our Government than the receipt of the seed, even if it were confined to the three varieties that I mentioned. I believe the results are worth the money, because of the fact that the practice is encouraging the children of our country to plant the seed, cultivate the ground, and watch the growth from seed to maturity. I do not believe the children will live long enough to forget the lesson. If we can instill in the children the least degree of thrift, and the idea that they should create something, and not be eternally spending money made by others, I think the money appropriated for the distribution of seed will be most profitable to the future communities of this country.

In sending out seed, as I do, I never think whether the applicant is a Democrat or a Republican or a Progressive or a Socialist. I do not care whether he is black or whether he is white. If he is interested in the planting of the seeds, I am perfectly willing that he should get them so long as I have them for distribution; and I never think of what effect it will have upon me politically. I can not bring myself to the position of believing that that is thought of by Congressmen or by Senators. As far as I am concerned, I would just as lief have the seed—I might say, I would rather have the seed distributed by the department directly. I do not care how they are distributed, as long as they reach the people that will take advantage of them, and some advantage will be gained in their planting and cultivation.

I can say as to the provision in the bill appropriating $60,000 for new and rare varieties of seed that similar appropriations in the past have already demonstrated far-reaching benefits. The results in the intermountain country, on arid and semi-arid lands, have been such that no one will claim that that work has not been of inestimable value to the people and will be to the whole country. Lands that formerly were as bare as a floor and upon which nothing would successfully grow with the exception of sagebrush are now producing forage crops from seed that has been gathered from the far ends of the world; and if we continue to distribute such seed in larger quantities I am quite sure that there will be established in the West another producing forage crop for stock that will not only amount to enough to repay the $60,000 a year, but that will mean millions of dollars to the people of that section of the country.

Mr. President, I am in favor of the House provision. I shall vote against the amendment offered by the committee, and sincerely trust that the Senate will do the same.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, just a few words on this subject.

I think it is, of course, a very silly thing for the Government to send out, in the small packages that it does, the ordinary seeds. I do not think it does the slightest good to anybody to receive an envelope with 15 or 20 kernels of corn in it or 20 or 30 peas. Those common seeds can be bought in every hardware store and every country grocery store for 2 or 3 cents a package or 5 cents a package. I think it is a nuisance to everybody to have to send them out and is an offense to the common sense of the recipients.

I would be perfectly willing to send to anybody who wanted them—preferably through the Agricultural Department, if a system could be devised—any new kind of seeds that the people could experiment with. The great mass of the seeds that are sent out, I am satisfied, are of no use whatever to the people who receive them. I think very few people experiment with the ordinary garden seeds that they receive. They are thrown to the birds or given away, or they perform no useful function whatever. I think the Government ought to stop that sort of business. I do not know how much expense there is connected with it, but I think it is foolish for the Government to concern itself with that sort of thing.

I will say, if there are any new varieties of seeds or of plants that can be of any use to anybody that a person may receive and experiment with and develop a new species or make something of value grow in land where nothing now would grow, there would be some value to that; but this general distribution of ordinary garden seeds through the country is not only a joke, but it is more or less of a petty scandal.

I shall vote against the general distribution of garden seed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the amendment to the amendment be read; I am not familiar with it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 26, line 3, strike out "$252,540" and insert "$75,000," and after the word "Provided," in line 12 of the same page, strike out down to and including line 6 on page 28 and in lieu thereof insert:

That said seed, bulbs, shrubs, cuttings, and plants shall be sent only to such persons as shall make request therefor, in the order of the receipt of such requests: And provided further, That all such requests made of Senators or Representatives and Delegates in Congress if transmitted to the Department of Agriculture shall be complied with by said department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARDWICK (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and vote "nay."

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I wish to inquire whether the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have a pair with that Senator, which I transfer to the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] and vote "nay."

Mr. TOWNSEND (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Michigan was called). I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. SMITH of Michigan] on important business. He is paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. This announcement will stand for the day.

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], who is absent, and I withhold my vote.

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to my colleague [Mr. SMITH of South Carolina] and vote "nay."

Mr. UNDERWOOD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] and vote "nay."

Mr. WALSH (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] and vote "yea."

Mr. WEEKS (when his name was called). Has the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. WEEKS. I have a general pair with that Senator and will withhold my vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON];

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH];

The Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS];

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY]; and

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM].

Mr. CATRON. I will inquire if the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. CATRON. I have a pair with that Senator and withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. POMERENE. I desire to announce that the junior Senatr from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM] is detained on public business. He is paired with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT].

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] and vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 30, as follows:

YEAS—24.

Borah	Johnson, S. Dak.	Nelson	Sutherland
Brandegee	Jones	Norris	Taggart
Bryan	Kenyon	Page	Thompson
Clarke, Ark	Kern	Poindexter	Townsend
Fletcher	La Follette	Sheppard	Walsh

Curtis	Lee, Md.	Penrose
Dillingham	Lewis	Phelan
du Pont	Lippitt	Robinson

So Mr. NORRIS's amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, as I understand it, the question now is on the committee amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. On the committee amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have in former years occupied a little time of the Senate in giving what I thought were substantial reasons for continuing this appropriation. I will not repeat what I have several times before said, nor do I desire to delay the Senate by advancing any new argument if I could think of one. I will content myself by simply saying I shall vote against the amendment of the committee and in favor of the House provision.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I will merely say that I hope the committee amendment will be sustained by the Senate. I think I see what is in the minds of Senators, and if the item is not excluded from the bill entirely I think something can be done to conform it to the theory and view and purpose of Senators who seem to favor it.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I desire to make just this statement. I hope that the bill will be made to conform to the views of the Senate whatever those views are, and I think the place to find out whether it conforms to it or not is now and here and not after it has gone from the control of the Senate. I agree with what the Senator from Utah says on that subject. I have every confidence in the chairman of the committee, I do not want to interfere with his plans, but I think that the place to make the bill is here and in the other House and not in conference.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I should like to say in this connection that I feel the force of those observations, but as chairman of the committee I felt bound on the last roll call to vote against the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska, and other members of the committee voted against it, because the committee had reported in favor of striking out the section. I believe that but for that the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska would have prevailed. It was lost by 6 votes. A number of members of the committee voted "nay" because they were acting under the report of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. That is why I make that suggestion. Perhaps members of the committee felt under an obligation to stand by the report made by the committee, and but for that they would have voted for the Senator's amendment. I trust if this proposition is restored now the Senator from Nebraska will renew his motion in the Senate when Senators will be liberated from this obligation and can proceed in accordance with the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri and make this bill here and now in accordance with the views of Senators. I appreciate and other Senators will appreciate, I may say, the restraint under which members of the committee feel when a matter of this sort was under the consideration of the committee and when the committee acted upon it.

Mr. REED. Do I understand the Senator means to tell us that the committee tied itself up by some agreement by which the members of the committee will support the report regardless of the merits of a proposition?

Mr. GORE. I said nothing of that sort.

Mr. REED. Then I——

Mr. GORE. I said nothing from which the Senator can draw that inference. Members of the committee voted "yea" and "nay" on this proposition—some of them for and some of them against it—but I know some members of the committee voted "nay" who would prefer this amendment to the House proposition.

Now, I may say, though it is not usual for Senators to state what transpired in committee, no agreement of that sort was reached. The Senator knows that after a committee has had a measure under consideration, has discussed it and agreed upon it, there is some sense of an obligation to maintain the report of the committee as the common sense of the committee.

I may say in this connection, I voted against striking this proposition out in the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. I was voted down on the proposition, but I feel that as chairman of the committee I am under some obligation to reflect here the aggregate sense and mature judgment of the committee after it has been deliberately arrived at.

I had not intended to say that, but I feel that the circumstances justified it.

Mr. REED. How does the Senator expect, then, to have that obligation, such as it is, discharged by any vote?

Mr. GORE. My idea was this, Mr. President, that if the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska failed, as it did fail, the vote will recur on the proposition to strike out the provision contained in the House bill in accordance with the Senate committee report. If that motion to strike out prevails, then if in the Senate the Senator from Nebraska renews his amendment, Senators will, of course, be free. That is an angle at which we can approach the matter and vote on that amendment upon its merits without any disrespect toward the report of the committee. It is purely a matter of the situation in which we have become involved by the particular time and angle at which the amendment comes up.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. GALLINGER and Mr. REED called for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I presume that this is the time when I should state, if at all, that I am opposed to this House measure on free seeds and in favor of the committee amendment. It comes here finally, as the Senator from Utah suggested, in the form of the conference committee's report, and I must vote either for or against the committee's report in its entirety with no opportunity to amend that portion of it.

I only wish to state, and put myself on record upon the roll call that is to be taken, that I am in favor of discontinuing this appropriation. It is here as a perennial source of expense.

If I had been in favor of the principle at all I should have voted for the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska. It modifies the evil of the principle and not only reduces the appropriation but puts it in a condition where those who really want a supply of the kind mentioned can obtain it by application to the Secretary of Agriculture. This puts it where there shall be at least a minimum of the evil.

I come from a large agricultural State, not only of staple field products but in market and truck gardens. The whole scheme of seed distribution in the State of Illinois is regarded as a huge joke. Whenever an editor all the way from the smallest crossroads paper to a metropolitan daily runs out of anything else to exercise his satirical faculties on he selects the distribution of seeds, and properly so. A large part of them have properly treated it as in the extracts offered by the Senator from Iowa. The radishes furnished, for instance, are not properly developed enough, on the one hand, to be breath killers in a wet State or fit for table products in any of the States. It is universally regarded as a standing joke.

I do not know how many applications I have had annually, probably 500 from the entire State of about 6,000,000 population, embracing nearly a million and a half voters.

Instead of trying to start a seed exchange over in my office I started a sort of jobbing house. I just dump it out to the chairman of the county committee and send four 5,000 packages and tell them to use it ad libitum. It is just like the direction marked on the outside of a bottle when you get it from a prescription druggist, "Use as needed." So I just tell them to take them and distribute them to everybody wherever they think they will do the most damage.

As an adjunct of agricultural improvement, it stands in the catalogue of the supremely ridiculous in every great agricultural State. It may do some small good; I do not know that it is entirely a loss of money; but out of a quarter of million dollars the whole thing could be covered with $10,000 and do just as much good if distributed with any degree of care.

So I am against the whole principle of the thing, and I voted against the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska for that reason and not because of any lack of some merit in modifying it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, in the Agricultural Committee I voted in favor of striking out the House provision.

I thought there could be a more economical use of the money than is presented; that we could spend this money in sending other valuable seeds to farmers in a way that would be of more service to them.

I will say very frankly that, so far as my information goes, the House will insist upon this provision. I think they are wedded to it. Unless the conferees can agree with the House upon some clearly better plan, the conferees will have to bring the measure back here, and I prefer the House measure to no provision at all, although I think it is a wasteful measure. I voted to strike it out, because I think we could spend the money in a better way; but unless we find a better way I am in favor of retaining it. I am going to vote, however, to strike out the House provision. I hope the conferees will come back with a better way to distribute seed, but if they do not they will have to bring the House provision back.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. KENYON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I again announce the same pair as before and withhold my vote.

Mr. WALSH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] and vote "yea."

Mr. WEEKS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES]. He is absent and I withhold my vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). Repeating the announcement upon the last roll call concerning my pair and its transfer, I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY];

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK];

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH];

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM];

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN];

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]; and

The Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS].

Mr. REED (after having voted in the negative). I voted without announcing, as I should, the transfer of my pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN]. I now make that announcement and allow my vote to stand.

In this connection I desire to state that on the previous vote I likewise voted without making the announcement of the transfer. It was an inadvertence.

Mr. McLEAN. Has the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. McLEAN. I have a pair with that Senator and withhold my vote.

Mr. CATRON. I am paired with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]. If he were present, I would vote "nay." I withhold my vote on account of his absence.

Mr. GALLINGER (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN], but an understanding between us permits us to vote on questions of this kind.

I desire to announce that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] are absent from the Senate on official business.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] and vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 33, nays 21, as follows:

YEAS—33.

Borah	Clapp	Hughes	Lane
Brady	Clarke, Ark.	Johnson, S. Dak.	Nelson
Brandegee	Fletcher	Jones	Norris
Bryan	Gore	Kenyon	Overman
Chamberlain	Gronna	La Follette	Page

Curtis	Lee, Md.	Owen	Wadsworth
Dillingham	Lewis	Penrose	Weeks
du Pont	Lippitt	Phelan
Fall	Lodge	Robinson
Goff	McCumber	Saulsbury

So the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I simply wish to say, relative to the question which has just been decided, that I am favorable to the distribution of seeds to farmers who may desire them, and I therefore voted for the amendment submitted by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]. This matter was thoroughly considered by the committee in the form in which it was presented by the House; and I am opposed to the general and unrestricted distribution of seeds as provided by the bill as it came from the House and to the manner in which we have been making this distribution. I therefore voted against the House provision. Had the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska prevailed, I would have voted for the House provision as so modified. The whole subject now going to conference, I hope the conference committee will be able to make a satisfactory adjustment of the entire question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The next committee amendment passed over will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The next committee amendment passed over was, on page 53, after line 16, to insert the following:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site within or near the corporate limits of the city of Wellington, Sumner County, Kans., said site to contain a sufficient and suitable tract of ground, and the location of the site to be approved by the Secretary of Agriculture. When a good and sufficient title to said site is held by the Government of the United States, the Secretary of the Treasury, acting in conjunction with the Secretary of Agriculture, shall cause to be erected thereon a suitable building or buildings for the use and accommodation of the entomological laboratory or field station of the Department of Agriculture of the Government, at Wellington, Kans., said site and building or buildings, complete, to cost not to exceed the sum of $10,000.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, as this amendment is of much importance to the people of my State and to the great agricultural section of the Middle West, and my colleague [Mr. CURTIS] desires to be present when it is considered and to speak on the question, as I understand, and as he is absent on official business, and will be absent until day after to-morrow——

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Kansas that his colleague will be present on Wednesday morning next.

Mr. THOMPSON. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee, if, under these circumstances, he will not allow the amendment to be passed over until my colleague may be present?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I understand the junior Senator from Kansas desires to be present when the amendment is to be considered and to be heard upon it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to agreeing to the amendment?

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Chair mean is there objection to action upon the amendment to-day?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. I hope the request of the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON] will be agreed to, and that the amendment may be allowed to go over, because, as he has stated, the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] desires to be present when it is considered and to speak upon it. He is away at present on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If no Senator objects to the amendment, it is adopted. That is a good way to get rid of it.

Mr. REED. I object to it.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the amendment go over, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment goes over.

Mr. REED. I think, if we are entering upon an era of economy, by cutting off the distribution of seed to farmers, there is no use of buying any new ground on which to establish new stations.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I shall be ready to present the merits of this proposition at the proper time when it is regularly before the Senate for consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment goes over. The next committee amendment passed over will be stated.

The next committee amendment passed over was, on page 56, line 17, after the name "United States," to strike out the figures "$25,000" and to insert "$21,000," so as to make the clause read:

For the maintenance of the Montana National Bison Range and other reservations and for the maintenance of game introduced into suitable localities on public lands, under supervision of the Biological Survey, including construction of fencing, wardens' quarters, shelters for animals, landings, roads, trails, bridges, ditches, telephone lines, rockwork, bulkheads, and other improvements necessary for the economical administration and protection of the reservations, and for the enforcement of section 84 of the act approved March 4, 1909, entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States," $21,000, of which sum $2,500 may be used for the purchase, capture, and transportation of game for national reservations.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I trust the chairman of the committee will accept the House provision. As I said on Saturday last there are about 70 bird reserves in the United States. For about one-half of those bird reserves wardens have been appointed, and for that number we appropriate only $25,000.

I am reliably informed that unless the bureau can get at least $25,000 for this purpose there will be several of these bird reservations which will not be looked after at all. There is a reservation in Arkansas—the Big Lake Reservation—that had to be overlooked last year. There is a new reserve in my State—the Sullys Hill National Park—for which we ought to have at least $400 or $500 to provide a keeper to look after that particular reserve. The sum appropriated for this purpose by the bill as it comes from the other House is but a small amount—only $4,000 additional to what the committee of the Senate has agreed upon. I trust the chairman of the committee will allow the House provision to be restored.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from North Dakota a question?

Mr. GRONNA. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to know the reasons for the increase over the amount estimated for. The department estimates for $21,000—just what the Senate committee has reported to grant.

Mr. GRONNA. I know that, Mr. President. The amount estimated was $21,000; that is true; but the House increased the appropriation to $25,000 after they had heard the arguments of the heads of this particular bureau.

Mr. SMOOT. I understand, Mr. President, that the estimate was agreed to by all of the bureau heads, but that the increase was granted upon the request of a Member of the other House.

Mr. GRONNA. Oh, no; that is not the case, Mr. President. The appropriation was increased at the request of the bureau itself, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. Was it so increased over the estimated amount?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; over the estimate that was reported to Congress.

I do not wish to delay the Senate. It is hardly necessary to consume any length of time to dispose of this question. It is a small matter; but I know that the amount of $25,000 is needed if these bird reserves are going to be looked after.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, I wish to ask the chairman of the committee the reason for reducing this appropriation?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I will say that the committee had just one reason—the Book of Estimates calls for $21,000; and we assumed that the department had made a thorough investigation of the needs of the different parks or reserves to be served by the appropriation. The House committee recommended to the House the adoption of the amount contained in the Book of Estimates—$21,000. A motion was made, however, on the floor of the House, as I remember, to increase the amount to $25,000; and it was adopted by the House in that way. Now, the Senate committee reduces the appropriation to the amount asked for by the department, assuming that it will cover all the needs and requirements of that particular service.

I may say this illustrates the difficulty of economy in reducing these appropriations. It is difficult to turn down a request so earnest as that made by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA], and yet Senators are, of course, under some obligation when they have the guidance of the Book of Estimates. That constitutes both a reason and a justification, if I may need to say "justification."

Mr. GRONNA. I know the Senator will admit that we have increased appropriations in similar instances in this bill; that when we have received a letter from the department or when the head of a bureau has appeared before the committee or has given us information that increased appropriations are necessary, we have made the increase.

Mr. GORE. Of course, that is entirely true. Emergencies sometimes arise after the Book of Estimates has been submitted. I am not limiting my objection to that reason. I may say that, so far as I recall, no head of any bureau recommended this increase before the Senate committee and no one appeared before the committee to suggest an increase of this item. The committee therefore felt justified in standing by the Book of Estimates.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, of course the chairman of the committee states the fact when he says that no one appeared before the committee asking for this increase. The Senator knows how difficult it is for the heads of some of the bureaus to avail themselves of the privilege of appearing before committees. I will say to the Senator, however, that some of these men called upon me and asked for this increase.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, I do not think that the reduction of this appropriation will be in the interest of economy. If I understand this demand, it is for the protection of Big Lake, as the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] has said, for Sullys Hill Park, and for some other reserves for which at present there are no funds. There are some 70 of these bird reserves in the country. I am informed by reliable parties that something like 100,000 wild fowl were killed in violation of law on Big Lake during the last season. The hunters respect no season, but they kill the wild fowl at all times.

It is very important that these reserves should have a reasonable sum appropriated for their protection. I am quite certain that this money is felt to be necessary by those who have the responsibility of policing the reserves. I certainly hope that the amendment of the committee will be rejected. Otherwise we shall have some of the most important of these reserves entirely without protection. I repeat, it has been reported to me that 100,000 ducks were killed in one of those reserves in one season, in violation of the law and without any regard to the open and closed seasons.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I ask that the question may be again stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The committee amendment passed over will again be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 56, line 17, it is proposed to strike out "$25,000" and to insert "$21,000."

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, before the vote is taken, I simply wish to state that I trust the amendment reported by the Senate committee will not be adopted, for I wish to have the House provision adopted. We are appropriating thousands of dollars for some of these reserves. This property will all go to waste if we fail to get a sufficient appropriation to protect it and to care for the birds and animals in these reservations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The next committee amendment passed over was, on page 57, line 10, after the word "lands," to strike out:

Provided further, That of this sum not more than $5,000 may be used in investigating the disease of wild ducks in the Salt Lake Valley region of Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, for two years past the House of Representatives have included in the Agricultural appropriation bill an item of $5,000 for investigating the disease of wild ducks in the Utah Valley. It is unnecessary, I think, for me to say that that disease is still prevalent. The department has asked for the amount named in the bill, and the House has given the amount for that investigation. I can not see for the life of me why the committee should have reported to strike it out.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator what are some of the diseases of wild ducks?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the disease which is killing the ducks by millions is a new one, and the department for two years has been trying to discover what it is and what can be done to prevent it. I can not imagine an appropriation more important than is this, designed, as it is, to investigate the disease and to discover some remedy which will prevent the death of millions of ducks in that district.

Mr. KENYON. I do not think the committee had any information as to the diseases of wild ducks. Are these ducks not out in nature, enjoying all the blessings of good air and plenty of exercise? [Laughter.]

Mr. SMOOT. Let me make a brief statement to the Senator. It was first thought that the disease was caused by the smelter smoke—that the fumes from the smelters killed the ducks—and yet that can not be the case, because of the fact that the smelters had been in operation there for many years before the disease appeared. Then it was thought that it was because of the alkali in the water in the pools surrounding the lake, but investigations so far have not proven that to be positively the case. Now the department is undertaking to ascertain just what it is that causes the destruction of the ducks.

I have a letter here, which I desire to read, which will show the conditions existing there. While those conditions have improved in comparison with the conditions of two years ago, and the department still hopes that it will be able to prevent the death of the ducks from the disease which has destroyed them in the past, yet the work has not been completed. The letter is from Mr. A. P. Bigelow, a citizen of Ogden, Utah:

THE BEAR RIVER CLUB CO.,
Ogden, Utah, May 27, 1916.

Hon. REED SMOOT,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I hesitate to again encroach upon your time, but I have recently learned that the Senate Committee on Agriculture has cut out the item of $5,000 which was intended to be used in investigating the disease of wild ducks in the Salt Lake Valley region of Utah during the coming season.

For the past two years the Biological Survey has had Dr. Wetmore, of the department, located at the mouth of Bear River studying conditions in the hope of being able to find the cause of the duck malady which, since 1910, has destroyed so many millions of not only ducks but other species of waterfowl.

On account of the Salt Lake Valley being one of the four great lines of flight used by the waterfowl in their migration north and south, the great loss of birds that has occurred here has been of national effect. We have lent aid to the inquiry in every way possible. We are very much interested in the work of the department; we feel that the work has been pushed with the greatest zeal and that a lot of very valuable data has been acquired by the department, which has fully justified the expenditure; that it would be wise to continue the work through the present season, when, no doubt, it can be brought to a successful conclusion.

Therefore we would very much appreciate it if you can see your way clear to have the item of $5,000 reintroduced on the floor of the Senate when the bill is up for discussion.

Yours, very sincerely, A. P. BIGELOW, Secretary.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator who wrote that letter?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. A. P. Bigelow, of Ogden, Utah.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator if the department has made any report of its investigations so far as they have been conducted?

Mr. SMOOT. I have myself received reports from the department, but I do not know whether they have ever been published. I think, however, they have been. The investigation is still going on.

Of course, if it were only a matter affecting ducks for hunting purposes and to aid sportsmen, that would be an entirely different proposition; but there are millions of ducks in that locality affected and many people rely upon them for food.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, I wish to suggest to the Senator from Utah that this disease, as I understand, is intestinal, and if infectious and it should spread beyond its present limits, it would be disastrous to the waterfowl throughout the continent. It is very important that this disease should be eradicated.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. Bigelow says that this valley is on the line of flight of the birds going north and south. The department is undertaking to solve the problem of the cause of this malady which is destroying millions of ducks. I myself, in going out to Saltair, have seen the ground covered with them; and if there is any appropriation in this bill from which immediate beneficial results can come, it is this small amount of $5,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, in asking my question as to the department reporting on the subject, I assumed that their experts have made the autopsies——

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will excuse me a moment—and that the actual condition of the birds has been determined. Having accomplished that, then the next step would be to try to find a remedy, whatever it might be. If, as stated by the Senator from Utah—and, of course, he states it from knowledge—thousands and tens of thousands——

Mr. SMOOT. Millions of them, Mr. President.

Mr. GALLINGER. And millions of birds have died, it seems that any reasonable appropriation should be cheerfully granted to try to remedy such a condition.

Mr. SMOOT. Dr. Wetmore is engaged in this work.

This is the only item in the bill affecting Utah, and perhaps the Senator from Oklahoma thinks it ought to go out on that account; but I want to say to the Senator that to strike it out would be unjust. If there are any appropriations in this bill, as I have already said, that ought to be made, this is one of them, because the results of it will surely be beneficial.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLAPP in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. GORE. I do not care to interrupt the Senator; I thought the Senator had concluded.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I should like to interrupt the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I agree heartily with what the Senator from Utah has said. We are assuming to protect migratory birds, and we find that in the line of their regular flight, from South America perhaps, going through our country to the north and returning, this being the great interior passage ground, vast numbers of wild ducks are being killed. The idea of millions of those ducks being destroyed there, and at the same time making appropriations to protect migratory birds under the Federal law enacted by Congress a short time ago, seems to me ridiculous. I can not see why $5,000 can not be appropriated to ascertain, if possible, some means of preventing the great loss to the world that would be occasioned by the destruction of this particular species of game bird. I feel, being a lover of that particular sport myself and feeling the absolute necessity for the protection of the ducks, that there is no one item in this bill affecting animal life that is any more important than this little amount asked for by the Senator from Utah; and I trust that the Senator in charge of the bill will see his way clear to make no opposition to it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to say further that it has already been demonstrated that ducks from other sections of the country, which have been marked and numbered, have been found dead on the shores of the lake on account of this disease. This appropriation will not be to the advantage of Utah alone; it is a question of the preservation of ducks and game of all kinds which pass through that section of the country. I am going to ask the Senator from Oklahoma, without even a vote, to recede from this amendment; and I believe, after the explanations which have been made, that he certainly will be willing to do so.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, of course it is pretty hard, as I suggested a few moments ago, to resist an appeal of that sort from a Senator representing a State like Utah. I assume that his reference to this being the only item in the bill affecting Utah was, of course, made in a Pickwickian sense——

Mr. SMOOT. It was.

Mr. GORE. Because nobody, of course, would wish to discriminate against any State.

I think the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], certainly the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN], are under a misapprehension in regard to this disease. The experts have ascertained the cause of this disease; at least they feel satisfied as to their theory about it. It is caused by the alkali that seeps out of the ground where the water accumulates in pools. They have taken water from the pools and given it to uninfected ducks, and they died of the disease. They have taken the salt and the alkali from the bottom of these pools, and when they have dried it up, made a solution of it, and given it to well ducks the ducks have died. So that is a pretty clear demonstration of what is the cause of this disease. They have also demonstrated that the duck, if taken before the disease is advanced too far, can be cured by giving it fresh water, and Mr. McAtee, of the Bureau of Biological Survey, states that the ducks can be cured for something like 5 or 10 cents per duck.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. How are you going to catch them?

Mr. GORE. I am going to leave that to the game warden of Utah. I do not understand that myself.

Mr. SMOOT. I hardly think that is a cure, because the waters of Utah Lake are just as fresh as any waters in the world and the ducks visit that lake; in fact, waters from that lake furnish much of the irrigation water supply for Salt Lake County. Bear River, where the ducks visit, is just as fresh water as you will find anywhere in any mountain stream, and the idea of saying that giving a little fresh water to the ducks will cure them appears to me to be ridiculous.

Mr. GORE. I will say that last year the disease did not prevail to a large extent.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that it did prevail to a great degree last year and it has also prevailed this year.

Mr. GORE. Of course I would not dispute the word of the Senator from Utah, but I speak by the authority of Mr. McAtee, of the Bureau of Biological Survey. He says the disease did not prevail last year, and he ascribes as the reason—at least the theoretic reason—the fact that the rainfall was less than usual, and that a great deal of water was drawn from the streams by irrigation, and, consequently, the stagnant pools did not form.

Mr. SMOOT. The trouble with that statement is that the spring rainfall in the State of Utah last year was a great deal more than it was the year before. I think that last year the dry-farming crops of our State were better than ever before on account of the unusual amount of rain that fell during early spring.

So far as the alkali seepage is concerned, that comes from irrigation, and there was not last year a single acre more of irrigated land, where this seepage occurs near the lake, than there was the year before. The water is furnished through canals, and from those canals the water seeps just the same one year as another. So it can not be that that is the case.

Mr. GORE. Then, Mr. President, the money we have expended on this seems to have been entirely wasted.

Mr. SMOOT. No, Mr. President.

Mr. GORE. They seem to have made absolutely no progress; and the theories that have been advanced are controverted by the Senator from Utah, who does not, I suppose, profess to be an expert.

Mr. SMOOT. No; I do not say that the effects as stated are not correct. That may be true; but I do say that the disease of the duck existed last year, and it exists this year. I do say that the department itself estimated for this amount, and the House included it in the bill, and I do not know where the information came from on which it was stricken out.

Mr. GORE. The information came from Mr. McAtee, of the Bureau of the Biological Survey, and that was the authority upon which the Senate committee based its action. He stated that he thought the disease could be cured by the game warden of Utah, or that whatever steps can be taken to remedy a disease of that sort can be taken by him in view of their investigations.

I must say, in regard to the duck estimate, that unfortunately we do not have very many recommendations that an appropriation once made should ever be reduced; and I realize the difficulty of meeting this combination between the ostriches and the lame ducks. It is a pretty hard coalition to encounter, especially when it is done in the name of economy. I will merely add that that is the only reason the committee had—the report of Mr. McAtee.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

Mr. GORE. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator mentioned lame ducks. As I understand, this provision is not sufficient to take care of the lame ducks. This is really for wild ducks. How much has been spent on this proposition in the past?

Mr. SMOOT. About $10,000.

Mr. KENYON. And what has been accomplished by it?

Mr. SMOOT. I think a great deal has been accomplished by it. I think the result will be, from what I can learn, that perhaps with this appropriation there will be some kind of an agreement reached by all concerned as to how best to prevent this disease or malady in the future.

Mr. KENYON. This disease or malady seems to be only as to the wild ducks in the Salt Lake Valley region.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, the ducks fly from place to place.

Mr. KENYON. But it is not true, is it, that this malady exists in other parts of the country among the wild ducks?

Mr. SMOOT. I can not say.

Mr. KENYON. These wild ducks might go down to Atlantic City or other places like that.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, just one word more. Of course there can not be any debate about the fact that if they have not ascertained the cause of this disease, and if there is any prospect of ascertaining it and preventing the loss of life among these ducks there could not be any controversy about continuing this appropriation. The committee felt that the investigations had been made with sufficiently fruitful results.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator does not think for a minute that I have asked for an appropriation of $5,000 simply to keep Dr. Wetmore on this investigation, does he?

Mr. GORE. Oh, not at all. I never heard of Dr. Wetmore before. I supposed that probably the Senator had not seen the statement of Mr. McAtee before the House committee, made in February last, to which I have referred.

Mr. SMOOT. I hope that the amendment of the committee will be rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the next amendment passed over.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over is, on page 4, lines 25 to 26, and on page 5, lines 1 to 4, for studying methods of clearing off "logged-off" lands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] stated that he desired to speak on this amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, on Saturday last I made some observations concerning this amendment. My mind has not been changed about the matter at all since then. I believe it would be just as sensible for Congress to make an appropriation to teach dentists how best to pull teeth as it is for Congress to make an appropriation to teach farmers how best to pull stumps on their logged-off lands.

I had intended, Mr. President, as I suggested, to discuss the entire subject, which is included under the title of "Farm management," as I remember, but I have changed my mind about that. If Senators want to inform themselves as to the subject, if they will turn to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 14, when this matter was before another body, and read there a little debate that occurred between the chairman of the House committee, Mr. LEVER, and the Republican leader, Mr. MANN, they will get a good deal of information on this subject. I have read that debate, and it has impressed me quite deeply with the notion that this was a very extravagant expenditure of public money. I am only going to take two or three minutes on it to-day.

This bureau, or division, as I suppose it should be more properly called, has 1 chief of office at $4,000. His name, I believe, is Mr. Spillman. It has 1 executive assistant at $2,250, 2 clerks of class 3, 3 clerks of class 2, 6 clerks of class 1, 2 clerks at $1,100 each, 1 clerk at $1,080, 1 clerk or photographer at $1,020, 8 clerks at $1,000 each, 10 clerks at $900 each, 4 clerks or map tracers at $840 each, 3 clerks or map tracers at $720 each, 1 lantern-slide colorist at $720, 1 messenger or laborer at $720, 1 messenger, messenger boy, or laborer at $660, 3 messengers, messenger boys, or laborers at $480 each, 1 laborer at $360, 4 charwomen at $240 each, 1 library assistant at $1,440, 1 photographer at $1,400, 1 photographer at $1,000, 1 draftsman at $1,440, 1 draftsman at $1,200, and 2 draftsmen at $900 each; in all, $60,810.

Mr. President, what on earth a division of this kind is doing with 40 clerks, 3 photographers, and the other assistants that are allowed surpasses my comprehension. In the colloquy to which I called attention when the bill was under consideration in another body it was stated that the duties of the gentleman in charge of this division are to go into different sections of the country and ascertain whether the farmers are working to the best advantage; in other words, Mr. President, whether they are getting as large a return for their investment in the matter of crops as they ought to get, to teach them efficiency—the very thing that we are voting against here as applied to the manufacturing establishments of the country, because we are voting that the least intelligent man is the man who sets the standard. But the farmers are being taught by this gentleman to conserve their energies and get as much as they possibly can out of their little investment.

In other words, this gentleman seems to be making social calls. He finds a farmer who has planted 10 acres of oats and 5 acres of corn and 2 acres of potatoes, and he asks him how much money he has made out of it. Then he goes to the next farmer, and if he finds that he has planted substantially the same acreage he ascertains what he has made out of it, and if the second man has made less than the first man he tells him that he ought to get better results. Just how he is going to get them I do not know—whether these 40 clerks go out and give information of that kind to the horny-handed farmers, these clerks presumably being some of them college graduates and some high-school graduates and some who have not graduated from anywhere, employed under the civil service. Whether they tell the farmers how to get better results or not I do not know. But here is a division, Mr. President, the entire function of which, apparently, is to teach the farmer, from visiting him, how he can get better results than he is getting from his land, whether it is a small farm or a large farm.

Mr. President, this appropriation has been duplicated for several years past—I do not know how long—and no report has ever been made as yet of its operations or its results. That fact was brought out in the debate to which I allude.

I am not going to move to strike the provision from the bill. The House put it in, and I shall indulge the hope that it may do some good, although I confess I am greatly at a loss to know what good it can do. What I want to say about it—and all I care to say about it now—is that we are constantly discussing the question of rents in the District of Columbia. We are asking ourselves the question why this department or that department wants more floor space that it is having. I think it is easy enough to determine that from this item in the bill. Here is a division that, so far as we can learn, is doing mighty little good. Its officials have not made any report to Congress as to the result of their inquiries; and yet, in some building in the city of Washington—I do not know where it is; presumably in the Agricultural Department, which is now renting outside buildings and asking for additional appropriations for rentals—presumably in that department they have 40 clerks housed somewhere and working, I suppose, upon this question that comes to them in some way or other, I do not know how. I think it is something that is worthy of being discussed, and for that reason I have called attention to it as briefly as I have.

Mr. President, so far as the amendment is concerned, I have only to repeat what I said the other day—that I think it is rather absurd to continue an appropriation to teach farmers how to get rid of stumps on their logged-off farms, and as to what is the best quality of powder to blow those stumps out. I will ask the Senator from Washington how many different qualities of powder there are that he knows anything about?

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I do not know much about any kind of powder. I never have had any particular use for powder, and never have used it to any extent, but I have heard the people talk about the powder that is used. There are some kinds of powder that are known to be suitable for this work, and, of course, they are used, but some of it is too costly for the results that are accomplished.

Mr. GALLINGER. Is not the farmer likely to find that out, when he goes to clear off his farm, without being told about it?

Mr. JONES. The trouble is that there are large areas of these lands that the farmers do not go on simply because of the tremendous cost of getting off the stumps. They do not know how to get them off cheaply. They have not the money with which to conduct these experiments, and so they do not take them, and the lands are simply lying idle. There are thousands of acres of these logged-off lands that are not being farmed at all, very largely because they apparently have not discovered an economical and cheap way to get the stumps off—a way that would induce a man to go on the lands. It takes money to do it, and they have not the money with which to experiment in that way.

Of course a farmer who owns some land that he expects to farm can, when he gets the land, experiment with it, and get along the best way he can. A man who has not very much money, and does not know how to deal with these lands from which the timber has been cut and get the stumps off, does not take them up.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator from Washington if the farmer himself does not know how to do this, who is there connected with the Agricultural Department who understands it? There are no experts in stump pulling. There are experts, perhaps, in logrolling, and things of that kind; but how can you get men who know something about it if the farmer himself does not know about it?

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, the farmer knows something about getting stumps off, in a general way, of course. He knows something about the cost of it by the methods that are now in vogue. Some of them, on lands of their own, probably in pretty good shape, having plenty of horses and lots of tools, clear a few acres a year and get along very well; while if some economical way could be developed, much more of this land would be cleared, and the people who now hesitate and, in fact, refuse to go on these lands or take them might go on them.

As I understand, the work heretofore has been done by the Agricultural Department in cooperation with the State institutions. I do not know just exactly how it is done, but I know that a great many persons in different lines of work are able to go out, when they have some money, and carry on experiments and develop better methods of doing things than those who have been actually engaged in that line of work have developed. They give special attention to developing along certain lines. The farmer is not spending all of his time experimenting. He has to use the instrumentalities he has at hand to do the very best he possibly can. The purpose of this appropriation is to have somebody give special attention, and give his time, with some money back of him, to trying to determine the most efficient way of doing these things.

Mr. KENYON. I do not understand that any of these college graduates who go out to teach farmers how to farm know very much about the stump-eradication business.

Mr. JONES. Well, I do not know. These are not men who graduate. I do not know just who is the representative that the Department of Agriculture sends out.

Mr. KENYON. Would this cover experiments with different stump pullers, and matters of that kind? Does the Senator have that in mind?

Mr. JONES. I suppose so. I suppose that would cover those, as well as powder.

Mr. KENYON. I think that is about the only way of successfully getting rid of stumps.

Mr. JONES. No; there are some people out there who blow up stumps. They claim that they can do it more economically with one class of powder than with some other class of powder. Some claim that one kind of powder is too expensive; and a great deal of the work is done by blowing up the stumps, or a combination of methods of blowing up the stumps and pulling them out with machinery of different kinds. The only purpose of this appropriation is to try to ascertain the cheapest possible method of getting rid of these stumps.

So far as I am concerned, I am not going over the ground that we went over the other day. I do not ask this appropriation because it is of interest to the State of Washington. I have never yet in my service here asked anybody to vote for an amendment because I was urging it, or anything of that sort. I assume that the Senate will vote upon this proposition as its Members consider it upon its merits. If the Senate does not think it is a wise expenditure of money to carry on this work for another year or two, as Mr. Spillman says—Mr. Spillman in his testimony states that they can get good use out of this money for a year or two; he does not expect it to be continued indefinitely—if the Senate does not think that can be done, of course I would expect the Senate to adopt the committee amendment.

The provision was put in by the House after investigation. I believe, myself, that it is a good thing. I believe we ought to get some good results from it. I am hoping that we will. I do not compare it with any of the other items in this bill. There are many items in the bill about which different Senators have different opinions. We have just rejected a committee amendment with reference to an item in the bill that some Senators do not think the United States Government would get very great results from. I believe we will get greater results from an amendment of this character than from an amendment like that which the Senate has just rejected; but I do not question the wisdom of the Senate in rejecting that committee amendment. I will not question the wisdom of the Senate if it accepts this amendment, although I shall still hold my opinion that the Senate has acted unwisely.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES. If I have the right, I yield to the Senator. I think the Senator from New Hampshire has the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from New Jersey that the Senator from New Hampshire has the floor.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I was not aware of that fact.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will yield to my friend from New Jersey, if he will not get excited.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I would hardly believe that the average farmer throughout the length and breadth of the United States is so stupid as to need much instruction in the matter of getting rid of stumps. There are dozens of leaflets and pamphlets published in this country that give explicit directions for the use of dynamite in blowing out stumps, and I do not believe it is necessary to go about it in this way. I know of no farmer in my little Commonwealth who is so dull that he would not understand the method of blowing out a stump, with a few little directions, in a few minutes, without sending out some specific individual with a badge on him to tell him how to apply the dynamite. We not only use it for blowing out stumps but we use little sticks of dynamite for blowing out holes in which to plant peach trees and apple trees. It is cheaper than digging, and it is infinitely better. The soil is so disintegrated that it is made friable, and the trees thrive better.

I can not believe that in the State of Washington, from which the distinguished Senator comes, there is any farmer who needs any more instruction than a simple little leaflet on the use of dynamite to blow out a stump. He can blow them to smithereens with a little chunk of dynamite, at little or no cost to himself and without calling into agency any arm of the Government.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am glad that my friend from New Jersey fortifies me in the suggestion I made on Saturday last. Instead of looking up different grades of powder, perhaps there are different grades of dynamite which afford a more effectual method of blowing out stumps and rocks and other impediments to agriculture.

This is a small item, and yet it struck me as being so unusual and unnecessary that I could not help indulging in a little criticism of it. I want to read it again:

For studying methods of clearing off "logged-off" lands, with a view to their utilization for agricultural and dairying purposes; for their irrigation; for testing powders in clearing them; and for the utilization of by-products arising in the process of clearing; in cooperation with the States, companies, or individuals, or otherwise.

There are several things that struck me as being peculiar about that item. One was that we needed any instruction on how to get rid of stumps. We have been getting rid of them in New Hampshire from the earliest days. Another thing is, just what relation the taking off of the stumps has to irrigation.

Mr. JONES. I will say to the Senator that I was surprised to see that language in there myself. I did not know that it was there. That might be stricken out.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should think so. Certainly it would not apply to some States, like Washington and Oregon, where they have too much water now.

Mr. JONES. It would not apply where they raise timber, but there are some parts of the State to which it would apply. That does not apply to the logged-off land section. I admit that. I am surprised to see that in the provision.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield.

Mr. KENYON. I would suggest to the Senator that those lands might be a proper subject of irrigation. In the river and harbor discussion a year or so ago the Senator pointed out certain streams where it was necessary to remove the stumps in order to have some navigation in them.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; that is true.

For testing powders in clearing them.

Now, I asked the question, How many grades of powder are there? I do not know. There is smokeless powder. If the people who want to clear their lands do not like to see smoke they take smokeless powder. I suppose there are several grades of common powder. I do not know how that is. I did not suppose there were many grades. So I thought it was rather remarkable that they should be testing powder to see which one would be most effectual in blowing a stump out of the ground. I should think the one that had the most power would be the one that would do the most execution.

Then, again:

And for the utilization of by-products arising in the process of clearing.

I will ask the Senator from Washington what that means? What by-products do they get in the process of blowing out stumps?

Mr. JONES. I do not know.

Mr. NELSON. Shingles.

Mr. JONES. I do not know just what bearing that has, except, as the Senator suggests, making them up into shingles. That may sound funny, of course, to somebody who is not thoroughly familiar with the situation out there; but, nevertheless, there is a whole lot of truth in it. As was brought out the other day, a lot of these cedar stumps that were cut off high are being used now for shingles, and they make just as good shingles as the tree; but about them, of course, I do not know. I suppose there are lots of these stumps underground there. I do not know whether they could be used in making wood alcohol, or something of that kind, or not. I know we heard some talk about that some time ago.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I think I can answer that question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. LANE. Those stumps of the fir are loaded with pitch. The roots of them, if left in the ground, will not rot in 100 years, and I question if they will rot in 500 years. The by-products are creosote, tar, and turpentine. They started out a number of years ago to distill them for those products, which have a certain value. It has not been found profitable, for the reason that the stumps are very hard to get out of the ground; and if the Senator ever entered into the task of clearing the stumps off a few acres of that "logged-off" land he would find that it makes all the difference in the world what kind of powder you use. If you take a quick, hard-shooting smokeless powder and overload the charge it will blow a hole in the ground and not lift it cleanly. You have to put a charge of powder under the stump which will split it and lift it to the surface, but not heavy enough to send it flying; so they use a slower powder, and they do not tamp it as much as they would if they wanted to fire a cannon. That is a different proposition. They need something to lift up the stump and split it, so that they can get it out a section at a time and pull it out with a stump puller or grub it out with a grubbing hoe and an ax. The larger charge of powder is too expensive and also is useless. From the talk I have heard here, they are harder to remove than those of this eastern country. For a small stump it used to cost about 50 cents for powder. The powder has to be tamped by a man who knows the proper way to do the work and where and how to place the powder under the stump. Those stumps do not have a tap root. They spread over much ground.

Mr. GALLINGER. That, I assume, has been demonstrated, from what the expert from Oregon tells us.

Mr. LANE. I object to anybody who has ever dug out a stump or blown one out or had any experience in this world in the way of making his living by his hands, when he gets up and relates simple information which he has learned by experience, being dubbed an expert by Senators who perhaps never dug out a stump in their lives. I am not an expert.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have dug out a good many.

Mr. LANE. I have had under my charge the blowing out of several acres of them—not the largest timber—and I have grubbed some of the largest stumps. It is difficult work, and it is expensive work; and if there is anything the Government can do to teach those people how to get rid of them cheaper than they can do it now it will be valuable information, for the reason that where the largest tree grows, and the biggest stump stands in the ground, and the most expensive to get out is the most valuable land and richest soil in that country. They will not grow except upon rich land; but if you grub an acre of it, it costs about $200 for the labor. It will average that, I think; and when you get your land grubbed it will not sell for over $60 or $70 an acre.

Mr. GALLINGER. I assure the Senator from Oregon that when I used the term "expert" I used it in a complimentary sense rather than otherwise, because the Senator from Oregon is really the only Senator who has given us the slightest information on this subject.

Mr. LANE. I thank the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I do not intend to offer an amendment to that item asking the Agricultural Department to spend five or six thousand dollars in telling the people of New Hampshire how they can get rid of rocks on their farms to the best advantage, but I think there would be just as much sense in it as there is in this amendment. We have a very serious proposition confronting us. We have to clear our land of rocks before we can cultivate it. We have used dynamite, we have used powder, we have used stump pullers, and I will assure the Senator that I have removed a great many stumps—that is, a great many stumps have been removed under my direction—and we have some knowledge of it. We would like some short cut to get rid of rocks on our farms, but I think the old farmers know just about as much about it as the Agricultural Department does. We would like some short cut to get rid of rocks on our farms, but I think the old farmers know just as much about it as the department.

That is all I am going to say about this. If the Senate thinks it is wise to keep this little appropriation in the bill, it will not be disagreeable to me in any way; but I think we ought to commence a system of elimination in a good many of our bills where appropriations once made for a specific purpose are carried year after year, whether the real necessity exists or not for its continuance.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I sympathize with the Senator and the problem which the farmers of the rugged fields of New England must encounter, where the soil is covered with bowlders. It is very similar to what we have in the West, where the stumps are left after logging off the land. Those stumps rot out very slowly. They are not like the timber in this part of the country, for the reason that the stump of a fir tree contains the most pitch, which is a preservative. It is full of tar and turpentine and creosote, and frequently you will find a tree growing over and astride the stump of a dead tree a thousand years old and the roots of the dead tree just as sound, apparently, as the day it fell. They use them for pitch wood. Everybody from the pine district knows that an old pine knot and a pine root is practically indestructible. They do not rot out in the time allowed for any living man to make a farm by waiting for them to decay. If one grubs them, he tackles stumps, many of them 6 or 8 feet through. All through Oregon and Washington there are thousands of acres of them. Hundreds of the trees before they were cut were 150 to 200 feet high and 100 feet to the first limb, and you have a contract on your hands in trying to remove them.

If by some investigation of the department it should develop a plan by which this very valuable creosote and turpentine and tar could be extracted from those stumps and render a return for the expense of removing them, it would be invaluable. You may go up and down the coast hundreds of miles and find the logged-off lands which farmers are not using and can not use; they grow up into brush, a trash growth such as dogwood, wild cherry, vine maple, sweet laurel, and salal, and become impenetrable thickets.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

Mr. LANE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GORE. I should like to say to the Senator from Washington that the bill carries a separate appropriation for testing various products to ascertain what can be obtained from them and to assist in placing or obtaining those materials on a commercial basis. A laboratory is maintained at Madison, Wis. The bill carries an appropriation for that purpose. I think for two or three years we carried an appropriation for the University of Idaho to determine the products that might be extracted from the various woods.

Mr. LANE. I will say for the information of the chairman of the committee who has charge of the bill that experiments to make a profit from the by-products of timber, such as pine, fir, and other resinous trees which contain those constituents, do not apply to logged-off land, for you can not handle this waste material from stumps which are cut off 10 or 12 feet above the ground, and some of them 4 or 5 feet, without first getting the stumps out of the ground in order to take them to the distillery in order to distill these products out of them, and the problem is to get them out of the ground. The rest is easy. The cost is in removing them from the ground. On the other hand, you can not operate a still by placing it on top of each individual stump, although that has been tried. So we are compelled to do one of three things—grub them out, blow them out, or burn them; and in order to burn them you have to bore them and watch the fire and keep it fed from the waste material around wherever you can secure it. A stump will burn for two weeks, which means time. I have the idea, however, that burning is the cheapest way, for the reason that they contain much resin, and a settler can keep a number of them burning at one time. But if he wants to get rid of them quickly and to develop his home for his family in a good climate and with good soil, he is face to face with a proposition that is almost insurmountable. They blow them with powder. I want the Senator from New Hampshire to realize that it takes a different kind or character of powder to blow that from what is used to blow rock. It takes a hard-hitting powder to blow bowlders. They use such a powder to shatter bowlders in placer mines. The roots of these stumps extend 50 and sometimes even 80 feet under the ground, and it is laborious work to dig them out. It is a problem that faces a small empire, and it is just as good land as there is on this continent.

It is good enough land for anybody. Homes for thousands are lying there unused. The settlers are unable to go upon them for the reason that they have not the means to clear the land, and it lies there doing no good on earth to anybody at present. I do not know what the department will do or the results which they will obtain, but if they were to turn their attention to the subject and by some fortunate chance or by some investigation discover some easy method, some material which they could place upon the tops of them which would rot them quickly or easily and remove them from the soil or utilize them for the by-products, it would be worth millions of dollars to the people of the Pacific coast, not only of Oregon but of Washington and northern California, and this appropriation of $5,000 would be a bagatelle—would be but a bagatelle for valuable information, and I shall vote for it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I learned from the chairman of the committee that an amendment similar to this, carrying a similar amount, has been in the Agricultural appropriation bill for eight years, and that the bulletins have been issued by the department. That did not seem to be known when an inquiry was made in another body, in which they practically admitted that they have tested every known device, that while something in the future may be discovered that will be of greater value than what they now are cognizant of, they have practically come to the end of their rope, so to speak.

Mr. LANE. I have read the bulletin, and they recommend to the settler the grubbing hoe and the ax, and that makes the land cost about $200 an acre in labor.

Mr. GALLINGER. The grubbing hoe and the ax, of course, have been used from time immemorial for that purpose. They did not discover that.

Mr. LANE. That was discovered by Cain. We get that information from the old Biblical story.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have said all I care to say.

Mr. JONES. With reference to the last suggestion I want to read just a passage from the hearings before the committee. This has not been closed up entirely, as would be the impression from what the Senator has said:

Mr. SPILLMAN. On certain phases of the problem I think we have reached final conclusions, or approximately final. They probably will never be absolutely final; that is, as to methods and as to cost of using these different methods we have reached approximately final conclusions. As to the conditions under which any given method is justifiable we have not reached final conclusions yet; but we have made, I think, important progress in that direction this past year, and we can use that fund to very great advantage at least for a year or two more. I can not say now just how much longer, but we certainly can use it this next year to advantage.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GORE. I wish to observe in this connection that I am going to try to get hold of some of these devices to get stumps out of the ground in order to get some of these items out of appropriations.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Do I understand that the committee amendments have been disposed of?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There are a number passed over.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I should like unanimous consent, if I can have it, to submit an amendment at this time, as I am obliged to attend a conference committee meeting at 3 o'clock.

Mr. GORE. I will ask the Senator if he alludes to the beet-seed provision.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do.

Mr. GORE. I have no objection to the offering of that amendment at this time, because I do not think it will occasion any delay or provoke any discussion. For that reason I consent, as far as I can do so, that it may come up now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. By unanimous consent the amendment will be received. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 22, line 18, substitute "$51,495" for "41,495," and after the word "Provided" insert:

That not less than $10,000 of this sum shall be used for the development and improvement of American strains of sugar-beet seed and for the establishment of a permanent sugar-beet industry in the United States: And provided further.

Mr. VARDAMAN. On what page?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Page 22, line 18.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I will state that this is an amendment increasing the appropriation in the bill $10,000 and providing that that $10,000 shall be used for the purpose mentioned in the amendment.

The amendment was offered by me, but was not referred to the department until after the committee had made its report. The Agricultural Department has reported upon it favorably and has given the reasons in full showing the need of this kind of work. Owing to the European conflict, we can not obtain the sugar-beet seed that the country has been in the habit of obtaining abroad. We have not produced it here. The department, however, has made some experiments in conjunction with the work of sugar producers in the country showing that the seed can be produced here and of a better quality, and tend to better sugar-beet product in the country.

The statement of the Secretary is most illuminating, and I am going to ask to have it put in the RECORD, together with the report that has been made under it by various experts having this matter in charge. I know that there can be no objection to the amendment if Senators understand the real object of it. I do not care, however, to delay the Senate with reading any of the communications from the Secretary of Agriculture unless it is desired.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I ask leave to insert in the RECORD a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture and other matter prepared in the department on this subject.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE, June 5, 1916.

Hon. T. P. GORE,
Chairman Committee on Agriculture and Forestry,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR GORE: Commenting upon the amendment proposed by Senator TOWNSEND to the bill (H. R. 12717) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, etc., it is evident that the purpose of this amendment is to provide the sum of $10,000 for use in the development and improvement of American strains of sugar-beet seed and the establishment of a permanent sugar-beet seed industry in the United States. The amendment proposes to provide for this through an increase of the subappropriation under Bureau of Plant Industry for "sugar-beet investigations" from $41,495 to $51,495, with the following proviso:

"That not less than $10,000 of this sum shall be used for the development and improvement of American strains of sugar-beet seed and for the establishment of a permanent sugar-beet industry in the United States."

Careful consideration of the conditions as they exist at this time discloses that owing to the existing war in Europe there has been very great difficulty in securing a supply of sugar-beet seed adequate for the present needs of our growers. The industry has in the past relied almost exclusively upon importations of seed from Germany and Austria, supplies from which sources have been obtainable only with great difficulty and in a much smaller total quantity than in the past. The outlook for a sufficient supply of sugar-beet seed from Europe during the next year or more is so uncertain that the beet growers are apprehensive lest the securing of a sufficient supply for the maintenance of the present acreage during the season of 1917 from foreign sources may be impossible.

Experimental work by this department and beet growers in the past indicates that it is entirely practicable to produce in this country a supply adequate for our present needs, at least, when sufficiently definite knowledge regarding the localities best suited to the production of the seed and the methods of planting, harvesting, and handling the seed are understood.

Under pressure of the existing exigency the industry has undertaken to greatly enlarge the American production through plantings prepared for last year and made during the present spring in several States, including Michigan, Montana, Idaho, Utah, and Colorado. If normal yields can be secured, the plantings already made are expected to produce approximately 40 per cent of our seed requirements for the spring plantings of 1917, and the production of approximately 60 per cent of the requirements for the spring of 1918 is hoped for.

The undertaking rests however, upon such a narrow base of practical experience and training that every agency bearing on the solution of the problems involved should be brought into play. There is needed also an enlargement of the work already under way under the existing subappropriation in the breeding of improved strains of beets specially adapted to American conditions, as the maintenance of a high sugar content in the crop is not less important than the provision of an adequate supply of seed.

It would, therefore, appear that, regardless of whether the country should aim ultimately to produce its entire supply of beet seed, the existing exigency should be met to the extent that this is possible through scientific research and practical experimentation in cooperation with the industry.

The language of the subappropriation for "sugar-beet investigations" (H. R. 12717, Senate print, p. 22, lines 14–22) is adequate to cover this work, and in view of the necessity that the work be undertaken on an adequate scale during the present crop season if the desired results are to be accomplished, it is recommended that the sum of $10,000 be added to this subappropriation, changing the sum $41,495, in line 18, page 22, to $51,495.

Very truly, yours, D. F. HOUSTON, Secretary.

SUGAR-BEET SEED.

Economic position: One-half the sugar of the world is produced from sugar beets, and in 1915 one-fifth of the sugar requirements of the United States, or 874,220 tons, worth, at 4½ cents per pound, $78,000,000, was produced from beets grown on American farms.

Due to plant breeding: The entire industry, at home and abroad, is dependent upon the skill of the plant breeder, who has developed the most scientifically bred plant in the world; but as the plant is subject to atavism, the most scientific work is required constantly and will be for all time, else the beet will deteriorate and become useless for sugar-making purposes.

Dependence upon Europe: The domestic beet-sugar industry is wholly dependent upon the warring European countries for its supply of sugar-beet seed, the imports of which now amount to 145,000 bags annually, costing over a million dollars, and without which it could not operate.

Seed supply cut off: Germany and Austria, our main source of supply, have prohibited the exportation of sugar-beet seed, and after eight months' continuous work through our Departments of State and Agriculture and our embassies abroad the present insufficient supply of sugar-beet seed will result in several American beet-sugar factories being unable to turn a wheel during the next campaign.

Can grow seed in America: The Department of Agriculture has demonstrated that better sugar-beet seed can be produced in the United States than the best seed which can be purchased in Europe, but because it can not be produced as cheaply as it can be purchased there and because it is an industry requiring the utmost agricultural skill and patience American beet-sugar companies have continued to depend upon foreign growers for their seed supply.

Will produce seed in America: Because of the difficulty experienced in securing foreign seed, the members of the United States Sugar Manufacturers' Association have formed a cooperative sugar-beet seed company, known as the United States Beet Seed Co. This company was formed last October with $100,000 paid-up capital, which since has been increased to $300,000, and is preparing to produce a large quantity of seed. In 1916 this company and the various domestic sugar companies will produce 60,000 bags of sugar-beet seed, mostly from mother beets selected from fields of commercial beets in the fall of 1915. For next year's planting the seed company has imported 50 bags of the highest grade elite seed, for which it paid $1,000 per bag, and the 1917 domestic crop of seed is estimated at 85,000 bags.

Domestic beet-sugar crop of 1916–17: Notwithstanding the shortage of seed, plantings this year probably will amount to 800,000 acres, for which 16,000,000 pounds of seed, or 145,000 bags, should be planted, but as the supply is short less seed will be sown per acre, which involves the risk of not securing a sufficient stand should weather conditions be unfavorable at planting time.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE SUGAR-BEET SEED STATION AT SCHUYLER, NEBR., 1891–1893.

In 1891 your department established a sugar-beet seed-breeding station at Schuyler, Nebr., and the report issued by the department giving the results there obtained in 1893 showed an increase of 12 per cent of sugar per acre as compared with the results obtained from the best imported grown alongside of the home-grown seed.

[From Department of Agriculture Farmers' Bulletin No. 52, 1897.]

(By Dr. Harvey W. Wiley.)

In the experiments conducted at the station at Schuyler during the season of 1893 a comparison of the beets grown from domestic and imported seeds was made. The plants from the native-grown seed seemed to have a higher vitality and to be better suited to the climatic conditions of the locality than those grown from imported seeds. They showed during the growing season a more abundant foliage and a better development of roots. This higher vitality and quality of the beets grown from domestic seed illustrate in a forcible degree the advisability of the production of our beet seed at home. Even granting that seeds produced in foreign countries have the same high qualities, it must be admitted that their vitality is in danger of being very much diminished during shipment to this country. The moist air of the holds of the ships in which they are transported often produce moldiness and incipient germination, which tend to greatly diminish their value. Not only did the beets produced from the home-grown seed have a higher percentage of sugar, but they also afforded a higher yield per acre, as determined in the experiments at Schuyler. The mean tonnage per acre from the home-grown seed was 21.1 and from the imported seed 17.9. The mean pounds of sugar produced per acre from the home-grown seed was 5,891 and from the imported seed 5,185. This shows an increase of about 12 per cent in the actual quantity of sugar per acre when domestic seed was used. These data should be carefully studied by all those who are interested in the production of beet sugar in this country. Perhaps the time has not yet come for the inception of such work, but it is evident that it will not be long before there will be a demand for the establishment in this country of a plantation or plantations devoted exclusively to the production of beet seeds on the most approved scientific principles.

The quantity of seed required to plant an acre is about 15 pounds. The approximate number of acres planted to beets in this country during the past season was 30,000, requiring 450,000 pounds of seed. It is evident that there is already an opportunity for the active operation of a large plantation devoted exclusively to the production of beet seeds for domestic use.

Another point to be considered is that by the importation of foreign seeds there is danger of introducing those fungoid and microbian diseases of beets which have produced such ravages in Europe.

STATE OF WASHINGTON SUGAR-BEET SEED.

Some years ago the Department of Agriculture established an experiment station on the seed farm of Mr. Morrison in the State of Washington, and good progress was made until he sold his farm to the fruit boomers, when the station necessarily was discontinued.

The following tables show that for a period of six years this State of Washington seed gave the department better results than did the best imported seed grown alongside of it:

SUGAR-BEET SEED.

GERMINATION TESTS OF THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE IN 1903.

The foreign seed tested was Dippe, Vilmorin, Rabbethge & Giesecke, Mahrenweiser, Schreiber, Breustedt, and Ramdohr. The tests of domestic seed were Morrison, grown in the State of Washington; Utah Sugar Co., grown in Utah; Agnew, grown in California; and Alma Sugar Co., grown in Michigan.

Some of the domestic seeds tested fell below some of the foreign brands, but the State of Washington seed showed a materially higher germinating power than did the best foreign seed. The average results secured from the nine brands of foreign seed and from the Washington seed were as follows:

	9 brands foreign seed.	Washington seed.	Superiority of Washington seed.
			Per cent.
Number of sprouts in 6 days	150.4	198.5	31.9
Number of sprouts in 14 days	166.7	203.0	21.8

Total average number of sprouts from 2½ pounds seed in 14 days	78,175.0	98,600.0	26.1

The sugar content of the Washington beets, as shown by 185 tests made by the State Agricultural College at Pullman, Wash., October 10, 1903, was as follows:

	Number of beets.	Average sugar in beet.

DISADVANTAGE OF RELYING UPON FOREIGN-GROWN SEED.

In 1903 the United States Department of Agriculture sent Mr. J. E. Tracy, sugar expert of the department, to Europe, where he spent five months on sugar-beet seed farms. The following is from his report in the Yearbook of the Department of Agriculture for 1904:

"While there are careful and painstaking growers in France and Germany, where the great bulk of the sugar-beet seed used in this country is produced, there are many who are not only careless in their methods but dishonest in their practice in handling sugar-beet seed. They pose as growers and claim to make extensive analyses every year of individual roots, whereas in reality they simply buy seed where they can do so most advantageously, regardless of its quality. A large proportion of the seed used in the United States is furnished by such dealers, while the better class of German growers who, through 15 or 20 generations of plants, have conducted most careful field and experimental trials and annually spend thousands of dollars in testing individual roots and making records and photographs of them, sell but very little seed here. This is largely due to the lack of interest and failure on the part of the American seed buyers in investigating the methods and establishments of those from whom they secure seed.

"The information one generally secures from sugar-beet seed growers not only as to their own business but as to that of their associates as well is frequently unreliable. Exaggeration is very common and it is frequently impossible for an outsider to reconcile the results of his own observations with the statements made, both in conversation and in print. Seed which is sold as having been grown in the most careful and scientific manner is often actually the cheapest and poorest grade of seed procurable. It consists of both new and old seed, which has been grown under widely different conditions of soil and climate and is mixed together by specially constructed machinery. It is explained that the different lots of seed are mixed to insure an evenness both in the germination of the seed and in the quality of the crop. The absurdity of mixing all kinds and grades of seed to produce uniformity in the crop is evident.

"It is generally admitted that the sugar beet, being one of our most highly bred plants, is very susceptible to the influences of both climate and soil conditions; hence seed should be used which was produced under the most favorable conditions for the production of beets best suited to each particular locality. The best seed imported is raised for the most part under very similar climatic and other conditions, but it is sown here in America under all conditions and in all soils, in New York and Michigan, Nebraska and Washington, and in the arid and semi-arid regions of Utah and California. No single strain can be the best for all of these varied localities. We can never expect to secure the best results in our sugar-beet industry when we have such conditions in the seed branch of the business.

IMPORTANCE OF GROWING SUGAR BEET SEED AT HOME.

"It is absolutely essential to success that we secure the best quality of seed, and past experience has conclusively shown that we can not depend upon doing so from abroad. We must raise it ourselves, and in such a careful, scientific manner that it will not only be of the best quality but will have such characteristics as will make it adapted to the particular needs and requirements of the locality where it is to be sown. Seed raised on a particular soil and under certain climatic conditions may not be best suited for planting in like soils and under similar climatic conditions; in fact, very often it is not. Seed from comparatively poor soil may do best on rich soils, or that raised in the East may do best when sown in the West. Only study and personal experience on the part of each factory manager can determine what seed is best suited for the conditions in his region.

"For several years efforts have been made to raise seed on a commercial scale in various sections of the United States, particularly in the States of Michigan, Nebraska, Utah, Colorado, and Washington, but not until recently has any serious attempt been made to raise it from pedigreed roots, or in accordance with the scientific methods found to give the best results.

EXCELLENCE OF AMERICAN-GROWN SEED.

"During the last three years the Department of Agriculture has been conducting extensive experiments in testing American-grown seed in comparison with the best grade of imported seed procurable. These experiments have shown a marked difference in sugar content, purity, and yield, and in these qualities the American-grown seed compared most favorably with the imported. This is remarkable, as the American-grown seed was grown by seedsmen who had little knowledge and made little use of the scientific methods practiced in Germany. If it is said that the superiority of American-grown seed in these trials was due to the fact that the imported European seed was of inferior grades, then it is high time we gave up depending upon Europe for our supply, as every effort was made to secure for these comparative tests the best grades of seed procurable in Europe, and the prices paid were as high as those paid by the most critical factories there. If it be said that the soil and natural conditions were responsible for the superiority of the American-grown seed, it makes more evident the desirability of growing our own seed and emphasizes the importance of our doing it according to strictly scientific methods."

Mr. TOWNSEND. I also ask leave to insert in the RECORD a letter written to the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN], who is greatly interested in the subject, but who is unavoidably absent, and wanted to have this matter inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. GORE. I rose to refer to the absence of the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN], who has expressed great interest in the amendment just adopted.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be inserted in the RECORD, as follows:

UNION SUGAR CO.,
San Francisco, June 23, 1906.

Hon. JAMES D. PHELAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I am inclosing for your consideration some data in re the trouble we have had in securing sugar-beet seed for our factory operation and in re the efforts of our company, together with the other sugar beet companies of this country, to grow seed for ourselves.

During the past eight months every effort has been put forth to obtain an adequate supply of seed from foreign countries. These efforts have been only partially successful. As stated above, the sugar companies of this country have launched a new industry by organizing the United States Beet Seed Co. for the purpose of growing our own seed.

This work requires the skill and continuous effort of the best plant breeders which are to be had. Only the skillful, methodical work of our great Department of Agriculture could insure the highest results, and this is written to you to suggest the propriety of a modest increase in the Department of Agriculture appropriation bill, the same to be used for the establishment of Government experiment stations on these seed farms that have been established. The Beet Seed Co. will provide everything necessary in order to grow the seed, so the expense to the Government should not exceed $10,000 a year.

It is not to save the industry money that the suggestion is made, as the $10,000 will be a small part of the total amount expended in the growing of seed. It is, however, with a view to making doubly sure the success of an agricultural enterprise which, if successful, will distribute the amount now expended for foreign seed among American growers, which is conservatively estimated at $1,000,000. This will also make our sugar industry independent of Europe, and which, if we succeed in breeding a superior strain of seed, will go far toward offsetting the commercial advantage of the lower cost of labor in foreign sugar-producing countries.

While I have not consulted with the officers of the seed company referred to above, I naturally assume that they would be more than pleased to have the cooperation of our Department of Agriculture in order that the success of this important agricultural undertaking may be made doubly sure, and as I personally know that you are very much interested in all that is for the development of California, I have addressed this to you with the idea that you will do everything possible to bring about the result desired.

Thanking you in advance for whatever you may do in the matter, I am,

Yours, truly, GEO. E. SPRINGER, Secretary.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Are amendments from individual Senators to the Agricultural appropriation bill in order?

Mr. GORE. I will say there is an amendment on page 14 which was passed over. I believe the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] is in the Chamber. I presume that comes next.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair can not answer the Senator from Texas. The Chair does not know whether the committee amendments are disposed of, or whether they are to go over, or what is to become of them.

Mr. GORE. I think the Chair had better take counsel of the clerks and see whether the records will illuminate the subject. I do know of other amendments to the bill as an appropriation bill which precede the riders. It is my desire to finish those amendments before taking up the riders.

The VICE PRESIDENT. They have been passed over, and the Chair does not know whether the Senator from Oklahoma wants to take them up now.

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir; I want to go back and begin at the beginning.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then the Senator from Texas is not in order. The amendment on page 14 will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 14, line 9, strike out "$208,320," and insert "$214,320."

Mr. PITTMAN. This is the place where I desire to move an amendment. I have submitted the amendment which has been read and passed over. I will state what is simply the purpose of the amendment.

As the section now stands it provides that $25,000 may be used in experimenting for breeding and maintaining horses for military purposes. That is the way it reads at present. The amendment I have offered and which I now desire to have considered provides for $200,000 instead of $25,000 for the purpose of stallions for the upbreeding of thoroughbred and standard-bred horses in this country, both for agricultural and for military purposes.

It is reported to-day to the Senate by Gen. Aleshire, the Quartermaster General, that out of the 22,000,000 horses in this country only 30,000 are fit for cavalry purposes, and that of that 30,000 probably only 10,000 could be obtained at the present time. That statement alone should call attention to the condition of the horses in this country. To think that there are only 30,000 out of 20,000,000 horses that are fit for cavalry service—and yet this is one of the greatest horse-raising countries in the world!

What is the reason of it? It is because the breeding of horses in this country has been absolutely neglected. It is because we find very few sound horses among the middle-weight horses in the country. In fact, the type that is most general in this country, the most universally serviceable in this country, is unfortunately the most defective. That condition does not exist in any other civilized country in the world. Austria, France, Germany, England, Italy, and Russia have for a great many years been upbreeding horses in their countries through the methods that I am now urging upon the Senate. Even in Canada the Canadian Government has sent all over the world and purchased the very finest stallions that could be obtained, and they are furnished to the farmers of Canada having sound mares for service free of charge for the purpose of upbreeding the stock of that country.

We find to-day that the medium-weight horse of every country in the world where any attention is paid to the development of animal life is superior to our own. We are appropriating in this bill $24,000,000 to improve the agricultural products of this country, and yet we are appropriating only $25,000 for the upbreeding of the horse, the raising of which is one of the great products of the country. We are appropriating under the head of animal industry, where this amendment is found, $4,000,000, and yet of that $4,000,000 devoted to the upbuilding of the animal industry only $25,000 is set aside for the upbuilding of the horse industry of this country.

The necessity of the horse in military preparedness is apparent to all of us. Even in France, where they have the greatest roads in the world, where the motor-driven vehicle has been developed to the fullest extent, the allies were compelled to purchase $100,000,000 worth of horses during the first year of the war. The statistics show that the average life of cavalry horses in the war now progressing in Europe is only 13 days.

Now, then, as a method of defense in this country—and we are compelled to consider methods of defense; no matter how peace loving we may be we must realize that unjustifiable wars do occur; we must realize that they will occur again; and it is our duty to be prepared to defend this country and to be so prepared that, if possible, we will discourage an attack; but if the attack comes, then we will be so supplied with the instruments of war that the loss of life on our side will be minimized as far as possible.

Take our present condition. Let a war occur between this country and Mexico—which we all hope may be averted, and which there are good chances of averting—will not the cavalry be the most essential arm of that war? Has not the experience of our forces in Mexico to-day demonstrated that it is almost impossible to move troops except with cavalry? The thirty or forty or fifty thousand soldiers that we will have in Mexico, or that we have there now, will nearly all require horses. Yet the Quartermaster General of the United States Army says there are only 30,000 available in all the United States fit for the service. How in the event of war can you expect to remount those men, when the history of the war in Europe shows that the average life of a cavalry horse is only 13 days?

Mr. POMERENE. May I ask the Senator on what information is the statement based that there are only 30,000 horses fit for cavalry purposes in the United States?

Mr. PITTMAN. It is based upon the statement of Gen. Aleshire, Quartermaster General.

Mr. POMERENE. I know; but where does he get the information to enable him to make a statement of that kind? It seems to be an authoritative source. I am amazed at the statement, if it be true.

Mr. PITTMAN. You will find that since 1911 the Quartermaster's Department has been assembling statistics for this purpose. I have here the bulletin that was issued in 1911, which practically sustains the statement of Gen. Aleshire, which was made in the last few weeks.

Of course, this bill can not remedy the immediate conditions, but the immediate conditions have forced upon us the necessity for this character of work for the future; that is, the phase of it for preparedness.

On the other hand, it is one of the greatest industries in this country. It is a known fact that a sound horse, with good wind, good bones, good heart, is twice as efficient and will produce twice the work in his life as will a defective horse of the same weight and size.

The economy of having horses of a sound type is so apparent that it requires no argument in a matter of this kind. Yet we have for years and years entirely overlooked the upbreeding of the horse, when we have spent millions of dollars in the upbreeding of all kinds of plant life. We furnish seeds to the farmers through the country free of cost for the very purpose, if possible, of bringing about a higher standard and a better grade of plant life. We have established throughout the whole country agricultural experiment stations for the very purpose of establising a better grade and a more productive plant life. Here we have the horse, that is absolutely essential to the production of all farm material, that is in more general use as an instrumentality of farm production than any other instrument in existence, an instrument that not only plows the field but transports to the market the production of his farm, and yet we have entirely forgotten that instrumentality of farm life, that instrumentality of commerce. We have made no effort to upbuild that blood; we have made no effort to create a sound, fine, durable type of horse in this country. We have shut our eyes to the experiences of the surrounding nations. We have predicted that the horse would be cast aside by the self-propelled vehicle, and yet we know that is not coming true. Increase the self-driven motors as much as you may, and you still have in its proper sphere the horse, and you always will have.

This matter is of very great importance. It is important on two grounds: It is important upon the ground of an intelligent development of one of the greatest products of this country, and it is necessary upon the ground of preparing ourselves with instrumentalities of war equal to those of any nation which in the future we may have to meet. In this connection I ask that a letter from Gen. Mills, which I send to the desk, be read by the Secretary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF STAFF,
DIVISION OF MILITIA AFFAIRS,
Washington, June 7, 1916.

Hon. KEY PITTMAN,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SIR: In acknowledging your letter of the 23d ultimo inclosing a copy of the bill introduced by you in the Senate for the encouragement of the production of better horses for agricultural and military purposes permit me to express sincere hope for the passage of the bill.

I feel that the many years of military service, much of which was as a Cavalry officer, may serve to enable me reasonably well to express an opinion of the merits of the bill; certainly it will serve to explain my great interest in a practical step toward encouraging the production of better horses.

For a number of years it has been increasingly evident that the type of horse suitable for military purposes is no longer holding its own in our country. The production of this type has decreased seriously, and the increasing difficulty of a supply experienced in the purchasing even of the modest number required for our small Army at peace strength is evidenced very emphatically by the high rise in cost.

The difficulty and cost of providing suitable horses for an army of the size that would be required were we forced into war with a first-class power would be correspondingly great; it can be avoided only by the exercise of foresight in encouraging our breeders to return to a type of horse that will meet the need. Experience shows that no real results can be attained except under Federal guidance and assistance. The average farmer and horse owner of to-day have no definite idea as to what constitutes the military type of horse, especialy for Cavalry, nor is he likely to find in his neighborhood a stallion with such blood in his veins. A campaign of education is necessary; suitable types must be shown through our horse-raising States, and suitable-type stallions must be there placed in service, with just and equitable agreement between the Government and the private owner as to disposition of colts.

It is manifestly extravagant and unwise to purchase at any price for military use a horse whose conformation and mechanical framework indicate probable breakdown and replacement under conditions of military service. A great and increasing majority of horses offered now to our purchasing agents are undesirables of this kind. If this country is to avoid the danger of some day being forced to take such horses for the reason that there are no suitable ones to be had, it is obvious that legislation providing Federal assistance and guidance must be given to it.

I feel that the steps you are initiating are timely from the standpoints of both financial economy and military efficiency, and I hope your bill may be enacted into law.

With esteem and kindest regards, I remain,

Very sincerely, yours,

A. L. MILLS,
Brigadier General, General Staff.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I also ask that a very short letter from the Acting Secretary of War, Hon. William M. Ingraham, be also read on the subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMERENE in the chair). The Secretary will read as requested, in the absence of objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, May 27, 1916.

Hon. KEY PITTMAN,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR MR. PITTMAN: In compliance with your request contained in communication of the 23d instant, I have the honor to submit the following report on S. 5799, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, herewith returned, being a bill "For the encouragement of the production of better horses for agricultural and military purposes," and appropriating $200,000 for that purpose.

Great difficulty has been experienced in securing suitable horses for the military service, caused by a decrease, throughout the country, in using horses for saddle purposes and also brought about by the development of heavy draft types of horses and the great extension of mechanical traction. This condition of affairs prompted the War Department in March, 1910, to request the cooperation of the Secretary of Agriculture in evolving a plan for enabling the Army to obtain suitable horses. This request resulted in each department appointing a representative, who, conjointly, outlined the plan set forth in the accompanying Circular No. 178 for breeding horses for the Army.

In brief, the breeding scheme consists of having the Government furnish high-grade stallions and breed them to suitable mares owned by farmers and breeders, who enter into an agreement to sell the resulting foal to the Government during the year the same is three years old, provided the Government desires to buy the animal. If the owner prefers, he can retain the colt by paying a service fee of $25. In case the Government does not exercise the option to purchase the colt (on account of defects in the animal or otherwise) the owner may retain the foal without paying a service fee. Blank copy of agreement herewith.

Congress appropriated $50,000 in fiscal year 1913 to put this breeding scheme into operation, and the succeeding fiscal years the following funds were appropriated to the Department of Agriculture for the purpose of breeding horses for the Army in accordance with the plan in question:

Fiscal year 1914	$50,000
Fiscal year 1915	30,000
Fiscal year 1916	25,000

Owing to the limited funds, the Department of Agriculture had to confine its operations to the following districts, each district at present containing the number of stallions specified below:

DISTRICTS.	Number of stallions.
New England:
Vermont and New Hampshire	7
Central district:
Virginia, West Virginia, and southern Ohio	18
Kentucky and Tennessee	12
Total	37

It would be very desirable to extend this breeding plan by purchasing additional stallions and placing them in various parts of the United States. This would greatly encourage the breeding of suitable horses for military purposes and a sufficient number of suitable mounts would be produced to meet the needs of the Army in time of peace and in war, and the animals could be purchased at very reasonable prices. The appropriation contemplated in accompanying bill (S. 5799) would accomplish this purpose to a great extent, and its passage is recommended.

Unless steps are taken to extend the plan of breeding horses suitable for military purposes by appropriating sufficient funds, it is believed that the Government will be very materially handicapped should the time come when large numbers of remounts are needed.

Very respectfully,

WM. M. INGRAHAM,
Acting Secretary of War.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, for the purpose of hastening the conclusion of this matter, I ask leave to have published in the RECORD Circular 178 of the Department of Agriculture, Bureau of Animal Industry, which is referred to in the letter of the Acting Secretary of War.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The circular referred to is as follows:

[Circular 178. Issued April 19, 1911.]

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Bureau of Animal Industry.
[A. D. Melvin, Chief of Bureau.]

BREEDING HORSES FOR THE UNITED STATES ARMY.

[From the report of the Chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry for 1910.]

Although horses are now commanding higher prices than have been known for many years, there is evidently a great shortage in their production. The United States Army has for some years found it difficult to maintain an adequate supply of suitable horses, and it seems that if the efficiency of the Cavalry is to be maintained it will be necessary for the Government to take up some systematic plan to encourage the breeding of horses of a type suitable for Army use.

During the past year the Secretary of War requested the cooperation of the Secretary of Agriculture in evolving some plan for enabling the Army to obtain suitable horses. The Secretary of War pointed out that the supply of horses fit for remounts is becoming more and more limited, and that the present indications are that the country would find it impossible to mount its Army from its own resources in time of war and is rapidly reaching a point where the needed supply of suitable remounts for the present strength of the Army would be extremely difficult to obtain, if obtainable at all. As a result this department designated a representative to join with a representative of the War Department in considering the subject and formulating a plan. The Department of Agriculture was represented by Mr. George M. Rommel, Chief of the Animal Husbandry Division of the Bureau of Animal Industry, and the War Department by Capt. Casper H. Conrad, jr., Third Cavalry, United States Army, detailed for duty in the Quartermaster General's Department in connection with the purchase of remounts. These gentlemen have outlined a plan for breeding horses for Army use, which is presented in the following pages. The statement setting forth the reasons why the War Department regards it as imperative for the Government to undertake the work of encouraging the breeding of horses for the Army was prepared by Capt. Conrad and is inserted here with the consent and approval of the Quartermaster General. The plan for breeding the horses was prepared by Mr. Rommel with the assistance of Capt. Conrad and other officers of the Army stationed in Washington, and has been formally approved by the War Department. To carry out this plan would require appropriations for the use of the Department of Agriculture estimated at $250,000 for the first year and $100,000 a year thereafter.

THE NECESSITY FOR GOVERNMENT ENCOURAGEMENT OF BREEDING ARMY HORSES.

The difficulty experienced by the Quartermaster's Department in procuring remounts seems perfectly natural. The early settlement of the United States, particularly the eastern part, went on some time before the advent of steam and electric transportation, and the settlement of the western part even now in the most remote points takes place without the assistance of modern transportation. In all new countries the horse has played an important part in the advancement of civilization and the general scheme of settlement. Even in the first part of the nineteenth century the horse was a very much more important animal in Europe and the British Isles than at present.

During the opening of a country the settler must, owing to the absence of roads and other forms of transportation, put his principal reliance upon the horse; he is forced to travel trails and long distances, and for this purpose finds that he needs a horse suitable to carry him quickly and comfortably to his destination. To accompany him and carry the articles necessary for his daily life, he needs a pack animal. So long as conditions remain unchanged, a desirable type of saddle and pack animal will exist in good numbers; but so soon as the country becomes more settled and habitations more permanent, the mountain trail gives place to the road, and later the country road to the worked and metaled highway, and the type of horse rapidly changes. The necessity for the saddle animal lessens; the light draft animal becomes more important; the people ride less and discard the expensive pack transportation; the horse is attached to a light vehicle with which he is able to transport more than one person or a heavier load. As the roads become better and the country more extensively cultivated, the lighter horse is used more for pleasure or solely as a means of drawing the carriage; another type of horse becomes more useful and economical, and the light draft type appears to be succeeded by the heavy draft. Next come the railroad, the trolley line, and the automobile. The people ride and drive less, and fewer horses of the riding types are bred. Riding is indulged in almost solely for pleasure. A new country is a country on horseback; an up-to-date one, a country in an easy chair.

In the United States the type of horse suitable for Army purposes is now proportionately less numerous because it is not found necessary to the civilians of the country, and the Quartermaster's Department is finding it each year more difficult to supply the yearly demands of the mounted branch of a small Army.

The horses of our mounted branches are severely criticized by representatives of foreign armies, while from our own officers come reports of poor animals, poor performance, many quickly developed unsoundnesses and short life.

As an illustration, in the West it is found that a marked change has taken place in recent years in the so-called "cow pony." Twenty years ago cattle ranches of the West were practically without fences and unlimited, and the cowman found it necessary to breed and use a type of quick, active pony. As the West became settled and as agriculture was taken up the large free ranges changed to the large fenced pastures of a few years ago. These large pastures are now being broken up into even smaller ones. The yearly round-up requiring riding over immense distances and active work has about disappeared. To-day cattle are not chased and roped, but are driven into the small pastures and pens and quietly handled. The quick cow pony of the past has given place to a larger animal, frequently having a cross of draft blood. It may be said that the cow pony of the West has practically disappeared.

Virginia has long been famous for the horse known as the Virginia hunter. Even the breeding of this type of horse has been sadly affected by the high price of heavy draft horses, and further influenced by the fact that only those hunter-bred horses that attained full size brought high prices. Under the haphazard methods of breeding in vogue in these sections not more than one in six colts could be depended upon to attain the size necessary to bring a high price, and the farmer found himself the possessor of four or five small horses for which there was no steady market. When he found that all draft colts, in spite of minor blemishes, brought good prices as 3-year-olds, he at once ceased to breed the hunter type, with its many misfits, and commenced on heavy draft horses. The disappointment in the hunter-bred horse would not have been so great had the breeding of this type been done scientifically and rationally. The hunter-bred horse as now raised in Virginia is sired almost entirely by stallions either sent to the country gratis of sold at small prices to individuals by wealthy people in the North who desire hunters and are looking to the future supply. A farmer living in the neighborhood of a thoroughbred stallion, and feeling that he would like to breed a hunter, will take advantage of the nearest and cheapest stallion in his neighborhood, regardless of what the result may be. All that he considers necessary is that the horse should be, first, a thoroughbred; and, second, that he should be a pleasing individual; never taking into consideration the fact that the mare might not be suited to the horse nor the horse to the mare. Hence the misfits, the discouragement, and the decrease in number of the hunter type. It is said that not one-tenth as many hunters are bred in Virginia to-day as formerly.

Even more appalling than the present scarcity of horses suitable for military purposes in this country is the large number of unsound horses that are constantly being examined by purchasing officers. Horses of this class can be the result of but one thing, and that is an absolutely irrational system of breeding, or the lack of any system whatsoever. When it is remembered that a sound and serviceable horse of a particular type costs no more to raise than an unsound horse, the immense waste caused by our present lack of system is only made more apparent.

The enactment in a number of States of laws whose effect is to prohibit the standing of unsound stallions for public service will no doubt, in time, tend to correct this evil; but not until the horse-raising States generally prohibit absolutely the public stud service of unsound stallions will unsound horses be less common on the market. Such legislation in one State is an excellent thing for that particular State, but it is very likely to drive all the unsound stallions across the borders into adjoining States where laws against the unsound stallion do not exist.

The next census will probably show that there are in the neighborhood of 23,000,000 horses in the United States. It would seem that in this immense number there must be many thousands of horses suitable as remounts for the Army, and there probably are; but the fact that the type desired is comparatively scarce, and that the horses that would do are scattered over an immense area and are in demand for other purposes than the military, makes it not only expensive and impracticable to obtain them, but next to impossible to do so.

The purchase of young horses for the Army during the last fiscal year has been more or less successful, but all officers connected with the Quartermaster's Department have reported that while they were obtaining a fair number of horses, they could see no prospect of obtaining them in any number in future years, and all report the apparent necessity for the Government's assistance in the rational breeding of Army horses in the country.

As no system of supply, so far as the Army is concerned, which deals with peace conditions alone, is complete, the War Department must constantly keep in mind the possibilities of war, and it is not surprising that, finding difficulty in purchasing a supply of remounts for the peace Army, there should be more or less uneasiness when war requirements are considered.

The waste of horseflesh in war times is enormous, and in a war of any magnitude in which this country might be engaged the number of horses required will not be confined to the thousands per year, but will extend into the hundreds of thousands.

In this connection attention is invited to a few of the records on this subject:

"There were purchased for the armies of the Federal Government in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1864, 188,718 horses. There were captured from the enemy and reported 20,388. Leaving out of consideration those captured and not reported, it should be observed that the Army required 500 horses each day for remounts. This, therefore, is the measure of destruction of horses during the same period.

"During the eight months of the year 1864 the cavalry of the Army of the Potomac was supplied with two remounts, nearly 40,000 horses. The supply of fresh horses to the army of Gen. Sheridan during his campaign in the Valley of the Shenandoah has been at the rate of 150 per day.

"During the Russian campaign the French crossed the Nieman in June, 1812, with cavalry, artillery, and train horses to the extent of 127,121. About 60,000 of these pertained to the cavalry. On December 13 the remnant of the invading army recrossed the Nieman with 1,600 cavalry horses. In six months the horses had all disappeared."

Examples of the terrible waste of horseflesh during war might be multiplied ad libitum.

The question of remounts for the Army became so serious during the Civil War that in 1863 the Cavalry Bureau was established. One of the principal duties of this bureau was the purchase and inspection of horses for the Army. Six remount depots were established. The most important of these was Giesboro Manor, situated on the north bank of the Potomac, nearly equal distance between Washington and Alexandria. To show the magnitude of operations of the Cavalry Bureau, the following report of the Giesboro depot is given:

On hand Oct. 1, 1863, cavalry horses	4,281
Received to Dec. 31, 1863	36,932
Total		41,213
Issued	22,204
Sold	1,651
Died	1,637
Total		25,492
On hand Jan. 1, 1864		15,721
Received by purchase, Jan. 1, 1864, to June 30, 1866		5,326
Received from other depots for issue		59,507
Received for recuperation		85,980
Received by transfer from Artillery		4,120
Total		170,654
Issued to armies in the field	96,006
Issued to officers after June 30, 1865	1,574
Issued for sale or sold at depot	48,721
Died	24,321
Total		170,622
On hand June 30, 1866		32

This does not take into consideration the twelve or thirteen thousand artillery horses handled at this depot.

This report closes with the abandonment of the depot, but it is to be remembered that nearly all the volunteer cavalry was mustered out immediately after the surrender of Gen. Lee's army the preceding year, so that nearly all the horses were handled during a period of 18 months.

Until recently acts of Congress appropriating money for the purchase of horses for the Army required that they should be purchased by contract from the lowest responsible bidder after advertisement. The specifications of the horse to be delivered under contract are those of a perfect animal, which, of course, is seldom seen. The inspectors and purchasing officers are required to reconcile these specifications with existing conditions, keeping in mind fairness both to the contractor and to the Government. This system led to the building up of the class of middlemen who purchased animals from the breeders, presented them for the action of the Government inspectors, and sold them at the contract price. Until recently this price ranged from $100 to $150. Considering the large expense to which the contractor would be put, it could not be expected that all of the Government's money would be invested in horseflesh. The result was, considering the profit by the contractor, his expenses, etc., that the price paid by the Government secured for the cavalry a horse worth from $70 to $100. Nothing is known of the breeding of these animals further than that they were "probably of such and such breeding." Often the question of breeding was not raised, the principal requisite being that they should give promise of performing the duties expected of them.

The contract system has tended to discourage the horse breeder of the country, as the money paid him by the contractor, after much haggling, was often very little more than the cost of raising the horse. There has been no incentive for breeders, even in the best naturally endowed sections, to breed the type of horse that the Army needs.

Again, in recent years the demands for heavy draft animals for farming purposes, the high prices that these animals are bringing, the fact that they cost no more to raise, and bring even a higher price, although blemished, has had a further bad effect upon the breeding of the desired saddle type. Even before the present high prices of all horses and the higher price of the draft horse existed, the breeding of the type considered best for Army purposes received another severe setback by the adoption of electric and cable street railways and the extension of the trolleys. While not generally appreciated, the best "railroaders," as the horses used for street cars were called in the market, were the very kind that made the best cavalry mount. This horse was desirable for street-car purposes because of his endurance and his willingness to work.

The contract system received its first serious setback, from the contractor's standpoint, when the Army, due to the clamor for better mounts, insisted upon a closer compliance with the contract specifications and rejected more of the horses presented by the contractor. The sudden rise in the price of horses further embarrassed the contractor, and the added difficulty of obtaining horses to present for inspection caused many of the contractors to fail in their deliveries, made other reluctant to bid, later led to the impossibility of obtaining horses under this system in certain sections, and finally led to authority being given by Congress for open-market purchases. This method, while apparently a little more expensive to the Government, had the advantage of eliminating the middleman, giving the breeder all the money which the Government was willing to pay for horses, and giving the Government value received in horseflesh.

The establishment in 1908 of the remount depots has further improved the type of horse for the Army, as the system of purchasing young horses 3 and 4 years old, often unbroken, has enabled the Government to get the best type of horse before he has cost the breeder much money, and when he could be sold for a reasonable amount. These horses, sent to the depots for maturing and handling, and finally issued to troops as 4½ and 5 year olds, while costing the Government more per head than the horses 5 and 6 years old formerly purchased and issued directly to troops, are very much better horses from the beginning, are properly developed at a critical period in their existence, rationally handled, and, when issued to troops, have been received with enthusiasm as a great improvement over the matured horses formerly issued under the old system. Even considering the high market value of horses at present, it is believed that, under the remount system, horses can be issued to troops at not to exceed a total average cost of $225. The latest contract price of cavalry horses is $183.75; for artillery horses, $213.75. Many of the late contract horses are young and require some handling at depots before suitable for service; others are mature.

Horses purchased as mature under the old system have had a useful life in the Army of 6.4 years on an average. The better grade of horses, such as are now being purchased, rationally developed and handled, should and will have a useful average life of 10 years. It is easy to see that the better horse issued from the depot at a cost of $225 that lasts 10 years is cheaper than the horse costing from $183 to $213 lasting only 6.4 years. In addition, the Army will have had a better horse throughout the entire period of usefulness. The horses being issued from the depot could undoubtedly be sold at time of issue at a handsome profit. Many individuals would bring fancy prices. It is needless to say that if it were possible to purchase them in issue form it would be necessary to pay much more than they have cost under the depot system.

European countries long ago found it not only advisable but necessary to supervise the breeding of horses in order to supply the demands of their armies, and every European country of importance, with the exception of England, has for years been encouraging the breeding of the proper type of army remount. England, one of the most important horse countries of the world, has for many reasons only recently been forced to this step. It is interesting to note that practically the same conditions confront England that confront this country at the present time, and that almost identical steps are contemplated in the two Anglo-Saxon countries to accomplish the same result—suitable army horses in sufficient number.

A PLAN FOR BREEDING HORSES FOR THE UNITED STATES ARMY—NUMBER OF STALLIONS REQUIRED.

From the best information available it would appear that a comprehensive plan to breed the horses needed for the mounted service of the Army on the present peace footing should provide for not less than 2,000 horses a year, and need not exceed an estimated allowance for over 2,500 a year.

To determine the number of stallions needed for this work, allowances must be made for failure of stallions to get in foal all mares served, for ordinary losses of foals, and for failure of foals bred to prove suitable for remounts.

A good, sound stallion will get about 75 per cent of his mares in foal. Of the resulting foals, an average of at least 10 per cent will die from various causes before they are old enough to be purchased as remounts. In the proposed Army horse-breeding work probably about 50 per cent of the remainder would be suitable for remounts.

Based on an estimate of 100 stallions, the following results could be expected for varying numbers of mares served by each stallion:

Number of mares covered by each stallion.	Estimated number of suitable remounts by 100 stallions.
40	1,350
50	1,688
60	2,025
70	2,363

An estimate of 100 stallions would therefore appear to be conservative. It is doubtful if stallions average more than 70 mares a season, as a rule. In some localities it would probably be possible to stand stallions for a short fall breeding season in addition to the usual spring season, in which case a larger number of mares could be covered. In others only a spring season would be feasible, and a smaller number of suitable mares might be offered.

DISTRIBUTION OF STALLIONS.

The country should be divided into four or more breeding districts, as follows, and stallions assigned as indicated:

New England district (vicinity of Maine and New Hampshire)	10 Morgans.
Central district (Virginia, West Virginia, Kentucky, and Tennessee, with perhaps certain sections of Indiana and Ohio)	30 Thoroughbreds. 10 Standard breds. 10 Saddlers.
Southwestern district (vicinity of Missouri or Texas, with perhaps certain sections of Iowa)	5 Thoroughbreds. 5 Saddlers. 5 Standard breds.
Northwestern district (Montana, Washington, Oregon, and perhaps California)	15 Thoroughbreds. 10 Standard breds.
Total	100

It might be well to subdivide one or more of these districts. The above arrangement is worked out to establish such districts so that they will be in reasonable proximity to Government stations where the stallions may be kept between breeding seasons.

NUMBER OF REMOUNTS AVAILABLE ANNUALLY.

Based on the foregoing estimates, the number of remounts available yearly from these sections would be as follows, with stallions covering the maximum of 70 mares, and taking 24 as a convenient unit for the number of suitable remounts got by each stallion annually:

New England district	240 Half-Morgans.
Central district	720 Halfbreds. 240 Half-Standard breds. 240 Saddlers.
Southwestern district	120 Halfbreds. 120 Saddlers. 120 Half-Standard breds.
Northwestern district	360 Halfbreds. 240 Half-Standard breds.
Total	2,400

A considerable number of the horses sired by the Morgan and standard-bred stallions would be suitable for Cavalry remounts, but a much larger number would be preferable for the Field Artillery. The number of estimated remounts by Morgans and standard breds is 840. In selecting stallions of these breeds due consideration should be given the necessity for artillery remounts.

SELECTION OF BREEDING DISTRICTS.

Those localities should be selected for breeding districts where conditions are especially suited to horse raising, where the type of mares is most likely to approach the type of horses desired for the Army, where a light type of horse will always in the long run be the most profitable to the farmer and draft horses least likely to gain a firm foothold, and where mares are sufficiently numerous to give the stallions maximum service. A careful survey of the horse-raising districts of the country will be necessary before this question is settled, and the returns of the Thirteenth Census can probably be used. The Bureau of Statistics of the Department of Agriculture states that it is impossible to use its returns for this purpose. Perhaps, however, that bureau could assist in making the survey.

The Government reservations where stallions would be kept between the breeding seasons would be the points around which the work would center. In some cases it might be possible to stand some stallions on the central station itself. Stallions should be distributed in lots of five around the central stations, and such further distribution could be made as necessity required. At the close of the season they would be returned to the central station and kept there until the next season or sent to another locality.

THE EXPERIMENTAL FEATURE.

The plan has experimental possibilities of the highest order, which should be utilized. The leading features are the test of the value of different breeds to produce remounts and the value of different soils and climates for the purpose, which could soon be determined by the Army by keeping records of performance. Certain troops, squadrons, and batteries, and entire regiments, could be supplied with remounts bred in a certain way in certain localities, and the possibilities of the plan from an experimental standpoint would thus become very great. By the time a second large appropriation to purchase stallions would, if ever, be necessary, the Government would be in possession of facts which would enable it to show definitely whether the plan had been successful, and whether any crosses or localities should be eliminated from further consideration. It might be well, also, to consider the feasibility of arranging with the breeders to reserve a small number of high-class fillies each year for breeding purposes; otherwise mare owners would be compelled to replace their mares by purchase, which would bring the problem little nearer solution at the end of 20 or 50 years than it was at the beginning. That it is possible in time to fix the type desired for remounts is by no means questionable, and this may indeed be very desirable.

TERMS OF SERVICE.

No mare should be bred to a Government stallion until she has been approved by the proper officer as of the type suitable to produce remounts. The common unsoundnesses, the tendency to which may be transmitted from one generation to another, should naturally disqualify a mare, but even more important would be the necessity to refuse a mare on account of manifest faults of conformation, action, or quality.

The terms of service should be free, the owner of the mare entering into a contract to give the War Department an option on the resulting foal during the year it is 3 years old (estimating a horse to be 1 year old on the 1st of January after it is foaled) at a price to be fixed before the mare is bred. A provision should be included in the contract that the mare must remain in the owner's possession until the foal is weaned, and that, in case the foal is sold before the War Department has exercised its option, a service fee shall be exacted from the breeder of the foal. Provision should be made, however, to cover such emergencies as the death of the breeder, etc.

The price contracted to be paid for remounts should be fixed annually for each State by a board of arbitration before the breeding season opens, subject to the approval of the Secretary of War. For example, in January or February, 1912, this board would meet in each State mentioned above and agree upon the price to be paid for remounts bred in that State to be purchased in 1916; in 1913 prices to be paid in 1917 would be fixed, and so on. The arbitration board should be composed of an officer of the Army, an officer of the Department of Agriculture, and a citizen residing in the State, preferably a competent horseman. In purchasing remounts, no discrimination should be made against mares; colts should have been castrated at the breeder's expense, preferably between 1 and 2 years of age.

ORGANIZATION.

The breeding work would be administered by the Bureau of Animal Industry of the Department of Agriculture through the Chief of the Animal Husbandry Division. This division would direct the work under the supervision of the chief of the bureau, and keep the breeding records and the reports on the development of the foals. Not later than January 1 of each year it should furnish a report for transmission to the War Department on the actual number of 3-year-olds in each breeding district available for purchase during the year and the probable number of these that will make satisfactory remounts. A competent animal husbandman should be employed, with headquarters at Washington, as a traveling inspector of breeding stations, to keep the department in close touch with the work in addition to receiving regular reports from the breeding districts.

The men in charge of the breeding districts should be obtained from the field force of the Bureau of Animal Industry. These men should be good veterinarians, with a thorough knowledge of horse husbandry. Their field experience would make them invaluable for this work, and the loss to the field service of the bureau would be more than compensated by the fact that they could handle the work better than any men who might be obtained from the outside. If the Government undertakes this project it must do so under the most favorable auspices, and no risk of failure should be run. As success would largely depend on the ability of the men in charge in the field, the best men available should be obtained. The expert assistants to men in charge of breeding districts should be animal husbandry graduates of agricultural colleges, and not veterinarians. This would balance the service in a very effective way.

The duties of these men would be to direct the work at the breeding stations in their districts, to attend to the keeping of the records, to advise mare owners on the care of horses, and, if possible, to travel through their districts before the breeding season opens and approve mares, directing how they should be bred, if necessary. Until the work is on a thorough, well-organized basis, the approval of mares should be done by the men in charge of districts or their expert assistants.

The men in charge of stallions as stud grooms should be employees of the Department of Agriculture, for whose appointment experience in the handling of horses should be the first consideration. Preference should be given men who had been honorably discharged from the mounted service of the Army and who presented certificates from officers in whose commands they had served showing their proficiency in horsemanship.

It is hardly necessary to point out the desirability of having the breeding service so organized that it will be carried on from year to year by the same or about the same corps of employees, in order that it may have a definite, stable, and continuous policy.

THE PURCHASE OF STALLIONS.

Stallions should be purchased by a board of three, composed of an officer of the Army, an officer of the Department of Agriculture, and a practical horseman, whose knowledge of breeds, pedigree, and markets and whose integrity can be relied upon.

In selecting the stallions, suitability for the purpose and freedom from unsoundness likely to appear in progeny should, of course, be first considered, and the stallions should be old enough to have shown their worth as sires of the class of horses desired. In buying standard breds, saddlers, and Morgans any tendency to pace, rack, mix gaits, paddle in front, sprawl behind should disqualify, and only those stallions should be selected which come from families which show none of these tendencies to a marked degree. The presence of such faults in their get would, of course, disqualify them.

EXPENSE.

It is believed that this plan could be put into full operation at a cost not to exceed $250,000 for the first year. This will allow for the purchase of first-class stallions with proved stud records and will provide for the employment of first-class men to carry on the work. The expense in subsequent years, on the same basis of 100 stallions, would require appropriations estimated at $100,000 annually, which would allow for the replacing of stallions as necessity required.

On the basis of 40 mares per stallion, the system would cost about $40 per colt produced. If the maximum of 70 mares were covered by each stallion, the cost per colt produced would be about $20. Considering the fact that the normal stud fee in the country is from $10 to $25, with a probable average of $15, it will be seen that under this system the expense would be somewhat greater than by using privately owned stallions, but it is believed that the advantages of breeding and the results in foals would more than compensate for the increase. While the increased cost would not necessarily be made up to the central Government, the increase in State and local taxes on more valuable foals would more than counterbalance the loss under this system. As a matter of fact, the resultant cost of such a careful system of breeding can not be computed in dollars and cents, particularly as the effect of systematic effort in the breeding of Army remounts should have such a favorable influence on all breeding in this country as to be of inestimable benefit to the horse industry and far outweigh any expense that might be debited against this system.

Approved.

JAMES WILSON,
Secretary of Agriculture.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 10, 1911.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I also ask leave to publish in the RECORD, without reading, a letter from the president of the Nevada Stockmen's Association, giving some very cogent reasons for the passage of this measure. I shall not ask to have it read, but, in the interest of saving time, ask that it may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission to do so will be granted.

The letter referred to is as follows:

UNITED LAND & CATTLE CO.,
Reno, Nev., May 24, 1916.

Hon. KEY PITTMAN,
United States Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of May 13 to hand regarding the bill that you intend to support in favor of the appropriation for the purchase of thoroughbred and standard bred studs to be distributed throughout the horse-raising States.

I think it is a very good bill and should be passed, and I herewith give you as much information as I can off-handed, without making a thorough search throughout the State for such data, as I have not the time to investigate as fully as I would like.

Mr. Wingfield, I, and others consider Nevada especially adapted for the raising of thoroughbreds on account of the excellent climate, as the horses seem to be very hardy and have good wind and the best of feet and legs, and this opinion was certainly shared by Mr. Theodore Winters, who gave up his breeding farm in California and came to Nevada and located at Washoe particularly to raise thoroughbred horses; and he met with great success and raised such horses as Yotambien, the unbeaten El Rio Rey, The Czar, Yo El Rey, and in later years such celebrities as Neva Lee, Scarborough, and winner of California Derby, Royal Rogue, Princess Zelaka, and a host of others. Notwithstanding that Mr. Winters is dead the firm is still carried on and they are breeding right along.

Messrs. Kinkaid & Allen are also breeding some very fine stock at Fallon; and you, no doubt, are aware of the fact that when Burns & Waterhouse quit racing they moved their breeding stock all to Fallon, and they are now there on account of the excellent climate and conditions suitable for the breeding of thoroughbreds.

You are, no doubt, aware of the fact that Mr. George Wingfield and ourselves own the largest breeding establishment west of the Mississippi, known as the Nevada Stock Farm, owning over 100 brood mares and 6 stallions with world-wide reputations. Among some of the finest mares in America to-day we have Sugar Maid, Scarlet Oaks, Celestia, present holder of the world's record of 1⅛ miles, and Rose Lawn. It is very doubtful if there is a breeding firm in America that can boast of a higher class bunch of brood mares, both on performance ability and blood lines, than the Nevada Stock Farm.

Mr. Wingfield sent to England last fall and imported 10 head of the best blood lines to be found in Europe. He has among the lot the celebrated stallion Honeywood, winner of the Cambridgeshire stakes of 1914, one of England's classics; also the mare Polistena, considered one of the best mares of her age in England. In addition to the two older horses above named, Mr. Wingfield brought over four yearling stallions and four yearling fillies of the very best English and Irish breeding.

This opinion as to Nevada being particularly suitable to the raising of thoroughbred stock is shared by horsemen, trainers, and owners in general; and Mr. M. P. Guilliams, who had charge of the Theodore Winters's estate for 10 years and also the Nevada Stock Farm for three years, considers that Nevada is superior to any State in the Union for the production of high-class horses.

We consider this an industry which should be encouraged by the Government, and this opinion is shared not only by owners and breeders but by trainers and everyone else interested in the welfare of the thoroughbred horse.

Mr. Wingfield, as you, no doubt, are aware, has spent perhaps a quarter of a million dollars in establishing this plant, and to-day it has world-wide reputation. He has his stables racing in Kentucky and Tia Juana at the present time and has been racing all winter in New Orleans. He has sold several very fine colts this winter, and at the present time has about 25 young horses ready for sale this fall, which he expects to ship East for the yearly sales in New York.

I trust that you will be successful in having this bill passed, as it means a great deal not only to Nevada but to the entire United States, and it will encourage the industry a great deal. Any time that I can be of any benefit to you with information, I would be very pleased to hear from you.

With kindest personal regards, I remain,

Very respectfully, yours, W. H. MOFFAT.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I simply want to say in conclusion that the stockmen of my State have unanimously indorsed this measure. In fact, I have received numerous letters from other States indorsing the measure. These men realize the necessity of the upbreeding of horses in this country. In fact, the type of horse that they intend to upbuild is the average weight and sized horse, which is of more general practical utility than is any other type of horse. The effort is simply to get a type of horse that is free of defect; that is sound in wind, bone, and heart; which will have the endurance, which will have the life, and which will be able to accomplish probably twice as much as the ordinary common horse of this day. I think it would be a great thing for the farmers of this country, and I sincerely hope that the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I was unavoidably kept from the Chamber for a few minutes, and I desire to ask what amount does the Senator from Nevada propose to have appropriated for the purpose to which he refers?

Mr. PITTMAN. I desire to have appropriated $200,000 instead of $25,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. And the proposition is to encourage the raising of horses of the average size and weight, such as the Morgan, for instance, and types of that kind?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes; the idea is to get a better strain into the horses of the country; to take sound mares throughout the country and make available for them pure types of sound stallions, as they have done in all civilized countries for many years, and as they are doing in Canada to-day, as the Senator from New Hampshire knows.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes. Mr. President, we have made several appropriations heretofore for this purpose. Have the results been reasonably satisfactory thus far?

Mr. PITTMAN. Both the Quartermaster's Department and the Department of Agriculture report that the experiments have been very satisfactory, but that they need more of these animals in order that they may distribute more widely throughout the country. They are serving a great purpose where they are located at the present time.

Mr. GALLINGER. In view of the fact that we are selling our horses in very large numbers to the allies, so called, I should think there would be danger of their draining our country of the very horses that we are raising for our own use.

Mr. PITTMAN. I think that that has occurred, I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. And if we are going to war, if that contingency overtakes us, which we all hope will not, I think there ought to be an embargo on the selling of horses to foreign countries when we ourselves are so much in need of them.

There must be a very great shortage of horses in this country at the present time, I should think; and we ought to be careful not to expend our money for the raising of horses to be sold to other countries for military purposes. I merely make that suggestion as a thought that occurs to me as I stand on my feet. I have not investigated the matter carefully. I am, however, very warmly in favor of the Senator's proposition; and I hope it will be agreed to.

Mr. BRADY and Mr. VARDAMAN addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, if the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY] will pardon me for a moment, I desired to ask the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] a question for information before he took his seat.

Mr. BRADY. I will yield to the Senator from Mississippi for that purpose.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Does the United States Government maintain any farm for the breeding of this character of horse for which the Senator's amendment is intended to provide?

Mr. PITTMAN. The Government has three such stations now in existence.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Where are they located?

Mr. PITTMAN. They are experimental farms. Their location is set out in the letter which has been read from the desk, and it may be again read for the information of the Senator. I will say, however, that there is one station in Virginia; another, I think, in Vermont; and another in New York.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I think that any effort or purpose of this kind on the part of the Government would necessarily be productive of good. However, the Government aid in the development of the horse is really needed less than in that of any other branch of the animals of this country. More attention has been paid to the development of the horse; more money has been expended for that purpose; and more interest on the part of business people has been shown in that direction than in relation to almost any other animal with which man has had to do.

I am not interested in the breeding of the war horse; but I am very much interested in breeding the horse that man may use for the cultivation of his farm and as a means of transportation. I think one of the greatest luxuries a man ever enjoyed is the ownership of a good saddle horse; but you can not develop even the war horse, the military horse, without helping the farmer; and, as I have oftentimes said upon the floor of the Senate, whenever you help the farmer, whenever you make the farm profitable, you add to the wealth, the happiness, the prosperity, and the patriotism of the entire American population.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, if the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY] will permit me, I desire to say that it is true a great deal of attention has been devoted by private enterprise to the upbuilding of the horse; but that has largely been, as the Senator knows, to the breeding of the thoroughbred of the racing stock on the one hand, and on the other hand, of a heavy draught horse. The ordinary horse of this country, the general type as used all over this country, the horse of from 14 to 15 hands, has not been the subject of upbuilding, and that happens to be the best type of horse for the Cavalry. The ordinary, medium weight, good saddle horse makes a good Cavalry horse, and, unfortunately, that type of horse apparently has been neglected both by private enterprise and by the Government.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President, there is no question that the appropriations which have heretofore been made along the line of the amendment of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] have been beneficially used and have produced satisfactory results. As the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] has said, if a horse is produced that is well adapted for general purposes, then a horse is produced that is good for war purposes or for farming purposes. Therefore, I think the results to be derived from this amendment will be as beneficial to the farmer as to the military service. So I am very heartily in favor of this amendment and expect to vote for it.

However, I am more interested in the attitude of my good friend from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] than I am in the appropriation, for I can not exactly understand his manner of reasoning. A short while ago he objected to an appropriation of the small amount of $5,000 for clearing off "logged-off" land in the western country. For a number of years that appropriation has been provided for on the list of appropriations made, and we feel that it has been beneficial; but my good friend from New Hampshire, who is usually in favor of almost anything our people in the West desire, has opposed that very seriously.

I see in reading over the list of appropriations for the purchase of horses for breeding purposes that for the fiscal year of 1914 there was an appropriation made of $50,000, in 1915 of $30,000, and in 1916 of $25,000; and the Acting Secretary in his letter to the Senator from Nevada says:

Owing to the limited funds, the Department of Agriculture had to confine its operations to the following districts, each district at present containing the number of stallions specified below:

DISTRICTS.	Number of stallions.
New England:
Vermont and New Hampshire	7
Central district:
Virginia, West Virginia, and southern Ohio	18
Kentucky and Tennessee	12
Total	37

So 37 of the horses have been distributed throughout these districts for the benefit of the farmers in those districts. We in the West do not object to that at all. It will be seen, however, that $105,000 have been spent, and it is proposed that we should appropriate $200,000 more; but it will be found on investigation that the West produces more horses than the districts named in this letter, and we have not received one penny of the benefit of these appropriations. They have not extended, you will notice, beyond the Mississippi River.

It seems to me that, to be fair, we ought to help one another; and while my good friend from New Hampshire has refused to help us to take a few stumps out so that we could pasture the horses after we raise them, I want to say that I am perfectly willing to assist him in getting horses for breeding purposes, and I shall therefore support the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Senator from Idaho ought to be satisfied, inasmuch as the Senate committee amendment to which he has referred was disagreed to, and he is going to have the Government experiment still further as to the best method of blowing out stumps, although after trying to solve that problem for eight years, they have thrown up their hands and say they have exhausted their resources. However, that was a very inconsequential item, and I did not oppose it very strenuously. I called attention to it as being, I thought, a bit of extravagance.

New Hampshire has no special interest in this matter. There is a farm in Vermont, which is included in the list of stations where these experiments are being carried on, and if they are breeding there, as I hope they are, the Morgan horse, a type which has almost entirely disappeared, they are doing the country great service, because of all the types of horses that this country has ever known for general purposes, in my opinion, the Morgan horse stands at the head.

I will assure my friend from Idaho, however, that before this session closes I will probably vote for appropriations for the section of country which he so well represents and the other Western States, as I have always done, which will cause him to forget the fact that I did not think it was expedient for the Government to experiment in blowing out stumps in his State and a few other States of the West. I was good-natured in my opposition to that amendment. I believed that the Senate committee had acted wisely in striking it out; but it remains in the bill, and I am not feeling badly over the fact that I was voted down.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the author of the amendment, which is now pending, two or three questions, but before doing so I should like to have the amendment read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 14, line 9, it is proposed to strike out "$214,320" and insert "$189,320"; after the word "Provided," in the same line, to strike out "That of the sum thus appropriated $25,000 may be used for experiments in the breeding and maintenance of horses for military purposes: Provided further"; and at the end of line 16 to insert the following:

The sum of $200,000 is hereby appropriated, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purchase and maintenance of stallions for the production of horses for agricultural and military purposes: Provided, That all expenditures authorized under this act shall be made by the Bureau of Animal Industry, Department of Agriculture.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from Nevada if he does not think that after the word "stallions" the words "and mares" should be inserted? If we are going to produce thoroughbreds or cross them it may be necessary to purchase mares as well as stallions.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, for a number of years the method employed in carrying out this work in the neighborhood where these stations have already been established is this: The Government supplies without charge the stallions to the farmers in the vicinity for the service of the sound mares of a suitable type, except in the event that an option that the Government has to purchase is denied, in which case, at the end of three years, the farmer may pay the $25 and keep the foal. So the only real object of this provision is to secure a cross between sound mares and thoroughbreds. That is the new type which they are building up; but of course I recognize the necessity of the Government keeping on hand at all times thoroughbred stallions, and I believe that it would be practicable for the Government at these stations to keep a certain number of thoroughbred mares so that the strain might be upheld.

Mr. WEEKS. That is the reason I made the suggestion to the Senator from Nevada. It seems to me that the Government at its cavalry remount stations, such as the one in Virginia, should have some thoroughbred mares as well as stallions, so that it would alway have a sufficient number of thoroughbred stallions available for all sections of the country. I therefore hope that the Senator will accept an amendment adding after the word "stallions" the words "and mares," so that that purpose may be carried out.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I have no objection to that, and I will adopt that language as part of my amendment.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator one more question. Does he think, under the provision as it now stands, that the Government could expend money for the maintenance of the stallions and mares under these conditions?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do. I think that is the intention of the provision. It uses the language "and maintenance of."

I may say, Mr. President, this is only an enlargement of the existing law or, rather, of the existing practice of the Department of Agriculture. The experiment has been carried on in this way for several years, and has been successful. They are now, of course, maintaining the stallions, and they are using them throughout the country. The Agricultural Department and the War Department agree that it has been a great success in the localities where the plan has been tried, and they feel the necessity of enlarging this work throughout the whole country. Therefore I am satisfied that provision is made for the maintenance of these animals.

Mr. WEEKS. Now, one more question. Who is to make the purchases of these animals? Is it to be done by joint commission of officers of the Agricultural and War Departments, or by some officials of those departments, or by whom?

Mr. PITTMAN. There is no attempt in my amendment to change the existing practice, which is to purchase by the head of the Bureau of Animal Industry of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. WEEKS. As the amendment provides for horses for agricultural and military purposes, I want to ask the Senator if he does not think it would be desirable that a representative of the War Department—the Quartermaster General, for example—should have a voice in the purchase of horses for that department for military purposes?

Mr. PITTMAN. I will say, Mr. President, that I am satisfied that the Agricultural Department and the War Department are in perfect harmony in regard to the medium-weight horse, and I am afraid that if we were to provide for a determination by two separate departments we would be apt to have conflict and confusion. I would not desire to change the practice which has been followed, and which has been absolutely successful up to the present time.

Mr. WEEKS. I do not want to impose any restrictions on the carrying out of this amendment. It does seem to me, however, that there are quite different qualities in the ideal agricultural horse and the ideal military horse. It is almost universally agreed that the horse which weighs about a thousand pounds makes the best Cavalry horse, while very frequently a horse weighing 50 per cent more than that would be the ideal agricultural horse. If the Senator thinks that that difference will be considered and given proper attention by the Bureau of Animal Industry, I have no desire to amend the provision; but in a matter of such great importance relating to our Army it does seem as if somebody connected with the War Department should have a voice in determining the kind of horse to be purchased.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me for a moment, I wish to state that the provision sets out distinctly what is to be accomplished. The Agricultural Department is to carry out that plan, and I think we may assume that if the Agricultural Department in carrying out the plan should determine that there are experts in the War Department or in the Army whose experience and observation would be needed or desirable in the matter of developing it, there would be no trouble about the services of such persons being obtained; but when you divide the authority you might bring about a conflict, I am afraid, that might militate against the proper and orderly execution of the law. I think it would be well to leave this matter to the Bureau of Animal Industry to carry it out without bringing in too many departments of the Government to deal with one specific question.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I should like to ask the proponent of this amendment how long this experiment of breeding, as nearly as possible, an ideal middle-weight perfect horse for the Army, which is confessedly a good horse for the farm, has been in operation? When was it started?

Mr. PITTMAN. Only three or four years.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Therefore, no time at all has elapsed so that we could get any idea of the percentage of successes in the effort they are making?

Mr. PITTMAN. Not in this country; no.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Have there been any reports on, say, the yearling or the 2-year-old products of this experiment?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do not know myself, except that the department states that it has been a success, and I assume they must have had some ground for the statement.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I do not want to be understood as opposing the amendment, but, knowing something of the horse myself, having a pretty intimate acquaintance with him, having been raised in probably the best horse country in the world, I do not believe that the most intellectual horse breeders in this land have ever been able to get 5 per cent of the purpose for which they were making the crossing; and but for the large exportation of horses to Europe during this war I should feel very much inclined to the belief—and that is the ground of my objection to this amendment—that it would be safer for the Army to set a type of horse themselves, for which they would pay a given sum when needed, and increase the profit and the incentive of the men who know about the horse, not only as they stand and look at him, but about the crossing of bloods and the probable effect of such crossing.

I know that in the State of Kentucky, for instance, the most marvelous horse that the world had ever seen, the Kentucky saddle horse, has completely changed type, and the older and better one has almost passed from our observation. If the horse breeder knew that for the production of a horse of a certain type he would get fair remuneration, you would get better results than you will by any possibility of the Government otherwise helping to do it; for, as I have said, the intelligent breeder has to study not only the particular horse and the cross he proposes to make, but the pedigrees of both; for the very best horse, in its cross, may throw back from the dam the worst possible features and probably the worst possible shape. Any intelligent breeder of stock—and, I think, if it could be carried out in the human family it would be much better—knows the part that heredity plays in it.

As a fact that might be interesting to the Senate, I remember when, as a boy, walking around with old man Jerre Duncan, who lived in Bourbon County, Ky., and he showed me, among a beautiful lot of calves, one that was perfectly pied—as spotted as a leopard. He pointed out that calf, and he said, "Look at that! My father imported Lady Teasewater"—I think the name of the cow was—"in 1817. There have been 30 crosses of absolutely pure red from that time, and this is the first production of the kind, and that is an ideal picture of the original cow."

When it can go to that extent it becomes obvious that, even after you have studied as far as you can and started to produce horses for the Government, it is better for the Government to set a type and pay a large premium for that particular type of horse than it is for the Government itself to do it under men who know a horse when they see him.

In answer to the suggestion of the Senator that an Army man ought to be put on the board or that he should be added to those selecting the peculiar type to be bred, and that probably a soldier knows a horse as soon as he looks at it as well as anybody, he has very little idea of what the breeding of that horse is and cares very little. He is no more competent to cross these strains of blood than a man that never saw a horse unless he has studied that particular feature of the matter.

So while I shall not oppose the amendment I do suggest to the Senate that, as the Senator has well said, no better all-around-purpose horse ever stood on American soil than the Vermont horses to which he refers, the old Morgan stock. They are liberally distributed through our best Kentucky stock of horses. You can see the type and know it; and no better type could be bred for the Army. I congratulate whoever was doing this in trying to keep as far as possible that original strain.

I shall not vote against the amendment, but in my judgment it would be much wiser to do as I have said—and I will not repeat it—see that the crossing is done by men who know the business, and let the Government pay a premium for the product they are looking for.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I agree with what the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] has said—that if the Government would make it possible for the horse breeders to get a fair price for their horses there would be no trouble about getting plenty of horses. But, Mr. President, I rose mainly to congratulate the country on the fact that the conservative, stand-pat idea of New England harmonizes with the Jeffersonian principles of the far West.

Mr. President, if the proposition were made for the Government of the United States to engage in the manufacture of shoes, I suspect that the Senator from Massachusetts would be at once upon his feet characterizing such an appropriation as socialism; and I congratulate him on agreeing with the old populistic idea which was so characteristic and so prevalent in the early nineties.

Mr. President, in the case of every other industry save that of agriculture those who are engaged in that business are supposed to understand their own business. The manufacturer of shoes and boots in the State of Massachusetts will not be shown anything by the Government of the United States as to how to carry on his manufacture; but when it comes to the question of teaching the poor farmer how to farm there is always an opportunity, and it is always important for the Government to do that.

I want to make the statement, Mr. President, that there are thousands of men in the United States, private individuals, who know more, single-handed, about the breeding of horses than the heads of all the bureaus of the Agricultural Department combined.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; I gladly yield.

Mr. POMERENE. Has not this conversion occurred since the day when Mr. Justice Hughes and Col. Theodore Roosevelt got together in perfect accord?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I want to say that the crossing of the Republican elephant and the bull moose has nothing to do with this proposition. [Laughter.]

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I appreciate fully the statement of the Senator from Ohio. I do not know what has brought about the change in the Senator from Massachusetts. That is for him to say, and not for me. I do know, however, from the statement he has made here this afternoon that he evidently agrees not with the Jeffersonian idea, but with the doctrine promulgated by Tom Watson and by other populistic leaders of recent years.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. GRONNA. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from North Dakota if he does not agree with me that, whatever other results the getting together of Justice Hughes and Theodore Roosevelt has had, a change in the administration at Washington will inevitably ensue?

Mr. GRONNA. Oh, Mr. President, there is no question but that there will be a change. There is no question about that. But I could not let the opportunity go by without saying a word to characterize the statement made by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS], who is regarded not only by the Republicans but by the people of this entire country as a conservative, and as against public ownership, and as against the Government doing anything whatever save and except to appropriate money for rivers and harbors and such things as that.

The farmer of the United States need not be told by any Government official how to raise horses. Thank God, we have today college graduates who are living upon the farm and who know more about the rearing of horses than any Government official and perhaps more than any Government official will ever know. We have in the United States hundreds and thousands of men who can not be hired by the Government of the United States, because it can not afford to pay them the wages to which they are entitled. I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts that it is just as unfair to the agricultural industry for the Government to engage in private business affecting the farmer as it is for the Government of the United States to engage in the business of manufacturing boots and shoes.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a suggestion?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. GRONNA. I yield.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The purpose of this is not to proscribe the farmer in any way. It is only cooperative in its nature. The Government of the United States, as has just been stated by the Senator from Nevada, purchases these highly bred stallions, and they are used in the communities in which they are kept. It is for the purpose of building up the breed of the horse and not to proscribing the farmer's conduct. It is not a reflection upon the intelligence of the farmer.

We all understand that every farmer can not buy a very expensive stallion or a very expensive bull or anything of that kind. You remember that when the great empire builder, Mr. Hill, built his railroad through the new country of the North and the West one of the first things he did to improve the stock and to help promote agriculture was to buy these fine strains of cattle and horses and to distribute them all along the line of his road. He gave the use of them to the farmers.

Mr. GRONNA. May I ask the Senator in that connection whether Mr. Hill applied to the Agricultural Department and asked for assistance to purchase those animals?

Mr. VARDAMAN. Why, certainly he did not. He had the money with which to do it, and he was engaging in that, I might say, moved by selfish altruism, which meant the building up of his own interests by making other people prosperous.

Now, that is the purpose of this provision. It is to help the farmer. God bless him! I do not want to restrict him or hinder him or handicap him in any way. I want the Government, wherever it can, to lend its strong hand to him as he struggles and strives to upbuild the world, to feed it and to clothe it, with his own labor; and that is the purpose of this sort of legislation. It is cooperative, it is helpful, instead of being proscriptive. It is not a reflection upon the intelligence of the farmer or upon his ability to manage his own affairs.

Mr. GRONNA. Will the Senator from Mississippi permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. VARDAMAN. Yes, sir; certainly.

Mr. GRONNA. If it is a proper function for the Government of the United States to go into the business of breeding horses, is it not also a proper function for the Government to go into the business of producing all sorts of grain?

Mr. VARDAMAN. As my friend the Senator will understand, this is not producing horses for profit. The Government is not entering into business in competition with anybody. It is not raising horses to sell even to itself.

Mr. GRONNA. I am well aware of that.

Mr. VARDAMAN. It is simply enabling the farmer to produce horses which the Government needs and will buy from the farmer; that is all.

Mr. GRONNA. I am well aware that the Government of the United States could not, if it wanted to, go into business and compete with anybody. I am well aware of that.

Mr. VARDAMAN. "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." It is not doing so; and whenever the Government of the United States can, with its strong hand, help the struggling, I think it is a very proper use of the governmental function. I think that governments are made for men rather than men for governments. And when the Government without destroying the individual initiative can by laws that affect all alike aid the citizen for the good of all it should do so.

Mr. GRONNA. Well, Mr. President, I think I have demonstrated beyond a question of doubt since I became a Member of Congress that I have at all times, whenever I had an opportunity to do so, voted for appropriations for anything that would disseminate knowledge to the farmers of this country; but it is a different proposition to cooperate with a farmer on the one hand and on the other to go into a business which is absolutely in competition with him and with his industry. I say to the Senate that you have no man in the employ of this Government who is competent to judge what is the right kind of a horse to buy, so far as it affects the farm, and the very reason for it is that the Government does not and can not afford to pay the wages that are being paid to the men who are engaged in that business.

If it is wrong for the Federal Government to engage in private business in manufacture, it is fundamentally wrong, I say, for it to engage in a business which always has had competition. There certainly can be no complaint made, nor can the charge be sustained, that the farmers of this country have been enabled to perfect a combination and control prices, whether it be in horses or anything else.

Mr. President, I do not think we should enact legislation of this kind. I am not opposed to it because it is a socialistic measure, for I am not afraid of socialism, but I think it is subject to a point of order.

I make the point of order that it is legislation; that it has not been estimated for by the department; and, therefore, that it is subject to the point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any estimate?

Mr. GRONNA. There is no estimate.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I was in sympathy with the amendment originally proposed by the Senator from Nevada, but I do not think I am quite in sympathy with the amendment as modified at the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts.

I can understand the advisability of the Government purchasing stallions and loaning them to the farmers in the adjacent territory. It has been demonstrated that the cross between the thoroughbred stallion and the blooded mare brings forth a superior type of horse. That has been demonstrated all over the country, and the work is going on now, in my own opinion, so far as the horse-breeding and horse-production industry is concerned. But a provision for the Government to use part of this money for the purchase of thoroughbred mares, and for the officials of any department of the Government to engage in the business of attempting to breed what would naturally be thoroughbred horses, is one of very doubtful validity, to my mind.

I do not know, as has been said here, that there is any officer of the Government who pretends to be equipped to enter into that line of business, and I sincerely hope the Senator from Nevada will insist upon his amendment in its original form.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President, I understand that the Senator from Nevada has not accepted the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HUGHES. Well, I did not know. I understood him to say he would accept that modification.

Mr. SMOOT. He accepted it.

Mr. HUGHES. I think it changes the whole scheme and initiates an entirely different policy, the success of which, I think, is very doubtful.

Mr. GORE. He did accept it.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. BRADY. I think the change would be detrimental to the amendment.

Mr. PITTMAN. I stated that I had no objections to the amendment.

Mr. HUGHES. Well, Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let us get to the point of order. A point of order is made for the Chair to rule upon.

Mr. HUGHES. Is there a point of order to the amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is a point of order pending to the amendment. Has this been estimated for by the department?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I will send the Book of Estimates to the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There was a bill of like character to this amendment, was there?

Mr. PITTMAN. A bill of like character was referred to the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. And reported favorably to the Senate?

Mr. PITTMAN. There has been no report at all upon that bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. How does the Senator from Nevada think, then, that this amendment is in order?

Mr. PITTMAN. This matter was estimated for.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Where?

Mr. PITTMAN. In this language:

Provided, That of the sum thus appropriated $25,000 may be used for experiments in the breeding and maintenance of horses for military purposes.

And yet the total amount in the Book of Estimates under this section is $214,320.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes; that is very true, but it is an estimate of $25,000 for this purpose, and, as the Chair understands the rules of the Senate, if that appropriation is to be increased the increase must be made by a report of a committee of the Senate, and after it is made by a committee of the Senate it must be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry at least one day before it is considered.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, may I ask another question? I have looked in the Book of Estimates for an estimate for this amount and for this purpose, but I am unable to find it. Can the Senator point to it?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Here is the estimate, on page 42:

Provided, That of the sum thus appropriated $25,000 may be used for experiments in the production of horses suitable for agricultural and military purposes.

Mr. SMOOT. That does not show that it has been estimated for; that is, I mean, for the $200,000.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Oh, for the $200,000 there has been no estimate.

Mr. PITTMAN. What I am trying to explain, my construction of it, is this: As I recollect the Book of Estimates, there is no estimate made of this $25,000 sum at all. It appears in the paragraph in the Book of Estimates copied from the bill, but in the column of estimates you do not find any estimate of $25,000 or any other sum, if I recollect rightly. Now, then, in the paragraph before it there is an estimate that reads as follows:

For all necessary expenses for investigations and experiments in animal husbandry; for experiments in animal feeding and breeding, including cooperation with the State agricultural experiment stations, including repairs and additions to and erection of buildings absolutely necessary to carry on the experiments, including the employment of labor in the city of Washington and elsewhere, rent outside of the District of Columbia, and all other necessary expenses, $208,320.

I think that is the only estimate there is.

The VICE PRESIDENT (reading)—

Provided, That of the sum thus appropriated $25,000 may be used for experiments—

As it was in the House—in the breeding and maintenance of horses for military purposes.

Or, as the Senate amendment proposed it—for production of horses suitable for agricultural and military purposes: Provided further, That of the sum thus appropriated $37,000 may be used for experiments in poultry feeding and breeding, including the feeding and breeding of ostriches and investigations and experiments in the study of the ostrich industry.

Now, of the $208,320 there is $25,000 for the horse experiments, $37,000 for the poultry and ostrich experiment, and the balance of it is—

For * * * investigations and experiments in animal husbandry, * * * in animal feeding and breeding, including cooperation with the State agricultural experiment stations, including repairs and additions to and erection of buildings absolutely necessary to carry on the experiments, including the employment of labor in the city of Washington and elsewhere, rent outside of the District of Columbia, and all other necessary expenses.

The Senator from Nevada cuts down the $208,320, as the Chair understands the amendment, by $25,000 and makes it $189,320, but he adds $200,000 on at the end. That makes $389,320 appropriated under this clause, and there seems to have been only $208,320 estimated for.

There is a plain rule of the Senate that—

No amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law or treaty stipulation or act or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session—

This does not come under any of those classes—or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the departments.

This does not seem to have been proposed in pursuit of the estimate of a head of a department, nor does it seem to have been moved by the direction of a standing committee. When it is moved by the direction of a standing committee the rule further provides that where it proposes to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill it shall at least one day before it is considered be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and so on to the various committees.

Mr. PITTMAN. Of course this amendment was referred a few days ago, but it has not been reported.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Well, it was not proposed by a standing committee.

Mr. PITTMAN. No; it was referred to the committee, increasing the appropriations, but it has not been reported. I admit that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is quite clearly of opinion that in order to increase an appropriation, as this does, as it has not been estimated for by one of the heads of the departments, it must first be reported by a standing or select committee of the Senate, and after it has been so reported it must be referred to the Committee on Appropriations. The Chair believes that it is the duty of the Chair to sustain the point of order.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from North Dakota if there is any distinction in his mind in this matter, and if the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts was not included in my amendment? My amendment simply intends that the same as they have in all other countries—if the Government sees anywhere a stallion that is producing a fine breed of horses it will use the strong power of the Government to go out and buy that animal, and will then allow the farmers of the country, if the farmers approve of that breed, to use that stallion, paying nothing, mind you, for the use of it on the start, and only paying for it in the event that when 3 years old they will sell to the Government at a fixed price, say $200.

Mr. GRONNA. Does the Senator from Nevada suppose that the farmers would pay the price or pay whatever it cost the Government? Is that the idea? Does the Senator believe the Government could buy these horses cheaper than the farmers themselves could buy them?

Mr. PITTMAN. No; but there are a great many farmers in my part of the country who have commenced to raise horses and they have sold a great many of them recently at a good profit. They have not found available in their section of the country stallions of the type that will improve the breed of horses to the extent that they want to improve it.

Mr. GRONNA. Let me say to the Senator from Nevada that I have considered this proposition very thoroughly. The Government has had a small horse farm in the State of Virginia near the city of Washington, and I must say that from my standpoint, I believe it has been an absolute failure.

Mr. PITTMAN. Of course, I am not discussing any question now as to the amendment. It has passed from consideration, and I have nothing to say on it. I intend, however, to take this up on some other line, because I think it is an outrage on the people of the country to treat this matter in the narrow-minded local way in which it has been treated. It is not given any consideration apparently at all except based upon that of some supposed prejudice. Every civilized country in the world has been pursuing this policy for years and years, and has bred better stock than we have bred. In Canada, just across the line——

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

Mr. PITTMAN. Just a minute, please. In Canada, across the line from the Senator from North Dakota, they are pursuing that same policy. The Canadian Government have gone to Arabia, they have gone to France, they have gone to Russia, they have gone everywhere to pick up some of the very best material in horseflesh that can be found anywhere in the world. They brought them to the farmers of that country and they have lent them to the farmers for the upbreeding of their stock, and everywhere they have found the condition improved.

I have a letter here from stockmen of my State, and I want to say that we raise in our State proportionately more horses than in nearly any other State of the Union, and the very best horses that are raised. We have a line of thoroughbreds which are raised in that State that have never been beaten. They raise a horse with the best bone, the best muscle, the best blood, and the best wind and heart found anywhere in this country. They have taken the stables of California up to Nevada and have them there now.

I come from a stock-raising State. While I do not pretend to be an expert in the matter, I know all farmers are not so jealous of their own stock that they are unwilling to accept the gratuitous services of a great Government in the upbuilding of that stock. To stand here and say that it is right to furnish high-grade seeds for the farmer but it is not right to furnish them the opportunity of fine blooded stock, to say that it is right to go out and teach them how to treat hog cholera but it is not right to present them with the finest blooded stock of the country, it seems to me is a narrow-minded absurdity.

I might go on and give the Senate the history of this movement through other nations if I did not think it was a waste of time.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I feel that this bill is of vital importance not only to the farmers but to all the rest of humanity. It seems to me, in order that the Senate may be enlightened, we should have a fuller representation, and hence I suggest the lack of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Johnson, Me.	Overman	Smoot
Brady	Johnson, S. Dak.	Page	Swanson
Brandegee	Kenyon	Pittman	Taggart
Broussard	Kern	Poindexter	Thomas
Catron	La Follette	Pomerene	Thompson
Clapp	Lane	Ransdell	Underwood
Clarke, Ark.	Lodge	Shafroth	Vardaman
Fletcher	McLean	Sheppard	Walsh
Gallinger	Martine, N. J.	Sherman	Weeks
Gore	Nelson	Simmons	Williams
Gronna	Norris	Smith, Ariz.

Mr. LANE. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] on official business.

Mr. THOMPSON. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. HUSTING].

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-three Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. GORE. I ask that the list of absentees be called.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the names of the absent Senators.

The Secretary called the names of the absentees, and Mr. HARDWICK, Mr. SMITH of Georgia, and Mr. TOWNSEND answered to their names when called.

Mr. BRYAN, Mr. STERLING, and Mr. BANKHEAD entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. PITTMAN. Now I offer an amendment to the pending committee amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 14, at the end of line 16, insert:

That the sum of $200,000 is hereby appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purchase and maintenance of stallions for the production of horses for agricultural and military purposes: Provided, That all expenditures authorized under this act shall be made by the Bureau of Animal Industry, Department of Agriculture.

Mr. GORE. I think that is practically the same amendment that went out on a point of order.

Mr. PITTMAN. The Senator from North Dakota said he would not make a point of order against the amendment in that form. He conferred with me about it, and it was written in accordance with his idea on the subject.

Mr. GORE. I will make the point of order for the present. I may withdraw it later. I have not had an opportunity to examine it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not understand. Does the Senator from Oklahoma make the point of order?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir; I make the point of order now. I have not had a chance to look into it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It must be sustained if the point of order is made. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORE. I will say that an amendment was passed over in order to afford an opportunity to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] to reach an agreement concerning some difference between them in the matter. I ask to have that amendment called up.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 23, the committee report to strike out lines 8 to 14, inclusive, in the following words:

Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be used in the free distribution, or propagation for free distribution, of cuttings, seedlings, or trees of willow, boxelder, ash, caragana, or other common varieties of fruit, ornamental, or shelter-belt trees in the Northern Great Plains area, except for experimental or demonstration purposes.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment. In line 10, after the word "distribution," I move to insert "except within the district now covered thereby, in accordance with Bulletin No. 2, issued by the superintendent of the Northern Great Forest Section, Mandan, N. Dak., October 12, 1914."

I think that will make the provision agreeable to the junior Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, so far as I am personally concerned I have no objection to modifying the amendment as suggested by the Senator from Minnesota. As the chairman of the committee knows, I opposed the provision proposed by the House for this reason. The Government of the United States has appropriated large sums of money to an experimental station at Mandan, N. Dak. That station sent out a few trees to farmers of the State, not to the whole State. They issued a bulletin which stated that they would furnish trees to any farmer living west of the one-hundredth parallel, which is more than halfway west in our State, and then including the same portion of South Dakota west of the one-hundredth parallel, including Montana and Wyoming and east of the line in a contour of 5,000 feet.

Mr. President, that is a small area, and I think that the opposition to this provision is only because of the fact that the men who are engaged in the nursery business fear that this is going to interfere with their private business; but in order to assure those people that it can not do so, I have no objection, so far as I am personally concerned, to the adoption of the amendment specifying the language of this bulletin, that they shall only do so in this particular district.

I could not, Mr. President, favor the proposition of the other House, because it would practically nullify the law. It would only permit this station, which is a valuable one, to grow the trees and shrubs named in the bill, and then to make no use of them. I talked to several of the men who appeared before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. State Senator Cashman, of Minnesota, was one of them, and he admitted that so far as the present supply of the station is concerned, it could not interfere with the nursery business, for not one-half of the people of my State could be supplied with a single tree, because the number the station produces is limited; but I shall not oppose the amendment, in order to obviate the fear which Senator Cashman said existed in the minds of the farmers. He stated that he was not opposed to the number of trees shipped out by the station, but he was opposed to giving the idea to the farmers that they could get as many trees as they wanted for nothing.

Mr. CLAPP. I think, Mr. President, that this is probably a very happy solution of the issue.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] to perfect the text of the original bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, before the motion is voted on, I should like to educate myself as I go along. Will some Senator tell me exactly what kind of a tree a "caragana" is?

Mr. CLAPP. I can not answer that question.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I do not get any additional education; so I shall not pursue my inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota to the text of the part of the bill proposed to be stricken out by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on agreeing to the committee amendment to strike out the proviso as amended. [Putting the question.] The noes have it. The committee amendment is rejected and the House text stands, with the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota incorporated in it.

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. President, I have been giving some attention to the pending Agricultural appropriation bill. I think, perhaps, the Department of Agriculture has done as much as, if not more, in a general way for the farmer, the stock breeder, and for the general welfare of the country than has any other department.

With regard to the matter of seeds and their free distribution by the Government, which was thoroughly discussed this morning, I notice that the appropriation for this item last year amounted to $252,540. Of this appropriation $25,245.95 was expended for salaries; $1,241.48 was expended for travel and field expenses for inspecting seed growing under contracts; $12,400 was expended for office stationery and supplies; $72,948.88 was expended for packeting, assembling, and mailing seed under contracts; $9,400 was expended for freight, express, and drayage; $2,363.11 for miscellaneous expenses; and $128,904.58 for plants, seed, and bulbs.

Mr. President, it will be observed that about one-half the total expenditure of $252,540 carried in this item last year was actually expended in the purchase of seeds, and all of the remainder, $124,621.24, went into salaries, travel expense, labor, freight, express, and so forth.

The people have an idea that all these seeds are new and rare seeds, grown by the Government upon its experiment stations, but the truth is that all the seeds are bought and purchased in the open market under competitive bids.

But every time the Government actually spends one dollar for seeds it expends a corresponding dollar in expenses and charges for labor, freight, drayage, salaries, traveling expenses, and so forth, before the seeds reach the ultimate consumer. It is a useless expenditure of money, and does not give the people a corresponding benefit in return. Mr. President, there are many items in this bill on a par with this one, amounting, in the aggregate, to several millions of dollars, which go to pay the traveling expenses of a lot of useless employees in the way of railroad fare, Pullman fare, and so forth, which ought to be eliminated.

Mr. President, I am in favor of the department's investigating and research work; but the item of free seed does not come within the line of the department's work. It is a gratuity which the people do not appreciate; but in its scientific and research work, in my opinion, the department does much good for the country.

At last it has become a recognized fact that farming is a science, as much so as any other business or profession, and perhaps it is the greatest of all sciences, except the science of medicine, and through investigation and research the department is able to furnish the country with a great deal of valuable information. In other words, along this line the department becomes a school-teacher for rural people, constantly searching and investigating for new things to meet new conditions as they arise; but after it has solved the problems through its experiment and research work, and when it has reached a definite conclusion as to the remedy to be applied, appropriations for this line of work should stop, and the information should be given to the people through bulletins or in some less expensive way than the way now in vogue to get this information to them.

Mr. President, I find, on page 13, an item of $632,400, which has been increased in the Senate to $782,400, "for the eradication of southern cattle ticks." The department, through its research work, long ago found the remedy to eradicate cattle ticks, and this remedy is in possession of cattle raisers and growers in sections of the country afflicted with it. To-day everybody knows what is required to destroy the tick, but, notwithstanding the fact that this knowledge and information is complete, enormous amounts of money are yearly carried in this bill to enable the people in the respective States to do work which they ought to do at their own expense, and with which they are thoroughly familiar.

It may be that the item for the free distribution of seed and also the provision for the eradication of the cattle tick are both essential and necessary. As was said by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] this morning, the Bureau of Soils, the Bureau of Horticulture, the Bureau of Chemistry, and some other bureaus have accomplished valuable work; and where it has been possible to increase the production from one ear of corn to two ears or from one grain of wheat or from one grain of oats to two grains, and that result has been achieved, it is of incalculable value to the country.

But, Mr. President, I find, on page 57 of the bill, an item of $420,540 to enable the department to investigate the food habits of North American birds, including experiment and demonstration work of destroying wolves, coyotes, prairie dogs, gophers, and to investigate the disease of wild ducks in the Salt Lake Valley region of Utah.

I hastily ran through the hearings on this bill before the Committee on Agriculture in the House, and this item developed some wonderful things which the department is doing along the line of destroying wolves, coyotes, ground squirrels, gophers, doctoring ducks, and so forth. This is the third time that the item of $15,000 for the destruction of ground squirrels has appeared in the bill. Mr. McAtee, of the Department of Agriculture, in speaking of the work done under this item last year, boastfully says: "They cleared the ground in Indian reservations and public domain in California of ground squirrels at a cost of 9.9 cents per acre." This is rather expensive for the clearing of the forests in that locality of these little pests.

Mr. President, I presume every State in the Union has been afflicted with these small pests, and yet not until recently was Congress ever asked to make an appropriation to exterminate the little ground squirrel.

In speaking of the item of $5,000 for investigating the disease of wild ducks in the Salt Lake Valley region, Mr. McAtee, of the department, gravely and solemnly declares that at last the department has found that the disease affecting wild ducks around Salt Lake is due to the ducks there drinking alkali water. He says that last year they experimented on 586 ducks by first giving them alkali water, such as is found in the pools in the region of Salt Lake, and that they successfully cured 426 of this number at the nominal cost of from 5 to 10 cents per bird. He further assures the committee that by a scientific treatment of the wild ducks they can be permanently cured by placing them where they have access to only pure water; but, Mr. President, in my judgment, this would be rather expensive treatment for all the millions of wild ducks annually congregating at Salt Lake, Utah; yet Mr. McAtee says he feels sure he has a successful cure that will be accepted by the sportsmen throughout that region of the country.

Mr. President, of this item of $400,540, it is proposed that $15,000 be expended in the destruction of ground squirrels, $5,000 to be used in treating sick ducks in Utah, and $125,000 to be used in the national forests and public domain in destroying coyotes, wolves, and other animals injurious to agriculture—without mentioning "lame ducks"—and, in addition, $125,000 to be used in the destruction of wolves and coyotes afflicted with rabies.

Here is a large appropriation, and I undertake to say nearly every dollar of it will be worse than uselessly spent. Of all the useless jobs in the Government—and there are many of them, in my opinion—these jobs and positions "top the list." Much of this money is worse than wasted—it is squandered with no corresponding return of benefit to the people.

The country infested with these predatory animals seems to be divided into nine districts, with a worthy inspector in charge of each district. It is proposed, through this appropriation, to add 14 or 15 additional inspectors, making a total of 24 or 25 in all. These inspectors are appointed through the Civil Service Commission, I presume, at the end of fierce and strenuous competition, with good, round salaries, and each one of them is empowered to hire hunters and trappers at salaries ranging from $75 to $115 per month. Each inspector, so the evidence discloses, can not look after more than 10 or 15 hunters. This means that there will be from 300 to 400 hunters put on the statutory roll at salaries ranging from $75 to $115 per month.

Mr. President, imagine this army of hunters traveling over the national forests and public domain upon Uncle Sam's pay roll. Such an army as this would make old Nimrod himself blush in shame, if he was alive, to see it.

The evidence showed that one of these hunters, after one month's hard and faithful toil, was able to kill one coyote, for which he drew down his salary of $115. One of these hunters, at Poll Mountain, Wyo., made a wonderful record, scored a bull's-eye—hit the ring. He was actually able to kill three wolves in six weeks, for which he drew down his salary of $115 a month for this period of time.

Another hunter actually found—for which he should have been awarded a medal—a den of wild coyotes, killed the old mother and 13 young ones. So it goes, Mr. President, all through the hearings had on this item before the House committee on this bill.

The business-like thing to do would be to expend this money by placing a premium upon the scalps of wolves and coyotes. This at least would have a tendency to stimulate the activity of the three or four hundred sportsmen now on the pay roll, but actually loafing on their jobs; but the department seems to be averse to this. It says this would not be economy; that it would be extravagance for the Government to use this appropriation or any part of it in paying a bounty for the scalps of these predatory animals. The department criticizes the idea of the people in the vicinity keeping a pack of hounds in order to protect themselves against the destruction of such animals, and it equally opposes the idea of the Government keeping hounds for the purpose of getting rid of these animals. I do not want to impugn the motives of the men in charge of this work, but it looks to me as if the department is not very anxious to get rid of these animals for fear that some one of its men now on the pay roll under civil service would lose a good, fat job.

In contrast with the department's idea and way of handling this situation, let me call the attention of the committee to the statement made by Representative STEELE, of Iowa, a member of the Committee on Agriculture in the House. He says:

> I have a ranch of 20,000 acres that I leased in the State of South Dakota. I went there to raise cattle and the coyotes began killing the calves. I obtained a pack of hounds and killed 15 or 20 of those coyotes with hounds; then I found where they raised their young and I put men to digging them out, and I do not believe I have a coyote to-day within 10 miles of my ranch.

Compare the statement of this practical, hard-headed farmer, speaking from experience, with the bunglesome manner in which the Department of Agriculture is trying to get rid of these pests. Here is a man who got rid of them by his own means through a pack of hounds, practically at no cost at all. On the other hand, here is the department hiring a lot of hunters at salaries of from $75 to $115 per month. I see by the statement of the Hon. Mr. RAKER, a Member of the House from the State of California, that last fall 40 of these hunters were trooping through his country. Mr. President, the department says that one inspector can not handle to exceed from 10 to 15 hunters. This means when this appropriation is worked out there will be from three to four hundred hunters on the pay roll. The thing to do is to cut this appropriation out and to let the people work out this problem themselves, exactly as Representative STEELE worked it out on his ranch. The department has already found a method for exterminating the ground squirrel, the gopher, and so forth, by poisoning it with strychnine mixed with oats, wheat, or barley; and as the department has worked this out through its research work, why make this appropriation?

Mr. President, if ever there was a time in the history of the American Congress when we ought to practice economy, that time is now. With appropriations this year amounting to upward of $1,600,000,000, we ought to cut out every useless expenditure we possibly can. It is the useless and needless expenditure of money of which the people complain, and they have a right to complain. I have only pointed out a few such expenditures, and I reiterate that many millions of dollars of useless expeditures are found in this bill, all of which should be eliminated before it becomes a law.

I understand that the Senate has eliminated the free-seed item, and, if that action shall be final, a saving of $252,540 will be effected. By eliminating the item for eradicating southern cattle ticks, for which the Senate committee has increased the appropriation from $632,400 to $782,400, and the item for investigating the food habits of North American birds and mammals, which the Senate committee has increased from $400,540 to $420,540, including provisions for the destruction of wolves, prairie dogs, and so forth, a further substantial saving may be effected. In order to test the sense of the Senate, I move to strike out, on page 57, commencing in line 1, down to and including line 22. The item proposed to be stricken out covers the provision for killing coyotes, prairie dogs, and so forth.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, if the Senator from Indiana has concluded his remarks, I will ask him to reserve that motion until we have finished the committee amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. All the committee amendments have not yet been passed upon, and the motion of the Senator from Indiana will have to be held in abeyance until the committee amendments shall have been disposed of.

Mr. TAGGART. Very well.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I did not hear all that was said by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TAGGART], but I heard him say something about killing ground squirrels in California. Is there a provision in this bill appropriating money for that purpose?

Mr. TAGGART. There is an appropriation of $15,000, as I understand, for that purpose.

Mr. WORKS. Provision for that purpose is generally made, Mr. President, in aid of the Public Health Service. There have been several hundred thousand dollars expended in California by the National Government in the effort to exterminate the ground squirrels in that State, upon the theory that they are carriers of the bubonic plague. I have at times protested against that expenditure of money by the Government, and I think the Senator from Indiana is perfectly right in criticizing that item.

There was considerable controversy at one time as to whether the bubonic plague existed in California at all. That was several years back. The Public Health Service determined that the plague did exist. They maintain now that the plague is carried by ground squirrels—or, rather, by the fleas which are found on the ground squirrels—and they are expending an immense amount of money for the purpose of getting rid of the squirrels.

The system is for the Government to contribute a certain sum of money, the county in which the squirrels are to be destroyed contributing a like amount. The farmers in California are quite ready to contribute their share, because, as an economic question, they want to get rid of the ground squirrels. They have no fear of the bubonic plague; their money is not paid upon any such idea or consideration as that; but the Government is maintaining in California a large force—I do not know how many, although an investigation which took place not long ago before the Public Health Service disclosed the number—of men who are being used for that purpose. I am satisfied that we are throwing away that money, and I think it ought not to be expended.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. WORKS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GORE. I think possibly this consideration, which the Senator may have overlooked, may have something to do with this appropriation: Apart from the theory that the ground squirrel conveys the bubonic plague, it has been the policy of the Government, with respect to wolves and coyotes and other animals which were objectionable to the settlers, to make an appropriation for the extermination of those animals on the public domain and in the national forests, because the State and local authorities, it seems, do not have the power to do that. The General Government has proceeded on the theory that it was not right to maintain the public domain or national parks or forest reserves as breeding grounds for these animals and let them loose upon the settlers in the vicinity of the reserves. I think that is the theory upon which this appropriation is made.

Mr. WORKS. I think, Mr. President, that that is a correct theory. I think the Government ought to take care of its own land in that way. I am told now by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] that there is no such provision in this bill as has been suggested.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from California that there is no provision whatever for that purpose. The appropriations made for that purpose come under the heading "Public Health Department," in another appropriation bill. The amount of $420,540 appropriated in this bill and referred to by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TAGGART] has no reference whatever to California, with the exception of the forest reserves which may be located in California, and has no more reference to the forest reserves in California than to the forest reserves in any other State. The Senator well knows that the vast forest reserves—and in my State over 50 per cent of its area is taken up by such reserves—are nothing but breeding grounds for coyotes, for prairie dogs, and for wolves.

Mr. SHAFROTH. And mountain lions.

Mr. SMOOT. And mountain lions. The officers of the State can not go on the reserves and destroy them. The reserves are under the care of the Government, and wolves and mountain lions and coyotes have no respect whatever for the boundary lines of national forest reserves. They come out and destroy the stock, the sheep, and other property of the people. All we ask of the Government in this appropriation is at least to take care of those animals which are bred and reared and cared for upon the Government's own ground. The Senator from Indiana was absolutely wrong in the statement that he made in relation to the object of this appropriation.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah understands very well what I have been commenting on.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I understand what the Senator has in mind.

Mr. WORKS. Because the Senator is connected with the Public Health Committee. That is not done upon public land at all. It is done upon private land.

Mr. SMOOT. That is in the cities.

Mr. WORKS. And it has an altogether different purpose. I think it is perfectly right that the Government should expend money for the purpose of protecting outsiders where it comes from the public land. I had not discovered in going over this bill any such appropriation as this relating to California. That is the reason why I asked the Senator from Indiana the question that I did in the beginning.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, at the last session of the Senate, when the Agricultural bill was up for consideration, I objected to the appropriation carried by that bill, which, I think, was then about $300,000, for the purpose of exterminating wild animals on the public domain. I felt then, as I feel now, that it was another of the entering wedges for appropriations for purposes that were, to say the least of it, of questionable value to the public service.

It is true, as the Senator from Utah says, that in the sections of the public domain embraced by the national forests there is, and probably will continue to be, an increase in the number of these predatory animals; but the Forest Service force ought to be required to attend to that pest, and as a part of their duties they can easily suppress it, in my judgment.

This appropriation tends to give employment to additional men who, upon a salary of perhaps not less than $100 a month, devote themselves to the extermination of wild animals. Their salaries go on whether they succeed in killing any of these animals or not. There is no particular incentive for their working overtime, or for their conducting a campaign against the existence of these animals that would tend to exterminate them. They get their salary, their per diem, whether they kill one animal a day, one animal in 30 days, or no animal at all.

The States of the West—some of them, at least—have adopted a very different and more effective policy, one which in my State has proved to be very successful. The State pays a bounty upon the scalp of every predatory animal mentioned in the statute, and the man who gets the money must produce the scalp. There is an incentive for good work, for active work, for effective work, for results, and the results almost always occur. They are in visible evidence; and, as a consequence, until these forest reserves became so numerous and so extensive, these pests were largely minimized. The number of wolves, particularly in my State, is negligible. If, however, instead of appropriating this large sum of money for the purpose, we require the Forest Service and their subordinates to do this work, we certainly will accomplish quite as much in the way of the extermination of these animals, and we will absolutely save this amount of money to the Treasury.

I am glad the Senator from Indiana has called attention to it; and I hope that the motion which he has interposed, and which I understand is temporarily withdrawn, will be favorably acted upon when it comes up for consideration.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, would it be agreeable to the Senator now for me to move to insert after the word "diseases," on page 19, line 7, the words "including tobacco diseases," so as to make it clear?

Mr. GORE. I have no objection, so far as I can speak for the committee, to the adoption of this amendment. I do not want to take the time of the Senate.

Mr. FLETCHER. I offer that amendment, Mr. President. On page 19, line 7, after the word "diseases," I move to insert the words "including tobacco diseases"; and then I will follow that, on the same page, line 8, with a motion to increase the amount of the appropriation from $38,500 to $43,500. That would add $5,000 to the amount of the appropriation. It is a very important industry, not only in my State but in other States. There is need of study of diseases of the soil and plants in connection with that industry, and this is a very small increase.

I offer the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 19, line 7, after the word "diseases," it is proposed to insert "including tobacco diseases."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. On the same page, line 8, I move to strike out "$38,500" and insert "$43,500."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On the same page, in line 8, it is proposed to strike out "$38,500" and insert "$43,500."

Mr. VARDAMAN. What is that for, Mr. President? I have not clearly understood.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is to extend the investigation provided for on page 19 to tobacco diseases as well as the diseases of other plants mentioned in the item.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move another amendment, on page 48, line 9, after the word "weighing," to strike out the word "and," and after the word "handling" to insert the words "and transportation," so that in connection with that work there would be included weighing, handling, and transportation. A similar provision obtains in other portions of the bill as to other items.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, speaking for the committee as well as I can, I have no objection to the amendment. It makes the language in this section conform to the language in other sections.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, is there any amendment pending at the present time?

Mr. FLETCHER. I have one other amendment, if the Senator will allow me. On page 25, line 4, I move to strike out "$135,920" and insert "$140,920." The effect of this would be to increase that appropriation $5,000.

Mr. SMOOT. What is that amendment, please?

Mr. FLETCHER. On page 25, line 4, the amendment proposed by the committee was the appropriation of $135,920 for the purchase, propagation, testing, and distribution of new and rare seeds; for the investigation and improvement of grasses, and so forth, and other items—a total of $135,920. I made some inquiry of the department and I find that this sum will not be sufficient to carry on certain investigations and studies which ought to be made in other places than those they have had in their minds, notably in Florida for one; and I think that in order to obtain any sort of benefit for Florida under this appropriation it will be necessary to increase that amount by $5,000. So I have asked that the increase be made from $135,920 to $140,920.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. In other words, the motion is to reconsider the action of the Senate in adopting the committee amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is to increase by $5,000 the amount as adopted on the motion of the committee.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We reduced it $5,000, and the amendment of the committee has been adopted by the Senate. I suppose the motion would be to reconsider the action of the committee and leave it as the House placed it.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator whether he wants to add any words to the bill in connection with that item?

Mr. FLETCHER. No; I do not. I believe that if that amount is made $140,920 the work will be carried on where it is needed and in addition to places where it is already intended to carry it on.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator has assurances from the Secretary of Agriculture that if the amount is increased $5,000 the $5,000 will be spent in Florida. Is that it?

Mr. FLETCHER. I have no such assurance. I have never talked with the Secretary of Agriculture about it for a minute; but I have the assurance that under the present amount as provided there no work of this sort could be done in Florida. I am hopeful that if it is increased by $5,000 it may be done.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the chairman of the committee what induced the committee to reduce by $5,000 the amount the House provided for?

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I think, if the Senator from Florida will yield to me, that I can tell the Senator from Utah what induced them.

Mr. GORE. I will say that there was a provision in the bill as it came from the House to make a survey of the noxious-weed situation, for which $5,000 was appropriated. That noxious-weed proposition was stricken out and the corresponding amount to carry on the work was stricken out.

Mr. SMOOT. Then the estimate included the $5,000 to be used for a survey of the noxious-weed situation in the spring-wheat areas, and so forth? The estimate of the department included that $5,000 item, did it not?

Mr. GORE. I could not say without consulting the Book of Estimates.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think there is any doubt about that, because that is the provision of the House.

Mr. GORE. I had the impression that it went into the bill on the floor of the House, but I am not certain about that.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I make the point of order against the increase now of $5,000, if the action of the House and the Senate committee has been agreed to.

Mr. GORE. That is already agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. It has been agreed to?

Mr. GORE. It has.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I make the point of order that the $5,000 is an increase of the appropriation without being reported from a standing committee.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to make a brief statement?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I will withhold the point of order temporarily.

Mr. GRONNA. I will say that the language of the House bill which the Senator from Utah has just read was stricken out on my motion. I said that I did not believe it was a function of the Government to eradicate weeds. This money, of course, would go to my country, or to the spring-wheat country; and I made the motion to strike it out because I believed the farmers of the United States ought to be patriotic enough to eradicate the weeds on their own farms, and not ask the Federal Government to do it for them. In accordance with that the $140,000 was reduced to $135,000.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection to the striking out of the $5,000. That is not what I am objecting to at all.

Mr. GRONNA. No; I understand, Mr. President. I will say that the reason why the amount was reduced from $140,000 to $135,000 was that the language providing $5,000 for the eradication of weeds in the spring-wheat belt was stricken out.

Mr. SMOOT. I so understood, Mr. President, when I made the point of order.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I simply wish to ask the Senator from North Dakota, then, if the words in lines 3 and 4 should not be stricken out as well, according to his own theory, these words being—

> And to conduct investigations to determine the most effective methods of eradicating weeds.

Mr. GRONNA. I have no objection to those words going out.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I make a point of order against the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida, as it is increasing an appropriation, and not estimated for, and not reported from a standing committee.

Mr. FLETCHER. Of course, in the first place, it is not increasing it. The bill as passed by the House carried $140,920.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; but that included $5,000 for the survey of noxious weeds.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment has been agreed to, carrying $135,920 in all, on the record.

Mr. SMOOT. That is all right, then, Mr. President.

Mr. FLETCHER. The motion was to increase that to $140,000.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That can not be done.

Mr. FLETCHER. Very well, then, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator can move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. FLETCHER. Inasmuch as it has opposition, I will not.

The VICE PRESIDENT. And if the Senate reconsiders the vote, then the Senator can have the question put as to whether the Senate amendment shall be agreed to or whether it shall not be.

Mr. FLETCHER. I will not press it for the moment. I may take it up later, Mr. President. If the point of order is to be made against it, I will not urge it. I may reach it again after investigating the matter of the point of order.

Mr. GORE. I think the Senator from New Hampshire desires to offer an amendment at this point.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have an important amendment that I intended to offer to the bill; but I will say to the chairman of the committee that as the Senate is so thin at the present time, and as several Senators who spoke to me about the amendment and said they desired to be present have left the Capitol, if it is agreeable to the Senator from Oklahoma, I would prefer that he allow it to go over until Wednesday morning.

Mr. GORE. That is entirely agreeable. I was trying to adjust the proceedings to the convenience of the Senator.

I should like to say, Mr. President, that in what is known as the cotton-futures act, which I believe begins on page 81, the recommendation of the committee that sections 11 and 11a should be stricken out was agreed to by the Senate on Saturday; and there are several minor amendments following that and before it intended to conform the act to the striking out of these two sections. I should like now to take those up. That is the reason for them, and that is the object of them—to conform the act to the striking out of sections 11 and 11a.

I ask to have the amendment stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendments will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 85, line 5, it is proposed to strike out "quality, or the grade, or the length of staple" and insert "classification."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. In line 7, after the word "question," it is proposed to insert "of the true classification of said cotton."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 86, line 4, after the word "true," it is proposed to strike out "quality or grade or length of staple" and insert "classification."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 90, line 20, after the word "contract," it is proposed to insert a comma and the words "subject to reasonable variations therefrom, which shall be fixed in rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 94, line 18, it is proposed to strike out all after the word "Treasury" down to and including the word "Treasury" in line 24.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 95, line 5, it is proposed to strike out, after the word "privies," down to and including the word "act" in line 13.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 95, line 8, it is proposed to strike out "12" and insert "11."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On the same page, line 23, it is proposed to strike out "sections" and insert "section."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. In the same line, it is proposed to strike out the comma after "three" and the words "eleven and eleven A."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On line 24, it is proposed to strike out the word "origin" and the comma.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 99, line 17, it is proposed to strike out "19" and insert "18."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On the same page, line 18, it is proposed to strike out "20" and insert "19."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On line 20 of the same page it is proposed to strike out, after the word "immediately," the semicolon and all down to and including the word "seventeen," in line 22.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It includes also a change in the numbering of the section.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is authorized.

Mr. GORE. In the grain-grades act there are several places where the words "interstate or foreign commerce" ought to be substituted for other language. I ask the Senate to take them up and the further changes proposed, and I should like to have them agreed to now. The important amendments I shall not ask to have considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendments will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 101, line 14, before the word "act," to strike out "grades" and insert "standards"; in line 17, before the word "act," to strike out "grades" and insert "standards"; and after the word "act," to insert: "The word 'person,' wherever used in this act, shall be construed to import the plural or singular, as the case demands, and shall include individuals, associations, partnerships, and corporations; the words 'in interstate or foreign commerce,' wherever used in this act, mean 'from any State, Territory, or District to or through any other State, Territory, or District, or to or through any foreign country or within any Territory or District.' When construing and enforcing the provisions of this act, the act, omission, or failure of any official, agent, or other person acting for or employed by any association, partnership, or corporation within the scope of his employment or office shall, in every case, also be deemed the act, omission, or failure of such association, partnership, or corporation as well as that of the person"; on page 102, line 12, after the word "shipment," to strike out "from any State, Territory, or District to or through any other State, Territory, or District, or to any foreign country" and insert "in interstate or foreign commerce"; in line 15, after the word "sold," to insert a comma and strike out "or"; in the same line, after the word "sale," to insert a comma and the words "or consigned for sale"; in line 17, after the word "sold," to insert a comma and strike out the word "or"; in line 18, after the word "sale," to insert a comma and the words "or consigned for sale"; in line 20, after the word "any," to insert the words "person may ship or deliver for shipment in interstate or foreign commerce any"; in the same line after the word "sold," to insert a comma and strike out "or"; in the same line, after the word "sale," insert a comma and the words "or consign for sale"; in the same line, after the word "grade," to strike out "may be sold, offered for sale, shipped, or delivered for shipment in interstate and foreign commerce" and insert "which is sold, offered for sale, or consigned for sale"; on page 103, line 2, after the word "sold," to insert a comma and strike out "or"; in line 3, after the word "sale," to insert a comma and the words "or consigned for sale"; in line 4, after the word "shipped," to insert "in interstate or foreign commerce"; in line 11, after the word "sold," to insert a comma and strike out "or"; in line 12, after the word "sale," to insert a comma and the words "or consigned for sale"; in line 15, after the word "shipped," to insert "in interstate or foreign commerce"; in line 17, after the word "party," to insert the words "to the transaction"; in line 19, after the word "determine," to strike out "and certify"; on page 104, line 4, after the word "person," to insert a comma and the words "except as permitted in section 4"; in line 19, after the word "sold," to insert a comma and strike out "or"; in the same line, after the word "sale," insert a comma and the words "or consigned for sale"; in line 24, after the word "grain," to insert a comma and strike out "which has been"; in the same line, after the word "sale," to insert "or consigned for sale by grade, which has been"; on page 105, line 8, after the word "inspection," to insert "and grading"; in line 13, before the words "the Secretary of Agriculture," to strike out "In every such case" and insert "Whenever an appeal shall be taken or a dispute referred to"; in line 14, after the word "Agriculture," to insert "under this act, he"; in line 15, after the word "fee," to insert a comma and the words "in case of an appeal"; in line 17, after the word "fees," to insert a comma and the words "not so refunded," and a comma; in line 19, after the word "grade," to insert "signed by him or by such officer or officers of the Department of Agriculture as he may designate, upon an appeal taken or dispute referred to him under this act," and a comma; in line 21, after the words "United States," to strike out "in all suits between such parties, or their privies," and the comma; on page 106, line 4, after the word "grain," to insert "and to certificate the grade thereof"; in the same line, after the word "for," to insert "shipment or delivery for shipment in"; in the same line, after the word "interstate," to strike out "and" and insert "or"; in the same line, after the word "commerce," to insert a comma and the words "under this act and the rules and regulations prescribed thereunder"; in line 7, after the word "society," to insert "partnership"; in line 9, before the word "interstate," to insert "shipment or delivery for shipment in"; in line 11, before the word "grades," to strike out official," and in the same line, after the word "grades," to insert "of the official grain standards"; in line 14, after the word "has," to insert "or which may hereafter have a"; in the same line, after the word "inspection," to insert "department"; in line 15, after the word "by," to strike out "law" and insert "the laws of such State"; in the same line, after the word "shall," to strike out "in issuing" and insert "issue"; in line 16, after the word "licenses," to strike out "give preference"; in the same line, after the word "to," to insert "the"; in line 19, after the word "him," to insert "under this act"; in line 20, after the word "given" to insert "to the licensee"; in the same line, after the word "that," to strike out "any inspector has been found to be" and insert "such licensee is"; in line 24, after the words "certificate of," to strike out "inspection" and insert "grade"; on page 107, line 1, after the word "has," to strike out "knowingly"; in line 12, after the word "knowingly," to strike out "or carelessly"; in line 16, after the words "certificate of," to strike out "inspection or"; on page 108, line 5, after "Sec. 11," strike out "That the word 'person' wherever used in this act shall be construed to import the plural or singular, as the case demands, and shall include individuals, corporations, companies, societies, and associations. When construing and enforcing the provisions of this act, the act, omission, or failure of any official, agent, or other persons acting for or employed by any corporation, company, society, or association within the scope of his employment or office shall, in every case, also be deemed the act, omission, or failure of such corporation, company, society, or association, as well as that of the person," and insert: "That if any clause, sentence, paragraph, or part of this act shall, for any reason, be adjudged by any court of competent jurisdiction to be invalid, such judgment shall not affect, impair, or invalidate the remainder thereof, but shall be confined in its operation to the clause, sentence, paragraph, or part thereof, directly involved in the controversy in which such judgment shall have been rendered"; in line 17, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$125,000" and insert "$250,000"; in line 20, after the word "including," to insert "such"; and in the same line, after the word "persons," to insert "and means," so as to make part B read:

PART B.

That this part, to be known as the United States grain standards act, be and is hereby enacted, to read and be effective hereafter as follows:

"That this act shall be known by the short title of the 'United States grain standards act.' The word 'persons,' wherever used in this act, shall be construed to import the plural or singular, as the case demands, and shall include individuals, associations, partnerships, and corporations; the words 'in interstate or foreign commerce,' wherever used in this act, means 'from any State, Territory, or District to or through any other State, Territory, or District, or to or through any foreign country, or within any Territory or District.' When construing and enforcing the provisions of this act, the act, omission, or failure of any official, agent, or other person acting for or employed by any association, partnership, or corporation within the scope of his employment or office shall, in every case, also be deemed the act, omission, or failure of such association, partnership, or corporation as well as that of the person.

"SEC. 2. That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to investigate the handling, grading, and transportation of grain and to fix and establish as soon as may be after the enactment hereof standards of quality and condition for corn (maize), wheat, rye, oats, barley, flaxseed, and such other grains as in his judgment the usages of the trade may warrant and permit, and the Secretary of Agriculture shall have power to alter or modify such standards whenever the necessities of the trade may require. In promulgating the standards, or any alteration or modification of such standards, the Secretary shall specify the date or dates when the same shall become effective, and shall give public notice, not less than 60 days in advance of such date or dates, by such means as he deems proper.

"SEC. 3. That the standards so fixed and established shall be known as the official grain standards of the United States.

"SEC. 4. That whenever standards shall have been fixed and established under this act for any grain no person thereafter shall ship or deliver for shipment in interstate or foreign commerce any such grain which is sold, offered for sale, or consigned for sale by grade unless the grain shall have been inspected and graded by an inspector licensed under this act and the grade by which it is sold, offered for sale, or consigned for sale be one of the grades fixed therefor in the official grain standards of the United States: Provided, That any person may ship or deliver for shipment in interstate or foreign commerce any such grain not sold, offered for sale, or consigned for sale by grade which is sold, offered for sale, or consigned for sale by sample or by type, or under any name, description, or designation which is not false or misleading, and which name, description, or designation does not include in whole or in part the terms of any official grain standard of the United States: Provided further, That any such grain sold, offered for sale, or consigned for sale by one of the grades fixed therefor in the official grain standards may be shipped in interstate or foreign commerce to or through any place at which an inspector licensed under this act is located, subject, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of Agriculture shall prescribe, to be inspected at the place to which shipped, or at the place through which shipped for inspection, and subject further to the right of appeal from such inspection, as provided in section 6 of this act: And provided further, That any such grain sold, offered for sale, or consigned for sale by any of the grades fixed therefor in the official grain standards may, upon compliance with the rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture, be shipped in interstate or foreign commerce without inspection from a place at which there is no inspector licensed under this act to a place at which there is no such inspector, subject to the right of either party to the transaction to refer any dispute as to the grade of the grain to the Secretary of Agriculture, who may determine the true grade thereof. No person shall in any certificate or in any contract or agreement of sale or agreement to sell by grade, either oral or written, involving, or in any invoice or bill of lading or other shipping document relating to, the shipment or delivery for shipment, in interstate or foreign commerce, of any grain for which standards shall have been fixed and established under this act describe, or in any way refer to, any of such grain as being of any grade other than a grade fixed therefor in the official grain standards of the United States.

"SEC. 5. That no person, except as permitted in section 4, shall represent that any grain shipped or delivered for shipment in interstate or foreign commerce is of a grade fixed in the official grain standards other than as shown by a certificate therefor issued in compliance with this act; and the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to cause examinations to be made of any grain for which standards shall have been fixed and established under this act, and which has been certified to conform to any grade fixed therefor in such official grain standards, or which has been shipped or delivered for shipment in interstate or foreign commerce. Whenever, after opportunity for hearing is given to the owner or shipper of the grain involved, and to the inspector thereof if the same has been inspected, it is determined by the Secretary that any quantity of grain has been incorrectly certified to conform to a specified grade, or has been sold, offered for sale, or consigned for sale under any name, description, or designation which is false or misleading, he may publish his findings.

"SEC. 6. That whenever standards shall have been fixed and established under this act for any grain and any quantity of such grain sold, offered for sale, or consigned for sale by grade, which has been shipped, or delivered for shipment, in interstate or foreign commerce, shall have been inspected and a dispute arises as to whether the grade as determined by such inspection of any such grain in fact conforms to the standard of the specified grade, any interested party may appeal the question to the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to cause such investigation to be made and such tests to be applied as he may deem necessary and to determine the true grade: Provided, That any appeal from such inspection and grading to the Secretary of Agriculture shall be taken before the grain leaves the place where the inspection appealed from was made and before the identity of the grain has been lost, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of Agriculture shall prescribe. Whenever an appeal shall be taken or a dispute referred to the Secretary of Agriculture under this act, he shall charge and assess and cause to be collected a reasonable fee, in amount to be fixed by him, which fee, in case of an appeal, shall be refunded if the appeal is sustained. All such fees not so refunded shall be deposited and covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts. The findings of the Secretary of Agriculture as to grade, signed by him or by such officer or officers of the Department of Agriculture as he may designate, upon an appeal taken or dispute referred to him under this act, made after the parties in interest have had opportunity to be heard, shall be accepted in the courts of the United States as prima facie evidence of the true grade of the grain determined by him at the time and place specified in the findings.

"SEC. 7. The Secretary of Agriculture may issue a license to any person, upon presentation to him of satisfactory evidence that such person is competent, to inspect and grade grain and to certificate the grade thereof for shipment or delivery for shipment in interstate or foreign commerce under this act and the rules and regulations prescribed thereunder. No person authorized or employed by any State, county, city, town, board of trade, chamber of commerce, corporation, society, partnership, or association to inspect or grade grain shall certify, or otherwise state or indicate in writing, that any grain for shipment or delivery for shipment in interstate or foreign commerce which has been inspected or graded by him, or by any person acting under his authority, is of one of the grades of the official grain standards of the United States, unless he holds an unsuspended and unrevoked license issued by the Secretary of Agriculture: Provided, That in any State which has or which may hereafter have a State grain-inspection department established by the laws of such State, the Secretary of Agriculture shall issue licenses to the persons duly authorized and employed to inspect and grade grain under the laws of such State. The Secretary of Agriculture may suspend or revoke any license issued by him under this act whenever, after opportunity for hearing has been given to the licensee, the Secretary shall determine that such licensee is incompetent or has knowingly or carelessly graded grain improperly or by any other standard than is authorized under this act, or has issued any false certificate of grade, or has accepted any money or other consideration, directly or indirectly, for any neglect or improper performance of duty, or has violated any provision of this act or of the rules and regulations made hereunder. Pending investigation the Secretary of Agriculture, whenever he deems necessary, may suspend a license temporarily without hearing.

"SEC. 8. That the Secretary of Agriculture shall, from time to time, make such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary for the efficient execution of the provisions of this act.

"SEC. 9. That any person who shall violate any of the provisions of sections 4 or 7 of this act, or any inspector licensed under this act who shall knowingly inspect or grade improperly any grain which has been shipped or delivered for shipment in interstate or foreign commerce, or shall knowingly or carelessly give any false certificate of grade, or shall accept money or other consideration, directly or indirectly, for any neglect or improper performance of duty, and any person who shall improperly influence or attempt to improperly influence any such inspector in the performance of his duty, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not more than $1,000 or be imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

"SEC. 10. That every person who forcibly assaults, resists, impedes, or interferes with any officer or employee of the United States Department of Agriculture in the execution of any duties authorized to be performed by this act or the rules and regulations made hereunder shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $1,000 or be imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

"SEC. 11. That if any clause, sentence, paragraph, or part of this act shall for any reason be adjudged by any court of competent jurisdiction to be invalid, such judgment shall not affect, impair, or invalidate the remainder thereof, but shall be confined in its operation to the clause, sentence, paragraph, or part thereof directly involved in the controversy in which such judgment shall have been rendered.

"SEC. 12. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $250,000, which shall be available until expended, for the expenses of carrying into effect the provisions of this act, including such rent and the employment of such persons and means as the Secretary of Agriculture may deem necessary in the city of Washington and elsewhere."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. GORE. On page 102, line 5, I move to strike out the word "sixty" and insert the words "one hundred and twenty," so as to read:

And shall give public notice, not less than 120 days in advance of such date or dates.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORE. I desire now to ask that the bill may be laid aside.

Mr. GRONNA. I have an amendment which I should like to have printed. I ask that it be printed and lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GORE. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be laid aside temporarily.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COURTS IN NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. OVERMAN. From the Committee on the Judiciary I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 3673) to establish a term of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals at Asheville, N. C., and I ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that the judges of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit shall annually open and hold a term of the court of the circuit at Asheville, N. C., at such time as may be fixed by the judges thereof.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FINANCIAL CONDITION OF THE TREASURY.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD an article from the Washington Post of July 2, relative to the financial condition of the Treasury at the close of the last fiscal year.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SIMMONS. Did I understand the Senator to ask that it be printed in the RECORD?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. SIMMONS. Has not that same statement been already printed?

Mr. THOMPSON. Not that I am aware of.

Mr. OVERMAN. That statement has already been printed.

Mr. THOMPSON. Then I desire to withdraw the article, and in its place I ask to have printed a later statement from the Secretary of the Treasury.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement referred to is as follows:

STATEMENT OF SECRETARY M'ADOO.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 1, 1916.

The fiscal year closed on June 30, 1916, with the Treasury in a very strong and gratifying condition, reflecting the great and unprecedented prosperity of the country.

Subject to revision upon analysis of complete returns, the reports show that the balance in the general fund at the close of business yesterday was $236,879,520.90, including amounts to the credit of disbursing officers and outstanding Treasury warrants. With these eliminated, the balance was $174,965,231.97, the greatest balance in the general fund of the Government since 1908.

The surplus of all receipts over all expenditures for the year amounted to $78,737,810.11, as compared with a deficit of $59,436,580.15 for the fiscal year 1915.

The surplus of ordinary receipts over ordinary disbursements (exclusive of Panama Canal and public debt transactions) was $61,112,813.74, as compared with a deficit of $42,867,797.59 the previous year.

Income-tax receipts reached the great total of $124,867,430.28, as compared with $79,828,675.27 for the previous year. This amount included $56,909,941.78 from corporations and $67,957,488.50 from individuals, exceeding all estimates of collections for the year.

Customs receipts for the year amounted to $211,866,222.34, as against $209,268,107.43 the previous year, and exceeding the estimate by more than $16,000,000.

Receipts from internal revenue were unprecedented and remarkable, reaching the enormous total of $512,740,769.58, and exceeding all previous estimates by many millions. Ordinary internal-revenue receipts amounted to $387,873,339.30, and, excluding the emergency revenue from this amount, these receipts were approximately $304,000,000, or $32,000,000 greater than had been estimated.

The large receipts from internal revenue are due in great measure to the unprecedented prosperity of the country and the vigorous enforcement of the internal-revenue laws. Receipts from tobacco, for instance, were the greatest in the history of the Internal-Revenue Service. The exact total for the year which closed yesterday will not be available until the returns have been analyzed, but for the 11 months ended May 31, 1916, receipts from tobacco exceeded the income from this source during the corresponding period of the previous year by $6,810,000, exclusive of all emergency-revenue taxes. Receipts from tobacco have always been an index of business conditions.

The cost of collecting the great sum of $512,740,769.58 of internal-revenue taxes was only 1.40 per cent, the lowest cost in the history of the Internal-Revenue Service.

The balance in the general fund for the fiscal years 1909 to 1916, exclusive of amounts credited to disbursing officers and outstanding Treasury warrants, is indicated by the following table:

1909	$126,375,428.10
1910	106,894,675.67
1911	140,176,926.13
1912	167,152,478.99
1913	165,960,984.79
1914	161,612,615.53
1915	104,170,105.78
1916	174,965,231.97

The $174,965,231.97 balance in the general fund mentioned in the above table for the fiscal year ended yesterday will undoubtedly be increased when revised returns are received.

The following is a detailed statement of receipts and disbursements for the fiscal year just closed as compared with the previous year:

WALLACE METCALF.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, during the last three weeks I have been detained almost all the time in the committee room in the consideration of appropriation bills. I believe I have not had an opportunity to make a single request of the Senate. There is a small bill upon the calendar that will pass without objection, and I should like to have it considered. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 650) to correct the military record of Wallace Metcalf.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that in the administration of the pension laws, and the laws governing rights and privileges to honorably discharged soldiers, Wallace Metcalf shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private in Company H, Ninth Regiment Vermont Volunteer Infantry, on the 31st day of December, 1862. But no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third read, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Wallace Metcalf."

JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF NORTH DAKOTA.

Mr. GRONNA. The other day I reported a short bill to which there will be no objection by anyone. It is very important that it should be passed at this time. I ask unanimous consent that it be considered now.

Mr. SMOOT. I shall not object to this bill, but I shall object to any more bills being taken from the calendar.

Mr. GORE. I should like to inquire if the bill will lead to any controversy, as it is the desire to have an executive session, and we would not want to lose that right.

Mr. GRONNA. If the bill leads to any discussion, I will withdraw it. I ask the Senate to proceed to consider the bill (H. R.

11878) to amend section 99 of the act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to amend section 99 of the act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary to read as follows:

SEC. 99. That the State of North Dakota shall constitute one judicial district, to be known as the district of North Dakota. The territory embraced on the 1st day of January, 1916, in the counties of Burleigh, Logan, McIntosh, Emmons, Kidder, McLean, Adams, Bowman, Dunn, Hettinger, Morton, Stark, Golden Valley, Slope, Sioux, Oliver, Mercer, Billings, and McKenzie shall constitute the southwestern disivion of said district; and the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Cass, Richland, Barnes, Sargent, Ransom, and Steele shall constitute the southeastern division; and the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Grand Forks, Traill, Walsh, Pembina, Cavalier, and Nelson shall constitute the northeastern; and the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Ramsey, Benson, Towner, Rolette, Bottineau, Pierce, and McHenry shall constitute the northwestern division; and the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Ward, Williams, Divide, Mountrail, Burke, and Renville shall constitute the western division; and the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Griggs, Foster, Eddy, Wells, Sheridan, Stutsman, Lamoure, and Dickey shall constitute the central division. The several Indian reservations and parts thereof within said State shall constitute a part of the several divisions within which they are respectively situated. Terms of the district court for the southwestern division shall be held at Bismarck on the first Tuesday in March; for the southeastern division, at Fargo on the third Tuesday in May; for the northeastern division, at Grand Forks on the second Tuesday in November; for the northwestern division, at Devils Lake on the first Tuesday in July; for the western division, at Minot on the second Tuesday in October; and for the central division, at Jamestown on the second Tuesday in April. The clerk of the court shall maintain an office in charge of himself or a deputy at each place at which court is held in his district: Provided, That the Government of the United States shall incur no expense for rent, light, heat, water, or janitor service for the building in which court shall be held until such time as the Government may erect its own court room.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PAY OF CANADIAN SOLDIERS.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I caused yesterday inquiry to be made, through the State Department, as to the pay and allowances of the Canadian soldiers, with especial reference to the maintenance allowed their dependents. I have received this information from the State Department, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD. It is very brief.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator if the same information was not submitted by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN]?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Not to my knowledge. The statement submitted by the Senator from Oregon included all the countries except this one, so far as I am aware.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PAY OF CANADIAN SOLDIERS AND ALLOWANCE TO THEIR DEPENDENTS.

JULY 3, 1916.

Message from United States consul general at Ottawa, Canada, to the State Department:

"Canadian Government pays privates $1.10 per diem and clothing, equipment, maintenance. In addition, separation allowances $20 per month to dependents, meaning wives, children, or widows, if girls under 16, boys under 14, and widowed mothers, if son unmarried and sole support. Higher allowances to dependents of sergeants and officers."

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House insists upon its amendments to the bill (S. 35) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents for certain lands to the town of Myton, Utah, disagreed to by the Senate, agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. FERRIS, Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, and Mr. LENROOT managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House insists upon its amendments to the bill (S. 36) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents for certain lands to the town of Duchesne, Utah, disagreed to by the Senate, agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. FERRIS, Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, and Mr. LENROOT managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 20. An act authorizing the county of Gunnison, Colo., to purchase certain public lands for public-park purposes;

H. R. 15347. An act to amend existing laws relating to the use of alcohol, free of tax, by scientific institutions or colleges of learning.

PETITIONS.

Mr. GALLINGER presented a petition of 96 citizens of Claremont, N. H., praying for the enactment of legislation to grant pensions to widows and orphans of veterans of the Civil War, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Ancient Order of Hibernians, of Concord, N. H., praying for the granting of a site in Arlington Cemetery for the erection of a monument to nuns who served as nurses during the Civil War, which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SHAFROTH, from the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 9533) to provide a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 579) thereon.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona, from the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 5718) to provide for an auxiliary reclamation project in connection with the Yuma project, Arizona, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 580) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 10116) for the relief of certain settlers under reclamation projects, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 581) thereon.

Mr. KERN, from the Committee on Finance, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

H. R. 11679. An act for the relief of Samuel D. Kingsbury (Rept. No. 584); and

H. R. 13027. An act authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to credit the stamp account of Isaac R. Strouse, collector for the seventh internal-revenue district, in the sum of $14,570.42 (Rept. No. 585).

Mr. ASHURST, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (S. 889) for the erection of a public building in the city of Tucson, Ariz., reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 583) thereon.

Mr. GORE, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the bill (S. 3351) to amend the act of August 30, 1890, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 587) thereon.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11707) to amend an act entitled "An act to increase the pension of widows, minor children, etc., of deceased soldiers and sailors of the late Civil War, the War with Mexico, the various Indian wars, etc., and to grant a pension to certain widows of the deceased soldiers and sailors of the late Civil War," approved April 19, 1908, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 586) thereon.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. From the Committee on Military Affairs I report back favorably with amendments the bill (H. R. 16460) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and I submit a report (No. 582) thereon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

BILL INTRODUCED.

By Mr. STONE:

A bill (S. 6556) granting a pension to Levi R. Campbell (with accompanying papers), which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. PITTMAN submitted an amendment authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to widen Cathedral Avenue and Woodley Road between Twenty-ninth Street and Wisconsin Avenue in the District of Columbia to a width of not exceeding 54 feet instead of 90, as laid down on the highway plan of the District of Columbia, intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill (H. R. 15774), which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WEEKS (for Mr. OLIVER) submitted an amendment providing that the Federal Trade Commission be directed, immediately after the passage of the act and annually thereafter upon the request of the Secretary of the Navy, to investigate and inventory the armor-plate plants of the United States, examine their books, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill (H. R. 15947), which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. GRONNA submitted an amendment providing that in any State where there has not been established, either by the laws of the State or by the rules and regulations of any commercial exchange, a system of grain inspection this act shall not apply, as far as it refers to the shipment or delivery of grain entering into interstate or foreign commerce, intended to be proposed by him to the Agricultural appropriation bill (H. R. 12717), which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

ADJOURNMENT OVER THE FOURTH.

Mr. KERN. I move that not later than 6 o'clock this evening the Senate adjourn until 11 o'clock a. m. on Wednesday next.

The motion was agreed to.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS (S. DOC. NO. 485).

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I submit the report of the committe of conference on the bill (H. R. 12193) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, together with a statement of the managers on the part of the Senate. I ask that the report and accompanying statement be printed in the RECORD and also that they be printed as a document.

Mr. GALLINGER. Is it a complete agreement?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. It is.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The conference report will be printed as a document and also printed in the RECORD, together with the statement of the managers on the part of the Senate.

[Subsequently, at the request of Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas, the conference report was withdrawn, and on July 8, 1916, a corrected report was submitted.]

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, July 5, 1916.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we come to Thee out of the inspiration and glory of the day upon which we have celebrated the anniversary of the birth of a great Nation dedicated to the rights of men. We thank Thee that through the long track of the years we have kept true to the ideals of our great Nation. We thank Thee that Thou hast raised up men to maintain the ideals of the fathers. We bless Thee that to-day we stand united, with the great citizenship of this country still devoted to those principles Thou hast breathed into the life of our Nation. We recognize that Thy good hand, the hand of divine providence, has been upon us. We bless Thee for the prospect before us, for the confidence that we have in the ability that Thou hast given to Thy creatures upon earth to erect a Government over which they themselves may preside and which will body forth the great ideals of divine life in humanity. Do Thou lead us to this end, we ask for Christ's sake. Amen.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the Journal of the proceedings of the preceding session.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a telegram in the nature of a petition from William Rosenau, president, and Isaac Landman, corresponding secretary, of the Central Conference of American Rabbis, held at Wildwood, N. J., which was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WILDWOOD, N. J., July 4, 1916.

PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE,
Washington, D. C.:

The Central Conference of American Rabbis passed this morning by a rising vote the following resolution, presented by Rabbis David Philipson, Cincinnati; Joseph Krauskopf, Philadelphia; and Julian Morgenstern, Cincinnati, Ohio:

"Deeply sensible of the exceptional position of our country as the abode of peace during the past two years of murderous warfare across the seas owing to the progress among the American people of an international policy of peace, we, the Central Conference of American Rabbis, in meeting assembled on this day of our Nation's birth, urge upon those who the people have set in authority, the President, his councilors and advisors, and the lawmaking bodies, that in the present critical phase of our relation with our neighbor to the south every possible effort be exerted to avert war, with its unspeakable horrors and suffering, and to continue among us that blessed peace which has obtained hitherto and has made this land the hope of the world.

"Resolved, That this resolution shall be telegraphed to the President of the United States, the Speaker, of the House of Representatives, and the President of the Senate, and shall be given full publicity in the daily press."

WM. ROSENAU,
President.
ISAAC LANDMAN,
Corresponding Secretary.

Mr. SHEPPARD presented memorials of the Commercial Association and the Maritime Committee of Galveston, Tex., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called ship-purchase bill, which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. FLETCHER presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Tallahassee, Fla., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I present a letter which I have received bearing on the resolution I offered some weeks since regarding the payment of employees of the Government who may have enlisted in the military service. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EAST ORANGE, N. J., June 27, 1916.

Senator JAMES MARTINE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In reference to the recent session of the Senate at which you advocated the payment of all Government employees who are now in active service as guardsmen, I wish to thank you for the interest you have shown in that matter.

Being the wife of a letter carrier, who has also been a member of the militia for 15 years, the need of such a bill is particularly forceful to me, since I must in some way exist on $45 a month, which is indeed a mere pittance in these days of high prices, as I have two children to keep.

Trusting you will continue to use your best efforts to have this bill become a law and wishing you every success, I am,

Yours, respectfully,

Mrs. JOSEPH E. HILTON,
114 North Maple Avenue.

Mr. STERLING presented a memorial of the members of the South Dakota Conference of Seventh-day Adventists, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to limit the freedom of the press, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I presented a concurrent resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Louisiana, favoring the passage of Senate bill 3351, introduced by me, and which relates to the importation of cattle. I ask that the concurrent resolution be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Act No. 30.]

Senate concurrent resolution 14, by Mr. Domengeaux, indorsing Senate bill 3351, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session.

Be it resolved by the Senate of Louisiana (the House of Representatives concurring), That Senate bill 3351, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, introduced by Senator BROUSSARD, of Louisiana, in the Senate on January 10, 1916, is hereby indorsed, and the Congress of the United States is respectfully urged to pass the bill at this session of Congress, to the end that the discrimination now existing in favor of the ports in Texas against other southern ports with regard to the importation of cattle and the proper safeguard by the United States Department of Agriculture may not longer be permitted to continue; be it further

Resolved, etc., That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the Senate of the United States and to the House of Representatives of the United States and to the Louisiana Members of the Senate and House in the Congress of the United States.

FERNAND MOUTON,
Lieutenant Governor and President of the Senate.
HEWITT BOUANCHAUD,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Approved June 23, 1916.

R. G. PLEASANT,
Governor of the State of Louisiana.

A true copy.
[SEAL.]

JAMES J. BARLEY,
Secretary of State.

Mr. PHELAN presented a memorial of the Board of Supervisors of Monterey County, Cal., and a memorial of the California State Board of Education, remonstrating against the proposed imposition of an inheritance tax, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. McLEAN presented memorials of Local Lodge No. 111, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, of Bridgeport; of the Joint General Committee of the Order of Railroad Carmen, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, and Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen; and Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, of New Haven; of Local Lodge No. 201, Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen, of New Haven; and of Local Lodge No. 118, Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen, of Hartford, all in the State of Connecticut, remonstrating against compulsory arbitration by Congress of railroad matters, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of Local Grange No. 58, Patrons of Husbandry, of West Hartford, Conn., remonstrating against the sending of untrained soldiers into active service, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was refered the bill (H. R. 10305) to grant certain lands to the State of Oregon as a public park, for the benefit and enjoyment of the people, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 589) thereon.

Mr. GRONNA, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 1592) for the relief of George W. Trahey, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 590) thereon.

Mr. NELSON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6914) to amend section 82, chapter 231, of the act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, reported it without amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS, from the Committee on the Library, to which was referred the bill (S. 5752) granting to the widow of Col. David Du B. Gaillard authority to place, in his memory, a tablet in the Memorial Amphitheater at Arlington, Va., reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 592) thereon.

Mr. NORRIS, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 184) providing for one year's extension of time to make installment payments for the land of the former Fort Niobrara Military Reservation, Nebr., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 591) thereon.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 865) granting to the State of Arizona public lands for the construction, repair, and maintenance of public roads, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 593) thereon.

Mr. SIMMONS, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill (S. 5987) to amend subsection 11 of section 3244, Revised Statutes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 594) thereon.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 13728) for the relief of the J. L. da Roza Estate (Inc.), of Elk Grove, Cal., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 595) thereon.

Mr. HARDING, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7062) for the relief of Erskine R. Hayes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 596) thereon.

MARINE HOSPITAL RESERVATION, CLEVELAND, OHIO.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. From the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 2845) authorizing the sale of the Marine Hospital Reservation in Cleveland, Ohio, and I submit a report (No. 588) thereon.

Mr. POMERENE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to have the present marine-hospital reservation in Cleveland, Ohio, and the improvements thereon, except so much of said reservation and the improvements thereon as he may deem it advisable to retain for the use of any branch of the public service, appraised by competent appraisers, paying therefor the customary rate of compensation for such service, and then, in his discretion and after due advertisement, to sell said appraised land and improvements, or any portion thereof, to the highest bidder therefor, upon such terms and at such times as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem for the best interests of the United States, for an aggregate price of not less than what he deems the value of said property after considering said appraisements, or the appropriate proportionate part of said value for such part of said land or improvements as may be sold separately; and to convey said land and improvements, or any part thereof, to the respective purchasers thereof by the usual quitclaim deed.

That the proceeds of the sale of so much of said reservation and the improvements thereon as is sold under the foregoing authorization are hereby appropriated and made immediately available for the provision of a new marine hospital at Cleveland, Ohio, and the acquisition of a suitable site therefor, for the acquisition of suitable sites and the erection of hospitals thereon at such points as may be hereafter designated by Congress, for new marine hospitals at stations where the present buildings are old and obsolete, and for rehabilitating, repairing, altering, remodeling, reconstructing, and improving other marine hospitals and the grounds thereof, and for the requisite furniture, equipment, and appliances, etc., necessary for the proper preparation and fitting out of all such establishments better to enable their satisfactory operation for hospital purposes

That $1,000 is hereby appropriated and made immediately available for the compensation of the appraisers above mentioned and such other expenses incident to the said sale as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem proper and specially order in writing.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. POMERENE. Accompanying the bill is a report from the committee. It is short, and I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD, so that those interested may be informed as to the reasons for the sale of the property.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The report submitted this day by Mr. SUTHERLAND from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds is as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred S. 2845, authorizing the sale of the marine hospital reservation in Cleveland, Ohio, reports the same to the Senate without amendment and recommends that the bill do pass.

The Government acquired title to this property in 1837, and in 1852 built thereon a marine hospital, which it has since maintained. The purchase price of the land was $12,000. The building upon it is wholly out of date and is not fitted for hospital purposes. The property is surrounded by business blocks, factories, and railroads, and the smoke, noise, and dust render it unsuitable for hospital use. The ground alone is estimated to be worth from $1,000,000 to $1,500,000, and the building is of comparatively little value.

The city of Cleveland some years ago adopted a group plan for its public buildings, and the continuance of this hospital interferes with the carrying out of this plan—in fact, the city must have a part of this hospital ground to complete its plan. Also for years the city government has been urging the railroads to build a new union depot. The building of this depot has been agreed upon by and between the city and the railroads, but all these plans are contingent upon the removal of this hospital and the securing of title to a portion of this property.

From the standpoint of the Government it is highly desirable to sell this property and provide for such hospital facilities as may be needed in a more suitable location. By the terms of this bill the Secretary of the Treasury is required to have the property appraised and sold to the highest bidder upon such terms and at such times as he may deem for the best interests of the United States for an aggregate price of not less than what he deems the value of said property after considering said appraisement. The proceeds of said sale are appropriated and made available for a new marine hospital at Cleveland, Ohio, " and the acquisition of a suitable site therefor, for the acquisition of suitable sites and the erection of hospitals thereon at such points as may be hereafter designated by Congress, for new marine hospitals at stations where the present buildings are old and obsolete, and for rehabilitating, repairing, altering, remodeling, reconstructing, and improving other marine hospitals and the grounds thereof, and for the requisite furniture, equipment, and appliances, etc., necessary for the proper preparation and fitting out of all such establishments better to enable their satisfactory operation for hospital purposes."

The Public Health Service of the Government recommends this sale; also the Treasury Department.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF ASSISTANT SECRETARY,
Washington, June 28, 1916.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Receipt is acknowledged of your communication of the 26th instant, inclosing a copy of S. 2845, introduced by you, authorizing the sale of the marine hospital reservation at Cleveland, Ohio. You ask to be advised of this department's views with respect to said bill.

Under date of January 10, 1916, the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the Senate was informed that this department believes that this legislation should be enacted.

Very truly, yours,

B. R. NEWTON,
Assistant Secretary.

Hon. ATLEE POMERENE,
United States Senate.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. JOHNSON of Maine:

A bill (S. 6557) to establish an aerial coast-patrol system and for the education and training as aviators of the aviation section of the Naval Militia of the several States; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. HUSTING:

A bill (S. 6558) making an appropriation for the benefit of the Aviation Corps of the Department of War and repealing the provisions of certain acts relating to the acquisition of a site and the erection of a public building at Ripon, Wis.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BROUSSARD:

A bill (S. 6559) to provide for the establishment of a military post or permanent mobilization camp at Camp Stafford, Alexandria, La.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SUTHERLAND:

A bill (S. 6560) granting a pension to Elizabeth A. Cook; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. POINDEXTER:

A bill (S. 6561) providing for the sale at public auction of all unsold suburban lots not reserved for public purposes in the Government town site of Port Angeles, Wash., and for the issuance of patents for those previously sold under the act of May 6, 1906, on the payment of the price at which the said lots were reappraised under said act without further condition or delay; to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I introduce a bill and ask that it be read. It is very short.

The bill (S. 6562) to forbid the use of the mails for letters, postal cards, circulars, or pamphlets offering for sale, soliciting the purchase of, or advertising intoxicating liquors, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That no letter, postal card, circular, or pamphlet offering for sale, soliciting the purchase of, or advertising intoxicating liquors, sent by any dealer or agent or employee of a dealer in intoxicating liquors, shall be carried in the mails to a State or delivered at or through any post office or branch thereof or by any letter carrier in a State where by law the advertisement of intoxicating liquors is prohibited.

Any person who shall knowingly deposit, or cause to be deposited, or shall knowingly send, or cause to be sent, anything to be conveyed or delivered by mail in violation of this section, or shall knowingly cause to be delivered by mail anything herein forbidden to be carried by mail, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction, be punished by a fine of not more than $500 or by imprisonment for not more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment for each offense.

The VICE PRESIDENT. To what committee does the Senator desire the bill to be referred?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think it should be referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

By Mr. GALLINGER (for Mr. GOFF):

A bill (S. 6563) granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Allen (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. DILLINGHAM:

A bill (S. 6564) granting a pension to Viora Taylor (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 6565) granting an increase of pension to Sarah Wright (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MARTIN of Virginia:

A bill (S. 6566) granting an increase of pension to Grace Boggs (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 6567) granting an increase of pension to Susan Riley (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BRADY:

A bill (S. 6568) for the relief of Philip D. Ellis (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SIMMONS:

A bill (S. 6569) for the relief of J. M. Fulton; to the Committee on Finance.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. OVERMAN submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $562.50 to pay Frank W. Bauskett for services rendered as special disbursing agent, National Exposition Commission, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, which was ordered to be printed, and, with accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BRANDEGEE submitted an amendment authorizing the President to nominate and appoint Edward W. Whitaker, late lieutenant colonel First Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Cavalry and brevet brigadier general United States Volunteers, a lieutenant colonel of Cavalry, United States Army, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Military Academy appropriation bill (H. R. 16699), which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment authorizing the President to nominate and appoint Edward W. Whitaker, late lieutenant colonel First Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Cavalry and brevet brigadier general United States Volunteers, a lieutenant colonel of Cavalry, United States Army, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill (H. R. 16460), which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WILLIAMS submitted an amendment authorizing the appointment of Commodore William Stetson Hogg, retired, to be a rear admiral on the active list to take rank next after Rear Admiral Austin M. Knight, United States Navy, intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill (H. R. 15947), which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BROUSSARD submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $125,000 for the construction and equipment of a light vessel for the Passes at the entrance to the Mississippi River, La., intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill (H. R. 15947), which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. O'GORMAN submitted an amendment providing that the master of the sword shall have relative rank and shall be entitled to the pay, allowances, and emoluments of a major, intended to be proposed by him to the Military Academy appropriation bill (H. R. 16699), which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

DESTRUCTION OF GOVERNMENT PROPERTY, SEATTLE, WASH.

Mr. POINDEXTER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 224), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That in view of the destruction by fire on Friday last of $40,000 worth of Government property on the docks at Seattle, Wash., and the large amount of property the War Department is and will be handling on the Seattle docks, the Secretary of War is requested to inform the Senate what, if any, reason exists for the failure of the War Department to store its goods in the fireproof municipal docks and dock warehouses at Seattle.

REFUNDS OF DRAWBACKS.

Mr. BROUSSARD submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 225), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to submit to the Senate the statement requested by Senate resolution 64, agreed to January 10, 1916, directing him to furnish a statement of certain data relative to applications for and payments of drawbacks under paragraph O, section 4, of the present tariff act for various periods and which the Secretary of the Treasury reported on January 18, 1916, would "be expedited in every possible way."

DYESTUFF INDUSTRY.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I submit an extract from the report of the proceedings of the Eighteenth Ordinary General Meeting held within the Mechanics' Institute, Bradford, England, with reference to dyestuffs and explosives. Both these subjects are of great interest to the country at this time. The paper is very short, and I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE BRADFORD DYERS' ASSOCIATION (LTD.).

[Milton Sheridan Sharp, chairman.]

Extract from report of the proceedings of the eighteenth ordinary general meeting held within the Mechanics' Institute, Bridge Street, Bradford, England, on Monday, the 28th day of February, 1916, at 12 o'clock noon.

I am most reluctant on these occasions to make the least departure from what is our own immediate business, but it is of such importance that some one should direct public attention to another, but far graver aspect of the question which so deeply concerns us; and on which, having had special opportunities of realizing the position, I feel it my duty to speak out plainly, though I greatly wish such duty had fallen to a more powerful voice. I wish to bring home to you and, so far as it is possible, to the public at large a startling fact which this awful war has revealed to the thoughtful mind and impartial eye of every intelligent man who has been brought into direct contact with the difficulties arising from the shortage of aniline dyes—namely, that the establishment of the synthetic dye industry in this country is vital to our national safety. To the uninitiated it may seem very strange, but it is a simple fact that dyes and high explosives are very closely correlated. Benzol, toluol, carbolic acid, sulphuric and nitric acids are the raw materials from which dyes and high explosives alike are made, and it would indeed be a tragedy if we failed to learn the lesson the war has taught us, namely, that ability to produce unlimited quantities of those articles is one of the first essentials of any hope of success in warfare. The complete, self-contained and independent manufacture of aniline dyes within the United Kingdom is essential to the commercial and martial protection of the State.

The raw materials from which aniline dyes are made being the same as are used in the manufacture of high explosives, picture to yourselves the enormous advantage Germany had by reason of her huge, highly organized and ably administered color works, producing all the raw materials required for the making of high explosives, and able immediately to divert much of their color-making plant to their manufacture. What was our position? Why, exactly the same as our position in regard to the army. We had to improvise an army. We had also to improvise our production of high explosives. We have done both, and to a degree which our enemies will find to their cost and sorrow before very long.

The country will probably never know how much it owes to the high-explosives department of the ministry of munitions, presided over by Lord Moulton, and officered by a body of strikingly able and energetic men, to whose commanding force it is due that the danger from a shortage of high explosives has been so effectively met.

Take our own case as an illustration. Our munition works have been extended to a degree which none of us, even a year ago, would have regarded as either necessary or likely—and this is typical of what has been done all over the country. Most of such extensions have been made to serve a temporary purpose only, and at the end of the war will be demolished unless such portions are retained as can be utilized in producing the bases for aniline dyes. Some are of a permanent character, especially those in connection with acid plants, on which the Government, directly and indirectly, have spent tremendous sums. These also will be useless and valueless after the war unless the color industry is established in this country, to which end such plants are a long and essential step, and it will be little short of criminal folly to break them up. What I desire to urge, with all the force of which I am capable, is that we must never again jeopardize our national safety by the risk of shortage of high explosives, and that whatever it involves we must establish the aniline-dye industry in this country, so that in case of war we have the ability to quickly produce any amount of high explosives the army or navy may need. Until we do this we shall always be at a great disadvantage as compared with Germany. I am confident if public opinion could once understand the situation it would be practically unanimous in demanding the most thoroughgoing and drastic action, quite regardless of cost.

On my last journey to Germany, just before the outbreak of war, I visited all the large color works, and it will bring home to you what terrible instruments such works are for enabling the German Government to carry out its policy of frightfulness when I tell you that one company alone, then employing about 10,000 men chiefly in the manufacture of aniline dyes, to-day, I am credibly informed, are employing about 14,000 men almost entirely on the manufacture of high explosives. Only those with some knowledge can realize the facility with which a color works can be converted into a high-explosive factory. Another works visited at that time employed about 9,000 men in the manufacture of aniline colors and pharmaceuticals. I have information, to which I attach entire credence, that to-day those works are engaged almost solely in making T. N. T. and picric acid for the German Government.

During the course of the same journey I gathered that 75 per cent of the collieries in Germany had coke ovens installed. When it is realized how vitally important the distillation of coal in coke ovens is in relation to the manufacture of aniline dyes and high explosives it will be seen how this alone gave Germany an enormous advantage over us in the early stages of the war, as the by-products from the coke ovens are amongst the most important materials for making colors and explosives—whereas in Great Britain at the outbreak of the war only some 25 per cent of our collieries had coke ovens installed.

I was also told that three of the principal German color-making concerns, who pool their profits, had shortly before increased their capital by £2,250,000 for the purpose of erecting a works for the production of ammonia from the air. At that time they estimated they would produce 130,000 tons of ammonia per year; it has since been stated that this production has been increased to 200,000 and is now being converted into nitric acid. The raising of so much capital for such a purpose is noteworthy even on the surface, but it is even more striking in the light of our now certain knowledge as to the preparations of Germany for war. It is impossible to avoid the conviction that the use of such a plant in the event of war was duly taken into consideration. It has been said that the supply of high explosives to the German Army would by this time have ceased had it not been for that plant. It is quite possible that the stocks of nitrate of soda would now have been exhausted, and without nitric acid no high explosives can be made.

As you know, it was many months after the outbreak of war before it was seen by us that high-explosive shells would be the dominating factor. Germany, realizing the failure of her fond hopes of a speedy triumph, knew quite well what the character of the warfare would be, and her possession of huge color and chemical works enabled her to set about immediately producing almost unlimited quantities of high explosives. We were in no such position, as we had no works in the slightest degree comparable with the great works in Germany. Our experience proves how essential it is to the national safety that such works should be established here, and illustrates the folly of which we have hitherto been guilty in materially aiding their development and prosperity in the country of a potential enemy.

How can this establishment be accomplished? No one with any knowledge would venture the opinion that it can be attained through British Dyes (Ltd.) alone. I wish to speak with great respect and the deepest gratitude for what that company has done. Faced with a tremendous task, made incomparably more difficult by the prior claim of explosives upon the raw material, it has done really splendidly. The want of raw materials has hampered the efforts also of all the British, Swiss, and French makers. When such difficulties disappear I am sure British Dyes (Ltd.) would not claim that they alone will have the power to free us from German domination in this, the greatest "key" industry—a key not only to export business aggregating £200,000,000 a year and to the employment of some 2,000,000 people, but, what is of far greater moment, as I trust I have shown you, also to the national safety. Indeed, I make bold to say there are few things which this terrible war has made more clear than that both from the economic and national defense standpoints there is no question of greater urgency than the rapid establishment of the aniline-dye industry in this country. It certainly calls for further and immediate action by the Government and Parliament; but before I indicate the form such action, in the opinion of your director, should take I should like to point out ways in which assistance of great value can be given to British, Swiss, and French color makers.

In the first place I would urge greater sympathy and closer cooperation between dye users and dye producers. As an illustration of how far-reaching the effects of this may be, I may tell you that for months before the war we were working in the closest cooperation with a British concern for the production of a dye which up to that time we had been able to procure from one maker only in Germany. The ultimate result was that the British maker produced an article equal in every respect to the German, and we placed a contract for no less than 1,000 tons of it. This has been a help to us during the present crisis, the value of which it is impossible to exaggerate—and the advantage has not been confined to us, as it has been shared by the whole trade.

By a very simple process the allied Government can also do much to aid British, Swiss, French, and Russian color makers by entirely prohibiting the use of any German dye on goods used in any Government department.

I hold strongly that this is not the time for suggesting measures likely to disturb in the least the national unity, and although most free traders, of whom I am one, are prepared to scrap their prewar economic opinions, realizing that we shall hereafter live under entirely new conditions, I am confident that the common sense of even the strongest adherent of the "Manchester school" will compel the admission that action must be taken to secure the establishment of the aniline-dye industry in this country. It is only fair to recognize that its establishment by the imposition of tariffs would be mainly at the cost of the textile industry, whereas it is properly a national charge, and we must not lose sight of the fact that a very large percentage of our trade in textiles is with foreign markets in which we have to meet the competition of the world. To have higher dyeing and printing costs than our rivals would be a handicap. Bearing on this, the attitude of Italy deserves careful consideration. Although largely protectionist in policy, she puts no duty on aniline dyes specially in order to encourage and develop the export of textiles.

The policy which your directors favor is practically that which we urged upon His Majesty's Government before the formation of British Dyes (Ltd.), and which, stated in the briefest terms, was that the Government should make a grant in aid of, say, £500,000 per annum for a period, to be administered by a commission charged with the duty of securing the establishment of the industry in this country, by grants on production, and for enterprise and initiative. The number of the commission should be limited, and its members carefully chosen so as to unquestionably command the confidence of the British, Swiss, and French color makers, and of the users, who, as I have pointed out, can give invaluable aid. If that were so, it would make possible what, without it, will, I fear, be quite beyond our reach, namely, a definite unity of purpose, by the proper coordination of production and the mutual supply and exchange of raw and intermediate products. Such a commission, provided as it would be with special means for the fulfillment of its mission, and by enterprising, energetic, and fearless leadership, watching with the utmost vigilance the progress of the various color-making works, would, at least in our opinion, secure the establishment of the industry in this country, not only on less debatable lines, but also much more quickly than by import duties, and even in the event of the imposition of such, the saving of time would be well worth the cost for two or three years. In the absence of import duties, however, it is essential to have the most stringent provisions to prevent dumping, as there is not a shade of doubt that if they are allowed to do it the German color makers will sell at any price to recover this market, and unless we resolutely make up our minds to thwart it they will succeed.

Before the war there were two large groups of color makers in Germany pooling their respective profits, and there were two comparatively small outside makers. It may be anticipated that after the war these interests will be united, forming a combination amongst the most powerful in the world, and governed by some of the ablest men in the German Empire. It would be folly to underestimate the magnitude of the task of establishing in this country works capable of contending with them on equal terms, and yet there is strong and irresistible necessity for so doing. Your directors feel that whether import duties are imposed or not, special and extraordinary aid is needed, and they believe that such a commission would make the removal of dependence on Germany more certain than could possibly be hoped for by leaving the British color makers, even if protected by import duties, to their own unaided and uncoordinated efforts. These considerations, therefore, seem to your directors not only to warrant, but to demand the setting up of some such authority.

RURAL HEALTH.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that on Friday, the 14th instant, after the conclusion of the morning business, I shall address the Senate on rural health, the Nation's first duty.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, on yesterday the President of the United States addressed the American Federation of Labor, the occasion being the dedication of the new building of that organization. Whilst speaking, he was interrupted by a member of the Congressional Union and berated for his alleged obstruction of action upon the pending resolution to amend the Constitution, popularly known as the Susan B. Anthony amendment. This very characteristic method of propaganda, not unusual on such occasions as the one mentioned, suggests to me the propriety of submitting to the Senate a short historical summary of that amendment, which has been pending upon the calendar of the Senate since the 8th of January last, being General Order No. 27, under Rule VIII.

Mr. President, that amendment was reported by the Senate Committee on Woman Suffrage very promptly, after certain hearings had been granted, which had been requested, the report, of course, being favorable. Shortly after it was placed upon the Calendar, I was interviewed by Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, the president of the national organization for woman suffrage, the old organization, the regular organization, and the only one which I am disposed to recognize as having authority to speak upon the subject with regard to the time and the mode of our procedure. This lady made the request that I should attempt, if possible, an informal poll of the Senate, with a view of determining the strength which the joint resolution would command in the event the Senate should see fit to take it up for discussion and final action. I did that, and reported that the numerical strength of the supporters of the amendment was considerably less than the number of votes cast for the same amendment at the last Congress.

I may say, in this connection, that I am credibly informed that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], who voted for the amendment at the last Congress, is opposed to it now, while the two new Senators from South Dakota and California, respectively, are also opposed to it, the latter gentleman's opposition being caused very largely by the opposition which he encountered as a candidate at the hands of the Congressional Union, merely because he was a candidate on the Democatic ticket.

Subsequently, Mrs. Catt requested that this amendment should not be called up for consideration or be acted upon until she so requested. So far as I could do so, as chairman of the Committee on Woman Suffrage, I assumed the responsibility of giving her that assurance.

Some two weeks ago an informal conference of western Senators—which I did not attend, and of which I had no knowledge at the time—considered the propriety of calling up the amendment and, if possible, submitting it to a vote without debate. Nothing has been done with regard to that subject.

On the 30th of June the following letter was addressed to me:

We understand that a meeting of Senators from the suffrage States has been held, and that there has been some discussion of bringing the national suffrage amendment to a vote at an early date. The amendment is known as Senate joint resolution No. 1, and is Order No. 27 on the Senate calendar.

The Congressional Union is not yet ready for a vote on this amendment, and we write to ask you to oppose any effort which may be made for an early vote. We earnestly request that no move at all be made for a vote in the Senate without consultation with the Congressional Union on this subject.

Thanking you for your cooperation, I am,

Very sincerely, yours,

ANNE H. MARTIN,
Legislative Chairman.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Legislative chairman of what?

Mr. THOMAS. Legislative chairman of the Congressional Union. To this letter I replied, as follows:

JULY 1, 1916.

Miss ANNE H. MARTIN,
Legislative Secretary,
Lafayette Square, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MISS MARTIN: I am in receipt of your letter of the 30th ultimo, regarding the national suffrage amendment now on the Senate calendar. When the National Suffrage Association desires this amendment acted upon, I shall move its consideration. I have so informed Mrs. Catt.

Yours, respectfully, ——— ———.

This correspondence, Mr. President, discloses that the association, a member of which yesterday interrupted the President of the United States on the occasion mentioned, is not itself willing that the Senate take any action upon the amendment, and it is, to put it mildly, somewhat inconsistent that an association should request the postponement of the measure and at the same time some of its members should reproach the President for not being more active in its support.

Mr. President, as stated here, and as chairman of the committee, I believe that in view of the enormous amount of important business before the Senate, and in view of the fact that the national organization at the present time does not feel disposed to have this matter considered, the committee has been fully justified in asking no action up to the present time.

This statement might perhaps be sufficient; but inasmuch as it was announced at the organization of a so-called woman's party, having its birth contemporaneously with the obsequies of the late lamented "bull moose" at Chicago, that this new party can influence and control the suffrages of 4,000,000 women of the suffrage States—as that announcement has not only frequently been made and reiterated, but has been asserted with more or less confidence—I deem it entirely appropriate to declare that no such body of women, in my judgment, is engaged in or identified with or controlled by this so-called woman's party movement.

I think that the aggregate women's vote of the suffrage States is somewhere in the neighborhood of 4,000,000. Speaking for my own State, I know that the Democratic women of Colorado are not identified with the so-called woman's party; that they will not be identified with it; and that they have no sympathy with its avowed purposes and objects. The women of my State, like the men of my State, divide on party lines, and they will continue to do so, if I am any judge of human nature or am able to draw any lesson from the experiences of the past.

The woman's party is the outgrowth of the Congressional Union. In my State that party actively opposed the Democratic ticket in 1914 and actively espoused the cause of the Republican Party, as it proposes to do in 1916. One of its advocates, a very sweet-voiced little canary, twittered from every twig upon the Republican tree in my Commonwealth to enthusiastic audiences, very generously furnished by those who affiliated with the Republican organization. Its only effect was to arouse the antagonism of the Democratic women and to bring them to the polls in far greater numbers than would otherwise have been the case; and in that respect it was a great benefit to some of the successful candidates, myself among the number; but that action, Mr. President, has left, and very naturally so, a spirit of antagonism in the ranks of Democratic women, the seeds of which were then sowed very actively in the Commonwealth, and I am satisfied that that is the case in every one of the States where this movement was carried on.

In my State the Democratic women are so filled with resentment toward the past course and announced policy of the Congressional Union, that its leaders visited the State executive committee just prior to the last Democratic convention and protested against their receiving or hearing any delegations from that body, declaring they would consider it an affront to them if their protests were not heeded.

I have no desire, Mr. President, to criticize any further than may be necessary the attitude of the Congressional Union, but I think it is perfectly appropriate that I should assert that the control of the 4,000,000 women voters of this country by any organization is a wholly unwarranted and unfounded assumption. It controls neither 4,000,000 nor 3,000,000 nor 2,000,000 nor 1,000,000 nor 250,000 of them. The organization to which I refer probably controls those who belong to it. Certainly their influence does not extend any further; and I am sure if the propaganda, the campaign which has recently characterized the Congressional Union, is continued, it will drive, as it ought, supporters away from the cause of woman suffrage instead of attracting them to it.

SIR ROGER CASEMENT.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, during the call of reports of committees I noticed that the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations [Mr. STONE] was not present, and he has not as yet entered the Chamber. I feel very anxious, indeed, to have reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations the resolution introduced a few days ago by me with reference to Sir Roger Casement, authorizing the President to intercede in his behalf and to ask a stay of execution of the sentence of death imposed upon him. However, the chairman of the committee is not present, and I will defer the matter until he shall return.

PENSIONS TO SPANISH-AMERICAN WAR WIDOWS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 54) to pension widows and minor children of officers and enlisted men who served in the War with Spain, the Philippine insurrection, or in China. The bill has been on the calendar of the Senate for over three months awaiting consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 54) to pension widows and minor children of officers and enlisted men who served in the War with Spain, the Philippine insurrection, or in China.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act if any volunteer officer or enlisted man who served 90 days or more in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States, during the War with Spain or the Philippine insurrection, between April 21, 1898, and July 4, 1902, inclusive, service to be computed from date of enlistment to date of discharge, including all furloughs, or any officer or enlisted man of the Regular Establishment who rendered 90 days or more actual military or naval service in the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps in the War with Spain or the Philippine insurrection or in China between April 21, 1898, and July 4, 1902, inclusive, and who has been honorably discharged therefrom, has died or shall hereafter die leaving a widow without means of support other than her daily labor, and an actual net income not exceeding $250 per year, or leaving a minor child or children under the age of 16 years, such widow shall upon due proof of her husband's death, without proving his death to be the result of his Army or Navy service, be placed on the pension roll from the date of the filing of her application therefor under this act, at the rate of $12 per month during her widowhood, and shall also be paid $2 per month for each child of such officer or enlisted man under 16 years of age, and in case of the death or remarriage of the widow, leaving a child or children of such officer or enlisted man under the age of 16 years, such pension shall be paid such child or children until the age of 16: Provided, That in case a minor child is insane, idiotic, or otherwise permanently helpless, the pension shall continue during the life of said child, or during the period of such disability, and shall commence from the date of application therefor after the passage of this act: Provided further, That said widow shall have married said officer or enlisted man previous to the passage of this act: Provided, however, That this act shall not be so construed as to reduce any pension under any act, public or private.

SEC. 2. That no agent, attorney, or other person engaged in preparing, presenting, or prosecuting any claim under the provisions of this act shall, directly or indirectly, contract for, demand, receive, or retain for such services in preparing, presenting, or prosecuting such claim a sum greater than $10, which sum shall be payable only on the order of the Commissioner of Pensions; and any person who shall violate any of the provisions of this section, or shall wrongfully withhold from the pensioner or claimant the whole or any part of a pension or claim allowed or due such pensioner or claimant under this act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall, for each and every offense, be fined not exceeding $500 or be imprisoned not exceeding one year, or both, in the discretion of the court.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Mr. President, the provisions of this bill are so well known to the Members of the Senate that, it seems to me, no extended explanation at this time is necessary; but I will make a short statement covering its provisions, and also a statement with regard to the estimate furnished by the Department of the Interior as to the expense of carrying out its provisions.

The bill provides a pension to every widow of a soldier, enlisted man, or officer who served in the War with Spain or in the Philippine insurrection or in the Boxer campaign in China for a period of 90 days, provided the widow has no other means of support than her daily labor or an income of $250 a year. All widows who have an income of $250 a year or more are not covered by this bill, but it covers those who do not.

It is very difficult to get any estimate from the department in regard to the cost of this bill, for the reason that it is a mere guess of the department as to how many widows have or would have an income of $250 a year. Therefore the department frankly says it is unable to give us any accurate estimate. We are now carrying upon the pension rolls somewhere about 1,500 widows of those who served in the Spanish War or the Philippine insurrection. A great many have been rejected, because, unlike the law applicable to the widows of Civil War veterans, it is necessary for the widow of the Spanish War soldier to show that her husband's death was occasioned by injuries received or sickness incurred in the service, and in many instances she has been unable to do this. A good many claims have been rejected at the department because of the inability of the widow to bring herself within the provisions of the law. Under this bill it is necessary to show only the service of her husband for the 90 days, and further that she does not have an income exceeding $250 a year.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I do.

Mr. BROUSSARD. What limitation, if any, is there in the bill in regard to minor children?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. The minor children receive $2 a month until reaching the age of 16 years, as under the provisions relative to Civil War pensions.

The bill is simple. It is a short bill, and I think its terms are well understood by the Members of the Senate.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, how much is it estimated that this bill will amount to?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. It is estimated by the department that there will be between 10,000 and 15,000 cases during the first year. This is very strongly contested by the House committee. The department frankly says that it is an estimate only. If there should be 15,000 cases, it will result in an expense of somewhere about $2,500,000 for the first year. The House estimate is $1,500,000.

Mr. OVERMAN. Do not all the pension bills always go above the estimate?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I think that may have been true of some; but this is largely a guess, because the department can not know what income the widow may have. It may make an estimate in regard to it, but it is only an estimate. The House estimate was $1,500,000 after their committee had fully considered the matter, after they had taken up the matter with the veterans of the Spanish War over the country who are organized into their camps and who have a pretty accurate knowledge of the widows to be cared for, and they gave their estimate as $1,500,000.

Mr. OVERMAN. Is there any limitation as to widows of Spanish War veterans who died after the war or married after the war?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. It applies to all widows of Spanish War veterans who had service, no matter when they married the soldier.

Mr. OVERMAN. If they married the soldiers after the war, the widows get a pension?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Yes; it covers them.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, how much do we pay now to the widows of men who were killed or who died in consequence of injuries received in the service during the Spanish-American War?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Twelve dollars a month.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We only pay them that much?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Twelve dollars a month is the usual rate.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And now it is proposed to pay just as much to those who left the war well?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. If I may make a suggestion, the deaths which occurred growing out of the Spanish War were not so much due to wounds as they were to diseases contracted, which left their traces for a long time thereafter; and for that reason it would seem to me that it is very necessary, if we are going to attempt to do justice, to provide for those who may have died afterwards from disease as well as for those who may have died during the war or afterwards from wounds.

Mr. OVERMAN. It seems from the language here, Mr. President, that in the case of a Spanish War veteran who is not married to-day, but who marries 10 years from now, and who subsequently dies, his widow could get a pension.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Oh, no; it is only those who have married before the passage of the act, I think.

Mr. OVERMAN. It says "or shall hereafter die." How does the Senator construe that?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I call the Senator's attention to line 25, the proviso reading as follows:

Provided further, That said widow shall have married said officer or enlisted man previous to the passage of this act.

It does not apply to those who marry after the passage of the act.

It has been very difficult for the widow of a Spanish War soldier to trace the cause of her husband's death to his service, because of the reason mentioned and alluded to by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE]. I have here, from a noted surgeon connected with the Army, who was in charge of a field division hospital in Cuba during the Spanish War, a statement which I have taken from the hearing before the Senate Committee on Pensions of January 20, 1913, and which I will read. This is Dr. S. Clifford Cox, who has been a United States pension examining surgeon for many years, and is at present a surgeon at the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers at the National Military Home in Kansas. He says:

The Spanish War came upon us so suddenly that it found the Army more or less unprepared for war, the medical department especially so for foreign service, where the doctors were insufficient in numbers, poorly equipped in paraphernalia, and practically unfamiliar at first with tropical diseases. As a consequence, thousands of cases were wrongly diagnosed and so went upon the records, which also were otherwise inadequately kept, on account of all of the time being necessarily consumed by the doctors in looking after the men, practically all of whom were sick. I would relate an incident with reference to this. On assuming command of a division field hospital in Cuba, a day or two after the surrender of Santiago, I found on looking over the hospital records that in all of the several hundred cases previously treated in the hospital, the diagnosis opposite the name of each man had been entered as "malaria" (which had been done by a clerk, probably without instructions from the commanding officer) when, as a matter of fact, probably 50 per cent of the patients were suffering from other varieties of tropical diseases, such as tropical dysentery, enterocolitis, yellow fever, appendicitis, etc. As another instance, I know of a case where the medical records of a regiment were lost between Montauk Point and the place of muster out after the regiment had returned from Cuba at the close of the war.

In view of the incompleteness of these medical records, a claimant or his widow would have an extremely hard time proving a "pathological sequence" between any disease of record incurred by the soldier during his Army service and his present disability, if living, or the one from which he died, if dead, but as these records must necessarily stand, it would seem that a straight pension to the widow without the necessity of her proving the death of her husband to be due to service origin would be the most just and rational.

That is the statement of one having charge of a field division during the Spanish War, and now the surgeon at one of our military homes.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President, who is the author of the letter which the Senator has just read?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. The author was Dr. S. Clifford Cox.

Mr. BRADY. Does he occupy any official position?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I have just stated that he was in charge of a field division hospital in Cuba during the Spanish War.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Who is he, and what is he, now?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. He is now a surgeon at the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers at the National Military Home in Kansas.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There is no such opinion expressed, though, from the medical examiners of the Pension Office, as to difficulty in tracing the death to the service for the reasons stated?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I have not any further statement. I think that statement would be found to be true, however. I think in many of these cases these soldiers came home from that service bearing within them the seeds of disease, and that they died, in many instances, from the diseases contracted in the service, when the pathological sequence would be difficult to prove.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I have listened with great interest to the reading of that letter, because it simply confirms my own observation. I had the good fortune to serve the United States Government as a soldier stationed at Santiago de Cuba for 10 months during the Spanish-American War. When we landed there we found every tropical disease that human flesh was heir to. There was yellow fever, smallpox, pernicious malaria, dysentery—the most dreaded of all—and almost every other disease which curse the human family. I have seen strong, vigorous men, athletic men, full of health, buoyant, youthful spirits, wither and die like a sensitive plant in the burnings rays of a tropical sun. I have seen more than one-half of the regiment with which I served prostrated upon a bed of fever at one time. I have known them to recover apparently from the effects of the disease contracted there, and without any reason or apparent cause to the eye of the scientist I have known some of these men to suddenly sicken and die years after they returned to the United States. And they died from the diseases contracted in the service of the United States in Cuba. The statement made by the doctor in the letter which the learned Senator from Maine has just read brings vividly the recollections of the incidents that passed before my own eyes. It is absolutely true.

Mr. President, if I may be pardoned a personal reference, as an evidence of the correctness of the doctor's conclusions, I will say that I, myself, suffered a very serious spell of sickness which my doctor, after his diagnosis, told me was due to causes that dated back to my service in Cuba 8 or 10 years before. Malaria is a very peculiar germ. It will lie in the system, I am told, for years, waiting unimpaired in its malicious vigor and virulence to strike the patient when something happens to impair the nervous or physical forces. Our service in Cuba was a very hard service, especially at the time the regiment with which I served was on duty there. The men who served with me were brave, patriotic, loyal, and true. And they have earned the good opinion and gratitude of their fellow citizens, and it is the duty of this Congress to take care of the wives and children of those men who were left unprovided for. Therefore I shall support the bill, deeply sensible of the fact that the public funds which shall be invested in caring for the indigent widows and helpless infant children of those soldiers will bring splendid returns to the Nation. It not only absolves a debt of gratitude—if indeed a debt of gratitude can be absolved—but we should all enjoy the consciousness of having done our duty to the suffering wives and children of the ones who did their duty so well to the Nation in time of stress.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Maine exactly how he construes this language?—

Has died or shall hereafter die leaving a widow without means of support other than her daily labor, and an actual net income not exceeding $250 per year.

What does the bill mean by "a net income"? That she must have enough money to take care of her, and then $250 above that, and then that she shall get a pension, if she has enough to support her?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. My construction of it would be that it means net income from any business in which she might be engaged.

Mr. OVERMAN. It seems to me that the language means that if she has enough money to support her, and $250 net above that, then she can get a pension. The language above is:

Without means of support other than her daily labor, and an actual net income not exceeding $250 per year.

Mighty few widows have a net income of $250. Does not the Senator think the word "net" ought to be stricken out?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I would be very willing that it should be stricken out.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move to strike it out, Mr. President.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator the estimated increase——

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. If the Senator will pardon me just a minute, my attention is called to the suggestion of the Senator from North Carolina. I agree to the amendment suggested by him. I think the word "net" does not add anything to the bill. The intention was that if the widow has an income of $250 a year, she is not entitled to the provisions of this pension law. I supposed that meant an income in any business after the expenses of the business were paid; but the word "net" does not add anything.

I now yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. I merely wish to inquire, if the Senator can tell me, what the amount of the increase in our pension appropriations will be if this bill is passed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I had just stated that before the Senator came in.

Mr. THOMAS. I have just entered the Chamber.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. The department was unable to make any estimate—only a guess. The department does not know how many widows would have an income of $250. Its estimate was, however, that somewhere from 10,000 to 15,000 names would be added to the roll by this bill. That is a guess. The House committee differed very materially from the estimate. They thought, from the examination which they had made, and conference with the officers of the different camps of the Spanish War Veterans, that the expense would be only about $1,500,000 a year, while the estimate of the department was $2,500,000. In each case it is a guess.

Mr. THOMAS. Being a guess in each case and in any case, with the condition of the Treasury at this time, with the enormous demands made upon it, does the Senator think it wise to increase the general pension appropriations?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Mr. President, in answer to that question I will state that I believe the country can afford to be just to those who have entered its service, and I think today we need an example before the country showing that we feel the debt of gratitude which we owe to those who have entered the service. Certainly the pay offered them is inadequate and they ought to be cared for. I think that is the general sentiment of the country.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish to ask the Senator if we can not meet that by caring better for them while they are serving?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I hope we can care for them better than we did in the Spanish War.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Maine that I join with the able and eloquent Senator from Colorado in his desire to limit appropriations. I know upon whose shoulders the burden of taxation must ultimately rest, and my sympathy with the burden bearer is without limit. But the Federal Government can not afford to be unjust to those who have served their country as these men have served it. The payment of a just debt such as the United States Government owes to the widows and orphans of the Spanish-American War veterans can not in any circumstances be characterized as extravagance. No patriotic American citizen will object to a portion of the taxes he pays going to the support of the indigent widows and the helpless infant children of the men who dared to do and if need be die for the Nation's flag. If the patriotic father fell in the forefront of the fierce charge with his heart pierced by the enemies' bullets, or died upon a bed of sickness with his brain racked with fever produced by tropical poisons in his blood, it matters not how, when, or where the heroic service was rendered or sacrifice made, that man is the Nation's creditor and his wife and infant children have a just claim upon the Government for help.

Common, ordinary gratitude suggests it, and every sense of justice demands that their claims should be honored by the American Congress. This is no place or time to practice economy—if, indeed, it be an economy to deny the payment of a just debt. There are other departments in this Government where I would urge economy. We might cut out a few battleships for which appropriations have been made or will be made; battleships that are not needed now, nor, in my judgment, will they ever be needed. We might reduce the standing Army and withhold some of the money that is being squandered for munitions of war. Economy in that direction I would most heartily commend, and I think the intelligent American people would approve it. I do not believe that the humanitarian sentiment which glorifies the patriotic breast of every good man and woman in this Republic will approve an economy which denies support and maintenance to the widows and infant children of the men who gave their lives, or offered to give their lives, in defense of the Nation's flag.

Mr. THOMAS. I have been trying to discover some place were we can economize. Every time an appropriation is questioned, no matter what it may be, we are told it is not the place to economize, and by the action of the Senate and the subsequent action of Congress I find that is the case. We can not find any place to economize.

Mr. President, I am desirous of being as just as I think any man in this country to the soldier. I believe we should care for the soldier's widow and orphans.

I listened with a good deal of interest to the statement made by the Senator from Mississippi concerning the effect of the service in the Spanish War as occurring under his individual experience; yet as I read this bill it is not confined to the widows and orphans of men whose death was caused by disease contracted in war, but to all of them.

I have always had a homely notion of the duty we owe the defenders of this country who serve their country in the hour of need and time of stress. We have been generous with pensions, and we ought to continue to be so, but there should be a limit even to the matter of pensions. I think, and I have always thought, that they should be confined to the widows and orphans of those who have lost their lives by bullets or by disease, and those who have been disabled by wounds or by disease; to those, in other words, who, because of their service to the country, are less able to meet the storm and stress of life; but to give to everybody a pension promiscuously, without regard to the time of service or the character of service, is a principle which I think never should have been introduced into our pension laws. It is there, and, of course, we can not get away from it.

I want to do everything that any man in my position ought to do in a case of this sort, but I do think we ought somewhere, at some time, to evidence some degree of economy at a time when there are greater demands made upon the Treasury of the United States than ever before.

The Senator says we might cut out a few battleships and by that means economize. If that were the prevailing opinion, or if it could be made the prevailing opinion, I should be very glad to see it acted upon. But the Senator knows that the demand for what is called preparedness is sweeping the people off their feet at the present time; and particularly, in view of the prospects along the southern border, Congress would be derelict if it did not respond, in some degree at least, to what seems to be the exigent requirements of the hour.

Personally I have no fear of any European complication. I have not the slightest fear of any invasion by any of the European countries after the war is over. We all know what its devastating effects are and what they will continue to be. I have asserted a number of times upon the floor of the Senate that the menace of a foreign invasion has been created and coined and developed as an asset for the purpose of forcing the hand of Congress in the matter of preparedness, which means large expenditures and large profits. I believe that is true; but, Mr. President, we know that there are conditions which we must confront after the war is over, conditions which may put to the test some of our doctrines, if not our policies, and when that test comes we must be prepared to meet it. I do not think it will come at once; I hope not. I believe that when the present war shall have ended humanity will not only be exhausted but appalled by the awful havoc which has been created during these years of conflict, and which doubtless will then appear to have been wholly unnecessary and to have accomplished nothing.

Mr. President, we are the trustees of a public trust. If we do not guard the Treasury somehow or somewhere, who is going to do it? It seems to me that there is a system of preparedness of which this bill perhaps is not one, a preparedness which has been created and carried against the Treasury for a long time. Batteries have been planted and trained upon it; trenches are filled with people who are anxious to make an assault upon it. The only barrier between it and those who would further devastate it is the Congress of the United States. Inasmuch as these extraordinary demands are made upon us elsewhere, can we not, should we not, practice some little principle of economy in some other way?

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I agree with the general principle of economy stated by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], but I do not understand that the amount of the expenditure either constitutes extravagance or economy. The larger the institution the greater the expenditure may be, and yet because a large institution expends more than a small institution that does not constitute the large institution an extravagance and the small institution an economy. It seems to me that any expenditure, no matter how large, is economy, if only sufficient is spent for a worthy purpose. The only question involved in this amendment is whether or not it is a worthy purpose and the amount is necessary for that purpose.

I have always believed that these dependents of the country must be supported. In fact, I know they must be supported either by all the people or by a part of the people. If they are supported by a part of the people it is by that general element of the peopde who always bear more than their proportion of the burdens of the Government in social life.

I have not any doubt whatever of the obligation of the Government to its dependents. I do not think it is too much. I doubt if it is sufficient. I sincerely hope the amendment will stand in the bill.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, just one word more. I am very much opposed to anything that savors of commercializing patriotism. The man who defends his country's flag for pelf has no more of the element of true patriotism than the man who is hired to do a dirty job at an exorbitant price is moved by motives of altruism. I do not think any man is entitled to a pension from his Government who has sufficient means of his own to support himself comfortably. The pension roll should be a roll of honor. The only theory upon which I would favor a pension is that it is necessary for the support of the individual who has served his country and who by reason of accident or misfortune in the service of his country or some other misfortune for which he is in no way responsible is not able to support himself. This bill does not carry a pension to the men who served in the Spanish-American War. It does not propose to give to every man who enlisted in that war a pension, but the purpose of this bill is to take care of the indigent widows and helpless infant children of the men who served the Nation during that war. Mr. President, the most valuable thing beneath the stars is a human being, and the best investment any nation ever made is the money which is invested in the development of the men and women of this country. The widow of the soldier who dies without making preparation for the support of his wife and the education of his children becomes a charge upon society, and that State is the wisest and strongest that takes care of these individuals. Somebody has said the whole theory of the universe is directed to one single individual, namely, to you. That is more true, Mr. President, when applied to government—especially a government deriving all of its just powers from consent of the governed. The whole theory of our Government is directed to one single individual. From the individual the Government derives its money, mind, and morale. The properly developed men and women are the greatest national assets—the moral sentiment, the intellectual growth, the strength that comes of well-formed bodies—in a word, all the forces created by the development of a perfect man or woman makes for the strength of the government, and the government is strong and great in the proportion that the individual citizen is properly developed.

What constitutes a State?
Not high-raised battlements or labored mound,
Thick wall or moated gate;
Not cities proud with spires and turrets crowned,
Not bays with broad-armed ports,
Where laughing at the storm rich navies ride;
Not starred or spangled courts,
Where low-browed baseness wafts perfume to pride;
No; men, high-minded men as far above dull brutes indued
In forest, brake, or den,
As beasts excel cold rocks and brambles rude;
Men who their duties know,
But know their rights, and knowing, dare maintain.

No, Mr. President, I am not going to withhold my approval from a measure, although I confess that it goes to an unusual extent in the matter of pensions, but the effect in all the circumstances will be the administration of justice, and I trust may result in the strengthening and upbuilding of the Nation. Most of the wars that this Nation has fought have been partially wars of conquest. Many of the men who voted to declare war against Spain saw the possibility of opportunities for investments by the acquisition of empire—the taking of Porto Rico, the Philippine Islands, and possibly Cuba. Of course there were others who voted for war who were impelled by humanitarian motives. They desired to stop the slaughter of human beings in Cuba. And the result of these wars have invariably given certain individuals opportunities which were universally embraced with avidity to make fabulous fortunes. Our present trouble with Mexico affords an opportunity by firing the military spirit to enlarge the Army and Navy, secure large appropriations, and furnish contracts for building battleships, and enable the manufacturers of munitions of war to reap enormous profits. The manufacturers of clothing, shoes, the dealers in live stock, all will garner a rich harvest from this small experience in war. It has created a sentiment also which will fasten upon the taxpayers of the future a tremendous burden, and the few will profit while the many shall suffer. Now, I am not willing that the men who are thus being used, probably unintentionally, as the instruments to bring about all this profit making shall suffer without some compensation or that their widows and orphaned children shall go without bread. I am going to vote for the measure that will take care of the women and children; and if the burden becomes too heavy for the taxpayer to bear, then we will cut off the expenses of the Government which are enjoyed by the rich few, and we will also do the best we can toward making the rich few bear their just share of whatever burden there may be incurred in caring for the widows and orphans. It is not pertinent to the question at issue, Mr. President, but I want to serve notice now that I am going to vote for it if it comes to the Senate from the House, the bill to pension the families of the members of the National Guard while they are in the service. I do not think the National Guard is needed on the border of Mexico; but since they have been ordered there, I am going to vote for a measure to take care of the families of those who are unable to take care of themselves. Mr. President, this bill should pass. The widows of the men who served the Nation and who died as the result of disease contracted in the service, I repeat, have a just claim upon the Government. I know the men who went to Cuba suffered. The men who served with me, though not confronted by a hostile army, although they did not bare their heroic breasts to the penetrating bullets, they were confronted by an enemy still more deadly and more to be dreaded—an enemy that has killed more men in every war in all the annals of time than the fatal bullet. I understand that less than 500 men died from gunshot wounds in Cuba, while a great many thousands of them died from disease while in the service, and many thousands more died as a result of diseases contracted in the service. I have heretofore stated that often the germ of the disease that caused their death was latent, and especially to the eye of the examining physician, when the soldier was examined to be mustered out of the service and given a clean bill of health. This bill removes all doubt and provides that the sorrowing widow and the hungry orphan children may come to the plethoric Treasury of this great and benevolent Government and receive at the hands of the Nation an allowance which will drive away from the door of poverty the wolf of want, paint upon the pallid cheek of care the rose of health, and fill the heart of despair with the sunlight of hope. And when they shall receive it, thank God, it will not be a charity, but a tribute which a grateful people gladly pay to the loved ones of the soldier who was willing to do, and if need be, to die, that his Nation's flag might continue to float triumphantly in the air. With all my heart I wish the bill to pass.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I wish first to ask the Senator from Maine whether the bill is limited to those troops who went to Cuba. There were a large number, I understand, who were enlisted who did not go to Cuba at all.

Mr. VARDAMAN. They were just in camps at home.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. They were just in camps at home.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. All those who enlisted in the War with Spain, whether they went to Cuba or not, and those who served in the Philippine insurrection, or served in China in the Boxer insurrection.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, neither the Senator from Maine nor the Senator from Mississippi will go further than I will toward taking care of the widow of the soldier who gave his life either upon the field of battle or subsequently by reason of disease occasioned from his service. I do not think we have gone far enough on those lines. Where the soldier loses his life in battle or where he loses his life from disease caused by being in the Army, whether on American soil or foreign soil, I believe that the proper pension to his widow is the portion of his income substantially which he would have received had he not been killed or had he not died. I think that $12 a month to the widows of those who died upon the battle field or who died from disease caused by the service is insufficient.

But, Mr. President. the eloquent argument in favor of the justice of caring for the widows of those who gave their lives in the military service of their country does not apply to this bill at all. This is not a bill to care for the widows whose husbands gave their lives in the service of their country.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator permit me? I had not intended to participate in this discussion at all. New Hampshire raised a regiment 1,000 strong, and the regiment left the State properly officered and got as far as Chickamauga, if I remember, in the Senator's own State. They encamped there. They had an epidemic of typhoid fever. A large number of them died. They came home, almost every one of those men. broken in health. A great many of them have since died from diseases contracted in the service, though they had not reached the scene of active warfare.

I think the Senator will agree that where it is established that a soldier lost his life in that way it is just as incumbent upon the Government to care for his widow as though he had reached the battle field and been killed.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the loss of the life was an incident to the service under the flag, I believe in liberally caring for the widow. I think there is a duty on all of us to see that she is cared for. But that is not this bill.

Mr. President, I would be willing to amend the existing bill directing the Pension Department to give the benefit of doubt to the widow who based her claim upon the fact that her husband died as a result of the service. I would in every case be glad to give them the benefit of the doubt. What I object to is this bill. I object to the proposition because a man was 90 days with the flag, and though he left it perfectly well——

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. The Senator had a very long and distinguished experience as Secretary of the Interior under a previous administration and became familiar, of course, with our pension laws. Is it not true that so far from giving the applicant for a pension the benefit of the doubt the laws are construed against him in most of the cases?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not think so, Mr. President.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Is it true that the department has any discretion except to construe the law according to its letter?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not think that the pensioners fail to obtain the benefit of the doubt; but if the present statute is not clear, I am ready to amend the existing statute with reference to the widows of the Spanish-American and the Philippine wars and make it clear that the benefit of the doubt shall be given to them.

I wish to eliminate as an argument in favor of this bill the plea for the widows of those who lost their lives or their health and who ultimately died as a result of their service. If that is what we propose to do, and we have not already done it, let us amend the law and make it clear that they shall be provided for. That is not this bill at all.

I may say that I can discuss this pension bill with just as much freedom as can the Senator from New Hampshire or the Senator from Massachusetts or the Senator from Indiana or the Senator from Iowa, for Georgia sent as many, in proportion to population, as did any State, and the only reason we did not send a great many more was that the Government declined to take them. If they had given us the chance, we would have raised all the troops the Government would have required. Our people wished to show their desire to serve their country, and they wished a chance to fight beneath the flag.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will not interrupt the Senator if he does not desire that I shall do so——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not object to being interrupted.

Mr. GALLINGER. But the Senator must not lose sight of the fact that this bill, in most particulars, is on all fours with the act of June 27, 1890, which granted pensions to the widows of soldiers who had served in the Civil War, though they did not incur disabilities in that war.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I know that; but the Civil War lasted four years.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes, Mr. President; but the act of June 27, 1890, only required that the soldiers should have served 90 days, without reference to the length of the war.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I know that; and I shall not criticize that law, because it did not affect the people of my State so much as it did those of some other States, and I have not the freedom to express my opinion on the subject. I do not go back to that; but I am coming to the discussion of this bill and the policy for the future.

A citizen of my State who went into camp for 90 days, who at the end of that time returned as well as he ever was in his life, and who went back into the general pursuits in which he had been before engaged, had had a chance to be a soldier of his country, and he was proud of it; he had had a chance to carry his gun beneath the Stars and Stripes when a war was going on—even though he had not been allowed to go to Cuba—and he was proud of it. It was a great privilege; it thrilled his patriotic ardor. Now, he engages in business for 10 or 15 years, and from something utterly disconnected with his military service he dies, and yet his widow is put on the pension roll for the balance of her life. I do not see any occasion for it. I think, leaving the service well, he should claim his time of service as due to his patriotic love of his country, coupled with a regret that he did not have a chance to face bullets, and that while we may with the utmost liberality care for those who were injured in the service, the perfectly sound, the perfectly well, leaving the service, ought to take their places alongside of the balance of their fellow citizens, asking no more and claiming no more from the Treasury of their country than the balance of their fellow citizens receive.

It was but 90 days' service, not in Cuba, but called out anywhere in the United States, at home. There are exceptions like the case of the soldiers from New Hampshire who were stricken by an epidemic while in camp. They suffered more perhaps than if they had been in front of guns. I am not discussing those men; their cases fall clearly within the rule of Government responsibility and call for contributions by all the people from the Treasury to meet their losses, but this bill broadly and completely proposes to pay pensions just because the men were with the colors for 90 days, though they had no epidemic, though they had no sickness, though they rendered no service, though their status was not different from that of the men who go to these present encampments for 30 days, except that they were out 90 days instead of 30; though they were subjected to no hardships that the men of these camps of 30 days do not suffer each year. It was a 90-day camp, instead of a 30-day camp. This bill puts the widow of every one of those men on the pension roll for the balance of their lives if they need a pension.

Mr. President, I would be glad to see everyone who needs it have their wants met; I regret to feel that anyone has wants that can not be met; but I do not find that this 90 days' service without injury, this 90-day camp life without sacrifice——

Mr. TILLMAN. And it has been only 18 years since that service was rendered.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. For this 90-day camp life, not facing bullets, I can not see any justification for a widow's pension on account of such service.

What do we propose to do? We propose to place the pensions of those who really never suffered just as high as the pensions of those who did suffer. I had a great deal rather spend this money increasing the pensions of those who suffer. It is the unsoundness of the principle which I criticize.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. POMERENE. Of course it is conceded that these men who were mustered into the service had thereby expressed their willingness to go to the front——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Oh, yes.

Mr. POMERENE. And to participate in battle if they received the proper orders?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Oh, yes.

Mr. POMERENE. The men being willing to do that, they are placed in a camp——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. POMERENE. And, perhaps due to the insanitary condition of that camp, many of them were stricken with disease, which in many instances proved fatal. Now, does not the Senator from Georgia think that the widow of a man who thus suffered and who is willing at all times to go to battle, if ordered, should have the same care and consideration at the hands of the Government as should a man who may have been wounded?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question before I answer?

Mr. POMERENE. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Has the Senator been here during the course of my remarks?

Mr. POMERENE. I was called out of the Chamber during part of the Senator's remarks.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I feel I have made myself very far from clear if those Senators who heard me did not understand my position upon that subject. I said I believed absolutely if men suffered as a consequence of being called out, if they were made sick by their service, if they died as a result of their service, if they were injured because of their service, whether on the battlefield or in camp, they should receive liberal pensions. What I am objecting to is putting in the same class with those who suffered those who did not suffer; what I object to is taking the money which we ought to give to those who suffered and giving it to those who never suffered at all, and not giving those who really suffered as much as we ought to give them. I am criticizing it because I think it an unsound practice.

I voted for the provision granting $50 a month to indigent families of the men who have recently been called to the front, and I will do so again if the bill comes from the House. There is a case of suffering, there is a case of sacrifice. If any of those men die as the result of exposure on the border, I am in favor of paying their widows more than $12 a month; but if they come home from there well and go back into the industrial life of their country sound, uninjured, I am opposed to paying them one dollar after they are discharged or paying one dollar to their widows. What I urge is, do not blanket the subject; do not blanket your pensions; do not grant pensions simply as an incident of service, but grant them as a consequence of injury in the line of service.

Just see how far this bill goes, and realize how extreme it is. Ninety days' service! Near home! Just called out! No service at all! Just in camp! Discharged just as well as they ever were in their lives, just as sound and as strong! Subsequently, from a cause entirely disconnected with the service, death comes, and a permanent pension to the widow then follows. I wish again to say that if the existing law can be amended so as to broaden its terms and more surely care for those who really were injured in the service, by disease or otherwise, I am cordially in favor of so amending it. I do not think we have done as much heretofore for those who were really injured as we ought to have done. I merely wish to enter my protest against wiping out entirely a limitation incident to injury either upon the field or through sickness.

It is said that the pension law, I think, of 1890, granted pensions of this kind to soldiers of the Civil War. That was 25 years after the war. Now, in this instance, we do not wait for 25 years, but take the same action much sooner. Even in the case of the Civil War no such pension this early was spread out without regard to injury of service origin, and while in the Civil War a pension was allowed to men who served 90 days, the great bulk of them really served—there were some who did not really get to the front, but the great bulk of those to whom it applied really smelt powder and heard bullets whistle. The proportion who never reached the front, I think, was small; the proportion who did not lie in the trenches, I think, was small. It was a very different war from the Spanish-American War, and there was vastly more justification for a service pension growing out of the Civil War than there is for such a pension growing out of the Spanish-American War.

Can the Senator from Maine tell me what proportion of the men who were mustered in during the Spanish-American War went to Cuba and what proportion never went there at all?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Mr. President, I have asked for the information, but I have not been able to get it. I have not the information.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. My own impression is that not half the men who were mustered in went to Cuba at all, and not half of those who went to Cuba were ever in a fight. I am perfectly aware that in my State most of those who would receive pensions under this bill would prefer that the pensions should be granted generally as provided in the bill. I have had quite a number of letters from friends of mine urging me to support the bill, but I do not think it is right.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, the Senator has stated that in 1890, 25 years after the Civil War, such a bill as this was passed for the benefit of the widows of soldiers of the Civil War.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. So the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] interrupted me to suggest.

Mr. PHELAN. I wanted to know if it applied to a widow whose marriage was contracted 25 years after the discharge of the soldier, as this bill provides in the case of widows married 18 years after the close of the Spanish-American War?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There was some limitation about it.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator from Georgia will permit me, the only qualification was that the widow should have married prior to the approval of the act of 1890.

Mr. PHELAN. Prior to the approval of the act of 1890?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; that was the only qualification.

Mr. PHELAN. I recall that there has been legislation passed during the last three or four years correcting an abuse which has grown out of such marriages. In some instances women married venerable veterans for no other purpose than to enjoy pensions after the demise of their soldier husbands, but Congress has passed legislation forbidding that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia allow me to answer the Senator from California?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I think the Senator from California is laboring under a misapprehension. There may have been such marriages, but if a woman married a soldier of the Civil War subsequent to June 27, 1890, she could not, under that act, receive a pension by reason of the marriage. As stated by the Senator from New Hampshire, only those widows who were married to soldiers prior to June 27, 1890, when the act was approved, were entitled to pensions; and if marriages with old soldiers have taken place since then, they could not have been induced by any hope of obtaining pensions, because the widows of such soldiers would not be entitled to pensions by reason of the marriage.

Mr. PHELAN. I have been informed, if the Senator will permit me, that some soldiers in the soldiers' home at Santa Monica within the last five or six years have married women, and that an abuse grew out of that practice which led to legislation. Does the Senator recall such legislation or such practice?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think the Senator from California is correct. I have heard of such practices.

Georgia will further yield——

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Mr. President, if the Senator from

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I know of no such legislation, and none was necessary. I know of the idle talk about marriages contracted by women with old soldiers in order to obtain pensions, but I think there is nothing to base it upon; there is certainly no legal ground to put it upon, because by such a marriage the widow could not have been entitled to a pension, the marriage having occurred since June 27, 1890.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator while he has the floor upon what theory pensions are granted to the widows of soldiers 18 years after the close of the war and the discharge of the soldier? Would not every proper purpose be satisfied by limiting it to a period of one or two years after the honorable discharge of the soldier?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Does the Senator mean where the marriage took place then?

Mr. PHELAN. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It would be a vast improvement on this bill.

Mr. PHELAN. Upon what theory is a pension granted to the widow of a soldier, the marriage having been contracted 18 years after the close of the war, assuming that the soldier when discharged was in a good condition of health, as the Senator states?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not know of any theory to justify it. I am just criticizing that feature of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. If the Senator from Georgia will yield to me, I should like to answer that question.

The woman who married the soldier 18 or 20 years after the war closed in many instances, I think, married a man who bore within him the seeds of disease contracted in the service. Many times she became the mother of his children, and she is left. He perhaps had a pensionable status and drew a pension from his Government which wished to show its gratitude for that service. She is left without that care and left with her children and left without his support; and I think the country owes a debt of gratitude to her. She has been his helpmeet and lived with him, and I believe that when he is gone and she has him no longer to depend upon the country owes her something. I think that this country, prosperous as it is, filled with patriotic citizens, can afford to be just to her and to her children; and for that reason the pension system has extended. I supposed it was long ago settled—it was settled in 1890 by Congress—and no longer debatable that that was the policy of this Government; and I think it ought to be extended to these widows of the Spanish War veterans for the same reason that we extended it to the widows of the Civil War veterans.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator, if the widow marries a second time, and marries a millionaire, do the children get a pension?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. By the second marriage she loses her right to a pension.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand; but what about the children by the first marriage? If she marries a well-to-do man, these children continue to get pensions, do they?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. The children of the soldier are pensionable until they reach the age of 16, as the children of the soldier.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Maine a question. Did not the pension act of 1890 limit the pension to widows who had married prior to that time?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. It did.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Have we not now gone 26 years since then without extending the law to widows of soldiers of the Civil War who married since 1890?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I will say, in answer to the Senator, that we have been giving pensions by special acts, and there is hardly a Senator in this body but that has presented a bill of that kind. Cases have been presented to the committees of extreme destitution and hardship to some old lady in her old age, who married the soldier and who now finds herself without his care and without his pension. We have been extending the act of 1890 by special acts, both in this body and in the other, down to 1900, to take care of those cases; and a great many have been presented here, some as late as 1900, in this Congress. We are finding it necessary to take care of those cases.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But, Mr. President, for 26 years no general law has been passed which pensioned the widows of soldiers of the Civil War who married during the past 26 years.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. If the Senator will permit me, I forgot to mention another thing. The House has already passed a bill almost unanimously, with very little opposition, which gives a pension to the widow of the soldier who married prior to 1905; and the committee of this body, seeing no reason to restrict it, even to 1905, have brought it down to the date of the passage of the act.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It has not gotten through yet, has it?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. It is on the calendar, and has been reported favorably by the Pensions Committee of the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But, Mr. President, for 26 years marriage by soldiers of the Civil War has not given to the widow of the soldier a pension. For 25 years after the Civil War no widow of a soldier was given a pension. The broader reason, as I stated before, for pensioning widows of the Civil War, can be gathered from the fact that the war lasted four years; that the majority of the men mustered into the service actually served in the trenches. Many of them served several years in the trenches. The hardships which they endured were far greater. The probabilities of injury to their health were far greater. The number who had no service was far less.

Can somebody tell me what proportion of the men who were mustered in for the Spanish-American War ever went to Cuba? I have heard that about 10 per cent of them went there, and that perhaps 90 per cent of them never left the States. I do not know. The Senator in charge of the bill does not know. Why? Because it is not a question of service; it is a question of a pension, and I am sorry to say that I am afraid pensions are too popular without regard to the merits of the pension.

Where real service has been done, where injury has been received, I doubt whether there is a man in this body that would vote for as liberal a pension as I would. Two officers have just been killed in Mexico. I would favor paying their salaries to their widows for the balance of their lives, or at least two-thirds, estimating one-third for the maintenance of the officer; certainly during their widowhood and during the existence of minor children. There is a sacrifice. There is a loss. We provide that kind of pension without liberality. We treat that kind of claim about on the same basis that we do those who have had no suffering at all.

Now, if it is true that 90 per cent of the men mustered in for the Spanish-American War simply went into camp for 90 days, is there any justification for saying that in every instance their widows shall have a pension just like the widow of the man who went to Cuba and was killed, or who went to Cuba and contracted a disease that destroyed his health, where the widow lost something?

In the one case it would be pensioning for a loss, and in this case, in one-half the instances, it is pensioning for a frolic. You are treating exactly alike things that stand utterly upon a different footing. Of course the more you have of them, the easier it is to get them. If we can just scatter enough of them all over the country, it is mighty hard to resist. It creates a powerful political influence that jeopardizes seats in the House and seats in the Senate; and it is very hard to say "No" when a dozen good men or good women in your district may get $240 a year out of the Treasury if you say "Yes," and they will not do it if you say "No." The persuasive influence of the political power of your constituents who are to have a ladle in the Treasury is hard to resist.

I am not opposed to pensions. I am very much in favor of pensions to make up the loss incident to a service, to make up the loss to the soldier or to his family which came on him or on them from service. But I do object to this pension without regard to service; and, mark it, Senators, to justify it, the eloquent statement is made that men have lost their lives in consequence of disease in Cuba or incident to that service. Then pension the widows who suffered the loss. Do not use your argument in favor of the men who lost their lives, and the justice of the claim of pensions to their widows, for pensions to those who did not suffer at all.

Senators ought not to talk in this discussion about the deaths from the service or the diseases from the service, for they have not predicated the bill upon either. If that is what they have in view, then the bill ought to be directed upon those lines.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I have not had a chance to study the bill. I am interested in what the Senator is saying. Does he mean to say that this bill pensions, without any disability caused by service in the Army, the widow of the soldier or officer when he came out of the Army perfectly sound, and married the woman after his discharge?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. And if he dies now, that she gets a pension?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I shall not vote for any such measure as that.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I mean that his widow is pensioned if, taking my State, he went to the delightful camp in the middle of the State and stayed there 90 days, well provided for, well fed, with pleasant associates, and came away in even better health than he had when he went there—because, going from the city and the countingroom and the dry-goods store and the professional office, he had the benefit of outdoor air, he had the benefit of country life, he had the improvement incident to his healthy exercise.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, did he not also have the benefit of getting $13 a month instead of, perhaps, $100 a month in the countingroom? Did not this very widow have to support herself and her children on $13 a month while he was in camp?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I answer the Senator by saying that this bill is not limited to the wife who was his wife during the time of the service. If it were limited to the wife during the time of the service, who for 90 days did without her $100 a month and took $12 a month, and lost by that $264, still I would not think that a pension for her whole life of $240 a year was a proper compensation. I do not think the wife ought to suffer while he is away. I voted for the payment of $50 a month to those who needed it while the men were on the border, and I say that is the time to take care of them.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, what is the nature of this bill?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. This is a bill providing for the immediate pensioning, for the balance of their lives, of every widow of everybody who enlisted for 90 days as soldier during the Spanish-American War, whether they went to Cuba or stayed at home, whether they were sick or whether they were well, whether they suffered any disability or whether they retired or were discharged in perfect and increased health as the result of the splendid opportunities for fresh air in the country, whether the soldier was married at that time or whether he was married six months ago. It is the most extensive, unrestricted widows' pension bill that has ever been suggested; and I want to repeat that I speak with perfect freedom upon it, because my State furnished as many troops and had as many enlisted and as many under the colors during the Spanish-American War, in proportion to her population, as any State in the Union; and the only dissatisfaction in the State at that time was the large number who tendered their services who could not get to camp for 90 days.

Mr. President and Senators, can we reason with each other? A Senator near me says "No." I doubt whether we will. I do not know whether I have any hope of accomplishing anything, except having had the satisfaction of just once expressing what influences me with reference to pensions. I want to pay more to the man who is hurt. I want to pay more to the man who loses something by the service. I want to pay more to the soldier who is wounded or to the widow of the soldier who is killed, or who comes away with a disability after the war is over. I am opposed to giving money out of the Treasury with reckless liberality to the men who really have not rendered any service, and who came away from a 90 days' encampment in better health than they ever had before in their lives.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Then, too, if I read the bill aright, I see that if the widow marries again, no matter how rich her second husband may happen to be, the pension to the child under 16 years old still goes on.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes; I think that is true. Now, if it is true that the existing law looking toward the pensioning of those who suffer from disabilities incurred in the service is being too strictly enforced, let us amend that law, and upon principle see to it that those who really were injured by that 90 days' service get compensation, and that the widows of those who were really in any sense made widows by that service get compensation.

It is the universality and, in my judgment, the unsoundness of this measure which puts the widow without an injury upon the same footing as the widow——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning hour has expired, and the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is House bill 12717, the Agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will finish the sentence. Which puts the widow without an injury exactly upon the same footing as the widow with an injury.

Mr. President, I have said all I wish to say now on this subject. If I have done any good, I am glad of it, and if I have not I have at least the satisfaction of trying.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I hope the Senator in charge of the Agricultural appropriation bill will agree to lay it aside temporarily until we may finish this bill. It has been on the calendar a good while, and it seems to me an act almost of discourtesy to the other Chamber to continue it here without acting upon it. It is House bill No. 54, and it has been pending here on the calendar for a long time. This is the first opportunity we have had to bring it up. I think there will be very little more discussion, and we can reach a vote, I hope, in a short time.

Mr. GORE. Of course, I would like to oblige the Senator from Maine, but I apprehend the bill which he has in charge will lead to a great deal of discussion. It is the universal desire of Senators to finish the appropriation bill, and I think it is a well-justified desire. I will say that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] has indicated a desire to offer an amendment at this juncture.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I move that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. OVERMAN. That can not be done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine can move to take up the pension bill; he can not move that the unfinished business be laid aside.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I move to take up House bill 54.

Mr. STONE. Then that will displace the unfinished business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will displace the unfinished business if the motion prevails. The Senator from Maine moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 54) to pension widows and minor children of officers and enlisted men who served in the War with Spain, Philippine insurrection, or in China.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN]. He not being in his seat, I withhold my vote for the present.

Mr. McLEAN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and vote "yea."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] and vote "nay."

Mr. WEEKS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES]. He being absent, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] is paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY].

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] and vote "nay."

Mr. CHILTON. I transfer my pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and vote "yea."

Mr. HUGHES. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] on official business.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I inquire if the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I withhold my vote. I have a pair with that Senator.

Mr. BECKHAM. I am paired with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] and will withhold my vote.

Mr. WALSH. I announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. MYERS], due to continued illness.

Mr. REED (after having voted in the affirmative). Some time ago I made a transfer of my pair to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS]. I observe that he has come into the Chamber. I therefore transfer my pair to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS], who is absent, and I withhold my vote.

Mr. CATRON. Has the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. CATRON. I have a pair with that Senator. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] and vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (after having voted in the affirmative). I observe that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] has not voted. Being paired with that Senator and for that reason I withdraw my vote.

Mr. HARDING. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] to the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] and vote "yea."

Mr. THOMAS. I transfer my pair with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] and vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 26, as follows:

YEAS—34.

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 54) to pension widows and minor children of officers and enlisted men who served in the War with Spain, the Philippine insurrection, or in China.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], which will be agreed to without objection.

Mr. BORAH. Are the amendments disposed of?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is only one to which there seemed to be no objection—to strike out the word "net" before the word "income." The Chair has announced that it was agreed to.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I am not going to undertake to discuss this bill at length, because I am not at all prepared to do so. I rather suspect that I am in the same condition of mind as most of my colleagues; that is, that I have not very much information concerning the bill. I think it wise, therefore, to read the bill that we may know precisely what the bill contains before we pass upon it. It seems to me an extraordinary bill, even in the field of liberality in which we have been traveling with reference to pensions. There are precedents in the bill which, if utilized, will be matters of grave concern to the people of this country. The bill is as follows:

That from and after the passage of this act if any volunteer officer or enlisted man who served 90 days or more in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States during the War with Spain or the Philippine insurrection, between April 21, 1898, and July 4, 1902, inclusive, service to be computed from date of enlistment to date of discharge, including all furloughs, or any officer or enlisted man of the Regular Establishment who rendered 90 days or more actual military or naval service in the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps in the War with Spain or the Philippine insurrection or in China between April 21, 1898, and July 4, 1902, inclusive, and who has been honorably discharged therefrom, has died or shall hereafter die leaving a widow without means of support other than her daily labor, and an actual net income not exceeding $250 per year, or leaving a minor child or children under the age of 16 years, such widow shall, upon due proof of her husband's death, without proving his death to be the result of his Army or Navy service, be placed on the pension roll from the date of the filing of her application therefor under this act, at the rate of $12 per month during her widowhood, and shall also be paid $2 per month for each child of such officer or enlisted man under 16 years of age, and in case of the death or remarriage of the widow, leaving a child or children of such officer or enlisted man under the age of 16 years, such pension shall be paid such child or children until the age of 16: Provided, That in case a minor child is insane, idiotic, or otherwise permanently helpless, the pension shall continue during the life of said child, or during the period of such disability, and shall commence from the date of application therefor after the passage of this act: Provided further, That said widow shall have married said officer or enlisted man previous to the passage of this act.

So it is not necessary for her to have been his wife during the term of his service. She may be married to him to-day or may have married him long after his service.

Provided, however, That this act shall not be so construed as to reduce any pension under any act, public or private.

SEC. 2. That no agent, attorney, or other person engaged in preparing, presenting, or prosecuting any claim under the provisions of this act shall, directly or indirectly, contract for, demand, receive, or retain for such services in preparing, presenting, or prosecuting such claim a sum greater than $10—

That presents a different question.

Now, the kernel of this measure, the real gist of it, is found in the following statement:

And who has been honorably discharged therefrom, has died or shall hereafter die leaving a widow without means of support other than her daily labor and an actual net income not exceeding $250 per year, or leaving a minor child or children under the age of 16 years, such widow shall, upon due proof of her husband's death, without proving his death to be the result of his Army or Navy service, be placed on the pension roll from the date of the filing of her application therefor under this act.

Do I understand that this bill includes the widows of all men who were enlisted in these several enterprises, regardless of the fact whether they ever saw service and regardless of the fact whether their death was caused by anything in the way of disease or wounds contracted in war or during enlistment?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHILTON in the chair). Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. In answer to the inquiry of the Senator from Idaho, I will say that the bill gives a pension to the widow of a soldier or officer who served in the Spanish War 90 days from the time of enlistment until discharged, and that irrespective of whether the soldier or officer received any injury in the service or not.

It follows the precedent established in the case of the widows of the soldiers of the Civil War. In 1890 Congress voted a pension to the widow of every soldier who served 90 days in the Civil War whether he suffered injury by reason of that service or not, provided she did not have an income exceeding $250 a year. We are treating now, or attempting to treat, the widows of soldiers who served in the Spanish War precisely as we treated the widows of the soldiers who served in the Civil War.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, we went to the utmost point of liberality in dealing with the widows of the soldiers of the Civil War when we granted them a pension regardless of the fact whether their husbands had received any injury or suffered from disease by reason of their service in the war. But there is a distinction, nevertheless, and a substantial distinction.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. If the Senator will pardon me, we are trying to treat them also just as we have treated the widows of soldiers who served in the Indian wars.

Mr. BORAH. But, Mr. President, this is a step far beyond that. While in principle it seems to be the same, and while the precedent cited by the distinguished Senator from Maine seems to be a sufficient precedent, yet, as a matter of fact, the two services and the two conditions are wholly different. The Civil War was a war, and almost all the men actually saw service who were enlisted. As a matter of fact, only a small per cent of those who were enlisted in the Spanish War and a small per cent of those who were enlisted in these other wars enumerated ever saw any actual service at all. I understand most of them never left the United States; they never engaged in any conflict, and it is not claimed that they were in places where they necessarily contracted diseases.

If this bill passes, if this precedent is pushed to this point, there can not be any possible reason why the matter should not be applied to the wife of every national guardsman who may die who is called to the front now. Although he should be in the service but 30 days and suffer neither from disease nor service, this bill is cited as a precedent. I am quite willing to grant pensions liberally where death or wounds or disease have been actually suffered, sustained, or contracted, but I am not willing to approve of this loose method of distributing the money all of which must be collected from already overburdened taxpayers.

Mr. President, as I said, I am not going to discuss this at any length, but I am not willing, as much as I believe in pensions and in taking care of those who serve their country, to give a pension which has nothing to do with service at all in the true sense of the term, a pension which is not based upon sacrifice on the part of the soldier, a pension which has for its basis alone the mere fact of enlistment. There is no point beyond which we could go in the matter except to grant universal pensions to all who may enlist in the service, regardless of any service performed. I can see no sound reason for such legislation and I see many reasons which indicate the legislation to be unwise. If the bill were limited and circumscribed to the correct principle of actual service or sacrifice, I would vote for it.

I voted against taking up the bill, and I shall vote against the passage of it.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I am in intense sympathy with any legislation that will look to the fair and proper pensioning of those who served in the late War with Spain. I should like to vote for a pension bill that was reasonable and proper and that would give a sufficient amount of money to help those people who suffered by reason of service in the war. While I am extremely anxious that a proper pension bill should be passed, this seems to me to be subversive of every principle on which a just pension bill can be built. It is tantamount to saying that whoever takes an oath to serve this country in war that minute becomes a pensionable individual. I can not go that length.

To him who served his country, to him who suffered anywhere within its service, to him who came away disabled and hurt, impaired in health, I am willing to vote any amount necessary for the protection of those dependent upon him as well as for his own protection, but to say that the man who went into the Army in the alleged War with Spain, who never saw service further than in camps in this country—and they are just as worthy and entitled to our praise for their willingness—but when he who came out of the camp came home a well man, not disabled in any way whatever, and then 10 years afterwards married, and died two years after his marriage from an accident in an automobile or otherwise, and his widow become pensionable at once, and the infant child, even if she remarries a millionaire, stays on the pension list under this bill until he is 16 years old. It is throwing the gates so wide open to make patriotism——

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. To make patriotism, it looks to me, like a mere question of merchandise, not for any injury sustained but because he promised to defend the Government. That alone gives his widow a pensionable status when he dies.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I simply wanted to ask the Senator from Arizona if he understood that the second husband would not be obliged to support the children of the soldier who were under 16? Would he not be under a legal obligation to do so?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. No; but I would not offer a premium so magnanimous for that union. I simply would not pay the expenses of his family provided he were a rich man. I would not have the children of his wife drawing a pension from neighbors who probably are less able to support the tax than the husband. It seems to me that this ought to be confined, as other pension bills have been confined, to service and some sort of disability, and in that event, if you double the amount, I will vote for the bill. You can make it enough to support the family and I will vote for the bill, but do not say that every man who enlists and has married is in an attitude for his family to get on the pension roll.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I intend to register my protest against this bill by a negative vote when the vote is taken, but I wish also to register my protest in even a more emphatic way, if that be possible.

The Treasury of the United States is the final place where taxes collected from the people for the support of the Government are gathered. Every tax imposes a burden upon somebody—that is, upon the person who pays it.

If that be not true, then we confront a strange contradiction in terms; if that be not true, then a tax, instead of being a burden, is a privilege, a beneficence, a blessing to the man or woman who pays it. The taxgatherers—myriads of them scattered over the country—gather our vast revenues from different sources, and these revenues are finally dumped into the Treasury of the United States; but every man, as I see it and as I have been taught and as I believe, who pays a tax carries a burden to that extent; and it is a proper burden for every man to bear. Every citizen protected by the Government should contribute to the support of the Government. But, Mr. President, the money thus paid into the Treasury can be taken out only in one way, and that way is through the authorization and direction of the Congress. The Congress makes the laws which compel the citizen to pay taxes, and through the force of these laws the revenues necessary for the support of the Government are provided; and then, on the other hand, the Congress alone can determine how these accumulated revenues can be disposed of; in what way and to whom the public funds shall be paid.

Mr. President, we have come to the point, it seems to me, when mere sentiment, and, what is worse, when mere political considerations work in a controlling way upon the minds of legislators when we come to spending the money of the people. We are too much swayed; more swayed by sentimental and political considerations than by a clear and definite consideration of the public right and the public interest. Whenever we find a large number of men and women banded together—a band capable of exercising in the State, and, therefore, relatively in the Nation, an influence upon the political fortunes of men and of parties—who come here and beat against the doors of this Capitol; when they come thus with their clamors for "beef," we are taken off our feet. We forget the taxpayer. We feel only the influences brought into our very presence and thrust under our eyes, and we yield to that. We shrink from the difficult task and responsibility of saying "No." Mr. President, "No" is too often a difficult word for legislators, who have political fortunes at stake, to speak; so many seem to be afraid to speak it. In saying this I but tell you the unvarnished truth, and you know it; it is the truth, however unwelcome; every man who hears me knows I speak only the truth. We do not like to say "No" to thousands when they come asking us to do so easy a thing as to open the doors of the Treasury, with its plethoric vaults, and do them a little favor under the disguise of a meritorious claim. We forget that if the Treasury vaults be filled to overflowing, they are filled by taxes collected from and patriotically paid by the people to support their Government. Open the doors and give largess; it is easy and it pays politically. Oh, do give something to brighten widowhood, to soften the pain of bereavement, to buy a flower for the widow's breast, or striped stockings for the children; something that will make them look upon the stars in the blue of the flag and upon the waving stripes of red and white, with a feeling more loyal, enthusiastic, and patriotic. It is hard to say "No" to appeals like that, when it is so much easier to say "Yes." Sometimes, maybe, we are afraid to say "No."

Mr. President, I wish we could fill the Halls of these Houses with a spirit that would take into consideration, more than we do, the interests of the great masses of the people who give and give to support the Government and ask nothing in return but honest, faithful, and efficient government.

Show to me a man who, as a soldier of the Republic, has fought its battles and imperiled his life, or who has lost his health, or who has in anywise really suffered because of his service—give me a case of that kind based on merit, show me a just claim upon the patriotic favor or generosity of the Government, and I will go as far as any man should go in the name of justice to do justice to such a man or to his family. But, Mr. President, we are running wild in this direction; we are just leaping along, blindly leaping. About all necessary to be done now, so far as Congress is concerned, is to get a large number of people, scattered over numerous States, to organize—often organized under influences started by claim agents in Washington—to come here through their organizations and say this or that or the other thing to us, and lo, we go trooping up to the Treasury Department—having the power of lawmaking—with a demand that the Treasury doors be opened and that cold cash, wrung from the taxpayers, be dished out to these mendicant organizations who are supposed to have influence in generating a public opinion which creates Senators and Representatives. Mr. President, I am tired of this sort of thing. The time has come when a halt should be called to this congressional procession marching almost daily up to the doors of the Treasury.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and still open to amendment.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gallinger	Nelson	Smith, Md.
Bankhead	Gronna	Norris	Smith, S. C.
Beckham	Harding	O'Gorman	Smoot
Brady	Hardwick	Overman	Sterling
Broussard	Hughes	Page	Stone
Bryan	Johnson, Me.	Phelan	Swanson
Catron	Johnson, S. Dak.	Pittman	Taggart
Chamberlain	Jones	Poindexter	Thomas
Chilton	Kenyon	Pomerene	Thompson
Clapp	Kern	Ransdell	Tillman
Clark, Wyo.	La Follette	Reed	Underwood
Clarke, Ark.	Lane	Shafroth	Vardaman
Cummins	Lee, Md.	Sheppard	Wadsworth
Curtis	Lodge	Sherman	Walsh
Dillingham	McLean	Shields	Warren
Fletcher	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ariz.	Williams

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and still open to amendment. If there be no further amendment, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate with an amendment.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, this is one of the many pension bills upon the calendar. This bill provides for pensioning widows of soldiers who served or enlisted in the War with Spain. The only requirement is that the soldier must have served 90 days in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States during the War with Spain or in the Philippine insurrection, and the committee is kind enough also to include within that 90 days of service all time spent on furlough.

Mr. President, no widow needs any legislation to enable her to secure a pension if the death of her husband can be traced to his service in the war. The law now is that if the soldier's death was due to his service, his widow shall draw a pension on that account. This bill is intended to put a new class upon the pension roll, a class of widows who can not trace any injury by reason of their husbands' enlistment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. BRYAN. I do.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I know the Senator does not want to make any misstatement, and he is usually very accurate in all his statements. He says that this bill puts a new class upon the pension roll, namely, those widows who will receive a pension simply by showing that there was service on the part of their husbands. Do we not also pension the widows of Civil War veterans simply for the service of their husbands?

Mr. BRYAN. I will do myself a great injustice if I do not get to that part of it directly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. The Senator has already made the broad statement that we were putting a new class upon the rolls.

Mr. BRYAN. I do make that statement, Mr. President. We are putting a new class upon the rolls, and I will prove that directly.

There is no necessity for any legislation at all if the soldier suffered any injury because of his enlistment. This bill proposes to give pensions to widows whose husbands suffered no injury because of their enlistment, to give pensions to their widows regardless of whether the soldiers were injured or not. The bill says so, and that is the main reason for its presence upon the calendar.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

Mr. BRYAN. Just a moment. The bill reads:

Without proving his death to be the result of his Army or Navy service.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. BRYAN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, so far as that is concerned, then, instead of there being another class, a distinct class, they are put in a class with the widows of soldiers of the Civil War. The law making provision for the widows of the Civil War was enacted, as the Senator will remember, in 1890, and it allowed pensions to the widows of soldiers of the Civil War whether or not they were married during the period of the service of the soldier. This bill puts the Spanish-American War widow in exactly that class.

Mr. BRYAN. No, Mr. President, it does more than that. I will get to that, however, later on. I am coming to it; but I may as well say now that Congress has been liberal in pension legislation to widows throughout the whole history of the Government; although, Mr. President, it was not until 1836, or 53 years after the Revolutionary War, that there were any pensions paid to widows of soldiers of that war; and when the act of 1836 was passed there was a limitation that the widow must have been a "war widow," or, in other words, must have been married to the soldier during the war. In 1838, two years later, the limitation as to the date of marriage was moved up to January 1, 1794. So that it was 53 years after the war before Congress undertook to reward, by the granting of pensions, women who had married men who had enlisted in the Army during the Revolutionary War. It was not until 1848, 65 years after the Revolutionary War, that the limitation as to the date of marriage was moved to January 1, 1800; and not until 1853, 70 years after the Revolutionary War, was the limit as to the date of marriage taken off.

That is the way we treated the widows of the soldiers who served in the Revolutionary War. The widows of those who took part in the establishment of this Republic had to wait 70 years, while the widows of the Spanish-American War soldiers are put upon the roll 17 years after the service of their husbands. It is a case of 70 years as against 17.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, we broke that precedent——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMPSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. STERLING. We broke that precedent long ago. We did that by the act of 1890, when, 25 years after the Civil War, we enacted a law which gave pensions to widows whether they were the wives of soldiers during their service or not.

Mr. BRYAN. The act of 1890 was not as liberal as are the provisions of this bill. It was not until 1900 that the act as to widows of the Civil War became as liberal as is this act.

Now, let us take up the War of 1812. It was not until 1871, 56 years after the War of 1812, that pensions were granted to widows, and then they must have been married prior to the treaty of peace and must have been "war widows." In 1878, 63 years after the War of 1812, the limit as to the date of marriage was taken off. So it was 63 years after the War of 1812 before Congress undertook to be as liberal as it is now, 17 years after the Spanish-American War.

We now come to the Civil War legislation as to widows. I notice the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] is not here, but I believe I am accurate in the statements I am about to make——

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BRYAN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator if he has the data concerning the Mexican War? I think there was a service pension granted to the Mexican War survivors and their widows. I have forgotten the date, but that would come before the Civil War, and I shall be glad if the Senator will give the information.

Mr. BRYAN. Very well. It was not until 1887, 39 years after the war with Mexico, that widows were considered, and then they had to be 60 years old, disabled or dependent; and as to the Indian wars, it was not until 1892, 50 years afterwards, that the widows of soldiers of those wars were considered.

Now we come to the Civil War. Legislation from 1867 to 1893 provided in substance as follows: If the soldier's death resulted from his war service, the widow and the children drew pensions, $2 for each child, until the child became 16. In 1883 inability to perform manual labor was required, and if the widow could show that the soldier's life was shortened by reason of injury she would get a pension. In 1868 the arrearage act was passed, allowing them the privilege of showing that the death or disease was due to the service, giving five years' time to find out. Now, it would seem that if a man had been injured in the war or had been killed in the war, reasonable diligence would have developed that fact within five years after the war was over. But 14 years later, in 1879, Congress passed an act to allow them to go back through the intervening time to submit that proof, without any requirement that the Government should be represented. It was not desired that the diagnosis of the case by a friendly physician should be questioned by the Government.

Republicans vote for pensions, Democrats vote for pensions, both just the same, and for the same reason. It is the power of the organization behind the demand.

The real soldiers of the Civil War never would have been humiliated as they have been if Congress had dealt liberally and generously with them, and dealt only with those who had rendered service and needed the assistance of this Government. That is the system that other countries have. It is the system that we ought to have. And yet we, a peace-loving people, paying to-day more pensions than all the great military powers of Europe combined, more than Great Britain and Germany and France and Russia and Japan combined, propose now to launch out upon a new plan of increasing the amount. It is the history of this legislation that as soon as one class begins to decrease in numbers, the ingenuity of Congressmen is exercised to discover a new class to take their place, so as to keep up the appropriations. The soldiers of the Civil War have been compelled to make common cause with men who never rendered any meritorious service in the war; and their old war widows, who went through the privations during the war, have had to make common cause with some home guardsman's holiday widow, born many years after the war was over; and that is the sort of system that this bill perpetuates.

In 1888 the time limit was first taken off as to widows in submitting the proof; and if we will read back in the history of legislation of Congress at that time, if we will read the report of Henry Clay Evans, Commissioner of Pensions, in which he tries to point out the evils of this system, we will see that the fight was being made then—an unsuccessful fight—as it is being made now. I see the Senator from South Dakota has gone. I wanted to show him the difference between this bill and the act of 1890, to which he referred, for the benefit of the widows of the Civil War. The act of 1890, which was 25 years after the war as against 17, made the limitation "without other means of support." That is not this bill, Mr. President. This bill permits other means of support. This bill permits an income of $250. So it is more liberal than the act of 1890.

Mr. President, how foolish it is to compare the Civil War with the War with Spain! The veterans for whose widows this legislation is asked did not go into a war for four years.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Mr. President, while the Senator is comparing the acts, if he will yield to me—he has before him and is familiar with these acts—is not this act just the same as the act of 1900?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON. Exactly the same.

Mr. BRYAN. The Senator from South Dakota said it was the same as the act of 1890. I will pass on, then, to the act of 1900, which was 35 years after the Civil War, before the Civil War veterans were given the privileges that are now attempted to be given to the widows of soldiers of the Spanish-American War—twice the length of time.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BRYAN. I yield to the Senator; certainly.

Mr. KENYON. If I understand the Senator correctly, his contention is that if the widow had some occupation in which she was earning a compensation and an income outside of that of $250 per year, she still could draw a pension under this act?

Mr. BRYAN. Oh, yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I think he is laboring under a misapprehension.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BRYAN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. The act of June 27, 1890, provided that a widow must be in indigent circumstances, aside from the fact that she could not earn her living by manual labor. The department construed that, and fixed the sum of $250 as the amount which the department would consider entitled her to a pension under that act. If she did not receive over $250 from her manual labor or from any other source, she was pensioned. That was a department regulation, as I remember. I do not know whether it has passed into current law or not, but I recall the circumstance very well as to the time when the bureau made that ruling. But there never was a time when a widow was allowed to be following an occupation of any kind and receiving compensation, and then having $250 a year in addition to that from some other source. It was not compounded.

Mr. BRYAN. No; but the law, as stated in Davenport's compilation, requires her to be dependent. Now, in 1900 they passed the act corresponding to that which is here to-day as applied to the Spanish-American War soldier. That, Mr. President, was 35 years after the war. That was at a period when the men who engaged in the war were getting well along in years and when the widows they left behind them were getting old. Many of them were married during the war, but that is not the case here. The War with Spain was fought by the Regulars. Less than 3,500 Volunteers went to Cuba before the treaty of peace was signed—3,412, my recollection is. These soldiers stayed in camp. They did not get into any battles. These are not pensions for men who went and fought through four years of war. These are pensions for men who were willing to do it, who enlisted, but who did not have the opportunity. We do not propose now to say: "We will take care of the widows of those who enlisted and who need the money." We are going to do better than that. We are going to do better than we did for the widows of the soldiers of the Revolutionary War, of the War of 1812, of the War with Mexico, of the Civil War. We are going to make special pets out of the widows of the War with Spain.

Now, let us see. The War with Spain commenced April 21, 1898. Hostilities ceased on August 13, 1898.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. 1899.

Mr. BRYAN. Hostilities ceased August 13, 1898.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. If the Senator will pardon me, I understood him to say hostilities began August 21, 1898.

Mr. BRYAN. I said hostilities began April 21, 1898, or war was declared at that time, and hostilities ceased August 13, 1898. Does the Senator dispute that statement?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I simply say I have the record from the War Department, and the answer to our inquiry from The Adjutant General's Office is that the War with Spain ceased in April, 1899.

Mr. BRYAN. Oh, that is when they signed up the treaty; but hostilities ceased in 1898, on August 13. There is no dispute about that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I have here, if the Senator will pardon me, from the Department of the Interior this statement:

A compilation from the records of The Adjutant General's Office and other sources of authentic information, which was published as an exhibit in the reports of the operations of the Bureau of Pensions for the fiscal years 1903, 1904, and 1905, gives the period of duration of the Spanish-American War and the Philippine Islands insurrection as from April 21, 1898, to April 11, 1899, for the former, and from February 4, 1899, to July 4, 1902, for the latter.

That is from the department.

Mr. BRYAN. Regardless of what the department says, I know and the Senator knows that the war did not last that long. The Civil War did not end until August 20, 1866; but the fighting stopped in April, 1865. That but illustrates that you are going beyond a period when the war was over, when there was nobody fighting, nobody contending against this country, and when men enlisted, and then, when they had died, pensioning their widows.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. BRYAN. I do.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I will suggest that during the Spanish-American War a great many companies lost by death more men who were not in the San Juan engagement than were lost by companies engaged in that battle. There were very few men who were killed or died from the effect of gunshot wounds in that war—I think less than 300—and there were seven or eight thousand who died from disease.

Mr. BRYAN. If the Senator will allow me, I will put in the RECORD the actual figures.

While the total of individuals enlisted was 312,000, the Army which invaded Cuba under Gen. Shafter consisted of less than 30,000 officers and men. I have the table here:

Present for duty, equipped, June 30, a total of enlisted men of 17,349, with 869 officers.

All those were Regulars except the Seventy-first New York Infantry, of 922 men; the Second Massachusetts Infantry, of 863 men; the Rough Riders, of 557 men; and the Ninth Massachusetts Infantry, of 800 men; making a total of 3,142. There were 23 officers and 257 men killed. There were 113 officers and 1,464 men wounded. The deaths from all causes from May 1 to September 30 were 107 officers and 2,803 men, making an aggregate of 2,910 out of the total number enlisted. And yet, Mr. President, with 2,910 deaths from all causes, there are on the pension roll to-day as a result of that war 28,912 persons, and there are a good many thousands applying for pensions.

I want the Senate to understand this one proposition. Maybe some of them do not, because every Senator can not become acquainted with it. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] says that a good many died from disease. This legislation is not intended for the benefit of their widows. This legislation does not affect the claim of their widows. They have their pensions now under the general law. This legislation is for the benefit of the widows of soldiers who can not show any injury by reason of their enlistment. If a soldier was injured because of his enlistment, when he dies his widow gets a pension. If he was killed or died during his enlistment from disease, of course, she gets a pension. This is intended to take care of cases where no injury can be shown and where none existed.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I interrupt my colleague?

Mr. BRYAN. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. I wish to inquire whether the number of 2,910 total deaths includes deaths from disease?

Mr. BRYAN. Oh, no. That was in Cuba, where the war was, I am pretty sure.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. BRYAN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. VARDAMAN. May I ask the Senator from Florida what time the deaths occurred that he gave a moment ago—those who served in Cuba? The Senator said they numbered 2,700 or 2,800.

Mr. BRYAN. Twenty-nine hundred and ten.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Twenty-nine hundred and ten. Over what length of time did that extend?

Mr. BRYAN. From May 1 to September 30.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Oh, yes; but I think in the whole war the number of deaths from all causes runs up to between eight and ten thousand.

Mr. BRYAN. That is probably true; but I make this suggestion to the Senator: If those men were married, their widows do not need this legislation. This is a case where a soldier enlisted and went to Chickamauga or to one of the other camps throughout the country, came back home, married years afterwards, and died from any cause not traceable to the War with Spain. We are proposing to give his widow a pension. That is all there is to it.

Mr. President, in 1908, which was 43 years after the Civil War, Congress removed all limitations on the Civil War widows. This bill comes here to-day in different shape than that which has characterized its appearance heretofore. Usually it has come here and then the Senate committee has tied onto the bill a provision to add the Civil War widows—that is, widows of veterans of the Civil War married after June 26, 1890—as an amendment, and tied the two propositions together. It has not been heretofore thought that there was enough behind this bill that has come from the House to enable it to stand upon its own merits. But what position are you in to-day? You are going now to pass a bill to let the widow of a Spanish-American War veteran draw a pension in spite of the fact that he was not injured in his service, and under present law you limit the widows of veterans of the Civil War so that they must have been married prior to June 26, 1890.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes; I yield to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Does not the Senator know, as a member of the Committee on Pensions, that the Senate Committee on Pensions has always reported to the Senate, when passed by the House, a bill which removes the limitation, and that it is now upon the calendar of the Senate?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes, Mr. President; I know that, but it seems to me that if I were going to pass either one of them—and I am opposed to both of them—I would have taken up the other one first. Maybe all this pension legislation will not pass.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. In answer to that criticism, if the Senator will pardon a further interruption—I do not like to interrupt him without his consent——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. The Civil War pension bill, relating to widows of the Civil War, was just reported to the Senate upon Monday last, and has been printed and is now upon the calendar of the Senate. This bill was House bill 54 and has been upon our calendar since early in February. That is why it is taken up first.

Mr. BRYAN. I have no doubt, Mr. President, that it is the intention of the Senator from Maine to take up the other one and to take up several more. I am going to refer to some of these other bills a little later.

I want, if I can find it, to refer to the report of the Senate committee in the Sixty-second Congress. I shall not read from it. It shows that this bill and the bill which the Senator from Maine says will be reported will add immediately $7,000,000 to the pension bill. That is the estimate of the committee. There never has been an estimate made yet by anybody as to the amount that would be needed that has not been exceeded when we came to carry it out on pensions, at least.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. BRYAN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. Do I understand the Senator to say that this bill will add $7,000,000 to the pension roll?

Mr. BRYAN. That was the report when it was up in the Sixty-second Congress. Of course, that is the beginning. The amount will increase.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. The estimate given by the chairman, in response to a question of mine, was less than that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I do not think the Senator from Florida wishes to place me in the position of having reported that this bill will add $7,000,000 to the pension roll.

Mr. BRYAN. No; this bill and the other bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. The inquiry of the Senator from Colorado was confined to this bill.

Mr. BRYAN. I believe the estimate of the committee is that this bill will add two and a half million dollars to the pension roll. Is that correct?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS. My inquiry was confined to this bill. Before taking my seat, however, I merely want to remark upon the fact that we are so accustomed to appropriating millions upon millions of the people's money that bills of this kind do not even excite any passing interest in the Senate any longer. I think there are 13 Senators present to listen to the very able speech of the Senator from Florida, who is trying to put a few stop gaps in these appropriations.

Mr. BRYAN. I will make it over again to-morrow, Mr. President. Maybe there will be more here then.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BRYAN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator from Florida if he has any figures showing the average age of the widows of the Spanish War veterans at this time?

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, if I have I am not able to turn to it. I want to say, in the nature of an apology to the Senate, that I had not supposed the Senate was going to lay aside an appropriation bill and turn to this pension legislation. If I had supposed that would take place, I would have been better prepared to answer the Senator's question. I think I have the information here at my desk, but it is difficult to turn to it.

Mr. President, I believe pensions ought to be limited to those cases where there is a need and where there has been meritorious service. That was the view of Congress for a good, long time after the Civil War; and, basing their pensions upon that sort of basis, the appropriations never reached $100,000,000. Indeed, President Garfield condemned the extravagance of Congress in those days. But now what has happened? It is more than twice what it was then after those who did the fighting are gone; and to-day you are paying upon a pension roll a majority of whom are noncombatants. Less than half ever enlisted in any war. You are adding a new class to the pension roll to-day, and, according to the Senator from Maine, you are going to add another new class to it a few days or a few hours later.

It has been customary to say that this Republic has been ungrateful to its soldiers. Former Congressman Gardner, from Michigan, a man who served during the entire four years of the Civil War, made the statement before the Committee on Pensions that no man could say, to-day or in any to-morrow, that this Government had not been generous to its soldiers. It has paid them on the average between $2,000 and $2,500 apiece in pensions.

Mr. President, of those six or eight hundred thousand men who enlisted in the last 90 days of the Civil War some of them never got to the front it can be said of the great majority, of nine-tenths of these men, that they never got to the front; that they never heard a cannon fired in battle.

We may differ and we may be unconsciously influenced because of the section of the country from which we come as to the merits of Civil War pensions; but, Mr. President, those who enlisted in the Spanish-American War came from every State and section of the country, and there is no reason now why men of all parties and from all sections can not deal with this matter justly. The power of the camp, the power of the organization of men for whatever purpose has its influence. They always have somebody here to represent them, to urge their cause before Congress; they are always present when bills affecting their interest are being considered. The great mass of the people who pay the taxes are always absent.

Yet it is mounting up, Mr. President, despite the fact that those men who fought the battles of the Civil War have most of them passed away, and we are now undertaking to add this class, based upon nothing but mere enlistments, upon no sacrifice, who served during a short period of time, and having died from some cause, having been run over by an automobile or a street car, or in a railroad wreck, or from any other cause, except the one cause of their service in war, it is proposed to put their widows upon the pension rolls.

We have always been that way. We pass legislation even for the payment of the widows of deserters and legislation in order to let deserters back and let them draw a pension. We will not come right out and say in the title of the bill that it is an act to straighten a crooked record, but we say it is to correct the military record of somebody who enlisted in the war and deserted.

Mr. President, what are you going to do when you add all this class to the pension roll? Are you going to stop then? How can you? These pensions are due to three things. First, to organizations. I have mentioned that. Then to a sentiment that is commendable, that we do not want to be in the attitude of carping about the treatment of those who have gone to war for us. Then—the main thing—the legislation is due to the fear of the opposition by those interested. These organizations are active. They are active to-day in party conventions. They were active in the Republican convention of 1880. They were active in the Democratic Party convention. Many men believe that Grover Cleveland was defeated because he vetoed pension bills.

Now, I want to come to the proposition that this policy leads—inevitably leads—to pensions in civil life. It is bound to do it, Mr. President.

Mr. BORAH. As a matter of fact, that is what this is now. Upon principle it can not be distinguished from pensions in civil life, and yet we apply it to a limited number.

Mr. BRYAN. Of course. I am going to point out to the Senator some other bills that are merely disguised, that pretend they are not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BRYAN. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. This bill is not based upon any principle which originally inhered in pension legislation, to wit, that somebody has suffered and sacrificed.

Mr. BRYAN. No; they do not need any legislation for that. The law is ample to cover cases like that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. BRYAN. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. If the Senator from Florida will yield, I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator from Idaho. I ask the Senator does he not know that we now pension the widows of the Civil War veterans simply for service, and we have followed in this bill simply that precedent?

Mr. BORAH. It is true that some 35 years after the war we took up the question of pensioning the widows of the veterans of the Civil War, but if the Senator from Florida will pardon me for a moment, as I said a few moments ago, that appears to be a precedent, and they appear to be alike in principle, but the facts are so totally different that I must disagree with the able Senator from Maine, when he cites that as a precedent for this bill. In the first place, these pensions did not come until some 30 or 35 years after the service, which of itself is a broad distinction.

Mr. BRYAN. It was 35 years before the widows of the soldiers of the Civil War were pensioned, and now, 17 years after the War with Spain, we propose to pension the widows of the soldiers of that war.

Mr. BORAH. In the second place, compared with the few, practically none of the men who enlisted in the Civil War but performed such service as would impair them in their health and in their capacity to take care of their families when they returned home. This is a different situation entirely. It is an instance in which a comparatively few performed service, and so far as those few are concerned I would be perfectly willing to pension those who performed service. I would be perfectly willing to pension the widows of those who have suffered and sacrificed, and whose suffering and sacrifice can be attributed to their enlistment or service in the war. But I invite the attention of the Senator again to the proposition that that is a different proposition from that which here obtains:

And who has been honorably discharged therefrom, has died or shall hereafter die leaving a widow without means of support other than her daily labor, and an actual net income not exceeding $250 per year, or leaving a minor child or children under the age of 16 years, such widow shall upon due proof of her husband's death—

Something wholly disconnected perhaps with the service, something in no wise related to the fact that he enlisted and was in camp for 90 days, not in anywise connected with what was originally the inherent principle of pension legislation——

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH (reading)—

such widow shall upon due proof of her husband's death without proving his death to be the result of his Army or Navy service——

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. Just a moment. The fact is, if I understand the bill correctly, if a man enlisted and went into camp for 90 days and returned healthy and sound and afterwards was in anywise unfortunate enough to die, his widow receives a pension. It does not make any difference what was the cause of his death or how he met his death or anything in regard to that matter, the fact that he enlisted and died gives his widow a pension. Now, I am willing to grant pensions to every widow whose husband died in the war, or where it can be shown that he contracted disease or received substantial injury during the enlistment. But I am not willing to give a pension, which the overtaxed people must pay, unless we go into the principle of civil pensions fully, to those who neither suffered in wounds nor disease.

Mr. GALLINGER. Provided she is necessitous.

Mr. BORAH. Provided she is necessitous. That gets right back to the proposition that there are hundreds and thousands of widows in this country who ought to be pensioned on every principle which is contained in this bill, and that is that they once had husbands who died and they are now necessitous. I see no difference between the necessitous widow of a good citizen who never enlisted and the necessitous widow of a man who enlisted for 90 days, but in nowise suffered by reason of the enlistment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. BRYAN. I yield to anyone the Chair suggests.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To whom does the Senator yield?

Mr. BRYAN. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Idaho, if the widow has not lost her husband as a result of the war and has suffered no other loss, for what is the pension granted?

Mr. BORAH. It is granted, if I may be permitted to say so, for reasons wholly disconnected with pensions.

Mr. WORKS. It is a pure charity, is it not?

Mr. BORAH. Yes; it is a charity.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Mr. President——

Mr. BRYAN. I yield to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Idaho to the act of 1900 and ask him how it differs from the present act, from which he has read? I read from the act of 1900:

SEC. 3. That if any officer or enlisted man who served 90 days or more in the Army or Navy of the United States during the late War of the Rebellion, and who was honorably discharged has died, or shall hereafter die, leaving a widow without means of support other than her daily labor, and an actual net income not exceeding $250 per year, or minor children under the age of 16 years, such widow shall, upon due proof of her husband's death, without proving his death to be the result of his Army service, be placed on the pension roll from the date of the application therefor under this act.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator from Florida will permit me, the act the Senator from Maine has read from is simply an enlargement of the act of 1890. The act of 1890 allowed a pension of $8; the act of 1900 a pension of $12 to the widow.

Mr. BORAH. I am quite aware, Mr. President, that there is no form of legislation so bad but that somewhere in the past a precedent can be found for it. I am not at all surprised by the precedent which the Senator has; that is to say, I understand the precedent which the able Senator from Maine cites; I know something of it; it never met with my approval, but that is immaterial. But I ask the Senator from Maine, does he not recognize a difference between those conditions, between the widows of the veterans of 1900, 35 and 40 years after the war, the widows of the men who actually served and performed service, and none of whom ever left the war in the same condition physically that they entered it, and the widows of the men who went into a camp for 90 days and came out with no hurt or injury? If they did receive hurt or injury, give them pensions, but not if they did not.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I do not wish to take any time, but in answer to the Senator's inquiry, of course I recognize the difference in the magnitude of the two wars; but the motive which actuated the men who enlisted is the same. The man who entered the service of his country and who was willing to give his life for that service even if not called upon is not to blame because he was not called into actual battle. He has done all he could do; he has shown his willingness to protect by his life and by his service his country if his country should need him for the trench or the bloody battle field.

If he lay in camp at Chickamauga and suffered disease, as many did, and came home a wreck, enfeebled in body, to drag out a miserable existence as the result of disease, he is entitled to his country's gratitude as much as the man who bared his breast to the bullets or received the saber stroke. That is my view of it. I am looking at the motive. The man who enlisted, whether in the Civil War, or the Spanish War, or who has now responded to his country's call at the present call to guard the Mexican border, deserves his country's gratitude. Whether he is called in actual service or not, he has made his sacrifice and showed his willingness, and a grateful country should recognize it.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, if the Senator from Florida will pardon me a moment further, the condition which the Senator from Maine so graphically portrays would meet with my approval if incorporated into a pension bill. Without any hesitancy whatever I would support it. But that is not the condition here at all. That is not the situation which is covered by this bill. If a man goes to the front and performs service and bares his breast to the bullets or suffers the saber's stroke, I am perfectly willing that the country shall take care of him, and that neither he nor his wife nor his children shall be embarrassed in their future by reason of the sacrifice which he has made. On the other hand, if a man goes into these camps and contracts a disease which undermines his health and destroys his physical capacity to take care of his own, I am willing either to vote a pension to him or to his children or to his widow. But if a man enlists, does that which every other patriotic citizen in the country is willing to do if need be, and has suffered nothing by reason of it, has contracted no disease, has endured no hardship—and that is the condition which is covered by this bill—it is an entirely different condition from that which the Senator from Maine portrays. I am called upon to meet the conditions covered by the bill, and not the conditions so well improvised by the able Senator.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. If the Senafor from Florida will allow me, I should like to ask the Senator from Idaho if now he would be in favor of striking from the pension roll the names of all the widows of soldiers of the Civil War whose husbands were not injured in the services by wounds or by sickness? Is that the Senator's position in regard to the pension roll?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, of course that is not before the Senate and it is entirely a different proposition. That is the method by which the Senator from Maine avoids discussing the bill which is now before us. But I will say to the Senator from Maine that there is no service the Congress of the United States could perform which would be of more general benefit to the country than to overhaul the entire pension legislation. I am satisfied that hundreds and thousands and millions of dollars have been paid out under the guise of paying it to those who served their country where it went to people who never served their country at all. We have been liberal with the people's money and we should always be so when sacrifices have been made or suffering endured for the country's need, but I am under just as much obligation to protect the taxpayer from imposition and fraud in the matter of pensions as other matters.

Mr. STERLING. I should like to ask the Senator from Idaho a question. Does he think we can put service on any different basis during the Spanish-American War from that on which it was during the Civil War, namely, 90 days of service and honorable discharge therefrom? That service being an enlistment and having been in that service 90 days, it would make no difference where they were in that service; but if they were subject to call to any particular service or assignment to any particular service, they were in the service, whether in camp at Chickamauga or wherever they might be.

It seems to me that we can not at this time with reference to the Spanish War veterans put service on any different basis whatever than the basis for service during the Civil War, and we are in this bill, as I understand it, putting it exactly on the same basis.

Mr. BORAH. As I understand the Senator, the Senator is willing——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BRYAN. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Is the Senator willing to go on record as being in favor of paying out millions of dollars to the widows, it makes no difference when she became the wife of the man, whether long after he had performed the service or whether a week or a year—it might have been only a week or 10 days before he died? Is the Senator willing to go on record to pension the widows of men who performed no service to their country other than the mere fact of an enlistment and going into camp for 90 days?

Mr. STERLING. I am willing to go on record in favor of making no distinction in the manner of service between the Civil War soldier and the Spanish-American War soldier.

Mr. BORAH. In other words, if it should be true——

Mr. STERLING. If the Senator will permit me, a soldier during the Civil War may have seen no more actual service than the men who were in camp at Chickamauga from the time of enlistment until the time of discharge. Yet under the Civil War pension act they are all entitled to a pension and all their widows are entitled to a pension.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, according to the theory of the Senator from South Dakota no precedent could be so bad that we would not be justified in following it. As a matter of fact, the service which the men performed in the Civil War is not to be compared for a moment with the service which was performed by men who merely enlisted and went into camp for 90 days.

But, Mr. President, if by reason of going into camp they actually contracted disease or suffered, if they made any sacrifice wherein lies the injustice of having that fact shown so soon after this service has been performed? It is not so very long ago that this service was performed. If these men suffered, if they were disabled in war, if they were wounded, if they were maimed, if they contracted disease it is not difficult at this time to prove that fact. The reason why we gave to the widows of the veterans of the Civil War a pension without this required proof was because we did not undertake to do so until 35 or 40 years were passed, and until the fact in many instances that the proof had disappeared, if it ever existed.

But that is a different situation from this with which we are now dealing. It only discloses, Mr. President, how we take that which seems to be a precedent and, by adding a little more to it, establish and accentuate a bad principle.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. BRYAN. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. I think the Senator from Idaho has omitted one situation that now confronts us. There is an election to be held. The Democrats want to get all the votes they can and the Republicans can not afford to lose any.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, that comes with more effect and more force from the Senator from Colorado than it would from the Senator from Idaho. I do not care to discuss it, but I do not care to deny it.

Mr. THOMAS. I did not think the Senator would.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida will proceed.

Mr. BRYAN. I had reached the point——

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Florida is so good natured, will he permit a single remark?

Mr. BYRAN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. There are about 237,000 widows on the pension roll now. I apprehend there are 100,000 of them who were pensioned who were not the wives of the soldiers during the war. They were pensioned under the act of 1890 and the act of 1900. Most of them were married after the war closed.

This bill is fashioned precisely upon the theory that that law is fashioned on. This may be bad legislation. I for my part do not think it is, but it may be bad legislation. If it is bad legislation we are simply adding a few to a very large number of widows who are on the pension roll under precisely the same conditions that are provided in this bill. I say this for the reason that I heard the Senator from Idaho, if I understood him correctly, to suggest that the widows on the rolls now are widows who were the wives of soldiers during the war. That is not the fact. A very large proportion of them are not. If the Senator will carefully study the act of 1890 and the act of 1900 he will observe that there are no more stringent requirements in those acts so far as widows are concerned than are contained in the bill under consideration to-day.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida yield?

Mr. BRYAN. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from New Hampshire understands better than I do, because he was here, that the argument which was made in favor of relieving the widows from proof at that time was that by reason of the long lapse of years that intervened she was not in a position, it was claimed, to make the proof, and therefore there might be a great many who were actually entitled to pension but who were unable to make the proof and thereby do a greater injury. But here is a different situation entirely. The proof is at hand. If a soldier died by reason of wounds received in the Spanish-American War it is comparatively easily established. If the soldier died by reason of disease contracted in camp it is easily established. The basis for that legislation does not exist with reference to this legislation at all.

Let me go further, because I intended to answer more fully than I did the Senator from Maine, and I do not desire to avoid at all my conclusion in regard to it. I would unhesitatingly strike from the pension roll any widow drawing a pension from a veteran who was not the wife of that soldier at the time he received the injury or contracted or developed his disease in the war.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator permit me? He is the bravest man in public life.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. BRYAN. I have the floor, but I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. I merely wish to express my warm approval of the sentiment which just fell from the lips of the Senator from New Hampshire. I think the Senator from Idaho is the bravest man in public life.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, if the remarks are ironic, I pass them by; if otherwise, I disclaim the honor. But let me say one thing, that the Senators who say that wholly misunderstand the people of the United States. I would take my chance before any audience in this country of having just as many supporters for my position as would support the position of the Senator from New Hampshire. The American people love justice and hate injustice, and when you have a measure which is founded in justice you need not be afraid to carry it before the people, and you will have their popular support. I believe this bill, while smacking of patriotism, is unjust and unfair. We are not here to legislate for the few but for all, and I would not fear public condemnation in such a cause as I now urge.

Mr. GALLINGER. And, Mr. President, if the Senator could carry out the program he has outlined he would send to the poorhouses of this country a hundred thousand women who are the widows of soldiers and who took care of the old soldiers in their last hours and in their last days.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, that does not disturb the equanimity of the Senator from Idaho at all, for the reason that there are hundreds and thousands of widows of men who struggled in every honorable way to gain a competency but failed who must go to the poorhouse, and whose place is the poorhouse to-day. Time and time again in this country, especially in hours of industrial distress, we have witnessed the fact that hundreds and thousands of widows left by workingmen and their children have not only started for the poorhouse but have even been denied admission to the poorhouse, and have sought existence upon the public streets and in the public highways. For those people we have not yet gone so far as to legislate, and yet I venture to say that in principle, in justice, in humanity, in patriotism, there is no difference between the widow of the man who has struggled in vain and the widow of the man who has enlisted for 90 days and has suffered in no respect any loss because of the enlistment. When you come to take up, sir, the question of pensions for every necessitous widow I will be glad to consider it with you, but I want to deal with all alike who come under the principle.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, just a word, if the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN] will permit me. The theory upon which this legislation was based was that no soldier or soldier's widow should be compelled to go to the poorhouse. Upon that theory I stand, and I think it is sound.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, it will be inevitable that, if we keep up this plan long enough, we shall have civil-service pensions—pensions to the employees of the Government in the civil service. Indeed, only the other day, on the Post Office appropriation bill, an amendment of that character was offered. So far as I am concerned, I can not see that a man employed by the Government at a higher rate of pay than a man engaged in similar service for himself or under somebody else has a superior right to be supported by a pension, and I raised the point of order against that legislation, and it was sustained. There is an organization behind that demand. What will Congress do with it?

Then, when you have gone that far and placed upon the pension rolls the civil employees of this Government, you have done two things—you have given to those employees, who already now have considerable influence, greater influence, and then you have created a demand that likewise will be irresistible to put people in private life upon the pension roll.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] has well said that this class which it is proposed to add to the pension list to-day is a civil pension class. Their husbands were not engaged in any war. They married after the war was over. Suppose this bill should pass to-day and become a law, and one of these soldiers was married to-day and was now sitting in the Senate Gallery on his honeymoon, and later, walking down the street, was killed by an accident. What connection would that have with his enlistment 17 years ago in the Spanish-American War?

When you add to that list, how are you going to deny the claim for help to others who need the help? What are you going to say to the great industrial army? They may say, "We have not asked for the help of this Government; we have not applied for a position with shorter hours and greater pay; we are getting old; you have pensioned these others. What about us?" What will Congress say to that? "Oh," you may say, Mr. President, "they will not be organized." They will be organized. Some time ago I read a very interesting book written by a man named Squiers on "Old Age Pensions." He first establishes the fact that the so-called pension legislation of Congress is not legislation for the veterans of any war, and points out that a majority on the pension roll to-day never enlisted in any war. Mr. President, if they get organized, they will have legislation here. I have here a bill which, if I should read it to the Senate, would attract the curiosity and excite the laughter of Senators—a bill to organize an Army corps, prescribe qualifications for enlistment, define the duties, and fix the compensation and term of enlistment of privates, and for other purposes.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I ask the Senator from Florida to read it.

Mr. BRYAN. I will. It is as follows:

A bill (H. R. 14494) to organize an Army corps, prescribe qualifications for enlistment, define the duties, and fix the compensation and term of enlistment of privates, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That immediately after the passage of this act an Army corps shall be organized, in the Department of War, under the direction of the President, to be known as the old-age home guard of the United States Army.

SEC. 2. That the old-age home guard of the United States Army shall be composed of persons not less than 65 years of age.

SEC. 3. That any person who is 65 years of age or upward and who has been a resident of the United States 25 consecutive years, and a citizen of the United States 15 consecutive years next preceding the date of application, and who is not possessed of property amounting to more than $1,500 in value, free of all incumbrances, or an income of more than $240 per annum, and who has not sequestered or otherwise disposed of property or income for the purpose of qualifying for enlistment as hereinafter provided, may make application in writing to the Secretary of War for enlistment in the old-age home guard of the United States Army, and it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War to enlist and enroll such applicant for the term of his or her life as a private in the old-age home guard of the United States Army, without regard to the physical condition of the applicant: Provided, That persons related as husband and wife shall not both be eligible for enlistment, enrollment, and service therein at the same time, and in case of dispute as to whether husband or wife shall be enlisted and enrolled, as herein provided, the question shall be decided by the Secretary of War, by and with the approval of the President.

This would create a war. The bill then proceeds to lay down the amount that can be received, and provides:

SEC. 4. That the pay of a private in the old-age home guard of the United States Army shall be $120 per annum, to be paid in quarterly installments, as pensions are now, by law, paid: Provided, That $10 per annum shall be deducted from the pay of each private and retained in the Treasury of the United States for every $100 worth of property in excess of $300, and for every $10 per annum income in excess of $120 possessed by such private.

SEC. 5. That arms and ammunition shall be furnished to privates in the old-age home guard of the United States Army, at the discretion of the Secretary of War, but no sustenance shall be furnished to them except the pay herein provided.

Mr. THOMAS. May I ask for what these arms are to be used? Do the old guard expect to fire on the Treasury?

Mr. BRYAN. The bill proceeds:

SEC. 6. That no private, or applicant for enlistment as private, shall be required to leave his or her home for the purpose of enlistment, enrollment, or service in the old-age home guard of the United States Army, nor shall they be required to assemble, drill, or perform any of the other maneuvers, nor be subject to any of the regulations of the United States Army, except as herein provided.

SEC. 7. That privates in the old-age home guard of the United States Army shall be required to report annually, in writing, to the Secretary of War, on blanks furnished by him for the purpose, the condition of military and patriotic sentiment in the community where such private lives, but no private shall be discharged, disciplined, or otherwise punished for failure to make such report.

SEC. 8. That the number of persons enlisted in the old-age home guard of the United States Army shall be in addition to the number of officers and privates now required by law in the United States Army.

SEC. 9. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. President, that strikes Senators as a bill which would not have much chance of passage. Senators will say there could be no influence behind a bill like that; but let us see: The American Federation of Labor met in Denver, Colo., a few years ago and appointed a committee to prepare a bill granting old-age pensions in the United States; and the committee reported to the next annual convention this bill, which was introduced in the other House by Mr. Wilson, of Pennsylvania, who is now the Secretary of Labor. Why should they not have pensions? To what can you point as a reason for not placing this class on the pension list? These people, 65 years of age, having been good citizens, never having asked for the help of the Government, what right have you got to deny them a place upon the same list?

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] was right when he answered the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. This pension list ought to be revised from top to bottom.

It used to be, Mr. President, that the granting of a pension was a recognition of services in the Army, but now it is becoming to be a question of dollars and cents.

Young men in the prime of life have gotten up their camps throughout this country, and an organization has demanded of Congress this legislation for the benefit of men in middle life, or the widows of men who may die in middle life or who have died.

I do not believe the public opinion of this country can draw the distinction between any deserving widow and the widow of a veteran of the Spanish-American War, in view of the fact that he never got to any war, but stayed in a camp during the summer time and the early fall, when he was relieved and went back home, and can not trace one iota of injury to his service.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida permit me to interrupt him?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BRYAN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. With reference to the suggestion that the pension roll ought to be overhauled, I desire to say that it was not a great many years ago—I wish I could give the date specifically—when that very thing was done, and the result was printed, I think, in six large volumes. A mere handful of men were dropped from the roll as a consequence. It was found by that investigation that the pension roll was a roll of honor.

Of course as to whether the widows, against whose pensions the Senator from Florida has been inveighing, should remain on the pension roll is another question; but it would require legislation to take them off the roll. The fact, however, that the roll was overhauled from one end of the country to the other and that frauds were found to be so few that they were negligible, showed that the roll at that time—it was not so very many years ago—was not permeated with fraud, as has been asserted.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I do not charge that there is any fraud about it. There could hardly be fraud perpetrated under the liberal provisions of the various acts as they now stand. All that had to be done by anybody was to show that he had enlisted in the war and that the enlistment lasted for 90 days.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is the case under two statutes.

Mr. BRYAN. They did not have to show any injury. That is my principal objection to the general law. I knew a man who lived in a town who died worth nearly a million dollars and who received a large pension. He did not need it; it was mere pocket change for him. What do you suppose the man who lived next door to him, and who had to work day in and day out and month in and month out and year in and year out, thought as to the treatment accorded him and that accorded to the other man? It is the inequality and the injustice of the treatment to which I object.

Mr. President, returning for a minute to the civil-service pension question, let us see as to that. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] a few years ago had printed as a public document an article prepared by Herbert D. Brown. I was struck by the statement in that document, which I am about to read. Quoting from the Nineteenth Annual Report of the Civil Service Commission, the commission say:

It has been urged by opponents of the competitive system that that system, by securing comparative permanence of tenure, tends to promote superannuation in the public service. The commission calls attention to the fact that the civil-service law itself provides for no permanency of tenure. Under it any employee can be dismissed at any time. The successor of such employee, however, is no longer appointed through personal or political favor, and thus the civil-service act has taken away the motive for making arbitrary removals. To this extent the act has promoted permanency, and a very much smaller proportion of persons are removed from the competitive classified service than from other parts of the service. In order to secure justice in making such removals it was further provided by Executive order that the appointing officer must give his reasons, with proper notice and an opportunity for answer, to the person proposed to be removed, and that removals should only be made for such reasons as would promote the efficiency of the service. It is evident that under this rule, rigidly enforced, no person ought to be retained in the public service whose dismissal is required in the interests of good administration. But it is also true that from humane considerations appointing officers will be reluctant to dismiss those who have become superannuated or otherwise incapacitated where hardship is entailed upon the person so removed, and especially in cases where the employee in question has served the Government faithfully for years.

So there is to-day, to all practical intents and purposes, a pension of civil-service employees. Mr. Brown continues:

In the first place, the aged clerk suffers humiliation of spirit and discomfort of body that it ill becomes a great nation to put upon faithful employees. Pitiful cases of old employees who go to office long after their days of usefulness have passed are numerous and well known, for 1 out of every 14 Government employees in the city of Washington is over 65 years of age. Many of them are past 80, and nonagenarians have occasionally been on the Government pay roll. Paralytics are sometimes brought to office in wheeled chairs, and it frequently happens that a wife or child escorts the head of the house to his desk each day.

Further, Mr. Brown has this to say:

This loss to the Government through superannuation in the departments at Washington amounts, therefore, to about $400,000 a year. The committee of the National Civil Service Reform League continues the computation as follows:

"There are nearly five times as many classified United States employees outside Washington, but only two-fifths as large a per cent are over 70; therefore, there are outside Washington twice as many over 70. On the same basis of efficiency the loss outside Washington would be $800,000, or in the whole classified service of the United States $1,200,000."

Since the service is now much larger than when the estimate was made, the loss to the Government is probably considerably greater. In other words, to the extent of that sum of $1,200,000 a year the Government already has a civil pension list.

Mr. President, I understand the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] desires to move to proceed with the Agricultural appropriation bill, and I yield the floor.

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 12717, being the Agricultural appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma, to proceed to the consideration of the Agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I hope that motion will not prevail. I think we have made progress in the consideration of the pension bill, and that we can dispose of it very soon.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Oh, no.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. At least I want to keep it before the Senate until it is disposed of, and I intend to do so.

Mr. BRYAN. The motion is not debatable, as I understand.

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, yes; it is.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It is debatable, being made after 2 o'clock.

The VICE PRESIDENT. After 2 o'clock the motion is debatable.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. As I have already stated, Mr. President, and as the Senate knows, this bill has been on the calendar for over three months. We are hardly treating the other House with the courtesy due that body, and we ought to act upon the bill. They are interested in having us do so. For that reason I hope the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma will not prevail.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, it can hardly be claimed that courtesy requires us to pass a bill because the other House passes it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. If the Senator will pardon me, I never said that; but we should consider it and keep up its consideration and act upon it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I did not say the Senator from Maine had said that. I said that. I said I hardly thought courtesy to the other House required us to pass a bill because the other House had passed it. We have been on the agricultural appropriation bill for some time. We are nearly through with it. The 1st of July has passed. It is an appropriation bill for the current year, and we ought to finish it. I think Senators displaced it, supposing that this pension bill was an ordinary pension bill, not realizing that it was introducing an entirely new problem into our system of pension contributions. I am sure this pension bill will not be finished speedily. There is a good deal more that will be said about it, and I do think we ought to go on with our unfinished business, which is the Agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming and other Senators. Question!

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma to proceed to the consideration of the Agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fletcher	Nelson	Smith, S. C.
Bankhead	Gallinger	Norris	Smoot
Beckham	Gore	Overman	Sterling
Borah	Gronna	Page	Stone
Brandegee	Harding	Phelan	Taggart
Broussard	Hardwick	Poindexter	Thomas
Bryan	Johnson, Me.	Ransdell	Thompson
Catron	Jones	Shafroth	Townsend
Chamberlain	Kenyon	Sheppard	Underwood
Clapp	Kern	Sherman	Vardaman
Clark, Wyo.	La Follette	Shields	Walsh
Clarke, Ark.	Lane	Simmons	Weeks
Culberson	Lippitt	Smith, Ariz.	Williams
Cummins	Lodge	Smith, Ga.	Works
Curtis	McLean	Smith, Md.

Mr. THOMPSON. I am requested to announce that the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] is detained on public business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. STONE. Let the question be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma to proceed to the consideration of House bill 12717, being the Agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BECKHAM (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] to the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN], who is not at present in his seat, and I withhold my vote for the present.

Mr. JONES (when his name was called). I have a pair for the afternoon with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], who is away on public business, and therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] to the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. LEE] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WEEKS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES]. As he is absent, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). Repeating the announcement made by me upon the last roll call as to my pair and its transfer, and asking that this announcement may stand for the day, I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I transfer by pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] to the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. TILLMAN. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. THOMPSON. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] is absent on public business.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY];

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON];

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED];

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK]; and

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH].

The result was announced—yeas 30, nays 28—as follows:

YEAS—30.

Bankhead	Culberson	Sheppard	Underwood
Beckham	Fletcher	Simmons	Wadsworth
Borah	Gore	Smith, Ariz.	Walsh
Brady	Kenyon	Smith, Ga.	Warren
Broussard	Overman	Smith, S. C.	Williams
Bryan	Phelan	Stone	Works
Chamberlain	Ransdell	Thomas
Clarke, Ark.	Shafroth	Tillman

NAYS—28.

Ashurst	Hughes	McLean	Pomerene
Brandegee	Johnson, Me.	Martine, N. J.	Sherman
Clapp	La Follette	Nelson	Sterling
Clark, Wyo.	Lane	Norris	Sutherland
Cummins	Lippitt	Page	Thompson
Gronna	Lodge	Pittman	Townsend
Harding	McCumber	Poindexter	Vardaman

NOT VOTING—37.

Catron	Hitchcock	Martin, Va.	Shields
Chilton	Hollis	Myers	Smith, Md.
Colt	Husting	Newlands	Smith, Mich.
Curtis	James	O'Gorman	Smoot
Dillingham	Johnson, S. Dak.	Oliver	Swanson
du Pont	Jones	Owen	Taggart
Fall	Kern	Penrose	Weeks
Gallinger	Lea, Tenn.	Reed
Goff	Lee, Md.	Robinson
Hardwick	Lewis	Saulsbury

So the motion was agreed to.

And the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12717) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes.

The SECRETARY. The pending amendment is the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], on page 43, after line 3, to insert certain words.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, before the amendment is read I desire to make a very brief statement.

It will be recalled that the so-called Weeks Act, which proposed the purchase of lands at the headwaters of streams in different sections of the country for the protection of navigability of navigable streams, notably in the Appalachian and White Mountain regions. For the examination, survey, and acquisition of such lands the sum of $11,000,000 was appropriated. For the first year $1,000,000 was made available, and for the five subsequent years $2,000,000 per year. Under the law a commission was appointed, known as the National Forest Reservation Commission. That commission was constituted of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of the Interior, the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], Representative HAWLEY of Oregon, and Representative LEE of Georgia.

When the commission was organized, Mr. President, it was found that it would be a waste of money if the commission used the first million dollars that was available for that year, and the amount was allowed to remain untouched. When the beginning of the second year was reached the commission was not in shape to use economically the $2,000,000 that had been provided for that year, and as a result a very small proportion of that amount was used—only a few hundred dollars. The commission then became fully organized and took up the work systematically. The three Cabinet officers named took a great interest in the work, the lands that were offered were examined with the utmost care, every foot of the ground was traversed by men competent to judge of the value of the land and of the timber, and the commission proceeded for four years to use the money that was allotted to it, to wit, $2,000,000 a year, except that during the last year a balance was allowed to remain in the Treasury, which now, I think, amounts to between four and five hundred thousand dollars.

The money having been so nearly exhausted, the commission thought it wise not to purchase any further lands until it was ascertained whether or not it could get further help from the Congress of the United States. The first suggestion was that the friends of the measure should ask that another appropriation should be made, covering a series of years; but upon careful consideration it was the consensus of opinion of the commission that a better way would be to ask that the $3,000,000 that had been appropriated and not used should be reappropriated, which would enable the commission to go on with its work for some time longer.

In the amendment I have submitted it is provided that for the next fiscal year $1,000,000 shall be appropriated, and that for the succeeding year $2,000,000 shall be appropriated, so that if we get the appropriations named in the amendment the commission will have had at its disposal precisely the amount of money appropriated by Congress when the original act was approved.

I will not take the time at present to call the attention of the Senate in detail to the work that the commission has been doing; but I will say, Mr. President, that the utmost care has been exercised, the utmost prudence has been practiced, to purchase these lands wisely and at a very low price. In one transaction, which took place not a year ago, the commission saved a million dollars by holding up a proposition that was very strongly advocated, and which really seemed, on the part of some men who were acquainted with the situation, to be a reasonable proposition. It was held up for some time and a million dollars was saved by that process, the land being purchased, as I say, at an inordinately low rate. The lands purchased have been largely in the Appalachian region, embracing the States of Alabama, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Georgia, Maryland, Virginia, and West Virginia; and, in the northern region, in the White Mountain region of New Hampshire and to a limited extent in the State of Maine. The prices paid for these lands have varied, being from $5 to $6 an acre. Some of them have been purchased below $5 an acre, but I think $6 an acre is about the average price that was paid; and the money has been used exclusively for that purpose, except, of course, that a certain amount has been used for examining the titles, traversing the lands, ascertaining their value, and other incidental expenses that were unavoidable. I think about 50 cents per acre has been used for all the work that has been done by experts and by counsel who have passed upon the titles and in other ways.

The commission has expended a little less than $8,000,000; and at the end of last year, as I have said, it had about $500,000 in the Treasury, which has been reduced somewhat by meeting obligations that had not matured at that time.

Being a member of that commission, having served from its inception—without pay, of course—I am somewhat modest in praising the work of the commission; but I want to pay tribute to Mr. Garrison, Secretary of War, and to Mr. Houston, Secretary of Agriculture, and to Mr. Lane, Secretary of the Interior, who have attended almost every meeting of the commission, and who have taken the keenest interest in the work that we had in hand, and have insisted that it should be administered in the most economical manner possible, without any waste whatever. The other members of the commission have also discharged their duties with rare fidelity and enthusiasm.

Unless these appropriations are made the work of the commission will practically cease. I want to say that the necessity for more money is imminent for the reason that there are now certain parcels of land that, if the commission should acquire them, would consolidate areas that it is very important to have consolidated; and I feel sure the Senate will appreciate the fact that it would be unwise for us to stop work just now when those additional parcels, small in area as a rule, in different places, should be acquired to round out the work of the commission.

When $11,000,000 shall have been used, the amount originally appropriated—that is, provided this amendment is allowed—whether Congress shall in its wisdom then think it wise to extend the work or not, is entirely in its hands. I do not propose to say a word in advocacy of any further appropriation. But I do feel that as this is merely a reappropriation of money that was appropriated for a good purpose, which purpose has been carried out with the utmost economy and care, Congress ought not to hesitate to adopt this amendment.

The amendment, Mr. President, is in order, having been submitted to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and by them considered and reported favorably, so that fortunately no point of order can be made against it.

With these few words, Mr. President, unless some questions are propounded to me, I submit the matter to the Senate and ask that the amendment may now be read and considered.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I wish to say just a little upon this amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator allow the amendment to be read first?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. It has not been read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert, on page 43, after line 3, the following:

That in order to carry out the purposes mentioned in section 3 of the act of March 1, 1911, entitled "An act to enable any State to cooperate with any other State or States, or with the United States, for the protection of the watersheds of navigable streams, and to appoint a commission for the acquisition of lands for the purpose of conserving the navigability of navigable rivers" (36 Stat. L., p. 961), as amended, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, available until expended, the sum of $1,000,000 for the fiscal year ending on the 30th day of June, 1917, and $2,000,000 for the fiscal year ending on the 30th day of June, 1918.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire has praised the work of Democrats upon this commission. I can most freely praise the work of the representatives of his party upon this commission, and certainly include in that number the public-spirited and efficient work of the Senator himself.

This is indeed a nonpartisan work. It is also a nonsectional work. I had the privilege of serving, with the governor from one of the New England States, upon the committee which presented the project to Congress before any legislation took place; and I have watched it with deep interest and appreciation since the passage of the legislation, and am reasonably familiar with the work of the commission. There certainly never was a commission that served the Government more efficiently and more successfully—a commission which was so cautious in the execution of its duty that although it realized that the money should be spent, it spent it so slowly that $3,000,000 is still unexpended of the appropriation intended to purchase the necessary lands from the White Mountains down to the southern part of the Appalachian Range.

I am familiar with some of the lands. I believe it can be safely said that the lands already purchased could be sold to-day for $5,000,000 more than they have cost the Government. I know that the lands that they have purchased in the mountains of Georgia, the northern part of the State—not a great many lands have been purchased there, the purchases principally having been farther north—could be easily sold to-day for a handsome profit.

I believe this additional amount is essential to connect up the lands that have been purchased. I want to say, furthermore, that this can be regarded as an investment from every standpoint. It not only is stopping the stripping of the mountain sides, but it is giving opportunity for rapid regrowth of timber upon the mountains.

Intelligently handled, the timber cut from the land the Government is buying—most of it being a high-class and hard timber—with proper supervision will more than pay a good percentage in a short time upon the amount the Government has put, with the additional three millions, into these lands. It is helping check the wash at the source of streams, thereby lessening the overflow farther down in the lands far away from the place of the purchase.

I believe it can safely be said that scarcely a piece of land has been bought where an effort has been made to sell it. This commission have sought what they needed. They have priced it down, and have bought it at most remarkably low prices.

I regard this as a great service to that section of the country almost from the Mississippi to the coast. The preservation of the timber upon these mountains will help in every way the cultivation of the soil and the atmospheric conditions on both sides of the slope; and I cordially support the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, lest there might be some possible misunderstanding by somebody who read the RECORD without understanding the situation, I wanted to correct—if that is the term to use—one remark of the Senator from Georgia that I thought might lead to a misapprehension. If I heard him correctly, he stated that the commission had been so careful in its purchases that it had not expended $3,000,000.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; that it had not expended the amount of the appropriation by $3,000,000.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I am still fearful that if that statement were left unamplified somebody who read this part of the RECORD and not the other part might think there was still $3,000,000 in the hands of the commission to be expended.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Oh, no; not at all.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I know the Senator does not intend to let that impression go out.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The appropriation has expired, and this is an extension of three millions unexpended, which heretofore had been appropriated, and was subject to expenditure. I meant to say that the commission was so cautious in its selection of the lands, and proceeded so deliberately, that instead of rushing through with the expenditure three millions of the money appropriated to its credit had not been expended; and the commission simply asks now that it may be allowed to expend in completing its work the three millions heretofore appropriated to it which it has not used.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I am glad the Senator amplified his remarks himself. I remember the original bill substantially. It appropriated a million dollars for use the first year and two millions the second year; and before the commission could get thoroughly organized and examine the different properties offered to it to make its selections the million dollars appropriated for the first year and the $2,000,000 appropriated for the second year had not been expended. Hence they lapsed; they were not used. This amendment does nothing except, in effect, to make available for the next two years those appropriations of which the commission was unable to avail itself during the first two years of its existence. I am heartily in favor of the amendment, and I hope it will be unanimously voted into the bill.

I desire to ask the Senator—not having been able to read the report of the commission—if he can state, not exactly, but in substance, how large tracts of land have been purchased in the White Mountain section of the country?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will state it to the Senator in a moment.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not want the Senator to spend any length of time about it or go into detail, but I wish to understand whether large tracts have been purchased and whether they are contiguous. The Senator said something about possibly being able to consolidate certain purchases.

Mr. GALLINGER. The commission has made the area as contiguous as possible. They have purchased a large portion of the Presidential Range, including Mount Washington, but in some places there are breaks we want to fill in. The area which may be acquired in New Hampshire embraces all the principal mountain peaks of the White Mountains proper, and contains 698,086 acres, of which the Government has acquired or contracted to acquire 256,467 acres. From the viewpoint of protection, the purchase area covers the most important sections of the watersheds of the Connecticut, Androscoggin, Saco, and Merrimack Rivers. However, there are other considerable areas farther north at the extreme headwaters of the Connecticut River which should eventually be acquired. The entire area is very mountainous, with elevations that range from 1,000 to more than 6,000 feet and slopes that are long and steep. The forest on the lower slopes and flats is spruce mixed with beech, birch, and maple, while on the upper and steeper slopes the forest is almost wholly of spruce and balsam.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Has that report been extensively printed?

Mr. GALLINGER. It is in print and available to every Senator.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Is it a public document?

Mr. GALLINGER. A public document.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Will the Senator put into the RECORD for the benefit of the public the number of the document?

Mr. GALLINGER. It is House of Representatives document 138, of the present Congress, first session.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I assume from the smaller area purchased of the White Mountain section that the land was more expensive than the land of the southern Appalachians.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is proper to say that there were portions of it which were more expensive, but for the most part not any more expensive than in other sections of the country. I can not give the Senator definite information on that point, but in a general way I will say that the land was purchased at a very low figure, and in no instance was it purchased at a price that those who know most about it thought was even quite its value. There has been a good deal of patriotism shown by owners of this land in all sections of the country, and while they started out asking what we thought was exorbitant prices when they came to understand the purpose of the commission and the purpose of Congress they very generously, as we thought, reduced the price. In every instance the experts of the commission reported that the price at which we bought the land was considerably below the actual value.

Mr. SHIELDS. I wish to ask the Senator from New Hampshire if he can readily state from the report the number of acres that have been purchased in Tennessee?

Mr. GALLINGER. It will be difficult to do that. For instance, White Top, which was purchased, included 339,625 acres in southern Virginia and northeastern Tennessee. It is situated in both States on the watershed of the Tennessee and Kanawha Rivers, but exactly what proportion of it is in Tennessee I can not say.

Mr. SHIELDS. There have been perhaps several hundred thousand acres purchased in Tennessee.

Mr. GALLINGER. I can not say definitely as to that.

Mr. SHIELDS. Has not some of that been purchased as long as two or three years ago, but the sale is not yet completed?

Mr. GALLINGER. The Department of Justice, which has charge of the examination of the title, has been very technical, and, as the commission has sometimes thought, rather slow in doing their work, but there have been a good many troublesome little questions involved, such as mineral rights and other matters of that kind, and perhaps in some cases a controverted ownership. However, the Senator is right in asking the question as to whether the department has not been a little slow in closing the work and paying the money to the owners of the land. Considerable complaint of that kind has reached the commission from different sections of the country, and the commission in one instance tried to speed the department, and I know that to some extent it was successful. In the Senator's section of the country there may be delays which seem unnecessary or unusual. If the Senator will present them to the commission, I give him my word that the commission will take it up with the Department of Justice and see that a more speedy conclusion, if possible, is reached.

Mr. SHIELDS. The information I have is in no way in regard to the delays in accepting titles and in no way affects the commission nor their work. On the contrary, from the information I have of the purchases in Tennessee I can cordially join in all the commendations that have been passed upon the commission's work. The lands purchased by them in Tennessee are now in many instances worth two or three times what they were worth when they were purchased. They were all purchased at a fair value, none of them at an excessive value. It would have been a good investment for private investors, and not only was it a good investment, but evidently contributed greatly to carry out the objects of the bill. However, I have information that large bodies of land were purchased two or three years ago that the United States has taken possession of and it is granting the grazing of them, and yet the purchasers have waited all this time for their money, although that money is here in the Treasury.

Mr. OVERMAN. Has the title been perfected? The trouble in my State has been in perfecting the title. I know the Government had possession of the land and had to bring suits to perfect the title.

Mr. SHIELDS. I understand a great many suits have been brought to perfect the title, but there was no necessity for the suits to remain in court forever. They ought to be pressed through. I understand the former holders have received no interest from the United States on the purchase money of the land they sold. They are out of interest on their money, they are out of possession of the land, and out of the use of the land. Of course it is doing them very great injustice. If possible the perfecting of those titles can be speeded, and it ought to be speeded. If there is any possible way to provide that suits of that kind or the work of the Department of Justice in relation to them could be speeded by giving them a preference it ought to be done. I do not know that anybody is in fault, because I have no personal knowledge of the details of the matter, but it does seem too long for these men to be kept out of the use of their money and also out of the property they sold.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will gladly cooperate to bring about what the Senator from Tennessee desires. That it may appear accurately in the RECORD, I will repeat that purchases have been made up to the present time in Alabama, Georgia, Maine, Maryland, New Hampshire, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Virginia, and West Virginia. One of the most interesting purchases that the commission made was that of the estate in North Carolina known as Biltmore. The commission did not purchase the entire Vanderbilt estate, but they purchased a portion of it, including the roads and other improvements that had been made. Mrs. Vanderbilt sold it to the commission at a ruinously low rate, because she was able to do it at a price very, very far below its value.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think she could sell that property now if she had it for more than double what she received.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think there is not any doubt of it. I believe it could be sold for four times what the commission paid.

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; for four times the price at which she sold it; but she wanted the Government to have it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mrs. Vanderbilt was very patriotic about that. She said she would be glad to have the Government acquire the property, and she would sell it at a price very far below its actual value. The commission in almost every other case has been fortunate in finding men and women who took an interest in this enterprise and who, instead of asking fabulous prices for their property, were willing to sell it at a very low price.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I wish to call up my amendment on page 53, that was passed over on Monday on account of the absence of my colleague [Mr. CURTIS], who desired to be present when the amendment was considered.

In support of the amendment I wish simply to state that this matter was introduced first in the form of a bill by Congressman AYRES in the House of Representatives and favorably passed upon by the committee there, but this bill in the meantime had reached the Agricultural Committee of the Senate. I introduced a separate bill in the Senate and it was favorably considered by the committee, and I then proposed it as an amendment to this bill and it was adopted by the Senate committee.

Mr. President, this is one of the most important entomological field stations in the United States. It embraces the larger portion of seven States of the great agricultural section of the Middle West—Kansas, southern Nebraska, southwestern Iowa, western Missouri, western Arkansas, Oklahoma, and northern Texas.

The object of the amendment is to bring about permanency in the establishment and location of this station so that the Government can successfully carry on its important work without the interruption occasioned by moving. The station was established in 1907, and has been required to move three different times, greatly interfering with its work.

In 1908 this station alone saved to the State of Kansas over $500,000 by the destruction of the Hessian fly, which infested the wheat fields. It is safe to say that it saves several million dollars every year by the destruction of the insects and worms which destroy crops in the Middle West, such as the Hessian fly, chinch bug, fall army worm, false wireworm, false chinch bug, true wireworm, green bug, and the alfalfa webworm.

To carry on this work it requires permanency of location.

I visited this station about a year ago. They did not have a permanent location, but occupied temporary quarters no more pretentious than the frame building in front of the Senate garage. To carry on these experiments requires a series of years. Some of the most important investigations, such as subterranean insects, insects that pass the larval period below the ground, require several years to complete the experiments. Permanent occupancy of grounds is also necessary to carry on experimental plat tests.

I hope, therefore, the site proposed by this amendment may be procured, so that this valuable station may be permanently established and suitable buildings constructed to carry on the important work of the station.

We are not asking for any great sum. The bill was reported favorably from the House committee at $15,000. The Senate committee cut it down to $10,000, which, under the present situation, I understand will be satisfactory, as the citizens of Wellington now propose to donate the site if they can secure the construction of suitable buildings by the Government.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The committee has no objection to this amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. I have an amendment to the amendment which I desire to offer.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I understand that the citizens of Wellington are willing to donate a site, and the Senator from Utah has informed me that he will agree to an amendment that this building shall be erected when the site is donated.

I therefore move, in line 18, to strike out "and erecting," and also the words "purchase, condemnation, or otherwise," in lines 18 and 19, and insert in lieu thereof the word "donation," and on page 54, line 5, to strike out the words "site and."

Mr. SMOOT. Those are the amendments I suggested to the Senator, and I think they ought to be adopted.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Will the Senator from Kansas repeat the amendment?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly. In line 18 strike out "and erected," and in the same line on the same page, after the word "by," strike out "purchase, condemnation, or otherwise," and insert "donation," and on page 54, line 5, strike out the words "site and." That provides, then, that the building shall be erected when the site is donated and sufficient title is given to the Government.

Mr. THOMPSON. This amendment, I understand, simply does away with the idea of acquiring by purchase.

Mr. CURTIS. That is right.

Mr. THOMPSON. I understand it is entirely satisfactory.

Mr. SMOOT. I move to add to the amendment, after the word "acquired," in line 18, page 53, the words "by donation," so that it will read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire by donation a site within or near the corporate limits of the city of Wellington, Sumner County, Kans.—

And so forth.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Is that satisfactory to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. CURTIS. It is perfectly satisfactory.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. GORE. I send to the desk an amendment which I desire to offer and which was called to my attention by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will ask the Senator from Oklahoma if he will not yield to me to offer an amendment, as I am obliged to leave the Chamber and I should like to have the amendment considered before I go, if it will not inconvenience the Senator.

Mr. GORE. In view of the Senator's statement that he desires to leave the Chamber, I will yield to him for the purpose of offering the amendment.

Mr. SIMMONS. I send it to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 44, after line 3, insert:

The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized, under general regulations to be prescribed by him, to permit the prospective development and utilization of the mineral resources of the lands acquired under the act of March 1, 1911 (36 Stats., 961, known as the Weeks law), upon such terms and for specified periods or otherwise, as he may deem to be for the best interests of the United States; and all moneys received on account of charges, if any, made under this act shall be disposed of as is provided by existing law for the disposition of receipts from national forests.

Mr. SMOOT. May I ask the Senator a question in relation to this amendment? Has he consulted the commission that was appointed to purchase this land as to whether they have any objection to the amendment or not?

Mr. SIMMONS. No; I have not consulted the commission, but I have a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, who is a member of the commission, strongly indorsing the amendment.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to ask the Senator from North Carolina whether or not this extends to any other lands than those which were purchased under the Weeks Act?

Mr. SIMMONS. It is limited by the express terms of the amendment to lands purchased under the Weeks Act.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, of course the amendment proposes general legislation, but I shall not interpose an objection to it because of the fact that I can see no harm which can come from it, although I wish to say that, as a general thing, this class of legislation should be referred to the Committee on Public Lands for consideration——

Mr. SIMMONS. I will state to the Senator——

Mr. SMOOT. Just a moment, if the Senator from North Carolina please. I am quite sure if this principle were undertaken to be extended to the public lands of the West, we should certainly object to any such legislation; but as it is confined to the lands which have been purchased under the so-called Weeks Act, I have no objection to the amendment being accepted.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I will state to the Senator from Utah that this amendment in an enlarged form has already passed the House of Representatives and passed without opposition. It is strongly recommended by the Agricultural Department. It only applies to certain minor minerals—the important minerals, the valuable minerals, are reserved to the grantors in the various deeds for these several tracts of lands. It will only affect mica, kaolin, manganese, and things of that sort, things of such little importance that the grantors did not see proper to reserve, although they had the right under the Weeks law to do so. These little deposits, which were allowed to be operated and utilized, are mere pocket deposits. The people who live along the land there have been in the habit from time immemorial of developing them in little pockets, just to make a little money after the crops have been laid by. It is not a regular industry at all.

Mr. SMOOT. But I wish to say to the Senator from North Carolina that the provision does not prohibit the mining of any kind of minerals; it does not prohibit the mining of gold or silver or copper or of any other mineral which might happen to be upon those lands.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, as the Secretary of Agriculture states in his letter, all of the valuable minerals are reserved by the grantors in their deeds. This relates only to such minerals as are not reserved by the grantors in their deeds to the Government.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, may I hear the amendment read?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] will again be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 44, after line 3, at the end of the provision relative to the Forest Service, it is proposed to insert the following:

The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized, under general regulations to be prescribed by him, to permit the prospecting, development, and utilization of the mineral resources of the lands acquired under the act of March 1, 1911 (36 Stat., p. 961), known as the Weeks law, upon such terms and for specified periods, or otherwise, as he may deem to be for the best interests of the United States; and all moneys received on account of charges, if any, made under this act shall be disposed of as is provided by existing law for the disposition of receipts from national forests.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, this is new to me, and I will ask the Senator from North Carolina exactly what is the purpose of the amendment? It is sufficiently expressed perhaps, but I should like an explanation.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire that this amendment has already passed the House of Representatives without opposition; but I think I can state its object more satisfactorily by reading a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, who is a member of the commission, strongly approving of the amendment. This letter is addressed to the Hon. A. F. LEVER, chairman of the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives, and is dated March 23, 1916. It reads as follows:

DEAR MR. LEVER: I wish to acknowledge receipt of a copy of the bill (H. R. 12885) to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to permit the prospecting, development, and utilization of the mineral resources of certain national forests, with the request for an expression of the views of the department relative thereto.

It is limited in this amendment to purchases under the Weeks law.

This bill, if enacted, would apply to lands acquired under the act of March 1, 1911 (36 Stat., 961), known as the Weeks law, and to any other national forests which are not made subject to the mining laws of the United States by the act of June 4, 1897 (30 Stat., 11, 36).

Generally, in the lands being acquired under the Weeks law, the more valuable deposits of minerals have been reserved by the vendors. Provision is made for these reservations in section 9 of that act. In the lands where an absolute fee is being acquired and there are certain deposits of mica, kaolin, manganese, and iron the Government, of course, owns the minerals. Generally these deposits occur in pockets which can readily be developed and worked out by small operators without much equipment or investment. There is considerable demand for opportunity to work these deposits, and some plan is needed by which the Secretary of Agriculture can permit them to be opened up and worked without title to the land passing out of the United States. The effect of such mining operations under proper regulation would not damage the forest or the protective covering of the watershed to any material degree on account of the smallness of the deposits which are usually found in pocket formations.

This department is heartily in sympathy with any plan which will make these purchased areas, as well as the forests established on the public domain, contribute in all ways, through the development of their resources, to the welfare of the regions in which they are located. In the circumstances, the department is of the opinion that the bill under consideration should be enacted into law.

I have just offered an amendment limiting it to lands purchased under the Weeks law.

Mr. GALLINGER. And this letter was written by the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. SIMMONS. It was written by the Secretary of Agriculture. It is signed, "D. F. Houston, Secretary."

Mr. GALLINGER. I wondered when I came into the Chamber what necessity there was for legislation of this kind, for the reason that it is a fact that, as a rule, the mining privilege, wherever it is valuable, has been reserved to the vendors.

Mr. SIMMONS. It has been reserved as to important minerals. What is sought to be reached here should not be called minerals. It is kaolin largely, which is a clay formation, and also mica, which is hardly a mineral, I should say.

Mr. GALLINGER. They will be fortunate if they can make any profit out of mining when the deposit is in pockets. However, I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. SIMMONS. These are worked by farmers living on the borders.

Mr. GALLINGER. I certainly have very much confidence in the Secretary of Agriculture and his interest in this legislation, and even if I had not I should be very loath to object.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Secretary of Agriculture is a former North Carolinian, and I think is very thorougly familiar with the situation with reference to the operation of these little pockets in that State.

Mr. GALLINGER. He is a very earnest member of the National Forest Reservation Commission, and I know he would not do anything that would be harmful to the work of that commission.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will now state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] on behalf of the committee.

The SECRETARY. On page 21, line 17, in the item "for studying and testing commercial seeds, including the testing of samples of seeds of grasses, clover, or alfalfa," the committee proposes to strike out "$28,700" and to insert the following:

And for carrying out the provisions of the act approved August 24, 1912, entitled "An act to regulate foreign commerce by prohibiting the admission into the United States of certain adulterated grain and seeds unfit for seeding purposes" (37 Stats. L., 506), $31,700; and hereafter the provisions of said act approved August 24, 1912, shall be applied to seed of vetch and rye grass; and hereafter, when any kind or variety or mixture of the seeds subject to the provisions of said act of August 24, 1912, as hereby amended, shall contain less than 65 per cent of live, pure seed as distinguished from dead seed, chaff, dirt, other seeds, or foreign matter, such seeds or mixtures thereof shall be deemed unfit for seeding purposes within the meaning of said act approved August 24, 1912, and the importation of such seed or mixture thereof is prohibited: Provided, however, That seed of Kentucky blue grass and seed of Canada blue grass shall not be considered unfit for seeding purposes when they contain 50 per cent or more of live, pure seed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, may I ask that Senator from Oklahoma if the amendment has reference only to grass seeds?

Mr. GORE. It is an amendment to the existing law passed August 24, 1912, to prohibit the importation of adulterated seeds, and it adds to the list of seeds enumerated in that act rye and vetch. It appropriates $3,000 to assist in carrying out that act, and fixes a minimum standard by which certain seeds shall be tested.

Mr. GRONNA. Well, what is meant by the word "seeds"? Does it apply simply to grass seeds or to seeds of grain of all kinds?

Mr. GORE. I think not; but I can not enumerate the seeds referred to without the act. It is limited to the seeds enumerated in the act of August 24, 1912, which was an act to prohibit the importation of adulterated seeds.

Mr. GRONNA. I think, Mr. President, that the word "grass" should be inserted in the amendment. I think that is the language of the original act.

Mr. GORE. I will say to the Senator that it is not necessary to include any of the language of the original act. The original act did not include rye and vetch. So, these two classes of seed are being added to the enumeration of seeds in the original act. There is no effort to reiterate that enumeration. These are simply added. I will say to the Senator that he can look into it further, and we will reopen it in the Senate, or before that, if he desires that to be done.

Mr. GRONNA. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I will say that I have two other amendments sent in by the department, but shall not offer them at this time, as they are of considerable length. I send an amendment to the desk, which I desire to move myself.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 124, after line 19, it is proposed to insert:

Rural sanitation: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to cooperate with other Federal authorities in studying the problems and disseminating information concerning rural sanitation, $100,000.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May the amendment be stated again? It is rather an important amendment, carrying $100,000.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will restate the amendment.

The Secretary again stated the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, would it not be better for the Senator to change the amendment, and authorize the public Health Service to handle this subject under the appropriation of $100,000? I say that for the reason that the Public Health Service have all the agencies at hand; it is doing similar work at the present time; and it does seem to me if we are going now to undertake to provide another organization in another department of the Government to do this work, it will be a very expensive undertaking. It appears to me that if we are going to appropriate a hundred thousand dollars for investigating problems of rural sanitation, the provision ought to be worded so that the agency of the Government now doing that class of work will have it in hand. We can do that by changing the amendment and allowing the amount asked for to be included in the bill.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, the Senator will note that the word "cooperate" is used, and, I think, probably that will meet his objection. This amendment directs the Secretary of Agriculture to cooperate with other Federal authorities. It does not mean to displace other authorities or to supersede them or to usurp their powers or to discharge their functions, but the Department of Agriculture has a more extensive rural organization than any other department of the Government, and it has seemed to me that it might render incalculable service to the Public Health Service in carrying forward this work, in the study of these problems, and in the dissemination of the information, which are the two purposes to which this amendment is limited. It seems to me that, as it directs merely cooperation, it would confer upon the department the power and afford it the opportunity to utilize the activities of the Public Health Service.

Mr. SMOOT. In the sundry civil appropriation bill, which has just been passed, there is an appropriation of $25,000 for this purpose.

Mr. GORE. If we enable the Department of Agriculture to cooperate with the Public Health Service, with its rural organization, it seems to me that it could do more than any other department in carrying forward this line of investigation in conjunction with the Public Health Service.

Mr. SMOOT. My experience has been, Mr. President, that wherever we have more than one department undertaking any kind of work there is a duplication of work, and it is a very expensive undertaking.

Mr. GORE. I think that where the powers are independent that is true.

Mr. SMOOT. We have already in the Public Health Service men trained for this very work. This appropriation will have to be used for securing the services of just such men as we already have in the service. I do not want the Senator to think that I am objecting to the investigation of rural sanitation.

Mr. GORE. I am sure the Senator is not.

Mr. SMOOT. I am not doing that, but I do feel that if we are going to expend $100,000 for that purpose we ought to get the most possible out of it, and I believe that if the amendment be changed so as to provide that the Public Health Service shall undertake this work with the force which they already have we will get more out of it, and there will be more benefit to the people of the United States than if we undertake to direct the Secretary of Agriculture to do this class of work, which is already being done in part by the Public Health Service.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Utah will permit me I should like to inquire of the Senator having charge of the bill if any estimate has been made for this appropriation?

Mr. GORE. I will say that none has been made this year. I think last year or the year before there was an estimate.

Mr. THOMAS. Then, I think I shall be obliged to make a point of order against this amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. GORE. If the Senator will allow me a moment, I desire to offer another amendment which I think will require no discussion, and then I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 125, after line 26, it is proposed to insert:

The Secretary of Agriculture is directed hereafter to submit to Congress annually a statement showing investigations and other services conducted by the Department of Agriculture which have been completed and which can be discontinued.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk to go in on page 80, at the end of line 4.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 80, after line 4, it is proposed to insert:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to cooperate with and make an exhibit at the next annual meeting of the National Dairy Show Association, to be held at Springfield, Mass., during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, illustrative of the boys' and girls' club work, and other features of the cooperative agricultural extension work carried on in the North Atlantic States, including labor and all expenses in the city of Washington and elsewhere, $15,000.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to follow line 12, page 79.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 79, after line 12, it is proposed to insert:

For a proportionate share of the amount required to construct an interstate wagon road or highway through the Mukuntuweap National Monument, Utah, approximately 15 miles, the sum of $15,000.

Mr. FLETCHER. What is that for, Mr. President?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that it is for paying the proportionate share of the amount required to construct an interstate wagon road or highway through the Mukuntuweap National Monument. The monument is located in the southeastern part of the State. The land has been withdrawn as a national monument by the Government. The State of Utah can do no work in it. It is a canyon of remarkable colorings, that the Government thought ought to be held as a national monument, as one of the wonders of the world.

Mr. FLETCHER. Has it been estimated for?

Mr. SMOOT. No; it has not been estimated for; and if the Senator desires to make a point of order, the point of order will lie against it. I wish to say, however, in explanation of the amendment, that the State of Utah and the State of Arizona have built their lines of interstate wagon road up to this monument. The State of Utah has no control whatever over the road through the canyon. It is held by the Government to-day; and in order to make the monument accessible, there must be a road built there. The amount provided is simply to pay their share or proportion of building the road. If it is not built, of course, the work of the two States goes for naught as far as this 15 miles of road is concerned.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I feel that I ought to raise a point of order against the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Has it been estimated for?

Mr. SMOOT. No, Mr. President; it was not estimated for. I expect to get an estimate for it, but I will say frankly that it has not been estimated for.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is nothing for the Chair to do except to sustain it, then.

Mr. SMOOT. That is true; there is nothing for the Chair to do except to sustain it if the Senator insists upon it.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I offer a substitute for lines 1 to 22, inclusive, on page 57.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 57, as a substitute for the matter in the bill included between lines 1 and 22, both inclusive, it is proposed to insert:

That all persons engaged in destroying wolves, coyotes, bears, and other predatory animals the destruction of which is provided for by State laws and bearing license or permits from the proper State authority shall at all times have access to the national forests of their respective States in pursuit of such purpose.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the proposed substitute will save $420,540 to the Government if adopted. The general purpose of the appropriation is to rid the western country of certain predatory animals and other animals injurious to agriculture and animal husbandry and to make certain investigations and experiments.

The general purpose of this bill seems to be to devote money to the making of investigations and experiments and studies. We are experimenting, investigating, and studying all of the habits and idiosyncrasies of men and of animals, to say nothing of insects and soil pests and other pests, and all at the public expense. All of this may be necessary for the proper administration of the agricultural industry of the United States; and if it is, it is perfectly proper that the appropriation should be so made. But I think that this bill, like all national appropriation bills, is packed and padded with divers items, in themselves comparatively small but in the aggregate amounting to millions of dollars, which produce no results, or at least no substantial results, in return for the expenditure.

Some two years ago an appropriation was made in the agricultural bill, if my memory serves me right, of about $300,000 for the purpose of exterminating certain predatory animals. I then called attention to the fact that in the Western States, generally speaking—I think perhaps in all of them—legislation has existed for many years, in the shape of bounties upon scalps of predatory animals, which has resulted in the minimizing of the evil, and in some instances in the practical extermination of certain species. It is the best, if not the only, way to get rid of such pests, Mr. President. A man who is paid by the head or by the scalp for the extermination of a given line of animals receives his money only when he produces results. If he gets no scalps he gets no money, and the inducement to secure compensation is a sufficient spur to prompt him to do the best he can. Men very soon become experts in the hunting of these animals, and in other days some of them were wont to make considerable money, particularly in the extirpation of coyotes.

Mr. President, at that time the answer—and it prevailed with the Senate—was that since the Government had created national forests, thus segregating a large part of the public domain from use—or, I will say, from location—by citizens——

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. "Use" is better.

Mr. THOMAS. Well, I will be moderate and conservative on this occasion—they had become breeding places for these animals, in consequence of which they were multiplying rapidly and becoming dangerous to civilization; and that inasmuch as the Government had seen fit to pursue this method, the corresponding duty existed upon its part and at its expense of exterminating these animals.

I think it is true, as I said a day or two ago, that in consequence of the establishment of these national reserves some species of these animals have shown a tendency to increase; and if it be true that we can not rid ourselves of them except by appropriations like this, then I concede the corresponding obligation that is asserted here. But, Mr. President, I find nothing in the national reserve law, nor in the multitudinous rules and regulations which have been adopted by the Agricultural Department for the administration of these reserves, which forbids the extermination of these pests by citizens of the United States under the State law, except, as suggested in private conversation the other day by my friend the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] that no man was allowed with a gun during the closed season upon the reserves.

I am also painfully aware of the fact that many of these regulations are miscroscopic and irritating, and that in their application they can be made to serve such a purpose. But if by statute we remove the possibility of any such interference, so that the local laws may have full play and those engaged in executing them may have freedom of access, ingress, and egress with regard to these reservations, then certainly the object sought to be attained by this substitute will be accomplished.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a suggestion right there?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I make it as a mere suggestion to the Senator.

Inasmuch as these great reserves have been created, and it has been seen that these predatory animals are increasing on account of the absence of people on these vast reserves, I appreciate the Senator's purpose, but under his amendment the county will have to pay a premium to every man that goes as an individual on the Government reservation and kills and brings in the scalps. In my State for a long time as high as $25 a head was paid for bear and for mountain lion, and I hear that in some of the States they have gone much higher, even for wolves, probably, in Colorado.

Now, if the citizen is given free permission to enter the forest reserves for the slaughter of these animals, he carries them to the county seat of the county in which it would be if it were not for the reserve and gets his reward for them.

I think there is a great deal of justice in what the Senator says about our paying men vast sums for doing nothing; but suppose we limited the payment to these animals killed on the reserves, and provided that on proof of their being killed there, and the scalps being produced as required in the counties before one of the forest officials, the Government should pay the bounty that the States have found it necessary to pay in order to save themselves at all. If this amendment is adopted, the whole of it will fall on the counties, for these very scalps will be taken to the counties, and they will get the reward for them. If the amendment were so worded that for the scalps taken the men got the pay, and got no other, I think probably it would accomplish the purpose we both have in view.

Mr. THOMAS. Of course, Mr. President, these reserves are laid over existing counties.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Certainly.

Mr. THOMAS. I think that is universally true. The existence of the reserve therefore does not inconvenience the hunter in getting his pay. My recollection of the statute in my State, however, is that it is the State treasurer who makes these payments. I am not sure about that.

But the fundamental fact is that the State laws exist. Men are acting under them. They are getting all the scalps they can—at least, I assume that to be the case generally in the West—and there is no need of having two separate methods of accomplishing the same thing, one State and one National, one of which is made effective by payment on results and the other tending to become ineffectual by requiring no such thing.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I want them to require it.

Mr. THOMAS. A man is employed for $115 a month, as the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TAGGART] said the other day, and he gets his $115 a month whether he kills 1 predatory animal, 20 predatory animals, or none at all. Now, what inducement is there behind the man whose salary depends not upon results but simply upon the passage of time?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. THOMAS. I do.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Sometimes a man who is paid a salary of $115 a month, by trapping only one wolf or coyote that destroys thousands and thousands of dollars worth of property, does more good than a man who gets a bounty and captures several hundred but does not get the animal that does the damage.

Mr. THOMAS. Oh, yes, Mr. President; but if he gets a hundred animals he stands more chance of getting the particular animal that does the damage than the man that only gets one.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The experts of the Department of Agriculture say that the contrary is frequently true. They say that the bounty system is not the most successful one; that it tends to secure the preservation of the females and the destruction principally of the males; that their salaried trappers have often found she wolves with four or five trap marks on them, showing that they had been liberated in order that they might reproduce their kind and thus provide more bounties. The bounty system may be valuable to a certain extent, and most of the bounty hunters are honest and reliable. It has been tried on a large scale, however, and has not produced the best results. This is what I understand to be the position and experience of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. THOMAS. Well, of course, I know that bounty laws are subject to abuse. There is no question about it. The wit of man never devised and can not devise a law that a rascal will not evade or avoid if it is possible. The old definition of a court of chancery was that it was a race between the rogue and the chancellor. But I must express my doubt of the competency of the Agricultural Department's expert hunters of predatory animals. I would not give an old-fashioned western hunter for all of the agricultural experts on earth, when it comes to this.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. That is the kind of men we want to hire.

Mr. THOMAS. But is that the kind of men we hire?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Well, we ought to.

Mr. THOMAS. I understand they are appointed from the civil-service list.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I hope not.

Mr. THOMAS. Well, why should they not be? The civil-service list covers almost everything else; and why not have a system of examinations for expert predatory-animal hunters?

I do not want to express my opinion concerning the competency of these gentlemen one way or the other, because I know nothing about them, and I do not like to do injustice to anyone, although sometimes I unfortunately do so. But I was struck by the statement made by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TAGGART] on Saturday upon this subject. He read an account, a short list, of some of the results achieved by these Department of Agriculture expert hunters. I think one hunter killed one animal and another three animals during the course of a month. The impulse which would prompt a bounty scalp hunter so to arrange his booty as to permit the business to flourish, so that he could continue it indefinitely, would equally appeal to the man who gets $115 a month, because as soon as the animals are exterminated his job, theoretically at least, ends.

Mr. President, we have in every one of the Western States a body of men engaged in exterminating these animals at so much per head. The Government of the United States must now come along and at an expense of $500,000 a year, duplicate that situation, because, forsooth, these forest reserves exist. I think we can save that amount of money and lose nothing by it, and, on the contrary, gain much by it, by making it impossible for those in control of the forest reserves to refuse access to the State hunters possessed of licenses and engaged in carrying on their occupation.

I was trying to find some place to economize. I suppose there is no place for economizing. The Senator says this is no good place to economize. I am afraid that, like Mrs. Harris, there is no such place or person.

Mr. WARREN. I had not heard the amendment read. Perhaps I do not understand it.

Mr. THOMAS. The substitute I have offered reads:

That all persons engaged in destroying wolves, coyotes, bear, and other predatory animals the destruction of which is provided for by State laws, and bearing license or permits from the proper State authority, shall at all times have access to the national forests of their respective State in pursuit of such purpose.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator proposes that——

Mr. THOMAS. As a substitute for this $420,000 appropriation.

Mr. WARREN. In other words, the Senator proposes to do away with the appropriation by the Government.

Mr. THOMAS. If my amendment prevails.

Mr. WARREN. I hope the Senator will not be able to do that.

Mr. THOMAS. I feel very sure I will not, if the Senator from Wyoming can prevent it.

Mr. WARREN. I certainly would prevent it if my vote would decide it.

Mr. THOMAS. So I judge, from what the Senator said.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will permit me a word further——

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. In my judgment of the twenty-odd million dollars carried in this bill there is not a single dollar in the whole measure that is of more value to the people at large than the amount that the Government proposes to use for the eradication of these wild predatory animals.

Mr. THOMAS. Does the Senator think there is nothing on the statute books of the States paying a bounty for the destruction of these animals?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS. Are those statutes to be good for nothing?

Mr. WARREN. We in Wyoming pay a bounty, and I presume Colorado does, but the Government has bred the wolves in the forests and we have killed them on the outside. Now it is proposed to throw this responsibility on the Government itself to kill its own wolves in its own preserves instead of turning them loose on the communities outside the preserves.

Mr. THOMAS. I suppose the Government will say to the man operating under State law that he can not go on the national reservation whenever it is necessary for the purpose of prosecuting his business.

Mr. WARREN. Under the present regulations and law these hunters are not allowed to go into the forest reserves.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not know of any such regulation. I have been trying to find it.

Mr. WARREN. It is true, nevertheless.

Mr. THOMAS. I think the Senator is mistaken.

Mr. WARREN. The forest reserves are protected against all those who would go in who would be liable to cause fires in the forests.

Mr. THOMAS. I took occasion Saturday evening to go through what is called "The Use Book," a little document otherwise known as "a manual for users of the national forests." It is comprised in 160 closely printed pages and contains a great many regulations that are very searching; some of them, as I have said, microscopic and irritating; but I have not found any on this subject. Of course, I can not speak for the scalp hunters of the Senator's State, but I know if a provision of this kind is necessary for that class of men in my State to go into a reserve to get the animals, they will do so if it is enacted. The Senator said, and he believes, that this is the most important item in a bill of $20,000,000. Of course, those who are more interested in other items are equally insistent upon theirs; but I say, Mr. President, if this is the most important appropriation item in the bill then we should reject the bill entirely. It can only operate to duplicate a work that is done more efficiently under the State law than it can be done under the regulations of the department.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, the views of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] in the interest of economy are always good, but I do not think he understands the exact situation with relation to this matter. In the State of Colorado we are not paying bounties. The appropriations made by the Legislature of the State of Colorado are divided into five classes. The first class is for the operation of the Government, the legislative, judicial, and executive branches. The second class takes in the maintenance of institutions where people are confined against their will. The third class comprehends educational institutions. The fourth class takes in appropriations made for boards and officers of boards. The fifth class takes in appropriations made for all other purposes, which would include bounties. The laws of Colorado provide that whenever there is not enough money collected to meet all the appropriations those in the first class should be taken first, those in the second class should then be paid, and then those in the third class are to be paid, and next in the fourth class, and then the fifth class.

Mr. THOMAS. I am aware of the existence of the classes, as the Senator has stated. I think the Senator will admit that the law concerning scalp bounties is in existence, that these scalps are obtained, and that claims are made for them against the State.

Mr. SHAFROTH. There have been a number of claims, but they have fallen under that fifth class when the appropriations made by the legislature were in excess of the revenues collected for that biennial term, and hence could not be paid. In the administration when I was acting as governor very few claims for scalps of predatory animals were presented to the State at all. The result has been that the cattlemen and the sheepmen through their organization and association have provided for a system of payment for the killing of these wild animals. I remember that the live-stock association paid as much as $75 for each gray wolf, so destructive was the wolf upon the young animals belonging to the members of that association. Other very large amounts are paid for scalps of various other kinds of animals that are predatory in their nature.

I remember that the State of Wyoming about a year ago passed a resolution reciting that the losses which had been sustained was very great, and amounted, if I recollect aright, to $3,000,000 a year. Is that correct, I will ask the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. SHAFROTH. A loss of $3,000,000 had been sustained by the stockmen of the West on account of these predatory animals that exist in these reservations and upon other public lands of the United States. So this appropriation becomes a very important one. If we are to have losses in a year of $3,000,000 in the United States, it seems to me that there ought to be some effort made upon the part of the National Government to aid and assist the stockmen in their work. Especially is that true when we know that the individuals themselves, which is always the test as to whether there is anything wrong in an appropriation, are willing to put up so much for the purpose of exterminating these predatory animals.

I sympathize with the method of my colleague of using this appropriation, and if I had time I would feel like changing the appropriation into a system of bounties for scalps, because I believe you will get more of a result that way than by hiring men to go out and kill animals by the month when there is nothing dependent upon their success in the nature of a remuneration.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. If the Senator will permit a suggestion right there, it was suggested by the Senator's colleague that the Government does not like the idea of everybody who pleases, under the pretense of going in to kill the predatory animals, going on the reservation in the closed season when they know the difficulty there is to protect in the closed season the deer, elk, and other animals. While the effort suggested by the Senator's colleague might exterminate a few of the coyotes, it would certainly exterminate a great number of the animals that we attempt to preserve. The Government itself proposes to take charge of its own land, to exterminate predatory animals using them as a breeding ground, a house of refuge, when in the forest reserve the closed season of the year would probably be the very best time for their extermination.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not agree with the Senator with respect to that. I think the proposition presented by the Senator from Colorado, in the nature in which he sanctions the method of having these animals exterminated by bounties, is good. I do not find anything in this provision to the effect that that system could not be used by the Secretary of Agriculture in the extermination of these animals.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Then why not amend the bill in that particular?

Mr. SHAFROTH. That might be done. However, it is easy for a Senator to get up here and say that this is the best system. It may be that the Secretary of Agriculture has tried that system and found it will not work. The way I think it ought to be presented to him is that, if he has not tried it, it ought to be tried, for I believe a system by which you give reward for the scalps that are produced will produce a greater destruction of these animals than in any other way.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President——

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. SHEPPARD. It is the judgment of the Department of Agriculture, based upon the experience and study of years, that the salary system is superior in most respects to the bounty system and has been more effective.

Mr. SHAFROTH. If that is the case I would not want to amend the bill.

Mr. THOMAS. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Texas how it is based upon the experience of years. This is a new departure in the appropriation. It is a new venture by the Government.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The biological survey of the Department of Agriculture has made a careful study of the entire matter.

Mr. THOMAS. How long has the biological survey been engaged in exterminating predatory animals on forest reserves?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It has been studying for many years the question of exterminating predatory animals.

Mr. THOMAS. It was studied as the question of navigation was once studied by a man who wrote a book to prove that no vessel propelled by steam could ever cross the Atlantic. He announced as his conclusion that no vessel propelled by steam could ever cross the Atlantic, and his book was brought over in the first vessel which sailed from a Liverpool port.

Mr. TAGGART. The other afternoon before adjournment, when speaking of the item on page 57, I made a motion that commencing at line 1 down to and including line 22 be stricken out of the bill. By request of the Senator from Oklahoma it was deferred until to-day. If I am not out of order, I should like to renew my motion, which I withheld at the request of the Senator in charge of the bill.

Mr. SHAFROTH. There is one motion before the Senate now, and that is the motion of the Senator from Colorado to strike out and insert the provision which he read.

Mr. President, I wish to say with relation to this provision in the bill there is nothing I can find in it which would prevent the Secretary of Agriculture from doing this work in any manner that he might deem best. Inasmuch as I do believe that the bounty system is better—or, at least, in some States it might be better—I think it ought to be suggested to him to adopt that system. But the theory that this amount could be stricken out, in view of the terrible losses that occur in the western country in the way of destruction by these predatory animals, where the gray wolf can kill a yearling steer, it seems to me it would be very detrimental to the western interests. On that account, Mr. President, it seems to me that the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] ought not to prevail.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, there is another phase which has not been discussed, and that is in the protection of human life. At the time they had the threatened epidemic in San Francisco of the bubonic plague the Government spent a million dollars to exterminate rats that disseminated the disease. It was not left to the State of California to accomplish that work. There is an epidemic of rabies or hydrophobia existing among the coyotes of the Western States. It has been existing there now for over a year. In our own university they have treated up to the present time over 30 people for hydrophobia that contracted it in the State of Nevada alone, and since that report was made I have seen from the current newspapers that they have treated numerous other cases of hydrophobia in human beings.

They have found it necessary to kill practically all the dogs in the northern part of our State, and they have even found it necessary to kill the cats. Hydrophobia has been conveyed to nearly every kind of animal in the northern part of our State. We have the reports on this. This epidemic of hydrophobia commenced in eastern Oregon. At first it was local. As the sheep moved south in the winter to the lowlands the coyotes came with them, as they always do. At the present time that epidemic has extended not only to the southern part of the State of Nevada, but has extended on the west to the Sierra Nevada Mountains in California and on the east into Utah.

It seems to me that this condition is appalling. All of us realize what a terrible scourge an epidemic of that character is. They never know whether or not a patient is cured of hydrophobia. The patient may be treated with Pasteur's treatment and apparently be entirely cured, and yet in five years have the symptoms recur and die in convulsions. There have been millions of dollars worth of live stock killed throughout that country, but that is a small matter in comparison with the saving of human life.

The Senator from Colorado says he favors a bounty system. The hunters of scalps are not seeking work. They are men who will kill a coyote if it crosses their front door. They are men who have no ambition in life; they are generally men who would not accept a job if given to them.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] ought to have the benefit of these remarks because the Senator from Nevada is speaking from experience of the situation. I suggest that the Senator from Colorado give his attention.

Mr. PITTMAN. I would be glad to convince the Senator from Colorado.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair knows of no law that requires a Senator to pay attention to another Senator if he does not want to do so at the suggestion of any other Senator in the body.

Mr. PITTMAN. I did not raise that objection myself. I would not worry the Senator from Colorado with my few remarks.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wanted the Senator from Colorado to hear what the Senator from Nevada said.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator from Colorado was interested with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] also, and it was impossible for him to hear both at the same time.

Mr. PITTMAN. I will briefly state to the Senator from Colorado, so as not to repeat more than possible, that in our State university we have treated already over 30 cases of hydrophobia in human beings. I see by the current papers that they are still treating cases of hydrophobia which have come from infection from coyotes and domestic animals. This disease among the coyotes, as I stated before, started in eastern Oregon about a year ago. At that time it was local, but as the sheep came down the coyotes came with them. Now coyotes with the rabies have extended all the way from Utah to the Sierra Nevada Mountains in California on the west and to the southern part of Nevada.

Mr. THOMAS. From the Senator's argument I imagine that the more money is appropriated to kill these animals the more they propagate and the more dangerous it becomes for rabies in other directions. If the purpose is to prevent rabies, I think it must be reached in a better way. Certainly it will accomplish nothing, in my judgment, to pay a lot of men $115 a month.

Mr. PITTMAN. Just a moment, please. I am not so much interested in that $115 a month as is the Senator, although——

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator yield to me a moment?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to the Senator from Colorado that the necessity for the suppression of the rabies became so urgent last year that the Secretary of Agriculture wrote a special letter to the Committee on Appropriations asking that $75,000 be included in the deficiency appropriation bill, and that request was granted.

The Senator from Nevada speaks of the number of cases of hydrophobia which have been treated in Nevada. I want to say to the Senator from Colorado that there have been a number of cases treated in Utah, the coyotes coming from Nevada over into the State of Utah. They are increasing their migrations, and I think they will be in Colorado in a very little while, and that, more than likely, they will be in Wyoming. They are going wherever cattle and sheep go. The sum of $125,000 of this amount is provided for that very purpose. It is to save human life. The coyotes have bitten dogs and the dogs in turn have bitten human beings. Notwithstanding those cases have been treated, a number of deaths have already occurred. Therefore entirely to strike this out, in my opinion, would be unjust to people who are suffering as the people in the West are suffering.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Utah for his suggestion. I have here telegrams from a convention which was held in Nevada with regard to this very rabies situation. Certainly, if the matter was of sufficient importance for them to hold conventions with regard to it, it ought to be seriously considered by this body.

I dislike very much now to take up the time of the Senate in discussing this subject when we are anxious to pass this measure, but the Senator from Colorado evidently does not know the unfortunate—I may say, the terrible—conditions which are in existence in those States. Think of it. Up to two months ago over 30 people, men, women, and children, were treated for hydrophobia at the State University in Nevada alone. How many others have been treated in other States I do not know. I do know, though, that there are statements as to cows having to be killed because suffering from hydrophobia. I know that coyotes have been found to have hydrophobia. They have been examined for the disease after they were killed and the germs were discovered in them. I know that domestic dogs all through the country have had hydrophobia. I know it is a pest that is threatening that whole section. I therefore do not think this body is going to stand here and haggle over a two or three hundred thousand dollar appropriation when there is a scourge such as hydrophobia threatening a great section of our country.

Not only that, but I want to say that this disease is scattering; it is going farther south, it is going farther east, all the time. When this matter was presented to the Secretary of Agriculture, he could not believe in the existence of this disease to the extent which it was reported; and yet we presented to him—which I hold in my hand here—letters from the president of the University of Nevada confirming everything that I have said. I hold in my hand a telegram from the president of the Nevada Stock Owners' Association; I also hold in my hand a telegram from the State quarantine officer with regard to this matter, and I will read that telegram, which is as follows:

[Telegram.]

RENO, NEV., January 16, 1916.

Hon. KEY PITTMAN,
Senate, Washington, D. C.:

A rabies conference was held January 11 and 12 in Winnemucca, attended by county and State officials, including public-health and live-stock sanitary officials, representatives from California, Oregon, Idaho, and Utah, United States Department of Agriculture, and Public Health Service. Representatives' keen interest and determination to eradicate rabies was shown. Matter thoroughly discussed. Nevada Rabies Commission organized. We will raise probably $100,000 for six months' campaign, and invite Federal Public Health Service and Biological Survey to cooperate on large scale. Expect California, Idaho, Oregon, and Utah to take similar action. Soon as rabies commission is organized, will take up formal negotiations for said Federal aid.

Dr. W. B. MACK,
State Quarantine Officer.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President——

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Why, in the Senator's opinion, is it that the bounty system is insufficient to meet this evil?

Mr. PITTMAN. I will answer that question in just a moment, if the Senator will pardon me. I simply want to convince this body of the seriousness of this matter before we consider it at all. I do not want the subject treated with levity; I do not want it treated indifferently. I know there is not a Senator here who would treat a matter of this character with indifference if he realized what it meant. It means that the people of that whole western country are being subjected to one of the worst scourges in the world. There is not a disease to-day that is equal in its horrors, in my opinion, to hydrophobia. The statistics show that it is not known whether or not the disease is ever cured. I knew right in our State one man who was bitten four or five years ago, who received the Pasteur treatment, and who died a little over 12 months ago in convulsions from hydrophobia. I know that that is the history of the disease, and yet all over that western country men, women, and children are being subjected to the spread of this dread disease—a disease that is conveyed to them through their pets, through their dogs, through their cats, through the farm animals, through the cows—and yet it is said that this great epidemic is to be wiped out by bounty hunters; by men of a disposition that would brand them as idlers in the first place; by men who are willing to live for a few dollars a day, which they can get from scalps of these animals; by men who make money off the existence and growth of coyotes rather than by their death; by men who would be the greatest protectors in the world of coyotes, because they would save all the females. To suppose for one moment that this great epidemic of hydrophobia that is sweeping that section of country could be fought by bounty hunters, it seems to me, is absolutely absurd. I can not see how for a moment anyone would argue such a thing, and I can only explain such a position upon the ground that those who take it have not realized the tremendous danger to the people of that western country.

When it comes down to a great epidemic, which is extending its range and affecting a whole section of this country, it is a national matter as well as a State matter. The disease is crossing from one State into another and from that State into its neighbor. It is a subject of national quarantine.

The question is asked, What are they doing to stop the ravages of the coyotes? Here is the plan submitted to the Department of Agriculture and which is being carried out successfully: They have thrown a cordon of hunters across that whole area through which the rabid coyotes make their way in the spring following the sheep. It is only by such a cordon that it is possible to obstruct them. An isolated hunter here and there would not stop the migration of the coyotes. They would pass the hunters and go on; they would go around them. So they have thrown a cordon of hunters across that State, and they have employed the most experienced hunters who can be found in the State. They are paying them good living wages, because you have to pay a man living wages if he is worth anything at all. Instead of going out and picking up some of the tramp scalp hunters to eradicate a great epidemic in the western country, they are employing good men, and of course they are paying them $115 a month. If they are not worth that amount they are discharged very promptly. The man in charge of this work in my State has been most highly recommended by the governor and by the health service as being an energetic man, who is accomplishing the purpose for which he has been employed.

A Senator suggested that, according to reports, this epidemic is increasing by reason of the employment of these men. It is not; on the contrary, it is decreasing. While there are some treatments day by day for hydrophobia, they are decreasing. In two months previous to the plan now being pursued in that State 25 individuals were treated, but since that time, since these hunters were employed they have killed thousands and thousands of these animals; they have driven others back, away from the settlements, and they are keeping them from getting further south; they are keeping them in a circle. The State is cooperating in this matter.

The stockmen have raised $100,000 for the purpose of fighting this evil, and they also are cooperating with the authorities.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator pardon me an interruption?

Mr. PITTMAN. Certainly.

Mr. VARDAMAN. If the statement is true that the danger is increasing, it only argues that more should be done to combat the evil. The fact that the danger is increasing all the time merely indicates that greater efforts should be put forth to combat and destroy the evil.

Mr. PITTMAN. I thank the Senator; I thoroughly agree with him. If it were increasing, instead of standing here and indorsing this amendment I would be asking for a larger amount, no matter how large it might be, sufficient to meet that condition. Just as we were willing to stamp out the plague in California, just as we were willing to attempt to stamp out yellow fever in the South, so we should aid in eradicating this disease in the West. The lives of our people are far above any policy of or desire for economy.

I have here a letter, for instance, from the Secretary of Agriculture, in which he says:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, February 8, 1916.

Hon. KEY PITTMAN,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR PITTMAN: Referring to the rabies matter, you are aware that there has been included in the urgent deficiency bill an item of $75,000 for expenditure during the remainder of this fiscal year. I have forwarded through the usual channels a supplemental estimate for $125,000 to be included in the Agricultural appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1917. For the successful handling of this matter it is essential that an appropriation be available for the ensuing fiscal year.

Very truly, yours.

D. F. HOUSTON, Secretary.

Can it be conceived that the Secretary of Agriculture would write that kind of a letter to me and would make that character of recommendation to the Appropriations Committee when we know that he is attempting to cut down the appropriations as much as possible, except for the very dire need of it? There is not any question about it. I could read by the hour to the Senate, if I saw fit, telegrams and letters pouring in from every branch of the government of that State, from the governor down, from the quarantine department, from the health department, from the county commissioners, pleading with the National Government to do something to protect the lives of the people of that section of the country against this terrible epidemic. I know it is unnecessary, because many here know the actual facts at this time, and I am not going to burden this body further by reciting them. I do not think for one moment that the Senate is going to consider the striking out of this provision or the reduction of the appropriation it carries.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the Government of the United States has reserved from the use of the States and their inhabitants and from all taxation a large amount of land. I may say that nearly half of the State which I have the honor in part to represent here has been included in United States reserves. The Government reserves pay no taxes; but the Government assesses the cattlemen, the sheepmen, and the horsemen who use the reserves for grazing purposes a regular rental, and that rental goes into the Treasury of the United States.

The people who are engaged in the same line of business, the raising of cattle, sheep, and horses, on lands that are privately owned find it disastrous to undertake to pursue the raising of live stock without making some provision to prevent the ravages of the wild animals which infest the region. They raise money to pay a bounty for wild animals destroyed; but, of course, the amount of bounty alone is not sufficient to induce men to engage regularly in the hunting and killing of the wild animals as a vocation; but, while engaged in their ordinary pursuits, when they come across predatory animals they shoot or trap them. In some instances they take the skins into the county seat and receive the bounty, while in others they throw them away and do not apply for the bounty.

Not only are the States paying bounty for this purpose, but, as I have indicated, individuals in some localities are adding to the bounty, and the large stock associations have sometimes offered as high as $25 to $30 a head for gray wolves, the money being raised by private subscription.

Unless we can make provision so that the United States Government will properly care for its reserves, they will continue to be breeding grounds for gray wolves, black wolves, coyotes, and other predatory animals. Those animals, of course, do not recognize the lines of the reservation, but prey upon live stock outside as well as inside the reservation. Now, when the States are paying a certain bounty and when individuals interested in live-stock businesses are adding to it, shall we ask the Government to do its share and protect its own reservations, which contribute no taxes to State or municipal governments and which are a source of income to the Government because of the payments received from live-stock men for grazing privileges, and work in harmony to reduce to a minimum this great drawback, this great annual loss, to the live-stock business?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if the law prohibits those who receive a bounty under the State law from going upon the reservations to hunt these wild animals?

Mr. WARREN. Yes; the law or the Government regulations, which amounts to the same. But, if the Senator please, in the first place, in this instance we do not need to go into that question, because, as I have said, the bounties paid outside the reservations in the State are not sufficient to induce men to hunt these animals for a living; but they kill them from time to time in connection with their regular occupations in the various walks of life, as they come and go; but if they desired to go upon the forest reservations and it was permitted, they would have to leave their homes, go a long way to obtain permits, and the State bounties alone would not afford sufficient payment.

What the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] has said about hydrophobia is all true, and what the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has said is also true. At another time and place some $75,000 was appropriated in a bill to provide for the contingency or emergency, and the reason why a greater sum was not then put in was because those present who were members of the committee were able to say that they would provide later in this bill for continuing the service; but, outside of that, the question is, What are we going to do to protect the particular interest to which I have referred—the preservation of our live stock against predatory wild beasts whether afflicted or not afflicted with hydrophobia?

If I may have the attention of the Senator from South Carolina, does the Senator think that this is an improper use of the money of the United States?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. No. My idea was that the bounty system would be better than the paying of a mere salary.

Mr. WARREN. That is left entirely with the Agricultural Department. It can provide for either system it wishes.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I was a little surprised when the Senator said that the Department of Agriculture should cooperate in this matter by lending its aid in the reserves which the Government maintains and which it is said are breeding places for wild animals, as though the citizens of the locality were stopped when they reached the border of a Government reservation.

Mr. WARREN. Well, that is true in a general way. The foresters are supposed to keep out travelers, trappers, and trampers who may set fire to the forest; in fact, part of these reserves are under fence.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. My idea was that if the State gave a sufficient bounty to the citizen to fight these predatory animals, and he had free access to the Government reservation, a practical extermination of these animals could be brought about.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator from South Carolina had a field, and I had one adjoining it, and the Senator from South Carolina preferred to handle his own field and objected to my going in there, I could hardly expect to impose upon him and enter his domain. It is exactly the same with these forest reserves. They are reserved from the States and reserved from every use, except as the Government may lease to certain individuals certain rights.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The idea I had was that, if the depredations of these predatory animals and the necessity for their extermination were as great as seems to be indicated in this bill, if the Senator and I had adjoining farms, and his hunter were to come over to help protect my animals by protecting his, I certainly could offer no objection to that.

On the same principle, if he wanted to go into a Government reservation, which is the breeding place and lair of these animals, it seems to me the Government ought to encourage it by passing an act giving to the hunters of each State the right to enter into a Government reserve that might be within its borders or elsewhere for the purpose of hunting down these animals and getting the bounty offered for their destruction.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the live-stock associations have sent in to Congress repeated resolutions adopted at their various meetings asking for this relief. The States, through their legislatures, have sent in memorials to Congress, likewise requesting the Government to do its part. I have not them all at hand at this moment, because this matter has been so well considered heretofore and not the slightest objection has recently been made to it by those who understand the situation. But I will ask the Secretary to read one which I happen to have before me from the State of Oregon. It is very much like those which came from a dozen or more States and indicates what I would be able to substantiate by a very great many sets of resolutions from States and live-stock associations which I have received.

The live-stock interest may perhaps be one that does not need so much encouragement and protection as does the cotton industry. We vote nearly a million dollars a year to take care of cotton and fight the cotton-boll weevil and spend the money upon land that individuals own, in which the Government has no interest. I have always voted for the largest amount proposed. Here, however, the Government is asked to do something with its own land, which it is leasing out to live-stock men for large returns. We ask the Government to do inside its reserves what the men outside of the reserves are doing for mutual protection of one of our most valued industries—live stock from which we get our meat supply.

Now, we all know about the "high cost of living." Nothing enters more largely into that than the meat supply, which seems to be growing less and prices higher.

I ask to have read a request from the Legislature of Oregon as a sample of what other States have asked.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

Senate joint memorial No. 1.

Memorial to the Congress of the United States of America petitioning the United States Government to appropriate $300,000 for suppressing carnivorous wild animals destructive to live stock in the public-land States of the West.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States:

Your memorialists, the governor and Legislature of the State of Oregon, respectfully represent that—

Whereas in the Western States, known as the public-land States, the losses of live stock and poultry, due to the attacks of coyotes, wolves, wildcats, cougars, and bears, amount to not less than $15,000,000 annually; and

Whereas in these western public-land States the State, county, and stockmen do now, and have for years, paid large bounties and used other means to bring about the eradication of these carnivorous animals; and

Whereas in these western public-land States there is now withdrawn from settlement in some form or other approximately 225,000,000 acres of Federal land, which land constitutes the principal breeding ground and refuge of these carnivorous wild animals, and enables them to increase their numbers in spite of the efforts made by the State, county, and stockmen to exterminate them: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Legislature of the State of Oregon does hereby most respectfully urge and request that Congress immediately appropriate the sum of $300,000, to be used by the United States Department of Agriculture for the destruction of coyotes, wolves, wildcats, cougars, and bears in these western public-land States, in order that the meat supply of the Nation may be increased and the proper development of the West encouraged.

Adopted by the house January 13, 1915.

BEN SELLING,
Speaker of the House.

Adopted by the senate January 13, 1915.

W. LAIR THOMPSON,
President of the Senate.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, there is one point to which I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Colorado in reference to the bounty system. The coyotes referred to by the Senator from Nevada, which have hydrophobia, will not be hunted by scalp hunters. No man wants to take the scalp off a coyote that has hydrophobia for fear he may get the disease himself, and he does not hunt the coyote which has hydrophobia. The coyote goes around biting and inoculating other coyotes, and inoculating horses as well. Some of our finest horses in eastern Oregon have died from this disease subsequently to being bitten by coyotes. The scalp hunter does not hunt for that coyote. The coyote hunts for him. That is the situation.

You have to watch out for the coyote that has hydrophobia, for the reason that he is after you, and if there is any opportunity he will get you, too. A number of persons have been bitten by them, and in a number of cases others have had narrow escapes. They have had to climb on their horses and on fences in order to escape. Coyotes have jumped up on the flank or the shoulder of a horse in an attempt to bite the man riding it. Children have to be guarded in going to and coming from school.

I was in that section last fall, and I only camped out and lay on the ground one night when I was in a coyote country, for fear of them, on account of my wife and family. They are dangerous, and they do cause loss of life of sheep, of cattle, and of human beings; and you can not depend upon the bounty system to exterminate them. There is one thing about it, though: The disease will "burn out," to use a simile, in a section of country. For instance, they began in eastern Oregon, up toward the Idaho line, and worked on down south by getting new material, as a prairie fire would burn. The coyotes in the former district, where they were thick, have now died from the disease, and they are exterminating one another; but at the same time they are exterminating human beings and cattle and horses. This fresh supply of coyotes that are the carriers of the disease is to the south; and the disease will work to the south, until finally, I suppose, it will burn itself out by the destruction of the carrier, the coyote. The death rate, however, and the loss of life on the part of human beings, is appalling, and it is unnecessary; and the loss of stock also, I assume from what I have heard, is enormous.

If this Government can secure professional hunters who will take their lives in their hands and go out and hunt hydrophobic coyotes, they ought to be well paid for it, and allowed to do it as effectually as they can.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, in reference to the comment which was made upon the appropriation last year, I find an article that is very interesting, written by Mr. S. W. McClure, in which he comments upon the loss to stockmen caused by these predatory animals being as high as $15,000,000 a year. He says:

A single wolf can kill outright a cow of almost any age, although attacks are generally confined to cattle under 2 years of age. Frequently wolves travel in bunches of two or three, and kill out of sheer devilishness. The loss to cattlemen from wolves is great—in some sections so great that a bounty as high as $100 may be paid for the destruction of a single wolf that has made a reputation as a killer.

Recently I have talked with stockmen of several States about the losses caused by carnivorous wild animals. Here are a few of their statements:

An Oregon sheep breeder said: "We have lost many sheep and lambs in the mountains this year from bears and coyotes. Several years ago Oregon repealed its bounties and the wild animals increased rapidly. After a few years the bounties were again put on, and thousands of coyotes, cougars, and bears have since been killed."

A Washington stockman said: "In July and August of this year I lost $1,000 worth of sheep by wild animals. One of my neighbors has had greater losses. A few days ago my son came across a heifer that had been killed by a cougar."

An Idaho sheepman said: "In my vicinity alone more than 1,000 sheep were killed by bears early this spring. Those sheep were worth $5 a head, so the loss was considerable. Our loss from coyotes alone is about 6 per cent of our flocks."

A southern Montana stockman said: "Our losses of live stock from wild animals is annually between 5 and 8 per cent. Coyotes are the worst offenders."

A Utah stockman said: "My loss of sheep last summer while I was in the national forest was not less than 300 head. Something must be done to destroy the coyotes if we are to remain in the sheep business."

This is a long article, and his conclusion is that the loss to the live-stock industry of the United States, in the western portion thereof, amounts to $15,000,000 a year.

Mr. President, while the suggestion of my colleague is very valuable in the way of pointing out a method by which this extermination should take place, I hardly believe it ought to be incorporated in the bill, inasmuch as the law which we propose to enact by this bill does not restrict or limit the Secretary of Agriculture as to the methods that he should pursue in exterminating these animals; I am satisfied that if the Secretary believes it could be done more effectively or could be done with less cost by means of a bounty system he would adopt it. For that reason it seems to me that the provision as contained in the bill should be adopted.

RECESS.

Mr. GORE. I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 52 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Thursday, July 6, 1916, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, July 5, 1916.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord God of hosts, in whom we live and move and have our being, we bless Thee for the spirit of '76, which gave to us the Declaration of Independence and to our fathers the courage of their convictions, the fruit of which has come down to us a precious heritage in a Government "of the people, by the people, for the people."

Deliver us, we beseech Thee, from the undesirable citizen, half-hearted American, faint-hearted patriot, and lukewarm religionist of whatever name, that we may stand four-square for one country, one flag, one God and Father of us all, and thus be strong to uphold and maintain our sacred rights, not only for ourselves but for posterity, against all comers, "doing justly, loving mercy," walking humbly with Thee, our God and our Father. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, July 1, 1916, was read and approved.

RIVERS AND HARBORS.

Mr. SPARKMAN presented a conference report and statement of the House conferees on the river and harbor appropriation bill (H. R. 12193), which was ordered to be printed in the RECORD under the rule.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman whether he expects to call up this conference report before the revenue bill is disposed of?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I have not determined as to that. I expect to consult Members who wish to bring up that bill. If I can get it up, I shall be pleased to do so.

Mr. MANN. Several gentlemen have made inquiries of me as to when the conference report was likely to come up. That is the reason I ask. As the House agreed to the conference asked by the Senate, I believe the House acts on the conference report first.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes; we shall act on it first. I should like to take it up as early as possible.

Mr. MANN. Can the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] give us any information on that subject?

Mr. KITCHIN. We expect to take up the revenue bill to-morrow.

Mr. MANN. Then the conference report on the river and harbor bill will not come up this week?

Mr. KITCHIN. No; not until we get through with the revenue bill.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I should like to ask the gentleman from Florida whether there are any new propositions contained in this conference report.

Mr. SPARKMAN. There are several; yes; put in by the Senate.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Did I not understand the gentleman to say that no new propositions would be agreed to by him as a conferee?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I expressed my intention to do my best as an individual member of the conference committee.

The SPEAKER. All debate about this is out of order.

PLUMMER, IDAHO.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask to have H. R. 14725, with Senate amendments, laid before the House.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 14725) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to subdivide a part of the town of Plummer, Idaho, and for other purposes, with a Senate amendment.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendment, and, pending that, I want to state what the Senate amendment is.

Mr. MANN. Just have it reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 21, line 9, strike out "twenty-seven" and insert "thirty-seven."

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, that is merely to correct an error in printing. I move to concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. About what?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. About the accomplishments of the present administration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD in regard to a military highway from Los Angeles to the east side of the Sierra Nevada Mountains and through Alturas to Lakeview, Oreg.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD about a road. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEATING. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting the speeches delivered by the President of the United States, the president of the American Federation of Labor, and the Secretary of Labor in connection with the dedication of the Labor Temple in this city yesterday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting the speeches delivered by President Wilson, President Gompers, and Secretary Wilson on the occasion of the dedication of the Labor Temple in this city. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print remarks in the RECORD on the necessity of prompt attendance of the Members of the House during the rest of this session of Congress.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the importance of the attendance of Members for the rest of this session. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I think I will not object, if the gentleman can get his side of the House to attend. I notice that there are a very small number of them here this morning.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I shall try.

Mr. KITCHIN. Without desiring to make any distinction, I wish to say that there are as many Democratic Members here as there are Republican Members.

Mr. MANN. I should like to ask how many of the Texas Members there are here?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I am not the keeper of the Texas delegation in that respect.

Mr. MANN. Is the speech desired to bring them here or to excuse them for going home?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is on the subject of the importance of the attendance of Members during the rest of this session.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Reserving the right to object, are the remarks that the gentleman desires to insert in the RECORD his own remarks or does he wish to insert something written by some one else?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. My own remarks, of course.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I will not object, although the gentleman did object the other day to the printing of my remarks.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Those were political remarks, and personal as well.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the state of the Union. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LINDBERGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the International Convention on Alcoholic Liquors.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 3673. An act to establish a term of the United States circuit court of appeals at Asheville, N. C.; and

H. R. 11878. An act to amend section 99 of the act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 650. An act for the relief of Wallace Metcalf.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 13486. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 3346. An act conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to adjudicate the claims of the State of Massachusetts.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 650. An act for the relief of Wallace Metcalf; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on July 1, 1916, they presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bills:

H. R. 10925. An act authorizing Ashley County, Ark., to construct a bridge across Bayou Bartholomew;

H. R. 10849. An act granting the consent of Congress to Ashley County, Ark., to construct a bridge across Bayou Bartholomew;

H. R. 6923. An act to authorize the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across Little River at a point where the line between townships 12 and 13 north, range 8 east, crosses said river;

H. R. 12197. An act authorizing Ashley County, Ark., to construct a bridge across Bayou Bartholomew;

H. R. 9615. An act to reimburse certain Indians for labor done in building a schoolhouse at Queets River, Quiniault Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington;

H. R. 14484. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war; and

H. R. 7617. An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes.

BUREAU OF WAR-RISK INSURANCE.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, on last Saturday unanimous consent was granted that I might, after the completion of business on the Speaker's table, call up H. R. 13224, and I now ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. It is a bill to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This is the war-risk insurance bill?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I am obliged to object.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania represents one of the largest shipping ports of the country.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But I am not in favor of the Government continuing in competition with private concerns.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. MILLER of Pennsylvania, by unanimous consent, was given leave of absence, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

GENERAL DAM BILL.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged resolution from the Committee on Rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 287 (H. Rept. 921).

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the House shall resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of S. 3331, reported by substitute; that the first reading of the bill (the substitute being considered in lieu of the bill) shall be dispensed with; that general debate shall continue on the bill not exceeding two hours, the time to be controlled one-half by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] and one-half by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH]; that all debate shall be confined to the subject matter of the bill; that at the expiration of general debate the substitute for the bill shall be first read and considered under the five-minute rule; that no matter or provision contained in the bill shall be subject to a point of order, any rule or rules of the House to the contrary notwithstanding.

After all amendments shall be disposed of the committee shall rise and report to the House the bill and all amendments that shall have been recommended by the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, whereupon the previous question shall be considered as ordered upon the bill and all amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, on the 10th of March the bill S. 3331 was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. On March 21 that committee reported the bill back to the House with an amendment by way of substitute. It is proposed by this rule that the bill as reported from the House committee shall be taken up for consideration under the five-minute rule and passed upon and brought to a final vote. The rule is very simple in its terms and very plain in its expression. I desire to ask the gentleman from Kansas if debate is desired on the rule.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to take up the time of the House in discussing the rule. The gentleman from Tennessee has stated its terms. It enables the House to take up this important bill.

Mr. ESCH. The House bill is a substitute for the Senate bill, practically one amendment. Is it the gentleman's understanding that the amendment is to be read section by section for amendment?

Mr. GARRETT. Yes.

Mr. ESCH. Suppose the consideration of the bill can not be completed to-day, the resolution does not prescribe how the consideration of the measure shall be concluded.

Mr. GARRETT. No; the resolution merely makes it privileged; it gives it the status of a privileged bill. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The House automatically resolves itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] will take the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill of which the Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 3331) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters," approved June 21, 1906, as amended by the act approved June 23, 1910, and to provide for the improvement and development of waterways for the uses of interstate and foreign commerce.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the first reading of the bill is dispensed with.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, many years ago, some 10 or 15, by the leadership and cooperation of the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], we formulated and Congress enacted a general dam law to obviate the necessity of taking the time and attention of Congress upon each project to consider and prescribe terms and conditions. We undertook to formulate the terms and conditions upon compliance with which, under the direction of the Chief of Engineers, dams could be built on navigable waters, the object being the double one on the part of the Government, first to secure without spending any money from the Public Treasury the erection of locks and dams through the expenditure of private capital; second, to provide itself and the people with various projects and numerous manufacturing industries, the product of these manufactories in some way to make the country prosperous.

Under that bill a good many authorizations were allowed by Congress but few constructions resulted. There arose contentions on both sides. There were those who insisted that the Government did not demand enough, and every time a bill came into Congress to authorize the Secretary of War to approve plans and specifications there were offered on the floor of the House numerous conditions and terms. On the other hand, the investors said that the terms were hardly liberal enough, and they wanted more liberal terms, more certainty as to the disposition of the property that they invested in dams. The result of the new contention was that construction ceased, and for seven or eight years we have been trying to amend the dam law.

I have always agreed with the gentleman from Illinois that the original law was good enough, and I opposed the amendment of it in 1910 as a compromise between the two contending factions and which ought to have brought about peace and a settlement of the matter. But it did not. Unfortunately, like most compromises, it left both sides dissatisfied, and with a disposition to fight on more than ever.

We reported to the House two years ago, and the House passed a bill, which went to the Senate. The Senate struck out all of the bill after the enacting clause and substituted what was called the Shields bill. The Senate not having acted on the substitute two years ago, at this session of Congress the House began early to prepare a bill. They took the old bill passed by the House and took the Ferris bill for public lands recently passed by the House and prepared a bill which, in our judgment, not only protects the Government in all its rights and protects the people in the use of hydroelectric power, but, in our judgment, offers terms liberal to capital invested in the building of dams.

So far as the Shields bill is concerned, we simply struck it out and restored our bill as a substitute, because, with all modesty and circumspection, we do believe that we do know more about it. We started it, we framed the bill, we made the amendments, we studied the conditions, and the House has passed on every solitary proposition in it. There are two outstanding contentions that we may just as well call attention to in the outset. One of them is the insistence in the Shields bill that the authority to approve plans and specifications shall be exercised by the Secretary of War without a special grant by Congress in each case. This House has never been willing to do that, and I do not believe it is willing to do it now. I do not believe in its present mood it would ever agree to that proposition. On the other hand, the House has heretofore insisted mildly on a proposition that I do not believe the Senate would ever agree to, and that is to impose upon the approval of each set of plans and specifications an uncertain, indefinite Federal tax, to be periodically adjusted at the pleasure of the War Department, which would forever, in my judgment, deter capital from investment.

I believe it would be impossible ever to agree upon such a bill in conference; I believe it would be impossible, if a bill were enacted unanimously, ever to secure capital to build a dam with that provision. What we want, Mr. Chairman, is to secure a measure which will insure the construction of dams. We want to see the power developed, manufactories flourish, and the country prosper by reason of those manufactories. If we could pass and ram down the throats of people, as has been inelegantly expressed, provisions which were objectionable, it would not make peace, there would be obstruction every time a project was proposed, and we would have the same lack of progress that we have had for the last eight years. It has been said by some people in the public press that the purpose is to get through some sort of a bill and then in conference make a bill that will be objectionable to somebody. That would be the height of folly. There would be no sense whatever in passing a bill, if we had the power, that would not mean progress.

I do hope that with as much expedition as possible—the subject matter having been debated so long, the points of difference being so clear and well understood—that we can get through this bill as the House wants it, and then, when it goes into conference between the two Houses, that the conferees will listen to all the views, look at all the angles and all the sides, and succeed in securing the passage of a bill from that conference that will allay the disputes and differences and make possible in the country the construction of dams. [Applause.]

So far as I am concerned and, I believe, so far as the other conferees of the House are concerned, that is the course that they will pursue and insist upon to the end. Unless some gentleman desires to ask me a question I shall reserve the remainder of my time. I here present some comparative statements showing the differences and accord of our substitute in some particulars with the Shields bill and the Ferris bill.

Adamson bill and Shields bill compared.

ADAMSON BILL.	SHIELDS BILL.
SECTION 1.	SECTION 1.
(a) Authority for construction granted by special act of Congress.	(a) Authority for construction granted by Secretary of War.
(b) Grantee may be "any persons."	(b) Grantee shall be political subdivision, States, municipal corporations, corporations, companies, associations, and persons.
(c) No such provision in Adamson bill.	(c) If power is used in public service, grantee must be a municipal corporation, a political subdivision, a public service agent, or a public utility corporation lawfully created and authorized.
SECTION 2.
(a) Grantee may be required to operate locks. (P. 24, lines 4–7.)	(a) No requirement to operate locks.
(b) Without approval of Secretary of War no grantee shall deliver to any one consumer in excess of 50 per cent of his total output. (P. 24, lines 11–14.)	(b) No such provision in Shields bill.
SECTION 3.	SECTION 2.
As between contesting applicants, preference given to the one whose plans are best qualified to expedite development. In case both contestants appear equally well qualified, then preference shall be given to the one that has first complied with the laws of the State. (P. 25, lines 1–7.)	As between contesting applicants, equally well qualified, preference shall be given to the one which has acquired the right to divert the water and otherwise complied with the laws of the State, but if there are no laws, preference shall be given to the first applicant. (P. 7, lines 9–18.)
SECTION 4.	SECTION 7.
(a) Interstate regulation and control given to the Secretary of War. (P. 25, lines 8–20.)	(a) Interstate regulation and control given to Interstate Commerce Commission. (P. 11, lines 19–25; p. 12, lines 1–16.)
(b) Control of issuance of stocks and bonds for interstate development given to Secretary of War. (P. 25, line 18.)	(b) No control of stocks and bonds provided for in Shields bill.
(c) In valuation for rate-making purposes, aids to navigation are allowed, but no value for the rights granted, for good will, or any other intangible element. (P. 25, lines 20–24; p. 26, lines 1 and 2.)	(c) (Sec. 7.) In valuation for rate-making purposes there is included the cost of the aids to navigation, but no value for the rights granted. (P. 12, lines 17–23.)
SECTION 5.	SECTION 2.
(a) The United States reimbursed for its investigation and supervision of construction. (P. 5, lines 17–21.)	(a) Same as Adamson bill.
(b) United States reimbursed for benefits accruing from headwater improvement. (P. 26, lines 19–25 p. 27, lines 1–14.)	(b) Same as Adamson bill, except moneys preserved in special fund for headwater improvement. (P. 5, lines 21–26; p. 6, lines 1–11.)
(c) United States reimbursed for Government lands used, charges such as may be fixed by Secretary of War. (P. 27, lines 15–25; p. 28, lines 1–4.)	(c) United States reimbursed for Government lands used, value to be fixed by Secretary of War according to the rules governing the taking of private property for public use. (P. 6, lines 11–26; p. 7, lines 1–3.)

SECTION 7.

Grantee shall commence construction within one year and complete within a further term of three years; extensions, not to exceed two years, being made by the Secretary of War for good reasons.

SECTION 8.

(a) No power sold to a distributing company except in case of emergency. (P. 30, lines 13–16.)

(b) No assignment or transfer of grant without written consent of Secretary. (P. 30, lines 17 and 18.)

(c) Grantee shall not create a lien for the purpose of financing the business until approved by the Secretary. (P. 30, lines 18–23.)

SECTION 9.

(a) Grant shall continue for 50 years, after which all rights cease, unless Congress exercises one of the options reserved in section 10. (P. 31, lines 5–10.)

(b) Rights granted through Government reservation only on approval of Cabinet officer in charge.

SECTIONS 10 AND 11.

(a) After the expiration of 50 years the United States may terminate the rights granted and may—

(1) Take over the properties on payment of cost of lands and rights and the depreciated value of the structures.

(2) May renew the grant to the original grantee.

(3) May give the grant to a new grantee upon payment on same basis as above.

Should the Government refuse or neglect to do either (1), (2), or (3) above, the rights will cease and the grantee's investment would be destroyed.

(b) The properties taken over shall be those used in the generation and distribution of electrical energy, which are dependent for their usefulness on the continuance of the grant.

SECTION 12.

No contract for power may be made in excess of 20 years beyond the life of the grant.

SECTION 14.

Intrastate service in States having no regulatory authority controlled by Secretary of War.

SECTION 16.

Secretary of War authorized to examine books and accounts and to require reports.

SECTION 18.

Right to alter, amend, or repeal the act without indemnity to the grantees who are damaged thereby.

SECTION 19.

Secretary of War may lease out power for not to exceed 50 years on such terms as may seem to him best, but preference must be given, other things being equal, to bid solely for municipal use by municipal corporations.

SECTION 9.

Grantee shall commence construction within two years and complete within five years; extensions may be made by the Secretary of War.

(a) No such provision in Shields bill.

SECTION 1.

(b) No transfer of assignment except by tax sale, trust deed, or mortgage for the bona fide purpose of financing the business shall be made to any transferee not having the qualifications specified by the act. (P. 3, lines 8–13.)

(c) No such provision in the Shields bill.

SECTION 5.

(a) Rights to continue for 50 years and thereafter until Congress exercises option reserved in section 6.

(b) No such provision in the Shields bill.

SECTION 6.

(a) At any time after expiration of 50 years the Government may do either (1), (2), or (3) opposite, but payment shall be on basis of fair value, but until the Government exercises either one of these options the original grant shall continue.

(b) Properties taken over are the same as defined in the Adamson bill.

SECTION 6.

Contracts may be made beyond the life of the grant on the approval of the duly constituted public authority for jurisdiction without limitation of period. (P. 10, lines 12–16.)

No Federal interference with State matters provided in the Shields bill.

SECTION 7.

Same provision as in Adamson bill. (P. 13, lines 9–21.)

SECTION 13.

Right to alter, amend, or repeal reserved, but those who have exercised rights previously are recompensed for damage.

SECTION 10.

Secretary may lease power at Government-built dams on such terms and for such periods as the Secretary of War may deem for the best interests of the United States, but preference must be given in any event to the bid by a municipal corporation in case the plan adopted conserves the water resources of the region. The municipal is given preference whether it presents the best plans and makes the highest bid or not.

In all other respects the two bills are practically the same.

The Adamson bill and the Ferris bill—Comparison of provisions.

ADAMSON BILL.

SECTION 15.

Provisions covering previous contracts same as Adamson bill. (P. 11, lines 23–25; p. 12, lines 1–6.)

SECTION 16.

Provisions of act not to apply to navigation structures under Secretary of War.

[Mr. ESCH addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I will not attempt in five minutes to discuss any of the details of this bill. I consider it a very important piece of legislation, and so do you. I regret that its consideration is confined to so short a time. I also regret that some of the Members of this House who are thoroughly familiar with this kind of legislation are absent. Although I have given a good deal of consideration to this legislation I know comparatively little about it, and I think that is true of a large majority of the membership of this House. I think they expect the committee having it in charge to inform them as to the provisions of this bill and of its effect, and so forth. How can that be done in the time allotted? Notwithstanding that we are giving it so little time, I hope that the membership will give it their very earnest and sincere consideration. I am satisfied, and I know a number of you are satisfied that this is not the kind of legislation we want. Never in the history of Congress since I have been a Member has there been such an attempt to railroad legislation through as this. What has happened? The Senate passed what is known as the Shields bill on March 3. And what is the purpose of the Shields bill? It is that the private interests of this country shall get possession of the water-power resources of this country and deprive the public of their share of the advantages of those natural resources. It has for its main purpose the defeating and thwarting of the public will in this, that if that bill means anything it means the taking over of these natural resources in perpetuity, without any restriction or control by the Government that amounts to anything. It is simply a makeshift. And what will be the effect of the House substitute that is offered for the Shields bill? Its effect will be to deceive this House—not intentionally—so that there will not be a discussion of the Shields bill in the House. There will not be a fair and intelligent and thorough discussion of this question. The substitute that is proposed here grants practically everything that the House has asked. In its former consideration of this subject our distinguished chairman having charge of this bill tells us in his opening statement that it is proposed to write this bill in conference, just what the water-power interests want. And what is going to happen? Why, when this bill goes to conference we will have the Shields bill and not the House bill. That is the plan. That is the outline and scope of this legislation, and that is going to be its effect. Are we going to be a party to that?

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Are we going to be a party knowingly to such a method of legislation? Are we going to permit these valuable resources to be turned over to the private interests that are seeking them so diligently, without any control or without any regulation? If so, that is a matter for this House to determine, but I for one do not want to be a party to it. I think now is the time for this House to write a bill, and to instruct its conferees who will be appointed, so that there will be no chance of the Shields bill coming back in the shape of a report of the conference committee, which will be the result of our action if well and deep-laid plans are followed. Now I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Chairman, by what authority does the gentleman say that this bill is a substitute, and that afterwards the Shields bill will be substituted by the conferees?

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Why, my friend, if you had paid any attention to this subject, if you had given it any thought or consideration, you would know that to be the fact.

Mr. DEWALT. That is not answering my question.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. You would know that to be the fact without my telling you. If you have not given it any consideration or thought, then you should follow my advice.

Mr. DEWALT. If the gentleman will permit me, I was asking by what authority he alleged that the Shields bill was to be substituted by the conferees?

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. That has been the understanding ever since the Shields bill came into this House.

Mr. BURNETT. Who has had the understanding?

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. The men who steer this sort of legislation.

Mr. BURNETT. The chairman of the committee?

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Why, there have been as many as 40 of the ablest men——

Mr. BURNETT. Name them.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. As many as 40 of the ablest men in this country have been in Washington lobbying in the interest of this legislation since the 4th day of November, 1915.

Mr. BURNETT. Are they Members of Congress?

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. They seem to be very influential with Members of Congress.

Mr. BURNETT. Who has had the understanding? The gentleman says that we must go by it. Who has had it? Name them.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. I will name them at the proper time, or at least a number of them.

Mr. DEWALT. That is just what I wanted, Mr. Chairman. I wanted the authority. The gentleman has made a charge here against this committee and the chairman of it.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. I am not charging this committee. I am stating this whole Congress out to know what is going on.

Mr. DEWALT. Directly or indirectly the gentleman is charging this committee with saying that the Shields bill will be substituted.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. I am simply putting this Congress on its guard. I am charging no one. I am not here to make charges.

Mr. DEWALT. Why not give your authority?

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. I am here to give information. I am trying to give it to you. Now, you go on and act as you see fit, which of course you will.

Mr. DEWALT. I want to act on knowledge, and therefore I ask the gentleman for his authority for the assertion. Mere statement does not amount to authority, the gentleman knows. The question is, who gave the gentleman the authority to say that the Shields bill will be substituted for the House bill?

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. I have said it.

Mr. DEWALT. The gentleman does not give his authority.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Now, I wish to say further that you can not have any regulation or control under the provisions of this bill. The very nature of hydroelectric development and the use of electricity is such that you can not turn that subject over to a Secretary of War or the Secretary of any other department of the Government and have it intelligently and carefully administered. It is impossible. Our Secretary of War to-day has much more to do than he can do; he has duties that monopolize all of his time even if he were a Webster. But in this bill you propose to turn over to the Secretary of War the regulation and control not only of interstate current but intrastate current as well under terms and conditions that are so inadequate that it amounts to no regulation at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

[Mr. SMITH of Minnesota had leave to extend his remarks.]

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I desire to hand up at the present time an amendment to be added at the end of section 3 of this bill. I will not read it, but I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

The amendment is as follows:

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey moved to amend as follows: Add at the end of section 3 the following:

"Provided further, That the Secretary of War may provide in said approval that all profits on the original cost of the plant in excess of cumulative annual profits at a rate or per cent of such cost to be fixed in said approval, and not to exceed 25 per cent, shall be annually divided among the consumers and purchasers of water power, electrical energy, or products thereof, according to the amounts paid by each consumer or purchaser in the year to such owner and maintainer of such dam:

"Provided further, That profits may be invested in permanent improvements, and in such case such excess of profits may be paid over to the person entitled thereto in scrip or other certificates of such investment on which local interest shall accrue and be paid annually until such scrip or certificates shall be taken up and funded in funded debt or in preferred stock bearing cumulative dividends not exceeding such local interest:

"Provided further, That outlay for salaries, offices, and other headquarters expenses and commissions shall be reasonable and subject to approval by the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of War in his approval of the plans and conditions of construction of said dam may limit the total amount of such outlay to a fixed per cent of the money spent in annual operation:

"Provided further, That the owner and maintainer of such dam and water power shall not sell, lease, or contract for such power or for energy, except to consumers thereof, unless upon contracts that are first approved by the Secretary of War and do not impair the consumers' right to share in the profits:

"And provided further, That the owner and maintainer of such dam shall make equal rates for power or energy in each locality according to the quantity used or lost and the cost of connection, and shall fairly apportion such rates as to different localities, and such apportionment shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War."

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, the House will remember that at several times when we have been considering the disposition of Government property I have insisted that there was no safety in doing it except on some cooperative plan. It has been proposed here that charges shall be made for putting up a dam and rent paid. No one can tell now whether the project is going to be profitable or not. That will be developed by experience. It is so as to grants of mines and public lands for great public purposes, and of water powers upon United States property. No one can tell now whether they will bring in nothing or bring in 1,000 per cent.

The principle that ought to be applied, in my judgment—and this will have to be taken into account in all great public undertakings, including the use of public streets, trolleys, telephones, and everything that goes to the benefit of the public—that principle should be that all profits above a certain limit of a liberal per cent to the original investors should be handed over to the consumer.

If a man under these circumstances hires electricity of the owner and maintainer of one of these dams he pays the amount that he is asked to pay, with the understanding that if profits are over 15 or 25 per cent (or whatever the sum may be) going to the men who have put in the capital in the beginning, the surplus shall be returned to each man who has made a contract, and the rates so kept down.

This can be done with the trolleys and with any form of public service, with the water company, with the gas company, with the electric-light company; it is a system that is as broad as that which is applied in the mutual life insurance companies. The greatest mutual companies of the whole world are in the United States distributing their surplus profits back to the men who each pay in a few dollars a year for premiums.

Provision is made in my amendment against the difficulties that apply to life insurance companies that have been discovered by experience. The headquarters expenses should be limited to a certain proportion of the operating expenses, otherwise the profits go into the headquarters expenses. The amendment provides that money taken from income and applied to permanent investment and put in a sort of reserve should be represented by scrip issued to persons from whom the money has been taken. This has been neglected in the insurance companies until they have enormous reserves that are not held by the policyholders, or in which their rights are not ascertained.

No man can say that a cooperative system is impossible. The growth of the great cooperative stores abroad (not here because we deal with credit, and cooperative stores will not work on credit), the growth of the great cooperative system abroad representing millions and hundreds of millions of dollars and serving hundreds of millions of people, have proved that this system is a system of the future which will reserve to the consumer a large part of the profits on the goods, or the electricity, or the right purchased by the great monopolies, and will reserve to the monopolies a fair profit only. [Applause.]

This amendment will be offered to section 3. I have not read it, because I did not want to take up too much time, and I yield back the balance of my time, if there is any.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, water powers are natural monopolies, frequently absolute monopolies, and more frequently monopolies regulated somewhat by other somewhat similar monopolies. The most important of all questions with regard to natural monopolies of all kinds relates to the right of the people to regulate and control them, to have them constantly under public supervision. Fortunately we of the irrigation West, the land of diversion as contrasted with the East, the land of riparian rights, have absolute control over the use of waters for all purposes. That control can never be successfully contested. Our people collectively own the water and it is used under complete and unquestioned public control. There may be, of course, some question as to whether the public will in every instance fully protect itself and assert its right to control in the way that will be beneficial to all the people, but under our form of Government we must depend upon the people to do well those things which they have the power to do. I assume from what has been said one of the principal differences in regard to this bill will be on the question of charges to be collected by the Government, based on water-power development or otherwise. I have never been able to bring myself to believe that the levying of such charges was justified or could in the long run or in the general run be beneficial. The first interest of the public is to have the very largest development and the widest use at the very lowest rate. The consumer must of necessity pay any burden laid upon the development. The consumer must pay whatever charge is laid.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. FERRIS. Suppose in a given city 40 per cent of the power is generated by steam and 60 per cent by hydroelectric. There are cases like that all over the country, though not exactly in that percentage, but a part of it is steam and a part of it is hydroelectric. The public utility commission that fixes the rate to be charged will fix it according to the lowest rate that can be imposed upon the steam, when as a matter of fact that rate in order to be competitive may allow the hydroelectric company to make exorbitant profits.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has presented very clearly the strongest argument and, as far as I recall, about the only argument there is for the claim that it is proper to provide a charge.

Mr. FERRIS. As the gentleman is well aware, of course the power interests are very much interlocked and intertangled, and monopolies of all sorts have grown up among them, though it is a resource that is so young. That being true, and knowing that hydroelectric power can be produced at a so much lower rate, and knowing that in nearly every case you have to have steam auxiliary plants to carry it out, the commission fixes the charge so that instead of taking it out of the consumer, as so many gentlemen argue, and I believe erroneously, it takes it out of the enormously exorbitant profits; and it has another mission, that it is an additional power in the Government to regulate the use of hydroelectric energy, which is probably the most effective one.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman has made the argument, and has made it as well as I have ever heard it made, briefly, in favor of charges, that under certain conditions that may be imagined, and that may exist, a situation may arise under which it would seem from his standpoint that the only way to draw upon what might be considered the unearned profits of a development of this kind would be to authorize the levying of a Federal charge for water-power development.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman to yield me five minutes more.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the answer to that is that in the first place those instances are the very infrequent exceptions to the rule, and it is never in legislation wise to legislate for the infrequent exceptions.

Mr. FERRIS. I want to disagree with my friends as to the facts. I think that in nearly every case they use both powers.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for a question. I am seeking light.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. If one is cheaper than the other, and the public utility commission has the right to fix the charge, would not the public utility with a wise eye to the interests of the public fix the charge as to that power that could be produced the cheapest, and, therefore, the other would go to the wall?

Mr. MONDELL. That is entirely true, and I was about to come to that. The gentleman from Oklahoma would have the law adjusted to meet the unusual exceptions, which is never wise. Second, the exceptions that the gentleman refers to, be they few or many, would not be met or covered by adding a tax and a burden, but I would meet by fixing the charge based on the cost of production without regard to cost of a competitor.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] raised a question, and he is too practical a man to even ask that question. A public utility board can not say in a given city that I shall have lights in my house at a flat rate of 50 cents a month and that my neighbor across the fence shall pay $3 a month merely because one is hung onto a steam power and the other to hydroelectric power. The truth is, they fix the charge at the lowest rate that the most expensive can submit to.

Mr. MONDELL. On the contrary, the public utility commission that fixes charges on the basis of the highest cost for a part of the product would be a commission that ought to be drummed out of business, and would be in any self-respecting well-governed community. A public utility commission must take into consideration every factor and feature of the cost of the product as a whole and base the charge on those factors combined. If a power development with water can produce power more cheaply than a steam development, it is the business of a public utility commission to fix the rate that the water producing company may charge on what its production costs, not on what some other production may cost; that is, in the case of a water-power development selling all of its power to a plant lighting a city, the public utility commission that fixes the charge which may be made by such plant furnishing the consumers will base the charge on the cost of current thus produced.

On the other hand, if a cheap water power company sells half of the current used by a distributing company the charges made by the distributing company must be based on all the factors entering into the cost of the combined production. If a distributing company buys one part of its current more cheaply than another, the combined cost of the current, of course, constitutes the price to be charged to the consumer. What the gentleman refers to is met constantly by public utility commissions. They must consider every feature and every factor in the cost of production of the article sold, and by so doing allow the consumer of the product to get the benefit of any economies that may be accomplished. I am infavor of giving the consumer the benefit. I would not allow some one to levy a special tax upon power simply because it might be cheaply produced. It would not be equitable, in a majority of cases it would not be fair, and in any case it would come out of the pocket of the consumer.

But that is not the worst of it. Whenever the consumer is called upon to pay any burden laid by taxation or public charge he generally pays much more than the amount which the public receives, because there is always something added to it before the consumer comes to pay——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. CLINE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman from Georgia will give me one minute more, I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ADAMSON. I yield to the gentleman—how much?

Mr. MONDELL. I ask that I may have two minutes more.

Mr. ADAMSON. I yield that amount of time to the gentleman.

Mr. CLINE. What I wanted to inquire is this: Suppose the public-utilities commission is required to pass upon the rate for a generating company in disposing of current or gas, and in conjunction that it has to pass upon the rate that a transmission compay desires to fix; would the gentleman make any difference in the rate in favor of the transmission company or the generating company?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not quite understand the gentleman's question.

Mr. CLINE. Take as an illustration, for instance, Niagara Falls——

Mr. MONDELL. Of course the gentleman understands what we are primarily discussing is the question of charges, not the question of rates. I took the position that a tax upon the power development was a burden to the consumer.

Mr. CLINE. Would the gentleman increase that rate on the transmission company? Suppose the transmitting company buys from the generating company for transmission; would the gentleman make any difference in the charges there?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, I am assuming that if we were laying a charge under a bill such as we have before us the charge would be laid directly on the company generating the electricity. Thereafter the matter of rates would have to be controlled by the public-utilities commission. My argument is——

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL (continuing). That if we lay a public charge in the way of a tax going into either the Federal Treasury or the State treasury for power developed by so doing we are placing a burden on the consumer of the product. There is no argument for laying such a charge on the theory that there will be an undue profit that can not be regulated by a public utility commission, because the public utility commission has the power—we should always see to it that they have the power—to fix charges based on all elements of cost.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. MONDELL. I will have to ask the gentleman from Georgia for three minutes more.

Mr. ADAMSON. I would be very glad to yield to the gentleman, but I have promised gentlemen——

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield just a minute to enable the gentleman to answer this question?

Mr. ADAMSON. How much time?

Mr. MONDELL. One minute.

Mr. ADAMSON. Very well.

Mr. NORTON. Take a case of this kind. Say the gentleman was a member of the utility commission of Minneapolis, having supervision of the electric power of Minneapolis, and that 30 per cent of that power was generated by hydroelectric energy and 70 per cent by coal or steam, and the cost of generating hydroelectric power was one-half that of steam power. Would the gentleman fix the rate on the cost of steam power?

Mr. MONDELL. I would fix the rate anyone could charge on the cost of production. In the case of a distributing company buying current from both steam and water-power sources at a fair rate based on the combined cost. That is a very simple thing, a fair rate based on the total cost of the production.

Mr. NORTON. On the 100 per cent?

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly.

Mr. NORTON. Then the excess profit would go to the hydroelectric company?

Mr. MONDELL. Not by any means. If the hydroelectric company was generating half of the product for a quarter of the total cost, why, the rate which they should receive would be fixed in view of that fact.

Mr. NORTON. Would the gentleman distribute the power? Would not they want to get the cheap power?

Mr. MONDELL. The community would get the cheap power so far as it would go, because I would fix the rate on what it cost to develop the power.

Mr. FERRIS. Suppose they are rival companies, and suppose the hydroelectric company was in competition with the steam company, would not you drive the steam company out of business and bankrupt it?

Mr. MONDELL. Not necessarily.

Mr. NORTON. Of course you would.

Mr. MONDELL. You would not escape the situation by taxation. The gentlemen conjure up all sorts of hypothetical cases and want offhand answers as to what in such a case a public-utilities commission would do in fixing rates. I am not clear in my mind whether the gentlemen are disturbed because low rates, under water-power development, might unfortunately affect steam-power development already in existence, or because on a uniform rate for power produced in the same community by steam and water, the water-power owners might obtain the larger profit of the two. At any rate, I am at a loss to know just how they would remedy, or adjust, all these matters advantageously to the public by laying a Federal tax on the water-power development. Assuming that in a given case with water and steam power competing and the rate fixed at the lowest point at which the steam-power producer could live, the water-power producer was obtaining a very considerable profit and it were deemed wise that the Federal Government should absorb the difference in the two costs of production. Is there any assurance under the provisions of this bill that the Federal taxing power would fix the charge at no less or no more than that difference, and if that were done what might be the loss to the community in thus destroying sharp competition? Assume in a situation like that a sufficient increase of water-power development to supply the local needs. Would the Federal tax continue? If it did, it would make it impossible for the community to receive the benefit that it should receive by having a large water-power development in the vicinity.

I must protest the view that communities having possibilities of great water-power development are not entitled to the full benefit of that development. There is no more reason why the Federal Government should lay a heavy tax on water-power development, and by so doing deprive communities of the local advantages which such development would otherwise give them, than there would be for laying a tax upon a community because of the special benefits which it derives in cheap transportation by reason of being on tidewater or an inland waterway. With all due respect for gentlemen who argue that the Federal Government should place a tax on water-power development sufficient to equalize the difference in cost, whatever it may be, much or little, between steam and water power, I must say that it strikes me as being about as curious and illogical a proposal and about as absurd and impracticable a policy as I have ever heard of. One has only to bring to mind possible examples of the problems, effects, and results of such a policy, or such an attempted policy, to realize how utterly impracticable it would be, how inequitable and unfair to communities, if it were possible to carry it out. The largest production of power possible and the lowest rates obtainable under full public control; these are the interests of the public in connection with the development of our water powers. These interests will not be served, in my opinion, by the levying of tax burdens over and above those which these enterprises must and should bear in common with all other property.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, who informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bills and joint resolution of the following titles:

On July 1, 1916:

H. J. Res. 242. Joint resolution to authorize the President to draft members of the National Guard and of the Organized Militia of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia and members of the National Guard and Militia Reserves into the military service of the United States under certain conditions, and for other purposes.

H. R. 13383. An act making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917.

H. R. 15836. An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes.

H. R. 16678. An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the Military and Naval Establishments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes.

On July 3, 1916:

H. R. 393. An act to authorize an exchange of lands with the State of North Dakota for promotion of experiments in dry-land agriculture, and for other purposes.

H. R. 8654. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for an enlarged homestead," approved February 19, 1909, by adding a new section to be known as section 7.

H. R. 11286. An act for the issuance of a patent for certain Government land to Benjamin F. Robinson and John Dows.

GENERAL DAM BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DEWALT].

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Chairman, it is not necessary to speak of the importance of this legislation. I deem it as a fact, that other than the great preparedness measures we have been discussing and passing, and other than the great revenue bill which is about to be considered, there is no measure under consideration by this House which is of greater importance to the Nation at large than this one. The very fact that there is 27,000,000 of horsepower undeveloped in this country is a potent fact which speaks for itself, taken in conjunction with the correlative fact that during the past legislative history in regard to this measure, for a period of 10 or 12 years, there has been 28 different bills passed by the Senate and the House, and yet only 9 of them have become operative and put in force, and private enterprise gone into the construction of working and utilizing this great undeveloped power.

Mr. MEEKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEWALT. Yes.

Mr. MEEKER. In lieu of what was said a while ago could the gentleman give us the assurance that, in his judgment, the Shields bill will not come back from conference?

Mr. DEWALT. I will say to the gentleman that, being a member of the committee, I know what was done there, and I have arisen in part, Mr. Chairman, and in response to the gentleman, to refute and deny any allegation on the part of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SMITH] that there ever was in contemplation the substitution of the Shields bill for the bill now before the House. It is very easy to make charges. It is very easy to say, too, that an "insidious lobby" is present in the House of Representatives. And while I am a new Member here, my past legislative experience has taught me this, that this insidious lobby very seldom seeks anyone except those who are willing to be found, and it very seldom approaches anyone except those who desire to be approached. The insidious lobby knows honest men, and it knows those who are willing to be approached by insidious methods. When the gentleman said this was the granting in perpetuity of the rights of this country to private individuals he was speaking of that of which he did not know or had no knowledge, for the reason that he did not inquire, because section 10 of this bill specifically provides:

SEC. 10. That at any time after the expiration of said 50 years the United States may terminate the rights hereunder granted upon the giving to the grantee, either before or after the lapse of the period of the grant, of two years' notice in writing of such termination, and may take over the properties which are dependent, in whole or in part, for their usefulness on the continuance of such grant and which may have been acquired by any grantee acting under the provisions of this act upon condition that it shall pay before taking possession, first, the actual costs of the dam—

And so forth.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEWALT. Certainly, sir.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. I want to know if the gentleman knows just what the United States Government will have to do and what it will have to purchase and pay for at the end of 50 years in case it desires to take over one of these plants?

Mr. DEWALT. If the gentleman will read the provisions of section 10, he will be informed fully about that. There can not be any doubt about the subject at all; and, for his information, although he was kind enough to accuse me a moment ago of not knowing anything about the subject, I will read it to him.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. You do not have to read it. I can read, but I can not understand what that provision means which says that the Government can take it over when it pays for the plant or anything used in connection with the plant in whole or in part. If you will tell me what that language means, I will be obliged to you.

Mr. DEWALT. The Government is obliged, before it can take possession of this plant, to give a two years' notice, which must be at the expiration of the 50-year tenure. The Government has also the right under the provisions of this bill to extend the leasing power and tenure, and the Government has also the right to take over all the property of this plant and pay, under the guaranty thereof, the actual cost of it, not including the dams which have been constructed and which have been stipulated before to have been Government property.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Now, will the gentleman yield a little further?

Mr. DEWALT. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. That, of course, is very intelligible to the gentleman. He understands that perfectly.

Mr. DEWALT. I can not be blamed for the lack of intelligence of the other gentleman.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. I doubt whether the House understands what the language in the bill means, to this effect, that the Government should pay not only for the plant, but anything which has been acquired during its existence. What does that mean?

Mr. DEWALT. If the gentleman will follow the reading of section 10, he will find that it says explicitly that before taking possession, first, they must pay—

The actual costs of the dam and locks and all other aids to navigation constructed under the approval of plans and specifications, rights of way, water rights, lands, and interests therein purchased and used by the grantee in the generation and distribution of electrical energy under the grant; and, second, the reasonable value of all other property taken over, including structures and fixtures acquired, erected, or placed upon the lands and included in the generation or distribution plant and which are dependent as hereinabove set forth, such reasonable value to be determined by mutual agreement between the Secretary of War and the grantee or owners of such property; and in case they can not agree——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Chairman, will the chairman of the committee grant me a few minutes more?

Mr. ADAMSON. I will yield to the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. DEWALT. I read further:

And in case they can not agree by proceedings instituted for that purpose in the United States district court for the district for which said property or some part thereof is situated; but in no case shall the amount exceed the actual cost——

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. DEWALT. Yes; I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. So that we may understand.

Mr. DEWALT. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. I would like to have the gentleman define just what this language means.

Mr. DEWALT. To what language does the gentleman refer?

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. To the language on line 21, page 31.

Mr. DEWALT. I am reading from the report.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. The language "take over the properties which are dependent, in whole or in part, for their usefulness on the continuance of such grant." Now, that is what we are to pay for. We are to pay for all the property which is dependent in whole or in part for its usefulness on the continuance of the grant or the operation of this plant. Now, what does that mean?

Mr. DEWALT. My response to that inquiry is this: When you speak of property which is dependent in whole or in part you would naturally include the structures which are placed on the property for the propagation of the power, to wit, the dams and other appliances which are necessary, and that shall be limited to the actual cost thereof; and more than that, if the parties can not agree they are resolved to litigation in the district court.

Mr. KENT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEWALT. I will yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. KENT. I want to get at the real tangible effect of this thing. At the end of 50 years the Government says, "We will now buy this dam." There are in connection with the dam a lot of power properties—the houses, flumes, and things that generate electricity, and the wires, which may be hooked up to a trolley system, and the trolley cars that are dependent for their operation upon the use of this power.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has again expired.

Mr. ADAMSON. I will yield to the gentleman a minute.

Mr. KENT. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KENT. What is the effect upon the situation if the Government determines it will take this property over? It says they "may" take it over. That does not mean it must. How is the Government to take this over without taking it all over, clear to the doormats in the street cars?

Mr. DEWALT. I think if the gentleman will look into it he will find that section 11 provides for that:

The Secretary of War may renew the approval of plans and specifications, either original or modified, upon such terms and conditions and for such periods as may be authorized under the applicable laws that may be in force at that time, or to approve terms and conditions under which a new grantee may operate such properties.

Mr. KENT. But the new grantee can not operate the property without taking possession of it, without taking possession of the doormats in the street cars, and everything ancillary to it.

Mr. DEWALT. I doubt much whether as a lawyer—and the gentleman from California is a lawyer——

Mr. KENT. Heaven forbid!

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, how much time remains?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia has 27 minutes and the other side has 12.

Mr. ADAMSON. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] wish to use some time?

Mr. ESCH. I have no demands for time.

Mr. ADAMSON. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] desires five minutes, and after that I shall yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] five minutes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I want a moment in which to ask a question.

Mr. ESCH. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. ADAMSON. All right.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman from California [Mr. KENT] has called attention to a fact that I want to ask a question about, practically a similar question, by quoting the first three lines of section 11:

That in the event the United States does not exercise its right to take over, maintain, and operate the properties as provided in section 10 hereof.

Now, has the United States any right except to take over and maintain and operate the property? Can it take it over and give it to another grantee?

Mr. ADAMSON. That is the plan of the bill, to give three alternatives.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Why that language?

Mr. ADAMSON. The language is taken from the Ferris bill, which was agreed upon by the House, and it means three alternatives; first, trade with the original grantee, if desired. If you can not trade with him, then with a new grantee; or if the Government desires it, the Government can take it over itself.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. As to that language, "exercise its right to take over, maintain, and operate," if that is the only right it has, it can not give it to any other grantee unless there is some other provision somewhere.

Mr. ADAMSON. I will state to the gentleman from Wisconsin that his colleague, Mr. LENROOT, before he went away, desired——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I find in the same section what would appear to be almost a contradiction of that. It says:

To approve terms and conditions under which a new grantee may operate such properties.

Mr. ADAMSON. That is one of the alternatives I have noted.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Then there ought to be some other provision, some other change in that language, because it mentions only one right to maintain and operate.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I will take the time now to mention a matter which was brought to our attention by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT]. The gentleman has referred to the language in section 10, which is used in part in section 11. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] contended that under the preceding section all rights ended at the end of 50 years. Then the Government could exercise its discretion in the three alternatives, and the gentleman from Wisconsin desired me to offer an amendment to that language in section 10, and I am going to offer it at the proper time. Instead of, "At any time after the expiration of 50 years the United States shall terminate the rights hereunder granted," two years' notice in writing of such termination shall be given. I will insert this: Strike out all of section 10, down to and including the first bracket in line 21, and insert the following: "That at any time preceding the expiration of the 50-year period, or at any time thereafter, the United States may, by giving two years' notice, take over the property," the idea being that all its rights ended in 50 years.

And until the United States saw proper to act, to take some steps to put him out, he was there in the river on sufferance, and the United States could, when it got ready, exercise either of the alternatives; either say to him, "You trade with me again, or I will sell to somebody else, or use it myself."

Now I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] five minutes.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, since the water-power bill was up, in January last, I have not given close and critical attention to this bill, and I am only going to refer to it superficially.

The House bill which passed the House in the last Congress deals with about 75 per cent of the potential water power of the United States. It deals with potential power on the public lands of the country. This pending bill deals with about 24.6 per cent; it deals with power on the navigable streams. The jurisdiction of this bill is in the War Department, and under the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, and the jurisdiction of the public-lands water power is under the Interior Department and under the Public Lands Committee. I can see no necessity for a conflict; I feel both bills should preserve the essentials of a proper water-power policy. The question is so important, it needs attention so bady, it merits the closest attention and scrutiny of everyone here.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Did the gentleman say that the Ferris bill deals with 75 per cent of all the potential water power in the United States?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; 74.6 per cent.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Not on the public lands but all?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; 74.6 per cent of all of it. That bill has twice passed the House and died in the Senate. Of course, the bill of this session is not yet dead, but it has not passed the Senate, and it is slumbering very peacefully at the other end of the Capitol.

The Shields bill, which is now being considered, passed the Senate some time ago. I have not the date here.

Mr. MANN. March 3.

Mr. FERRIS. March 3. It came over here, and the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee struck it all out and put up the substitute bill, which is very much better, of course, than the Shields bill.

If the Shields bill was before the House now, as it came over here, I should feel it my duty, with such earnestness as I had, to oppose it. It is not written with the public interest in view at all. I do not mean any disrespect to Senators, but I mean that things have crept in which should not be in that bill, and the country is well aroused and well opposed to that bill. I think the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce [Mr. ADAMSON] and his committee are entitled to much credit for framing the substitute bill, which is in very many respects much better, and no doubt will be worked out into a good bill. They have left out, however, one thing that, it seems to me, ought to have been put in in justice to the well-known views of the House. That is, the question of a charge. In both of the bills that have passed the House, reported by the Committee on the Public Lands, we retained a charge, and in the bill that passed last year from the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee the House by an overwhelming vote put in a charge, and I think the House ought to do the same thing again. I rather think the committee ought to have brought it in, but I know how easy it is to criticize, and I know how hard it is to accomplish.

The chairman of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee [Mr. ADAMSON] knows, of course, that the putting in of a charge means trouble for the bill in the Senate. I know that. I know there are some very strong Members of the body at the other end of the Capitol who absolutely say this water power must be given to the water-power people free and without any charge, and they are going to insist on it to the last ditch.

This should not, it seems to me, deter the House in doing its duty.

Let me call the attention of the House to one alternative. As the existing law now stands, the water-power people can not develop at all except by unanimous consent, we might say, or by what is known as the revocable-permit law. In other words, if a water-power developer wants to develop water power to-day he must go and get what is known as a revocable permit to develop water power, which subjects him to every charge and condition the department wants to make, and which subjects him to the absolute and unqualified power to revoke that license at any time that the department desires to do it, without notice and, I may say, without reason. This should not prevail. This keeps down development. That is not right or as it should be.

Now, it is certainly known to the House—I am sure it is known to the chairman of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee—that that law is not bringing the development it ought to bring. For example, there are 35,000,000 potential horsepower in the United States, and only 6,000,000 horsepower have ever been developed by anybody. That leaves 29,000,000 or 30,000,000 horsepower idle and unused, unappropriated, flowing idly to the sea, a total waste. A Republic like ours, alert to every right and every opportunity, should not allow that great waste to go on longer, and that is one thing that prompted our committee, and that prompts me, and that prompts Judge ADAMSON and his committee to try to bring something before the House to remedy that condition.

Mr. STERLING. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FERRIS. I have only a minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ADAMSON. I yield the gentleman one minute more.

Mr. STERLING. How is the making of a charge going to induce capital to invest in the development of water power?

Mr. FERRIS. I must say that I do not look with an eye single to getting development at the expense of all the people. I know Members come here and say, "Unless you give us everything we want there will be no development." I agree to no such argument as that; and if I should agree to the argument advanced, I would not help pass a bill for any such performance as that. Why? Because if we can only get development by submitting to things we ought not to submit to, it means the future torture of the consumer, and that ought not to be permitted here or elsewhere. [Applause.] I want this water-power development—I know it needs development—but I do not want the water-power people with heavy hands to charge me in my home and you in your home $3.50 a month for the light, heat, and power used in our homes when it could with profit be furnished for 50 cents and still let the hydroelectric power people have a just and proper profit.

One thing more: Section 10 of this bill is what is known as the recapture clause. I think the chairman and the committee have in good faith tried to preserve the correct rule of recapture; what I fear is that the language is somewhat involved. Of course, it is very important that we have a correct recapture clause, otherwise this becomes a grant in perpetuity—a thing no man wants to give here, a thing no Senator or Congressman ought to want to do. This is important; it is one of the salient provisions of any proper water-power bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. ADAMSON. I yield to the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. FERRIS. I want to say that the one thing that distinguishes the water-power bill for a term of years and a water-power bill in perpetuity is the power to get it back. There need not be any mincing of words about that. That is the recapture clause; that is section 10 of this bill or section 5 as it was in my public lands power bill. Let me tell you what I think the rule ought to be. I think that this section ought to be modified to the extent that when the term of years ends the term ought to summarily expire, so that the initial movement, the activity, the securing or bringing about of a new lease ought to be on the water-power people instead of on Congress. The initiative necessary to a new lease ought to rest with the water-power people to secure and not with the Government to cut it off.

Mr. ADAMSON. If the gentleman will permit me, that is an amendment that I have agreed with the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] that I will offer.

Mr. FERRIS. That ought to be incorporated, for the reason that Congress is so ponderous, so slow even in doing its whole duty, that at the end of the term the result would be that the water-power people would go on, and because of the difficulty of getting Congress to act it might proceed without limit, and thereby convert what was intended as a lease into a grant in perpetuity. I want them cut off summarily; I want the water-power people at the end of 50 years to come back to Congress and get their leases or permits renewed under the conditions then existing and with the light of 50 years behind us. Of course this is only in the event they should be renewed at all. It would not surprise one if by that time such public utilities as this will be municipally owned and operated without profit. I offer these suggestions in no captious spirit, but in the hope it may help the bill on its way. I am so sure we do not want it to run on forever. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY].

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] has said, and perhaps better said, what I want to say, but it can not be amiss to again emphasize it. There are two big things to be kept in mind in considering this bill: First, the Government ought not to give a grant without having the right to make a charge for it. [Applause.] You do not need to require that it shall make a charge, but it ought to have a right to make a charge; and there is nothing more fallacious in fact than the assumption that the right to make a reasonable charge will prevent the development of the water power of America. [Applause.] You have no right to assume that your governmental agencies are going to do an ignorant or an unwise thing. Presumably by giving them the right to make a charge they will not make such a charge as will prevent development.

Men who discuss this discuss it as if the charge was one of great burden in the way of water-power development, whereas practically in every instance in which the charge is made, even of a considerable amount, that has been almost one of the negligible factors that go into the question of the cost or profit.

The second proposition is this: Look carefully as to what creates a definite grant and what an indefinite one. I insist upon it that the inertia of the Government shall be put in favor of the people and not in favor of the grantee. [Applause.] By that I mean this: If you provide, even under the suggestions made here, for a 50-year lease which shall terminate if Congress so declares, you have not put the inertia of the Government in favor of the people, you have put it against it. You who have served here any length of time know how difficult it is to get Congress to act against the interesst of a special grantee and in favor of the people. Not so much because Congress does not desire to act but because there are hundreds of ways by which people interested can prevent the affirmative action of Congress. So you want to provide that the lease shall actually end at the expiration of 50 years unless the grantee gets from Congress a renewal of the grant. [Applause.] Then you have no doubt about it.

Men talk about the need of a long enough time to get capital to invest. Think of 50 years and what it is. Turn back your mind and review the history of America for 50 years; see the development that has been made in all the mechanical arts; see the inventions that have been made, and tell me who is wise enough now to mortgage the future for 50 years so as to do justice to the people of America. It is an extremely long time. Some States in the Union forbid a grant that runs for anything like 50 years of time. My State has a constitutional provision against any such long-term grant.

Now, if you are going to give a lease for such a long term, be sure that it stops at the end of that time. The thing that to-day may be only fairly profitable in 25 years may be overwhelmingly profitable, and for us to undertake to give the property of all of us to any special group of capitalists for 50 years is a very serious matter and one not to be undertaken lightly and without due consideration of the consequences. Let these two things be made certain: The right to ask a reasonable compensation and the absolute certainty that the grant will end at the stipulated time, and the details of the bill will shape themselves without trouble. These are the crucial matters; around them the fight is, and that is where it will remain between those who want undue favors and the Representatives of the people who are not willing that they shall have them. [Applause.]

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. KENT].

Mr. KENT. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] have touched on the fundamental necessities of this legislation. I hope my remarks will not be merely duplication. It seems to me that it is a piece of insolence for us to bind the future for a period of 50 years with our wisdom or unwisdom. I fear that this bill if enacted may be wrapped around the legs of posterity like so much barbed wire when they try to escape from it. In order to recover the property we may be forced to buy everything dependent for its usefulness upon the power generated. Obviously this may be construed into meaning that we or our descendants may be obliged to buy the wire from the power plants to the trolley system, the trolley cars, then buy the franchises, the doormats, and the advertising in the trolley cars, before they can take over the electrical part of the improvement. Certainly they can enter upon the dam and locks in the navigation part, but if they shall desire to make use of the electrical portion of the improvement they may be compelled to buy everything remotely ancillary thereto. Possibly I am in error in my attempt to construe the meaning of the blind verbiage of section 10, but I am not sure that there is a possibility of any termination whatever.

The only real means of regulating is by a charge or by a tax, and this, as the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] well said, will not be made burdensome, will not be so placed as to prevent improvement. How absurd it is to bring this up when we remember the history of the Connecticut River dam legislation, when people with millions of dollars were willing to employ them under more drastic terms than anything we have been considering.

The Connecticut River bill was stopped in the Senate because it would be a "bad precedent." This electrical power is going to be of vastly more importance than we can at this time conceive. It is recognized now that the oil supply, with the present consumption of gasoline, will be exhausted before a great many years, and we will have to look to our coal, and coal is not inexhaustible, but our water power, our electrical power, is inexhaustible. It would be used now if its use were not prevented by a greedy lobbying aggregation seeking unfair advantage and promotion rather than development. We can not afford to throw away this heritage; and if we are foolish enough to grant franchises so blindly worded that they might be so construed as to force the Government, before it can either put another grantee in or take upon itself the function of the production of electricity—which I believe it will some day do—to purchase everything remotely ancillary we shall have granted a franchise in perpetuity. [Applause.]

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, of course everyone understands that water power is essentially a monopoly. A water power exists, we will say, which when developed produces a lot of power at a very low rate of cost in some cases. That power when used is used in competition with power produced from the consumption of coal, where the cost of production is greater than the cost of production through the use of the water power. In other words, here is a water power—and, of course, this is not the case everywhere—which when developed may furnish power for light, for heat, for manufacturing purposes in a certain locality; but the power developed from the water is not sufficient to furnish all the power that can be or is used in that locality. It would not be fair under those circumstances to have the users of the water power, private interests, obtain their power more cheaply than those who buy the power produced by coal, because that would be exercising a species of favoritism for the benefit of one person as against another. Of course, where the power is all used by a municipality for municipal purposes, it is a different proposition; and we come then to the question, What will we do where we authorize the development of a water power—a monopoly—limited only by the amount of power which it can produce? What will we do in those circumstances, so far as we are concerned? I think that invariably we should reserve a right to make a charge for the use of the power. To give the benefit of this reduced cost of production to the consumer where the consumer is in competition with consumers of other power is merely to give some one a favored advantage. The water power belongs to us all, and if the cost of production of the water power is much less than the cost of production of coal power, the Government in some way should absorb the difference. These powers ought to be developed. Everyone will agree to that.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. ADAMSON. The House is insisting, and no doubt always will insist, on reserving the power to pass on each particular grant. Would it not be perfectly practicable and desirable to reserve that proposition and allow the Congress in each case to determine whether a charge, and what sort of charge, ought to be imposed in a particular case?

Mr. MANN. I do not think that Congress can determine this question from a practical viewpoint, though I do believe the House should reserve the power. I think the House should reserve the power so that we must pass a special bill based upon a general act, as is the case with bridges and with dams at the present time; but so many complications arise that, after all, it must be worked out in the main by an administrative officer.

I do not think we should give to John Jones for 50 years the perpetual right to develop a great power where he will get a great exorbitant profit out of it. Nor do I believe that we should give to John Jones the right to develop a great power where his customers will get the benefit over and above the ordinary benefit which they may derive from manufacturing through the use of any power. This bill is of enormous potential value. It is far wiser, in my judgment, to be slow about the legislation than it is to give away the power by hasty legislation. When this power is once developed it is developed probably for all time. Most of the powers in the country probably are not yet ripe for development. Of course on the one side we want to conserve the rights of the public and on the other side we want to encourage people who have money to invest their money to develop the power. I do not know whether we can do it by legislation now or not, but, in my judgment, we should clearly reserve to the Secretary of War or to other administrative officers the right and the power under certain conditions at least to give to the public generally the special benefit that comes from the development of cheap power, rather than to give it to a few who are in competition with others. [Applause.]

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia has 13 minutes remaining.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, suggestions have been made by two gentlemen on this floor which I do not understand. Whether they understand them themselves or not I do not know. I take it for granted that they do not mean anything by them, and especially that they do not mean what the remarks seem to imply, therefore I shall not reply to them.

If any gentleman here or elsewhere were to make the suggestions which those remarks seem to imply, it would be such a gratuity and so false a gratuity that I would make proper reply. You will observe that no gentleman who has been here long—none of the able and distinguished gentlemen who have been here with me for the past 20 years—have made any such suggestions or insinuations, and I do not believe those gentlemen who made the remarks mean any such thing.

I have seen in the papers from some irresponsible source, I presume some newspaper novice—I know none of these older newspaper men around here would be guilty of that, because they are all nice men and smart fellows, and they all have good sense and are gentlemen—that this bill would be slipped through the House in an easy way without much fuss, and in conference the conferees' report would be made and rammed down the throats of Congress. That is idiotic, too idiotic to be malicious, and it is not necessary to reply to it. I never imagined that any Member of this House could be guilty of such.

Gentlemen here know that I have never been to a conference with the Senate without coming back with a satisfactory report, and gentlemen know when we go to conference we come back with the will of the House so nearly accomplished that we are satisfied, and we never bring back anything contrary to the will of the House; and if we were foolish enough to do it, we would meet with disaster in the House. So there is no use of anybody talking such nonsense.

In the outset of my remarks I stated plainly that we desired to pass the best bill we could in this House, one that if adopted by the Senate would build dams. I believe the substitute reported by this committee will result in building dams; not only result in building dams, but it provides absolutely for the protection of the Government and of the people, and it also provides for the Government receiving all consideration that can be desired or can be necessary. The Government and the public are protected, and at the same time it offers terms liberal enough to induce the employment of capital. If we get into conference, we will try to find out if a workable bill can be agreed upon. If it can, we want to adopt it; if it can not be, the legislation had better die, because legislation that will not result in progress is utterly worthless and worse than worthless. It would be an obstacle to further legislation which would mean progress.

The thing most talked about in the House is a thing to which the Senate is also unalterably opposed, and that is a tax. Now, Mr. Chairman, it is easy for us to stand here and talk about what we will put on the other fellow if the other fellow will stand there and take it.

The other fellow has the money. We do not want any competition between the public land water powers and navigable river water powers. We do not want any contest between the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and the committee charged with the jurisdiction over public lands. We have recognized the interests of the Government to sell public lands and take a royalty on the water power if it wants to, because the Government owns the land, and we also recognize that if the Government ever intends to improve its navigable waters we ought to recognize that a lock and dam costing a million dollars is some consideration for our consent. We have also provided amply for the termination and control of the termination period, so there can be absolutely no trouble about that. Now, why should we impose a tax? I will not argue the constitutionality of it; it is not necessary; and I will treat it as a matter of policy entirely. Suppose that the Government needed the tax. The Ways and Means Committee, which is now hard at work finding sources of revenue for the demands of the Government, can levy a uniform excise tax in accordance with the Constitution on all powers; not a new power alone, but the old powers as well as the new powers. They could levy on undeveloped water sites if they wanted to; on steam power as well as water power. It is the business of that committee, if the Federal Government wants revenue, to levy all uniform excise taxes. Admitting that as a condition to the grant of the consent we can make a charge, the trouble that I see in it is not in the details that gentlemen have gone over here at all, but the trouble I see in it is that other people have the money and we want them to build dams and locks for our benefit.

They say they will not do it unless they know what they have to meet, what the risks and chances are, what the certainty or uncertainty is. If you are going to levy a tax as a condition for your consent, you ought to fix what it is to be at the time you let the capitalist in. You ought to levy with definiteness and certainty. Otherwise you can not trade. It is not a question of liberality or generosity to the investor; it is a question of securing the investor's consent as well as the Government's consent, for it takes two to make a trade. Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, the Government does not own the property in all of these cases as it does on the public domain. I have never even insisted on a royalty in the case of public lands. I have let the Public Lands Committee have its own way. It was the business of that committee and I do not want to come into competition with it, and the conditions are certainly different. The Government in one case is the owner as well as the sovereign. In the other case it is the sovereign and wants to develop its navigable water without having to take the money out of the Treasury. If it can induce private capital under liberal conditions to build these locks and dams and at the same time furnish manufactures, I think the Government is making a good trade. Now, if we had pursued that policy we would not have had to resort to the expense in the military bill the other day of appropriating $20,000,000 for a cyanimid plant.

Not a single gentleman here has mentioned anything but the little, insignificant business of furnishing current for lighting, running street cars, and so forth. Mr. Chairman, it takes very little current for that. What I have in mind is using electricity with which to manufacture everything in the world that our people need. Germany's strength to-day is because she is the great manufacturer of cyanimid from the air. What I have in mind is cheaper electricity, not to compete with the little lighting and power plants, the running of street cars and the lighting of cities, but to put up great manufacturing enterprises that will supply the Government and supply the people. Unless we can provide terms of a bill that will induce capital, the waters will waste forever. We ought to use them to build up the country and advance the prosperity and happiness of our people.

Mr. Chairman, I ask that the bill be read.

The CHAIRMAN. All time having expired, the Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

Mr. ADAMSON. Before the Clerk reads, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to incorporate as a part of my remarks some parallel columns showing the difference between the three bills pending.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I should like to suggest to the gentleman that he get unanimous consent that when this bill passes to have it printed all in one type, and to strike out these brackets and parentheses and various things of that kind.

Mr. ADAMSON. I want to commend the gentleman for making the suggestion, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed as stated, without these parentheses and brackets.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters," approved June 23, 1910, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SECTION 1. That when consent or authority has been or may hereafter be granted by Congress, either directly or indirectly, through any duly authorized official or officials of the United States, to any persons to construct and maintain a dam for water power or other purpose across or in any of the navigable waters of the United States, such dam shall not be built or commenced until the plans and specifications for such dam and all accessory works, together with such drawings of the proposed construction and such map of the proposed location as may be required for a full understanding of the subject, have been submitted to the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers for their approval, nor until they shall have approved such plans and specifications and the location of such dam and accessory works; and after such approval it shall not be lawful to deviate from such plans or specifications either before or after completion of the structure unless the modification of such plans or specifications has previously been submitted to and received the approval of the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers. Such plans, specifications, and drawings shall be submitted within two years after the date of approval of the act authorizing the construction.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting after the word "dam," in line 20, page 22, "or diversion structure," and by inserting after the word "across," in line 20, page 22, the word "along."

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to that amendment. It is in line with the purpose of the bill.

Mr. MANN. What is the last part of the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the last part of the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 20, page 22, after the word "across," insert the word "along."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That as a part of such approval such conditions and stipulations may be imposed as the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers may deem necessary to protect the present and future interests of the United States, which may include the condition that the persons constructing or maintaining such dam shall construct, maintain, and operate in connection therewith, without expense to the United States, a lock or locks, booms, sluices, or any other structure or structures which the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers or Congress may deem necessary in the interests of navigation, in accordance with such plans as they may approve; and also that the persons owning such dam shall convey to the United States, free of cost, title to such land as may be required for such constructions and approaches and shall grant to the United States free water power or power generated from water power for building and operating such constructions; and in such original approval, at the discretion of the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers, may be required to maintain and operate such lock without expense to the United States. The Secretary of War shall provide, as a condition of such approval, for the diligent, orderly, and reasonable development and continuous operation of the water power, subject to market conditions, and may provide that the grantee shall at no time contract for the delivery to any one consumer of electrical energy in excess of 50 per cent of the total output, except upon the written consent of the Secretary of War.

Mr. ESCH and Mr. SHERLEY rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] is recognized.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "Congress," in line 22, on page 23, insert the words "at any time."

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, this harmonizes the section with the section as contained in the act of 1906, and with the act of 1910 and with the act of 1914. In all of those measures we retain the right to require the installation of a lock at any time, whether at the beginning when the original grant is offered or at any time during the period of the grant. It is believed we should retain that power. There are considerations why the Government should have the right at any time after the original grant of requiring the installation of a lock in a dam across a navigable water in the interest of navigation. It will not be so much of a disadvantage to the grantee as some may allege, for these reasons. When it comes to fixing the rate to be charged under this bill the cost of the locks has to be considered by the commission. In other words, the State commission, if under the jurisdiction of the State commission or the Secretary of War, would have the right in fixing the rates to be charged by any power company, to include in the matter of valuation the cost of locks. That being true the grantee would be receiving a return for the expenditure made in building these locks.

Another consideration is that when the 50-year limitation has expired and the recapture is to take place by Government or by some third party this bill provides that the cost of the locks shall be allowed the grantee, so that in this instance and in the fixing of rates no burden is placed upon the grantee. He gets back every dollar that the lock has cost him, and he is not charged up with depreciation under the terms of the recapture clause. Now, in view of the fact that he is being allowed a benefit in the rate that is being charged to the consumer by reason of the cost of the lock and by reason of the fact that he gets back what he puts in in the construction of the lock at the end of the 50-year period, we believe it is but reasonable to permit the Government to ask that the locks shall be put in at any time during the period of the grant.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, the only trouble about that is that it introduces the element of uncertainty.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. MANN. I ask that the gentleman may have more time.

Mr. ADAMSON. If the gentleman desires more time, I hope he will proceed. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I thought he had finished.

Mr. MANN. I ask that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin think it will be practicable for anyone proposing to build a dam to finance his project if the person might be required to put in locks and dams in the future costing a very large sum of money? Would not whoever was to finance the enterprise want to know pretty definitely what the cost of the plant would be before he advanced any money?

Mr. ESCH. That is practically the only objection which can be raised to the amendment I have offered. But I will ask the gentleman a question in return: Does the gentleman believe that the insertion of those words in the act which he drafted in 1906 and again in 1910 deterred investors from making the expenditure?

Mr. MANN. Well, I do not know what deterred them. They claim that they were deterred, but I never fully agreed with them. I did not recall that it was in the act of 1906.

Mr. ESCH. Yes; it was.

Mr. MANN. If they make the condition at the time by requiring the putting in of locks and dams in the future, they would know what it would cost. I will ask the gentleman whether he thinks a man starting to build a plant now, which may cost half a million dollars, can finance it, in the gentleman's opinion, if he may be required in the future to put in a million dollars from which he would derive no additional power?

Mr. ESCH. I do not believe the gentleman's figures are accurate; that is, they are not proportionate; because I can not conceive that a lock put into a dam would cost as much as or even more than the dam itself. That certainly was not the proportion in the construction of the lock at the Keokuk Dam, or in some other dams of which I have a little knowledge.

Mr. MANN. Well, my proportions may be erroneous; probably they are.

Mr. ESCH. I admit that the objection to the amendment is that it does not give the investor the amount of ultimate charge that will be made against him. But for the reasons that I have stated, that every dollar will come back and he is getting an allowance on that cost reflected in the rates that will be allowed. The investor will be getting a return on the added investment rendered necessary by the construction of the locks.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I am hardly in a position to say that I rise in opposition to the amendment; I rise rather for the purpose of getting a little more light on that subject.

Something has prevented those whom we would naturally expect to enter upon the enterprise of developing hydroelectric power from doing so, and it is very desirable that we enact such legislation as will induce them to develop that power throughout the country.

Now, this bill will apply not only to large streams like the Mississippi River, where the dam crossing that river at Keokuk enables the company to produce a tremendous horsepower, and where the cost of the lock would be relative small, but at very many places in this country where it will be possible to develop perhaps 10,000 horsepower, instead of 100,000 or 200,000, as is possible in some places. Now it is entirely probable that this condition will exist—that it will cost a great deal more to build the lock than the plant will be worth, than the power that is to be developed on the small stream will be worth. If a company is willing to go in and construct the dam and develop that power, knowing just what the dam will cost, and knowing what the limitations of the dam will be, so far as the production of this hydroelectric power is concerned, they might be induced to go in, and it might be entirely improbable, maybe, at the time, that a lock would be required.

But if this power to force them to spend a great deal more money than they would be willing to spend exists, it occurs to me not only would it be a difficult matter for the company to finance that proposition, but it would be adding an unnecessary obstacle in the way, and it would be discouraging to enterprising people who otherwise might be willing to go in and develop the small water powers throughout the country.

All who wish to develop power will have to come back to Congress in any event. If it is a dam on a large stream, where the hydroelectric power is considerable, Congress can put in this condition, that "at any time we may call upon you to put a lock in here, and you must do it." But to make it general it must then apply also in all the smaller streams of the country, where the possibilities of hydroelectric power are not great, but may be desirable in the particular community.

If this provision is incorporated in the bill, I fear it may deter, and in fact prohibit, the development of hydroelectric power in many of the smaller streams of the country. I know the gentleman from Wisconsin has studied this question, and I may say that I have a very high regard for his opinion; and I will ask him, weighing all these things in his consideration, Would it not be wise for us to omit this condition in the general law, seeing that we can always incorporate it where the development is to be considerable enough to justify even the prospective expense of building a lock at some future time?

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Certainly.

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not understand exactly what the gentleman means when he says we can always require it.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. They must always come back to Congress under the terms of this bill. If a man wants to put a dam on any of these streams he must come back here for authority. With the facts in a particular case before us, as in the case of Keokuk or Long Sault, in the St. Lawrence, or a stream of that sort, where the production of hydroelectric power would reach two or three hundred thousand horsepower or half a million horsepower, and the cost of the lock would be relatively small, we could then put that condition in without fear of working a hardship or deterring the company from developing the power. But if it is a small stream, where the probabilities are that there will be only perhaps 8,000 or 10,000 horsepower developed, it may be a wide stream——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ANDERSON. I ask that the gentleman have five minutes more.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I suggest to the gentleman that he take five minutes in his own time.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do so for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Mississippi a question. I do not know that I caught his viewpoint accurately. What I want to get at is this: Does the gentleman from Mississippi think that the Government, or those acting for the Government, ought at the time of the approval of the plans and specifications to be required to anticipate the changed conditions which may arise upon the river across which the dam is to be constructed? If this amendment is not adopted, the Secretary of War must anticipate every possible change in the condition of the stream and in the conditions of navigation and of the commerce upon the stream, so that he can in the original approval require all the locks and all the accessories that may be necessary in the next 50 years. It seems to me that the only thing this amendment does is to reserve to the Secretary of War or to the Government the right in the future to require all that the future conditions may make necessary. I do not think we ought to preclude ourselves from meeting conditions which may arise 30, 40, or 50 years hence, and the failure to adopt this amendment would put us in that position.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. In answer to the gentleman's inquiry I will say that to put this in the law will take from the executive authority any discretion whatever——

Mr. ANDERSON. Oh, no; not at all.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes, I understand that if this is written into the law it will apply then in every instance.

Mr. ANDERSON. It will become simply a condition to the approval.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I mean the possibility will apply.

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. And that the only practicable thing, then, for the man who intends to organize the company or to develop the power will be to consider that that is going to be done; and the authority which regulates the rates will necessarily have to consider that. Now if we leave this out, at any time in the future that Congress wanted to build a lock and dam in one of these streams, of course it could do it at the expense of the Government. That will be the only way we can do it now. Suppose it became desirable to improve this stream for navigation, and nobody had gone in there to develop any hydroelectric power and put in any dam. We would then have to put in the locks and dams——

Mr. ANDERSON. But we are not dealing with that condition now.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] have stated the unanswerable objection to this amendment. It is very easy to talk as if we had arbitrary authority to dictate what men shall do with their money, but unfortunately that does not work. A man under the theory of this bill comes and presents his plans and specifications, and says to the Secretary of War, "I am willing to save you the expense of building this dam here for navigation if you will approve my plans." The Secretary of War says, "Well, I will approve this, with the understanding that I can add anything to it that I want to in the future and modify it as I please, requiring you to do something else without consulting you." No man with money will invest under those circumstances. That is the trouble.

Mr. ANDERSON. Does the gentleman think that the Secretary of War would, under any ordinary circumstances, require any unreasonable thing from the grantee? If so, why repose any discretion whatever in the Secretary of War?

Mr. ADAMSON. There will be mortal men on both sides. We ought to be able to keep a smart man in the office of the Secretary of War. We usually have done so. He has smart advisers. They have, through the engineering corps, a system of understanding these rivers. The rivers have been running ever since Adam, and I suppose they will run on until the crack of doom, and these people understand the contour of the ground and the courses of the rivers and all about them. Or they are required under this bill, at the expense of the grantee, to make an additional survey, if necessary, to determine just what the Government is going to need, and then you want to get the two minds together. If our Secretary of War is as smart as the other fellow, certainly he will require what the Government needs. The trouble is, when you leave it open to future additional requirements you introduce an element of uncertainty that freightens off the investor, and we will not get any development. I am perfectly satisfied to risk the Secretary of War to make a good trade if he makes any at all, and I do not think this ought to be amended.

Mr. CANNON. I move to strike out the last word. I have listened with much interest to what has been stated in general debate and under the five-minute rule. I am not an expert. I am required to vote upon it, and I must catch it on the fly.

Much has been said in papers and magazines. It is a habit with some people. I think maybe there are people in the United States who abound in magazines and in speeches—some of them doctrinaire—who, if you should set them to build a hen's nest, could not do it, but they get free advertising, and sometimes, I think, they get pay for their advertising. Now, really, I would like information.

As I understand it, the most of this water power that is to be developed will come under the jurisdiction of the States, but there is a portion of it which comes under the United States, and they stagger me when they say, according to which man is talking, that there are 27,000,000 or 30,000,000 or 40,000,000 horsepower that can be developed from the water. Now, I always supposed that the cost of gas and of electricity and of everything else depends upon whether you are doing a wholesale or a retail business. For instance, in a place like Louisville, or a larger city like Chicago or New York, the profit comes from the magnitude of the business; whereas, take a little place of 5,000 people or 50,000 people, there you must have a much higher price for your product before you can afford to produce it. So, considering that the States have the most of this water power, and that the Government has, say, one-third of it or a quarter of it, I know it has been thoroughly established that the States can regulate the price of public utilities, and I apprehend that the Congress could create a public-utility commission that would have power to regulate that which Congress controls. If there is any doubt of that, I should like to be advised of it.

Mr. ADAMSON. If the gentleman will permit, I will say that both are amply provided for in this bill.

Mr. CANNON. I do not care anything about the charge that the Government makes for the privilege of improving water power. Gentlemen say the Government does not want revenue for this purpose. I do not suppose that it does. In my judgment, it ought not to have revenue from the production of power from water. You will never get much of it anyway, I apprehend; but if it is to get revenue, would it be good policy to get it from the production of these multiplied millions of horsepower from water? The gentleman said that it has been running since Adam. Oh, a long time back of Adam, I reckon, it was just running to waste. I know that it has been talked about for 20 years how much power has run to waste and how much power is running to waste now. How much longer are we going to quarrel about it. It seems to me, if you take into consideration the population to be served, the necessity of utilizing the power—and it can not be utilized unless it is created by the expenditure—then, if you are going to be practical about it, if you are going to reach everybody, if you are going to reach the hundred million of people, the only practical way is to leave it to the States and to the National Government, through the creation of public-utilities commissions, to settle it after a proper plan of investigation. When the public-utilities commission fixes the rate, if it is confiscatory, the owner could go to the coordinate branch of the Government—the courts. That is the way it looks to me; and if it is not sound, I would like to be corrected. [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, it occurs to me that if the amendment is adopted it will cause the public to pay for a contingency that may never happen. It may be that the Government may never require one of these locks to be built, and that being the case it is my view that since it reserves the right to require the lessee to build the lock, that the lessee would have a right when it comes to fixing his charges to take into consideration that contingency and liability.

Mr. ADAMSON. Will the gentleman yield for me to make a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 10 minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. The amendment or the section?

Mr. ADAMSON. The amendment.

Mr. MANN. What was the gentleman's request?

Mr. ADAMSON. That all debate on this amendment close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that all debate on the pending amendment close in 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, since we create this contingent liability we will evidently permit the investor to take that into consideration in fixing his charges for electricity. Therefore, it occurs to me it would be an unwise thing for us to do. We have got to trust to our Secretary of War under this plan. He is as just, honest, and reliable as any man that I know of. He will determine whether or not a lock is required in the first instance, and if he does not determine it requires one, it does not seem wise, for the reasons stated, to compel the lessee to build it after he has completed his dam and other structures.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, if the country makes the same development in the next 50 years that it has made in the last 50 years, no one present can tell what the conditions then will be, or even approximate them. Now, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin is to meet the contingencies that might arise under the great development of this country, which may be proportionately greater than it has been in the last half century. All gentlemen agree that the water power of this country is a very valuable property, and yet some gentlemen declare that for this the most valuable property there is in the country, even if a nominal charge is made for its use, capital will not invest in it. If that theory advanced is true, it is an exception to all rules in the business world. If it is a valuable property, and will make not only reasonable but great returns on the investment, the charge that the Government will make for its use will not be considered prohibitive by the investors. This proposition is self-evident, and no one will undertake its refutation with a hope of success. Some gentlemen talk as if we were running a Government bazaar here and have put in it a give-away counter, and on that counter placed the best property that the Government has left, the best bargain, and are begging somebody to become a gift taker and be presented with the most valuable property the Government has left. No property has ever been withheld from development because of the charge that the Government may make for its use. Such a charge emanates from some fertile imagination and is not based on the facts. The reason the property has not been developed is because there was not a sufficient demand for the sale of the power or demand for the consumption of it that would pay capital to go into it. When this demand is created the development of it will follow. The fact that the Government may make a charge for this property and receive revenue into the Treasury will add nothing to the cost to the consumer, because the price of this property will not be regulated on that basis at all.

Water power can be produced for about one-quarter of the cost, under reasonable conditions, that other power can be produced. The cost of production is less than it is in any other production of power. If it takes $60 per year to produce 1 horsepower with coal or other fuel, the same unit of power produced by water will cost less than $20, and yet no man on this floor believes for a single minute power produced by water will be sold for one-third of what other power is sold for.

The producers of it will not undersell the producers of power by other means on the basis of the cost of production, but only on a basis of what they can get for it on the market and capture the business. Their effort will be to earn as large profits as possible unless proper regulatory restraints are provided for in this measure. The truth of the whole business is, they will undersell the producers of more costly power just enough to capture the business and thus enhance their own profits as largely as possible. This is a reliable trait of human nature which always manifests itself in all business ventures.

Now, if water power is so profitable—and all concede it is—the Government, then, should receive a fair revenue for it, and the fact that such a remuneration is to be charged will not scare capital from investing in it or deter men from developing these great properties. Just as soon as sufficient consumption can be secured capital will seek the investment, and not before. The Government charge is of no consequence and will not prevent development, as some gentlemen seem to think. If the great development is to be made in this country for the next 50 years in keeping with the last 50 years, then conditions will be such that these properties will be developed, their product will command attractive prices, they will yield great profits to those who control them, and they will perform important functions in the manufacture and commerce of the country. Water-power people recognize this fact and are trying to drive the best bargain they can in securing control of them. The question here is, Shall we ignore the public and let them do it? I hope not. In the settlement of this question we are not to be controlled by present conditions alone, but must attempt to view them as they will present themselves every year for the next 50 years, the term of the grants proposed by this bill.

On this question we are not only legislating for the people of our generation but for posterity as well. Shall we here and now enact a measure which will profit the people of the present but little and in so doing forfeit rights of great value to the people of this country 50 years hence? If so, we will do them great injury. If a nominal charge now imposed will deter capital from investing in the enterprise, then it must be evident these properties are not, as all suppose, profit earners, because profits are always alluring to capital. If they are, as all concede, great profit earners, then capital is only holding off for the time being its investment in order to drive a better bargain, and the sooner the policy is clearly settled and capital given to understand what the policy is the sooner capital will invest and the development of the properties proceed.

These are our best-known natural resources, and we are charged with their conservation for the benefit of those who shall follow our generation. In many instances in the past our people have been most improvident with our natural resources and have wasted much of great value under the pressure of immediate exigencies; but let us not be swerved by this argument now. It has been made already, but I hope it has not been effective.

It will not do to say if we provide in this measure for a reasonable charge for these properties no one will lease and develop them. This policy has already been adopted by the Forest Service in our public domain, and the result has been most gratifying. I call the attention of the House to a letter written me to-day by that department, as follows:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE FOREST SERVICE,
Washington, July 5, 1916.

WATER POWER REPORTS.

Hon. W. A. CULLOP,
House of Representatives,

DEAR SIR: In response to the request made by you over the telephone to Mr. Norcross, I am furnishing herewith figures showing the receipts for the fiscal years 1912 to 1915, inclusive, for permits covering water-power plants and transmission lines:

District.	1915	1914	1913	1912
1	$8,772.63	$2,970.00	$2,062.74	$3,275.45
2	1,180.72	2,010.63	1,228.62	1,882.68
3	4,618.37	2,574.95	2,591.85	2,546.86
4	607.55	524.80	609.48	1,169.29
5	63,748.57	31,542.86	39,537.00	34,265.07
6	10,022.60	7,443.80	5,202.39	7,423.63
7		96.70
	88,950.44	47,163.74	51,235.08	50,562.98

Very truly, yours,

A. F. POTTER, Acting Forester.

If in a section of the country where the demand for the product of such plants is necessarily small, where the population is sparse, and where factories are limited in number and size, they earn revenues for the Government as above shown, then what would they do where population is great, industries numerous and large, and the demand for consumption almost unlimited? Unquestionably the revenues derived would be considerable, and the income would largely swell the receipts of the Public Treasury. We can not afford to squander this valuable source of revenue or neglect the opportunity to conserve it to the public advantage. But if we adopt this measure without making provision for such charges we will be giving away these valuable properties, placing this right beyond the power to recall it, and do injury not only to the present but future generations. It would be almost a calamity if it should be done.

The amendment under consideration is a step in the right direction, considering the great possibilities of these properties, the part necessarily they shall perform in our industrial, economical, and commercial affairs during the lifetime of the grants which will be made under this law if enacted. It safeguards the rights of the people in a most important feature. It can do, if adopted, no harm and may be the occasion of producing very beneficial results. I shall cheerfully vote for it and any other amendment which may be offered in the interests of the public. Our duty is to take care of the rights of the public in this matter, in order that our natural resources may prove a blessing to the people and the public may derive the fullest measure of benefits possible from them. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ADAMSON) there were—ayes 50, noes 31.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed Mr. ADAMSON and Mr. ESCH to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 54, noes 50.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, there is another amendment which I desire to offer which is made necessary by the adoption of that, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, in line 4, on page 24, by striking out the words "in such original approval."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 24, amend by adding at the end of section 2, in line 14, the following:

"The Secretary of War may also provide as a condition of such approval for the payment to the United States of reasonable annual charges for the benefits that accrue to the grantee by reason of the consent or authority for the erection of such dam or dams, and at the end of 20 years, and every 10 years thereafter, the Secretary of War may readjust the annual charges as may then be just and reasonable."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ADAMSON) there were—ayes 58, noes 37.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, in the hope of finding some one else standing around here I will ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed Mr. ADAMSON and Mr. SHERLEY to act as tellers.

The committee again divided.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair wishes to be recorded in the affirmative.

The tellers reported—ayes 65, noes 47.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, in order to make the language of the bill harmonious with the amendment already adopted, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk be authorized to insert after the word "dam," wherever it occurs in the bill, the words "or diversion structure."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that wherever the word "dam" occurs in the bill, it shall be immediately followed by the insertion of the words "or diversion structure."

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, that would save offering a number of amendments, and it will make the bill harmonize.

Mr. ADAMSON. Of course the gentleman means wherever they are applicable. There may be some cases where they would not make good sense.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Wherever applicable.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I am heartily in favor of legislation that will encourage the development of water power, believing it to be one of the most important steps that we can take in conserving the resources of the country, and at the same time it will greatly facilitate and promote the development of our Western and Southern States. Since my services in this House there has, under a special act of Congress, been constructed on White River in the district that I represent a dam that cost more than a million dollars. This large investment has not only added to the taxable wealth and the population of that county and section, but it has stimulated progress along every line and promoted the welfare of the entire public. The power developed by this plant is now utilized for lighting in a number of towns and cities of my district and is furnishing the power to run street cars in some of the chief cities of the districts so well represented in this House by Mr. HAMLIN and Mr. DECKER.

The benefit of this plant to that county has been so great, and so generally recognized and appreciated, that all of my constituents desire to see a number of other possible sites utilized and operated in the near future.

I do not claim to be an expert upon this question, and am not a member of the committee that has considered this bill, but one of my constituents, Gen. W. H. Standish, is deeply interested in this proposed legislation and is an expert upon the water-power question. At his request I offer this amendment in good faith, believing that it is very important and will greatly improve the bill.

The bill as it passed the Senate had this provision included in it, but it has been omitted by the House committee, and I think it should be replaced.

This amendment if adopted will permit the construction of tunnels as well as dams for water-power purposes where conditions render them more advisable, as is often the case in mountainous countries, such as in the Ozark Mountains, a large part of which are in the district from which I come.

This amendment can not possibly hurt this bill, but, in my opinion, will greatly strengthen it, and I hope will be adopted.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for an inquiry?

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Certainly.

Mr. BENNET. Does this include the merry-go-rounds and all that sort of thing at Coney Island and at Fort George? They are diversion structures?

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. They are not on navigable rivers.

Mr. BENNET. Yes; the one at Fort George is.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 24, line 11, strike out the word "may" and insert in lieu thereof the word "shall."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not contest that amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman to explain the purpose of it.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, the language in the final sentence of this section purports to be the language of the Ferris bill, which passed during this session of Congress, and it is, with the exception of the word "may" in line 11. That word should be "shall" to conform with the language of the Ferris bill.

Mr. ADAMSON. I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Chairman, I think the change of the word "may" to the word "shall" may prove very unwise in that connection. It may prevent the execution of very useful and necessary things. It is not inconceivable that at some time the United States Government itself, or some municipality or State, might be the entire participator in the total product of one of these enterprises.

Mr. ANDERSON. May I point out to the gentleman the fact that in a situation of that kind all that would be required would be the consent of the Secretary of War. This simply provides that no contract shall be made for more than 50 per cent except upon the consent of the Secretary of War, so that the situation to which the gentleman refers could not arise.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Chairman, with that explanation, I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ANDERSON) there were—ayes 55, noes 5.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Minesota. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Following the amendment offered by Mr. SHERLEY insert the following: "Provided, That in permits to a State or Territory, or a municipality, political subdivision, public-service agency, or district of a State or Territory, no such payment shall be required."

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not think that amendment ought to be made. In the first place, it uses the word "permit," which is foreign to the scheme of this bill entirely, and, in the second place, the greatest danger we have to guard against in this legislation is the possibility of some of these municipalities or so-called public institutions taking on approval, using all they need, and letting some other party have the rest of it. That is the big danger in legislation of this sort, and I hope the amendment will be defeated. It should be "solely for municipal purposes."

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a word in behalf of the amendment. I do not think the word "permit" makes any material difference. The question is whether it is wise or not to exempt municipalities or States and institutions that are run for the benefit of the public and not for private profit from the paying of this charge that is to be imposed upon them by the language of this bill. I do not think the United States Government desires to tax a State or a Territory or a municipality for the use of power for public purposes.

I think the only time and place that a charge should be made is when this power is used for a private purpose where the profits are large and where they can not be reached by the distribution of these profits to the public in the way of reduced cost of service. Now, that is the thought. Under the Sherley amendment, as I understand it, the State or municipality or Territory would be taxed in case of getting control of one of these water powers for public purposes, and without having any intention of running them for private profit.

Mr. ADAMSON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. I will.

Mr. ADAMSON. Does not the gentleman think the Secretary of War can be trusted to exercise his discretion under the words of this bill in such a case as that?

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. I wish to say in reply to that that we only should invest the Secretary of War or any other officer with only such discretion as seems to be absolutely necessary.

Mr. ADAMSON. He is vested by the Sherley amendment with the power.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. There are only few cases where this charge will apply. Here is a case where it never ought to apply, and we ought to give the Secretary of War no discretion in a case of that kind.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will not prevail for two reasons. One is that gentlemen fail to remember that if it is necessary to take care of any special case that might arise, discretion is left with the Secretary of War. The other, I think, is because the amendment indicates a misconception as to whose property we are dealing with. We are dealing with something that belongs to the Federal Government, and we are making a condition of our grant that a tax may be required. Now the fact that some small political subdivision may be the user is no reason why the whole United States should be deprived of a proper return, if it be proper to have a return, from what has been granted. That is a misconception that we usually find voiced by some western gentlemen who seem to think that the public domain belongs to the State in which it is found. The gentleman's amendment proceeds on the assumption that if a municipality or a State agency happens to be the user of the power produced under the grant it should get it free. We are legislating here not for such smaller sovereignty, but for the protection of the United States, and the determination of whether a charge should or should not be made will be dependent upon whether the grant is such as to warrant the charge being made rather than upon who is the grantee.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. I will.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Is it the gentleman's intention that the charge should be made in all cases?

Mr. SHERLEY. Why, no, not necessarily, because the whole matter depends upon the value of the grant and the circumstances that surround it. Certain water powers might not be developed with a tax being levied——

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Let us understand each other. Does the gentleman mean that a water power that is worth $10,000,000 and another water power is worth only $500,000, that the one which is worth $10,000,000 should bear a charge and the one of the $500,000 should not bear any charge?

Mr. SHERLEY. Not necessarily; but what I do mean to say is this: Every charge ought to bear a relationship to the value of the grant, and with a given set of facts it would take only ordinary intelligence on the part of a Secretary of War——

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. What set of facts would that apply to, so as to have no misunderstanding?

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, I do not care to file a bill of particulars, but this set of facts in a broad way: A given power is to be developed; first, the cost of the developing of that power, then the cost of producing power by other methods in the market to be served by that power; all of the facts that go to the determination legitimately of the value of the grant which you are giving.

Mr. NORTON. Would the gentleman favor assessing taxes against a municipality that was using all the power for public purposes?

Mr. SHERLEY. I might. I do not see any reason why, if a water power at the falls of the Ohio was developed through a grant by the Government and the city of Louisville was the user of the power, it should go free any more than a private concern. The Government of the United States represents all the people and not simply a particular locality that happens to be the beneficiary of a grant.

Mr. NORTON. I understand the gentleman's position.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I would like some information as to the meaning of part of this section. On page 23, after the semicolon, in line 24, the section provides:

> And also that the persons owning such dam shall convey to the United States, free of cost, title to such land as may be required for such constructions and approaches—

And so forth.

I do not see why that should be done. These structures are to be put up by the persons or the company owning or operating the dam, and the land upon which the dam will be built—and upon which other structures will stand—will belong to these private parties. This section provides that the private company shall operate these extra structures, the lock, and so on, at their own expense. Why should the title be passed to and vested in the Government of the United States?

Mr. ADAMSON. We have provided that the Secretary of War may require the investor to do that, but he may not. The Government of the United States may decide to build something; and if it should do it, you would want to require the party to convey the land and the use of the water power and the electricity. If we do, we want to require the investor to make the conveyance.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I understand, Mr. Chairman, that the conveyance of the title of this land is to be made to the United States only on condition that the United States makes——

Mr. ADAMSON. That refers to the additional structure in the future that the Secretary of War will require the capitalist to build.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. The previous portion of this section requires the grantee——

Mr. ADAMSON. And it authorizes the Secretary of War to require it.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. It authorizes the Secretary of War to require the grantee to put up these extra structures and operate them.

Mr. ADAMSON. Supposing the Secretary of War does not think that your grantee ought to be required or is not able to do it? If the Government then decides to build it, you ought to leave the requirement with the title to the electricity by transfer.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. You do not put that condition in there. If the Secretary of War shall determine for any reason that the Government should buy these extra structures, then he should properly require the private parties to convey to the Government the land on which the structures stand; but that is not put in as the condition there. But if the private owner constructs the locks and operates them, he ought to retain title to the land upon which they stand.

Mr. ADAMSON. That is understood, I guess.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. It seems to me that is not in harmony with other provisions. The first part of the section gives the Secretary of War authority to require the private interests to put in locks with the dam and to operate them at their own expense without expense to the Federal Government. And immediately following that you require that the land upon which they stand shall be conveyed to the United States.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman from Michigan yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. These structures the title of which is to be conveyed to the United States, as the gentleman will observe in lines 22 and 23, are such structures as Congress may deem necessary in the interests of navigation, not to the development of water power. The interests of navigation is primarily the interest the Government has.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. They may be put in by private interests and operated by private interests.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. But only put in at the dictation of the Government of the United States for the purposes of navigation. Everything in a navigable stream is primarily constructed in the interests of navigation and ought to belong to the United States, which has sole control over the stream for the purposes of navigation.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. It may be paid for by the private interests and operated by the private interests; and if so put in and operated, why should title to the land be conveyed to the United States?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Necessary for the purposes of navigation.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think the criticism of the gentleman from Michigan is hardly well taken. Dams will be constructed under very different conditions in various places. This bill authorizes the Secretary of War to require the constructor of the dam to himself construct the locks necessary for navigation and to operate the locks. But there may be conditions where that would be entirely unjust, and the Government itself might want to operate its own plant instead of leaving it to the owner of the dam to operate the locks. And in that case, under the bill the Government can require the builder of a dam to construct or not to construct, but, if constructed, to give the land, including the construction, or to give the land without the construction, and to give the dam necessary for the Government to operate the plant. In other words, the bill authorizes the Secretary of War under varying conditions in one place to require the owner of a dam to construct the locks and operate them in the interest of navigation or to furnish the land without structures to the Government, or to construct the locks and then turn the locks and the land over to the Government and have the Government operate them. The Government may do so at its own expense or it may require the owner of the dam to furnish the power with which to operate. I have no doubt that all of these varying conditions will arise in different places in the country.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, I do not understand this section as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] does. What he says as to the different conditions under which this work may be done and required is true. The Government may require the private interests to construct these locks and to operate them and to furnish water, and do so without any expense to the Federal Government, but it may require them—the private interests—to construct the locks and permit the Federal Government to operate them, or the Federal Government may decide to construct the locks itself and operate them.

Now, it will be proper and necessary under one of these propositions to have the title vested in the Federal Government. That is in case the Federal Government is going to operate the locks, or in case the Federal Government is to furnish the money for the construction. Under these last two lines it is made necessary for the private interests to convey to the Federal Government the title to the land on which the locks stand, regardless of the conditions under which the construction was made, regardless of the manner under which they are to be operated, and even if private parties build and operate the locks themselves.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. This does not require any conveyance of title. This authorizes the Secretary of War to make a conveyance of title.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. It requires them, regardless of conditions, to make a conveyance of title.

Mr. MANN. It authorizes the Secretary of War at his will, in his discretion, it is true, to make a conveyance of title.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I do not understand it so.

Mr. MANN. At his discretion. Certainly as one of the condition and stipulations that may be imposed, the Secretary of War may require it to be done, as such approval, such conditions, and such stipulations may be imposed by the Secretary of War, which may include the condition so-and-so, and also that the person owning the dam may do so-and-so.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment, without objection, will be withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That as a part of said approval, the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers shall require that the project adopted and the plans, specifications, and location for any dam shall be such as, in the judgment of the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers, shall be best adapted to a comprehensive plan for the improvement of the waterway in question for the uses of navigation and for the full development of its water power and for other beneficial public purposes and best adapted to conserve and utilize in the interests of navigation and water-power development the water resources of the region. As between contesting applicants for approval of plans and specifications hereunder, preference shall be given to that applicant whose plans are best qualified to expedite such development; and as between such contesting applicants, which appear equally well qualified in such respect, preference shall be given to that applicant which has first complied with the laws of the State or States in which such dam is to be constructed.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ESCH: After the word "which," in line 6, page 25, strike out the balance of the section and insert in lieu thereof the following: "offers in good faith to the United States the most favorable terms for taking over the property at the end of the franchise and the lowest rates for public service under the franchise, under the provisions of this act."

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, under the section as it is now written, where applicants are equally well qualified and have complied with the specifications, and so on, the preference shall be given to that applicant who has first complied with the laws of the State or States in which the said dam is to be constructed. My amendment seeks to grant the right and authority to the Secretary of War to select the applicants, choosing that one who offers in good faith to the United States the most favorable terms for taking over the property at the end of the franchise and the lowest rates for the public service under the franchise, under the provisions of this act.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ESCH. Yes.

Mr. ADAMSON. Does the gentleman think it wise to complicate the matter now at the outset with the consideration of a renewal at the end of 50 years? Will not that modify your plan about the termination after 50 years if you are going to have bidders at the outset to bid on a successive period?

Mr. ESCH. No; I think not.

Mr. ADAMSON. It seems to me it would bar your entire plan.

Mr. ESCH. No; I think not. And another thing, it gives some power to the Secretary of War to select the applicants for these grants. As it is now written, you might as well write into this bill the names of some of the power companies.

Mr. ADAMSON. The trouble I have observed, if the gentleman will permit, is you can not find any at all. That is the trouble I have had, and I have made a diligent search for capital to build some of these dams.

Mr. ESCH. I hope, and I hope the Chair hopes, that this bill will stimulate the construction of dams.

Mr. ADAMSON. I did hope, but I have about lost hope.

Mr. ESCH. The gentleman is discouraged perhaps by the passage of a recent amendment?

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes; that is the fact.

Mr. ESCH. If an applicant appears before the Secretary of War and can say to him that "at the end of 50 years I will not ask for reimbursement for the cost of the lock," or if he should go so far as to say, "I will ask for no reimbursement for the construction of the dam itself," that would be a very persuasive argument for the Secretary of War to select that applicant. Suppose that an applicant should say at the beginning of the grant, at the beginning of this period of 50 years, "I will sell power to the consumers at the minimum of so much per kilowatt for a period, say, of 20 years, with a reduction of so much in each decade thereafter." Certainly the power on the part of the Secretary of War to select the applicant who gives the best contract to the Government should be vested with the Secretary of War, but as the bill is now written there is practically no power of selection in the Secretary of War.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I am not sure that I am for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH]. It seems to me to be in conflict with the Sherley amendment. I think that we ought to grant to the applicant who gives the best terms. The Sherley amendment, which was adopted by the committee—and I think that is the sense of the House, as it has been frequently expressed in this Congress and in prior Congresses—the Sherley amendment contemplates that there may be cases arise, and will be, where it is not fair to give the consumer of the power the whole benefit of the decreased cost of production by water power.

That power is in competition with other power. There is no reason why John Jones, conducting a manufacturing establishment and buying his power from me, owning a water power, shall get his power for one-half what his next door neighbor does, buying the power from somebody else who has to produce it by the use of coal, and who can not produce it as cheaply as I can produce it, I having the water power which I have obtained from the Government. It is a monopoly.

The theory of the Sherley amendment is that these things shall be determined and averaged up so that everybody shall be treated fairly. That may be a practical impossibility, but that is the desire. Now, the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin provides that the applicant who shall sell his power the cheapest shall get the permission. That is the effect of it. Well, that is very good for the consumers of that power, but it is rotten hard on their competitors who may be in the same locality. If you could produce enough power at a place to furnish everybody there, all well and good, but you can not do that. I do not think it is desirable to put up this water power at public auction, either to the one who will pay the most for it—though that would be a fairer method—or to the one who will sell it the cheapest. It is not fair to the community. If you do that in any community, you drive out of business everybody who does not get power from that plant, and in most cases that would be a very limited amount of production. Even with the greatest of water powers, in thickly settled communities you can not furnish power enough to supply everybody; and to supply a favored few is to kill off their competitors. I do not think that is the proper theory at all. While there is something good about the amendment to let applicants who will give the best terms have the power, I do not think the terms ought to be determined by the fact that everywhere one who offers the best terms is the one who will sell his power the cheapest.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that both in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin and in the original language of the paragraph to which it is an amendment, we are dealing with a situation which can not possibly arise under the terms of this bill. The original paragraph deals with contesting applicants for approval. Now, there will be no contesting applicants for approval. Under this bill a man who wants to build a water power applies to Congress and gets the consent of Congress to construct it. Certainly Congress is not going to give that consent to two applicants. We are going to give it to one applicant, and having given it to that applicant, he is going to make with the Secretary of War the best terms that he can. As I said before, there will be no contesting applicants, consequently there is no need for this paragraph.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman knows that where a stream is wholly within the limits of a State, the Secretary of War has power to grant permits to construct dams without coming to Congress.

Mr. ANDERSON. That is true.

Mr. MANN. I think that is the only case where this would apply, but it would apply there.

Mr. ANDERSON. It would apply there, but under the terms of the proposition itself, it apparently applies in every instance.

Mr. ADAMSON. I think I can make another suggestion in support of the gentleman's argument. Where a man applies either to Congress or to the Secretary of War for permission to dam a stream entirely within a State, he usually has acquired the property rights at the place where it is proposed to build the dam.

Mr. ANDERSON. Do I understand the gentleman from Georgia to say that this section is intended to apply only to streams wholly within one State?

Mr. ADAMSON. Oh, no; it applies in every case, cases where you have to come to Congress for special consent, and those where consent has already been given within a State; but in either case, whenever an applicant presents his plans and specifications, he has either purchased the riparian rights or he has an option on them, so that the other man can not get in with his proposition.

Mr. ANDERSON. That is it exactly, and that is the reason why I do not see any need for this provision.

Mr. MANN. The last sentence could only apply where the Secretary has the power to grant the permit without coming to Congress, unless we should pass a bill giving permission to 40 people, more or less, at once place, and I do not think that will ever be done. The last section applies practically only where the Secretary of War has the power to determine who shall get the permit.

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not get that construction of the language at all. The paragraph occurs in a section in which we are dealing with water powers in general upon navigable streams and without any language at all which limits it to streams wholly within one State, with which we are not dealing at all in this bill.

Mr. MANN. Very likely that is true, but still there can not be contesting applicants to the Secretary of War unless Congress grants authority to different concerns where the stream is an interstate stream.

Mr. ANDERSON. That is exactly what I say.

Mr. MANN. So the situation could not arise which the gentleman has stated, but where it can arise, then the language means something, and there are plenty of cases where it can arise.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, let us have a vote.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I ask that the amendment of my colleague [Mr. ESCH] be read.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ESCH: After the word "which," in line 6, page 25, strike out the balance of the section and insert in lieu thereof the following: "offers in good faith to the United States the most favorable terms for taking over the property at the end of the franchise and the lowest rates for public service under the franchise under the provisions of this act."

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON], that it seems to me the language of lines 6 and 7, on page 25, is extraordinary. I will preface that by saying that the Congress of the United States is legislating for the erection of structures in navigable streams over which it has exclusive jurisdiction, and the permission which it proposes may be authorized or given to applicants by the Secretary of War, a Federal official. And yet these two lines say that where there are different applicants—I am referring to lines 6 and 7—it shall be given to that applicant who first complies with the laws of the State.

Mr. ADAMSON. The gentleman from Illinois explained that a few minutes ago. In the act of 1899 it is provided that in the case of streams the navigable portions of which lie entirely within a State the State law may authorize the applicant to apply to the Secretary of War for approval of plans and specifications. Under that law the man who brings the authority from the State must be considered.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. This leaves it entirely to the State statutes and the ability of the man on the ground to take advantage of that——

Mr. ADAMSON. That is the language of the act of 1899.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I think that is a defect in the statute. The application might be made when the State legislature was in session by a tremendously powerful corporation with great influence. I read where a capitalist in New York State said that there were $3,000,000,000 ready to be invested in the water-power improvements. He qualified it by saying when proper legislation has been enacted. It only shows the powerful influences that are at work that want to get into this business, and we must be very careful of the laws we enact. The legislature might be in session and a tremendously powerful corporation get a statute through to suit itself. It would be ready on the ground, and could beat any other applicant because it could comply with the terms of the State statute. Therefore I do not think these two lines ought to be in the law.

Mr. ADAMSON. I will state that there are a great many requirements that were insisted upon by the conservationists that have been written in here at their suggestion and not my own. I may not have known what this meant, and I may not know now, but if the gentleman's apprehensions about gullible legislatures should be realized probably somebody would hear of it and go and tell the Secretary of War befcre he could get the approval. I do not think it is wise to go out and hunt up so many little obstacles to getting this money. I have been trying for years to get it and have not got any of it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman says somebody might hunt up the Secretary of War and tell him about it. That would not make any difference because the statute is mandatory and he has no discretion.

Mr. ADAMSON. It would be a fraud.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It would not be a fraud, and you could not prove it. The statute would be valid on the face of it.

Mr. ADAMSON. The law says that fraud is never to be presumed, and I will interpolate that it is not always to be anticipated, but slight circumstances may convince of its existence.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I have not said that there would be fraud. I suggested that there was a possibility——

Mr. ADAMSON. I say there would be fraud.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I suggested the possibility of the enactment of a statute on certain conditions and under which a big corporation right on the ground, knowing what the conditions are, could immediately take advantage of it. It is the first applicant who knows anything about the conditions; they may be all right, but nobody else has any chance to apply.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ESCH) there were 25 ayes and 34 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey moves to amend as follows: Add at the end of section 3 the following:

"Provided further, That the Secretary of War may provide in said approval that all profits on the original cost of the plant in excess of cumulative annual profits at a rate or per cent of such cost to be fixed in said approval, and not to exceed 25 per cent, shall be annually divided among the consumers and purchasers of water power, electrical energy, or products thereof, according to the amounts paid by each consumer or purchaser in the year to such owner and maintainer of such dam:

"Provided further, That profits may be invested in permanent improvements, and in such case such excess of profits may be paid over to the person entitled thereto in scrip or other certificates of such investment on which local interest shall accrue and be paid annually until such scrip or certificates shall be taken up and funded in funded debt or in preferred stock bearing cumulative dividends not exceeding such local interest:

"Provided further, That outlay for salaries, offices, and other headquarters expenses and commissions shall be reasonable and subject to approval by the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of War, in his approval of the plans and conditions of construction of said dam, may limit the total amount of such outlay to a fixed per cent of the money spent in annual operation:

"Provided further, That the owner and maintainer of such dam and water power shall not sell, lease, or contract for such power or for energy, except to consumers thereof, unless upon contracts that are first approved by the Secretary of War and do not impair the consumers' right to share in the profits: And

"Provided further, That the owner and maintainer of such dam shall make equal rates for power or energy in each locality according to the quantity used or lost and the cost of connection, and shall fairly apportion such rates as to different localities, and such apportionment shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War."

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, reserving a point of order on the amendment, I will ask the gentleman from New Jersey if he wishes to speak to his amendment?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I do.

Mr. ADAMSON. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that all debate on this amendment close in five minutes.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I shall object to that. I want other people to have a right to speak upon it.

Mr. ADAMSON. Then I will make it 10 minutes.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I will not consent to that. I certainly shall object.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia reserve the point of order or make the point of order?

Mr. MANN. It is not subject to a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. ADAMSON. I will reserve it.

Mr. MANN. This is a legislative bill, and we can put any condition on it we please if we can get the votes.

Mr. ADAMSON. Very well, Mr. Chairman. I was inclined to think that it was not germane, but I will not reserve any point of order.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say first to the chairman of this committee that since I offered that amendment, when I submitted it to a friend of ours and a colleague of this House, he told me that within a couple of years he had organized in his State a cooperative gas company; that it was limited in its dividends to 10 per cent of the cost; that it was provided that after making a low rate for gas, all the profits above 10 per cent should go to the redemption of stock so that the company should finally be owned by the city; that this gas company had reduced the price of gas from $1 per thousand to 55 cents per thousand, and that they were making 10 per cent profit and much more because their by-products were paying all the costs of the company. And they have now bought out the old gas company in the town. That is what can be done for the consumer and for the public by cooperation. The essence of that is in this amendment. Whether there is time to explain the careful provisions necessary to make sure that the extra profits go to the public, I do not know. Much can be said in five minutes.

The first proviso is that the profits shall be limited, when there is a grant of any of these water powers, to such a per cent as seems to be fair, not over 25 per cent cumulative, and that is certainly enough, but it can be put at as low a sum under the amendment as can get the most favorable contract, perhaps 10 or even 5 per cent.

The second provision is that if the dam owners want to make investments out of profits, as every big company does, they shall issue scrip for that. We all know that the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Co. was limited to 10 per cent dividends, but that did no good to the public, for all of the extra profits went into the road. If a company puts profits that ought to be given by dividends in reduction of rates into permanent improvements, then scrip ought to be issued for those profits for these dividends.

The third provision is that outlay for salaries and headquarters expenses shall not be too large. We know perfectly well that if a mutual company, such as a life insurance company, puts all of the profits into the headquarters expenses there will not be any dividend paid back to the policyholder; and there is a proviso in this amendment that these expenses shall be limited to a reasonable amount and, perhaps, that they should be made a certain proportion of the yearly expenses under the contract and approval of the Secretary of War.

The fourth provision is that they shall not manage to deprive the consumer of his profits by having intermediaries, and therefore it is provided that they shall not sell, lease, or contract for power or energy, except to the consumer or except by such contracts as in the opinion of the Secretary of War would give the consumer the benefits.

The fifth provision is that, as they are serving the public, the owner and maintainer of such a dam shall make equal rates for power or energy in each locality according to the quantity used or lost and the cost, and shall fairly apportion such rates to the different localities, and that such apportionment shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War.

Mr. Chairman, these are careful provisions. The gentleman thinks they ought to be discussed in five minutes. I want to say to the Chairman of this committee and to this House that this is the coming policy for the management of public utilities and public grants.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, this is the coming policy. It is the only policy which will give to every consumer the right to see to it that rates are fair instead of leaving it in the hands of commissions, instead of running the risk that the charges fixed by the Secretary of War will be too low, because they must be low to get anybody to contract. This asks nothing onerous; it does not order anyone to put up so much money; it says simply, we will abide by the results; and when those results come you may take, say, 25 per cent a year if they make the approval at that rate; but you shall not take 100 or 1,000 per cent, for the rest belongs to the public that you serve.

Mr. Chairman, when we find an evil we should go at it directly. The evil is that when we grant a monopoly the profits do not go to the consumer by a reduction of rates. The ordinary attempt to meet this evil is to limit the length of the franchise or to allow a commission to set rates, to allow them to be readjusted by some outside power. All that does not go to the root of the evil. The evil is that too much goes to the owner and too little to the public. Meet that evil directly; fix the rate of profit on the investment that shall go to the owner, and say that the rest shall go to the public, and that the consumers shall have a right to enforce that as a contract, and you need no more provisions in your bill. [Applause.]

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Certainly.

Mr. CULLOP. As I understand the gentleman from New Jersey, his theory is that the regulation ought to be made in law and not placed in the hands of a commission which has been created by law?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I do say so.

Mr. CULLOP. It is true from experience that the plan as proposed in the gentleman's amendment yields better results to the consumer than under a regulation of a commission created by law?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. In confirmation of that, I appeal to every mutual life insurance company of the better class, I appeal to the experience of the cooperative stores in England and France and Germany, and I appeal to an experience which is world-wide, that work can be better done under the law for the benefit of the consumer where it is by cooperation than in any other way.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PARKER of New Jersey) there were—ayes 24, noes 34.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. SMITH of Minnesota: "Strike out all of line 22, page 24, after the word 'power,' and also lines 23, 24, 25, on page 24, and lines 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7, on page 25."

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I offer that amendment for the purpose of clarifying the bill. The language that is stricken out attempts to lay down a rule by which the Secretary of War may determine to whom he shall grant a lease when there are several applicants. In truth and in fact the language of the bill that has that for its purpose is so vague, so uncertain, that it would simply enable the Secretary of War, if he were so inclined, or any other person who had the granting of such lease, to disregard all rights of preference and to act upon his own judgment independent of any rule of law or any rule laid down in this bill.

If in any part of the bill there is language used that would tend to obscure and destroy the effect of legislation it is this section. I think the whole section might better be stricken from the bill, but I am content for the present to offer an amendment which strikes out only a portion of the section, and—let me read it, and while I do so I am going to ask every Member of this House present to consider himself for a moment the Secretary of War and called upon to construe this language:

And for other beneficial public purposes and best adapted to conserve and utilize in the interests of navigation and water-power development the water resources of the region.

It would seem from a reading of the section that the applicant who had complied with the laws of the State would receive a preference, but before he can receive such preference he must present plans that will conserve and utilize in the interest of navigation and water-power development the water resources of the region. Is there a man on the committee who can tell what is meant by the "water resources of the region"? Is there a man on the committee who can tell what is meant by the expression "and for other beneficial purposes"? Is there a man on the committee who can tell what the language I have asked to be stricken out means? If so, we would be glad to have him explain it.

Mr. ADAMSON. I have been told, if the gentleman appeals to me for an answer——

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. In just a moment.

Mr. ADAMSON. I thought the gentleman asked me a question.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. I am asking several, and I would be glad to have them answered. To my mind the language in question, instead of limiting the power of the Secretary of War, will enable him to do as his sweet will dictates.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 24, line 25, after the word "region," strike out the rest of the paragraph.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to say just a word in regard to the amendment. The amendment proposes to strike out that part of the section which deals with contesting applicants. It is apparent from the debate which has already taken place that there can be no contesting applicants only in the event that a stream is one wholly within a State and consequently only in a case in which the Secretary of War is vested with the power to grant the right to develop the site. That proposition has no place in this bill. We are dealing in this bill with interstate navigable streams, and consequently the provision to which I referred has no place in this bill and only serves to complicate and confuse the whole proposition. Even if we were dealing with intrastate streams, this provision ought not to remain in the bill. I read the last part of the paragraph:

Preference shall be given to that applicant whose plans are best qualified to expedite such development, and as between such contesting applicants, which appear equally well qualified in such respect—

This is the part to which I wish to call particular attention—

Preference shall be given to that applicant who has first complied with the laws of the State or States in which such dam is to be constructed.

Now, the effect of that language is to give a vested right to a concern which is incorporated under the laws of a State now. That is all it does. If there is a water-power company anywhere which has now complied with the laws of the State in its organization it will be entitled to a preference as to any site upon which it might make application; in other words, the effect of that provision is to give a vested right substantially to companies that are already organized and have complied with the laws of the State in which they are organized.

It seems to me that the proposition is absolutely vicious, and it ought to go out of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think that what was in contemplation when this language was drawn was the case where the stream was wholly within the limits of the State and where the Secretary of War can grant a permit without having a special act of Congress, and that the design of the language was to cover the applicant who first by a condemnation suit or otherwise obtained the necessary land on one side or possibly both sides of the stream for the construction of the dam and the appurtenant works. I have no doubt that it was the effort to take care of that that provided this language. But it seems to me that that takes care of itself. Nobody can build a dam unless they get the land on one side or probably both sides of a stream, and in those States where they authorize condemnation suits of course any company can make application to them to condemn, though I take it that the company that made the first application would get the right of condemnation if the suit was pressed.

Mr. ADAMSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. ADAMSON. I call attention to the fact that in this bill we provide for condemnation for navigation purposes where the State does not authorize it, and I call the gentleman's attention to the further fact that the language proposed to be stricken out contains the essential qualification that approval shall be given to that applicant whose plans are best qualified to expedite such development, and so forth.

Mr. MANN. I think we can probably leave all that to the Secretary of War. This undertakes to define by congressional enactment what shall be done when there is more than one applicant. After all, circumstances may be different. If one man owns the land on each side of the stream and offers the same terms for the construction of a dam, he has the best right to have the permit, though some company may have filed a condemnation proceeding to condemn his land. There is no reason why he should take the land away from somebody who has it and who is willing to build the dam on the same terms and give the permit to somebody else. We can safely leave that to the Secretary of War under the differing circumstances of each case. There is no reason why we should define it in here. Possibly the situation will not arise very often, but let the Secretary of War determine who is the best applicant. This language says "qualified to expedite such development." Well, that might be the man who had agreed to build the dam the quickest. On the other hand, the man who did not agree to build the dam the quickest might build it the best and make the best terms. I think it ought to go out.

Mr. ADAMSON. How much of it?

Mr. MANN. After the word "region," in line 25, on page 24.

Mr. ADAMSON. The balance of the section?

Mr. MANN. The balance of the section; yes. That is all about two applicants. Leave it to the War Department to judge of the circumstances in each case.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That in case of the development, generation, transmission, and use of power or energy under such approval in a Territory, or in two or more States, including leases under section 19 hereof, the rates, charges, and service for the same to the consumers thereof shall be reasonable and just; and all unjust, unreasonable, or unjustly discriminatory charges, rates, or services are prohibited and declared to be unlawful, and the regulation and control of so much of the service and of charges for service to consumers as constitutes commerce between the States or in such Territory and of the issuance of stock and bonds by the grantee is hereby conferred upon the Secretary of War or committed to such body as may be provided by Federal statute; that in the valuation for rate-making purposes of the property existing under said approval of the project there may be considered any lock or locks or other aids to navigation, and all other capital expenditures required by the United States, but no value shall be claimed or allowed for the rights hereby granted, for good will, or any other intangible value: Provided, That the physical connection of plants or lines for the generation, distribution, and use of power or energy under this act or under approval made hereunder may be permitted, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, but combinations, agreements, arrangements, or understandings, express or implied, to limit the output of electrical energy, to restrain trade, or to fix, maintain, or increase prices for electrical energy or service are hereby prohibited.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. In line 13, page 25, the committee has used the words "unjustly discriminatory." I do not recall any place where the word "unjustly" has been used in connection with the word "discriminatory," and I wonder where the committee got that language, and just what it means. I think it is very doubtful whether it is desirable to use the word "unjustly" in that place, because its only effect is to confuse the construction of the word "discriminatory" in the way in which it is ordinarily used in the interstate-commerce act.

Mr. ADAMSON. I see in the glossary in the preface that the language was taken from the bill as passed by the House two years ago. Where it originally came from I do not know. These bills are composite, progressive, as the gentleman knows. It is work that you just gather together from everywhere after conferring with everybody, and we have done our very best to build a constructive bill that will construct dams and meet the views of everybody. Just where we got the language I do not remember, but it was adopted by the House two years ago.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the word "unjustly" where it occurs in line 13, on page 25.

Mr. ADAMSON. I hope they will not do it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 25, line 13, strike out the word "unjustly."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think that is taken from the interstate-commerce act.

Mr. ANDERSON. It is not.

Mr. MANN. I think it is, notwithstanding the gentleman's statement.

Mr. ANDERSON. I would like to have the gentleman point it out.

Mr. MANN. I will not say that the language is the same, but the interstate act prohibits unjust discrimination, unjust, discriminatory rates. Of course, the situation is a little different about railroads, because you do make discriminations. Two towns on the same line do not get the same rates, but the interstate-commerce act prohibits unjust discrimination. Most of the decisions of the Interstate Commerce Commission are based upon unjust discrimination between localities.

The city of Nashville claims that it is entitled to a lower rate than near-by cities. Nashville gets a lower rate on railroads on the theory that it has water competition, it being located, I believe, on the Tennessee River. It does not have any actual water competition.

Now, the question arises with the railroad companies, whether a lower rate at Nashville is unjustly discriminatory as against another town in Tennessee or elsewhere. A rate which is unreasonable goes to the amount of the rate. A rate which is unjust goes largely to the amount of the rate. It may be that you will give different rates, owing to the amount of the power consumed.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. And this would prohibit any unjust discrimination of that kind, but it would permit a discrimination. Of course the courts will have to determine, I take it, or the Secretary of War will have to determine, what is an unjust discrimination. That language went to the whole essence of the interstate commerce law. Congress, having the power to fix railroad rates, declared that the rate should be reasonable and just, and forbade unjust and unreasonable rates and unjustly discriminatory rates; and it leaves it to the Interstate Commerce Commission to determine, as a matter of fact, under that law whether the rates are or are not unjustly discriminatory.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. ADAMSON. Under the gentleman's argument it is necessary to have discriminatory rates in electricity because it has to be used for different purposes and with different degrees of regularity; for instance, for manufacturing purposes by wholesale the current must be furnished more cheaply than for lighting purposes at retail.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. When we reach the subject of discrimination, we touch upon one of the important features of the bill. If we allow a large manufacturer to have electricity at a lesser rate than his smaller rival——

Mr. ADAMSON. Oh, I am not talking about a rival.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. One moment. If the law will allow him, because of the size of his plant and the amount he consumes, to have electricity, a business necessity, at a lower rate than is paid by one who consumes less, it will give him a power which he can use at any time to crush out a rival. In other words, it amounts, as I have said, to the same thing exactly in principle as the old practice of granting rebates by railroads.

Mr. ADAMSON. That is not my suggestion at all. The suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is to light a little town, which is for a different purpose than running a big factory, at a different rate.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I know; but you want to give the big consumer of electric current a lesser rate than a smaller consumer.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, without undertaking to discuss that question I will say this, that there is not a city in the United States, not one, that owns its own water-power plant, that will not give a cheaper rate to a large consumer of water than it gives to a small consumer, including the city of Washington, for which we legislate.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, the fact that a thing is in existence does not necessarily prove that it is right. Many an abuse of long standing has been wiped out by legislation, and some day the American people are going to consider this question: Is it right that a public-service corporation should be permitted to furnish the great man of business with a necessity of business, like electricity, at a lesser rate than it furnishes the same article to his smaller rival, and thus help him to crush his competitor?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I say again that it amounts in effect practically to the same thing as does a rebate given to the big shipper on a railroad as against a smaller competitor.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I just want to ask the gentleman a question. Suppose that one individual consumer would use as much electricity as a thousand private consumers. Does the gentleman doubt that it costs less to keep the account and collect the account of one individual consumer than to keep and collect the accounts of a thousand individual consumers?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. In the discussion of this problem—and before the great war it was being discussed throughout the world—that was taken into account; but it is not to be considered as at all the determining element in the problem, this little additional cost of bookkeeping. There are greater equities involved, equities that concern the business public in a broad, general way, and which have to be taken into consideration. The question is whether the law ought to allow one man to secure a business necessity which both he and his competitor must use and without which neither can exist—a business necessity furnished by the public or under public control—for a less rate than another man in the same business must pay. That sort of discrimination will often be sufficient, in these days of intense competition, to give the favored one control of a particular business and shut out his rival.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman must be willing to concede this power. It must be conceded by everyone that if a man that manufactures electricity is obliged to put in a thousand meters and thereby add to his investment in order that he may supply a thousand customers, and employ the men to read these thousand meters and keep them in repair, and also to keep the record of the accounts and make the collections, he could not reasonably be expected to make the same rates to the consumers of electricity under such circumstances as he would make to a single consumer, who might consume as much as the whole thousand.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for an interruption there?

Mr. MADDEN. Surely.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I am giving both sides of this question. The opponents of the gentleman's position say that the amount consumed by the big man and the amount consumed by these lesser men, makes up the aggregate of the business done by the man who supplies the electricity, and that he must take that all into account in getting the total of his cost and give his commodity to the little man just as cheaply as to the big man; not give it more cheaply to the big man, because that will necessarily enable the big man to wipe out his little competitor. This is one of the problems confronting the American people now, and that more and more will confront them when they stop thinking about the war.

Mr. MADDEN. At the same time, in the consideration of this problem the ordinary common sense of the situation must be taken into account; and if it takes $1,000,000 of an investment to supply 1,000 customers, and it takes only $1,000 investment to supply a single customer, there is no reason on earth why the $1,000,000 ought not to be taken into consideration in the disposition of the charge that is to be made.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. MADDEN. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The opponents of the gentleman's position say that the $1,000,000 for the 1,000 consumers and the $1,000 for the single consumer make a total of $1,001,000 investment of the producer, and that in supplying his product he ought to take into account his investment as a whole, and not attempt to consider only part of it in fixing a price to one consumer and part in fixing a price to another; that he should consider the total investment, find what is the cost of producing his total product, and then make his dividends on his total sales and supply this business necessity to all of his customers at the same rate. Otherwise he gives the large consumer a chance to get a strangle hold on the smaller one.

Mr. MADDEN. Of course, I know the argument is made on the other side of the case; but the common sense of the question can not escape consideration, and it seems to me that the common-sense side of the case compels a reduction in the price to the man who is consuming the commodity, where it does not cost the man who furnishes that commodity one-thousandth part of what it would cost to supply the other people.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. FESS. I think the gentleman has announced an economic principle, but there is a good deal of prejudice against discrimination.

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, yes; and there is a great deal of prejudice which has no justice in it.

Mr. FESS. Instead of using the words "unjustly discriminatory," why not use the term "inequitable"?

Mr. MADDEN. I am not making the language of the bill. I am only announcing a principle that I think ought to be recognized in the fixing of the price.

Mr. FESS. However, that same principle will permit a rebate.

Mr. MADDEN. It does admit of a rebate, if that is what the gentleman wants to call it, because there is discrimination in the price charged everywhere under the circumstances that I have described, and will be, no matter what your law says.

Mr. FESS. If we say in the law—

And all unjust, unreasonable, or inequitable charges, rates—

And so forth, we get the same power precisely as we do by using the words—

Unjustly discriminatory charges.

Mr. MADDEN. If I may be permitted, what I wanted more particularly to do while I was on my feet was to ask the gentleman from Georgia a question.

Mr. ADAMSON. I was just going to propound a question to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], but I will yield to him.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman why it is that the bill provides that the Secretary of War shall have the power to regulate the issue of stocks and bonds of corporations authorized under the laws of the various States.

Mr. ADAMSON. That is only in case the State fails to do it. If the State fails to do it, the Secretary of War will do it. If the State wants to do its duty, we will let it do so. I believe in State duties more than I do in State rights.

Mr. MADDEN. Does not this make a dual responsibility, however?

Mr. ADAMSON. No. If the State does its duty, the Secretary of War will not interfere.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ADAMSON. I ask that the time of the gentleman from Illinois be extended two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Illinois be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ADAMSON. Now, in return for the gentleman's question I will ask him one.

Mr. MADDEN. Certainly.

Mr. ADAMSON. The gentleman who had the last interlocutory conversation with the gentleman from Illinois is a college president [Mr. FESS], and he knows the meaning of words. When you say "a discriminating mind" you mean a smart mind, a wise man. In that case "discrimination" is synonymous with "wisdom." So the only discrimination that is wrong and foolish is unjust discrimination.

Mr. MADDEN. I agree with that.

Mr. ADAMSON. Therefore the word "unjustly" ought not to be stricken out.

Mr. MADDEN. I agree with the gentleman entirely.

Mr. ADAMSON. We believe in discriminating men and discriminating laws, but not in unjust discrimination.

Mr. MADDEN. I know it is because of the discriminating mind of the gentleman from Georgia that the word "unjustly" has been written into the law, so as to protect against discrimination which is unjust, not discrimination per se; because, as he says, discrimination is necessary. I would have to discriminate as between the wisdom of the gentleman from Georgia and that of some other persons in whose judgment I have less confidence. [Applause.] Of course, I would decide in favor of the gentleman from Georgia, and I do not think that would be unjust discrimination.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 25, line 8, after "section 4," strike out all of the paragraph and substitute in lieu thereof the following:

"That in all cases where the electric current generated from or by or the water taken from any of the projects provided for in this act enters into interstate or foreign commerce the rates, charges, and service to consumers shall be just and reasonable, and every unjust and unreasonable and unduly discriminatory charge, rate, or service is hereby prohibited and declared to be illegal; and whenever upon complaint made, and after full hearing thereon, the Secretary of War is of the opinion that any rate, charge, or service is unjust, unreasonable, or unduly discriminatory the Secretary of War may by order determine and prescribe what shall be the just and reasonable rates and charges to be observed as the maximum and the service to be rendered. That in the valuation for rate-making purposes of the property existing under any permit or lease there may be considered any lock or locks or other aids to navigation, and all other capital expenditures required by the United States, but no value shall be claimed or allowed for the rights hereby granted for good will, going concern, or any other intangible value. No permittee or lessee, being a private corporation, whose rates, charges, and service are subject to the jurisdiction of the Secretary of War under this section may issue corporate stock or bonds without the consent of the Secretary of War.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, there is not a great deal of difference between the substitute I offer and section 4 of the pending bill. I take it that under section 4 the language which attempts to control the issuance of stocks and bonds will not be effective for that purpose, and I have substituted for that language the following:

No permittee or lessee, being a private corporation, whose rates, charges, and service are subject to the jurisdiction of the Secretary of War under this section, may issue corporate stock or bonds without the consent of the Secretary of War.

Mr. ADAMSON. Is that the only difference between the amendment and the pending bill?

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. That is one of the material differences.

Mr. ADAMSON. Is not that covered to the gentleman's satisfaction by section 16, which gives the Secretary of War jurisdiction over capitalization?

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. The language that I have called attention to is used all through the bill. I do not believe that the mere use of the words "issuance of stocks and bonds" amounts to anything as used in section 4. I have given some thought and consideration to this provision of section 4, and I have come to the conclusion that it does not authorize the Secretary of War to exercise any control over the issuance of stocks and bonds. It is a mere play upon words that we like to hear, but of no binding force.

I also call attention to that portion of the section which has to do with permitting plants and lines to connect, at the discretion of the Secretary of War. These provisions should be more definite and specific.

Mr. ADAMSON. Does not the gentleman understand that the language especially prohibits the arrangement, express or implied, and does not the gentleman understand the entire purpose of the provision is to prohibit combinations, agreements, arrangements, or understandings, express or implied, to limit the output of electrical energy, to restrain trade, or to fix, maintain, or increase prices for electrical energy or service, and that there has to be an account, and there can not be anything like a trust among them?

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. I thoroughly agree with the gentleman that it is necessary to have some such power lodged in the Secretary of War or a commission having control of this subject, but the mere prohibition without declaring that it is illegal, or something to that effect, does not have any force or effect. Now, in the amendment which I offer, I not only prohibit it but declare it to be illegal, and provide that it shall not be done until such time as the Secretary of War has given his written consent.

Those are the principal things I wish to call attention to. This is the most important provision in the bill. It provides for the control of the issuance of stocks and bonds, and it also provides for the regulation of rates of service. We ought to provide the best sort of regulation we know how to devise, and I do not believe that section 4 does it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk, reading the bill, read as follows:

SEC. 5. That as a part of the conditions and stipulations such approval shall provide—

"(a) For reimbursement to the United States of all expenses incurred by the United States with reference to the project, including the cost of any investigation necessary for the approval of the plans as heretofore provided, and for such supervision of construction as may be necessary in the interest of the United States.

"(b) For the payment to the United States of reasonable charges for the benefits which may accrue to such project through the construction, operation, and maintenance, in and about such streams, by the United States of headwater improvements of every kind, nature, and description, including storage reservoirs or forested watersheds or land owned, located, or reserved by the United States at the headwaters of any navigable stream for the development, improvement, or preservation of navigation in such stream in which such dam may be located. Such charges shall be fixed from time to time by the Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers, based upon a reasonable compensation equitably apportioned among the grantee and others similarly situated upon the same stream receiving benefits by reason of increase of flow past their water-power structures artificially caused by such headwater improvements, the total charges to all such beneficiaries from any such headwater improvement not to exceed in any one year an amount equal to 5 per cent of the total investment cost, in addition to the necessary annual expense of the operation of such headwater improvement.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I wish to introduce a report made by the Chief of Engineers with reference to the headwaters improvements, the cost thereof, and the cost of maintenance.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
Washington, February 16, 1916.

Hon. JOHN J. ESCH,
House of Representatives.

SIR: 1. Replying to your letter of the 14th instant, relative to the proposed amendment to the general dam bill, I have the honor to inform you that the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers shows that to June 30, 1915, there was expended for construction, etc., of—

Reservoirs at headwaters of the Mississippi River the sum of	$1,645,409.43
There was also expended to June 30, 1915, from the permanent indefinite appropriation for operating and care of these reservoirs, 1895 to date	507,993.86
Total	2,153,403.29
Average yearly cost of maintenance for the last 20 years (in round numbers)	25,000.00

2. In connection with the provision in the bill which you mentioned in your letter, it should be stated that the reservoirs do not actually increase the amount of water that goes past the wheels of the power plant; they simply make a different distribution of the water and have a tendency to make the flow more uniform. However, on the Mississippi River the headwater reservoirs do not benefit the power plants to the extent that might at first be supposed. The reservoirs are operated in the interests of navigation, and that requires that they be partly filled during the season when there is no navigation in order that they may be completely filled by the end of the high-water period, and that all their surplus water be expended during the low-water period of the navigation season. On the upper Mississippi the lowest water occurs during the winter months, when navigation is suspended. At this time the call upon the power plants for power is, as a rule, greater than at any other time in the year, and the headwater reservoirs add nothing to the flow of the stream.

3. Whether the provision you mentioned could be applied to dams constructed on rivers rising in the Appalachian or the White Mountain Forest Reserves is a question that I am not prepared to answer. I believe it would be rather difficult to prove how much the forest reservations affect the stream flow.

Very respectfully,
DAN C. KINGMAN,
Chief of Engineers United States Army.

The Clerk read as follows:

(c) That in the construction, maintenance, and operation of any project under this act for the promotion of navigation, the grantee may, with the consent of the Secretary of War, use and occupy, when necessary for carrying out the project, lands acquired by the United States through purchase or condemnation and any part of the public lands withdrawn by the President from entry or disposition for the sole purpose of promoting navigation, which the President may do, as provided in the act entitled "An act to authorize the President of the United States to make withdrawal of public lands in certain cases," approved June 25, 1910. For any of such lands so used the grantee shall pay to the United States such reasonable charges as may be fixed by the Secretary of War.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the chairman of the committee a question. On page 27 I find the following language:

Such charges shall be fixed from time to time by the Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers, based upon a reasonable compensation equitably apportioned among the grantee and others similarly situated upon the same stream receiving benefits by reason of increase of flow past their water-power structures artificially caused by such headwater improvements.

Does that mean that all users of water now or in the future for water-power purposes will have to bear their just proportion of that charge?

Mr. ADAMSON. If they are benefited by the increased permanent flow of the water, they ought to pay for it.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Those that have a grant and have improved it, as well as those who will receive a grant under this bill?

Mr. ADAMSON. If the Government subsequently erects a large headwater reservoir that improves their flow and increases their profits, they ought to be willing to pay for their proportion of the benefits.

Mr. ANDERSON. Does the gentleman think that it is within the power of Congress to pass a law requiring those who have received a prior grant and who have improved it to pay for later improvements?

Mr. ADAMSON. There has never been a grant issued by Congress without Congress reserving to itself the right to repeal, modify, or amend that grant, and there ought never to be any condition imposed on any new structure that is not imposed on all of the old ones. In other words, honesty and common fairness require that we treat all alike, old and new, and with a view to that we always reserve the right to alter, amend, and repeal in every single one of them.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. The gentleman thinks that under the power to amend, alter, and repeal we have the right to impose upon water powers now developed the same burdens imposed on those to be developed?

Mr. ADAMSON. Why, you would lay an embargo upon all new development if you put burdens on them that you do not put on the old ones. It would mean that there would not be further development.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. I was in doubt whether or not Congress has the constitutional power to impose such an obligation upon prior grantees.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. That the rights granted herein shall continue for a period of 50 years from and after the completion of the dam or lock and dam, and shall be irrevocable except as herein provided, but may be declared null and void upon breach of any of the terms or conditions of approval: Provided, That such approval shall be made within or through any national forest or other reservation only upon a finding by the Secretary of the department under whose supervision such reservation falls that the development will not destroy, materially injure, or be inconsistent with the purpose for which said reservation was created or acquired.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 31, lines 6 and 7, strike out the langage "the completion of the dam or lock and dam" and insert in lieu thereof the language "date of original approval."

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment in order that the date of the beginning of the term of the lease may be definitely fixed. Under the terms of the section as reported by the committee, the lease, or the 50-year period, begins with the completion of the dam or lock and dam, and the date of the beginning of the lease must therefore always be more or less indefinite. In other words, there will always be room for a difference of opinion as to the exact date when the dam or the lock and dam are completed. My amendment simply provides that the lease shall commence with the date of the original approval of the plans and specifications for the project. The proposition after all involves a matter of a very few years, not more than five at the most, so that there seems to be no sound reason for not fixing the date of the approval of the plans and specifications as the date of the beginning of the lease. Certainly the fixing of that date is fixing a definite date concerning which there could be no contest of any kind. We are only opening the whole proposition up to a difference of opinion if we leave the lease as is provided in the bill to begin at the completion of the dam or lock and dam.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, the whole question raised by the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] is whether you will allow a 50-year or a 46-year lease. The most reckless of those who advocate this have for a long time, as I understand it, conceded that we should contract with the grantee for 50 years. That means the use of his property for 50 years, and now it takes four years to build these big dams. Section 7, already read, provides that he shall complete the dam within a further period of three years, allowing one year to commence it. That is the outside limit, and the dam is completed in four years. Of course, by diligence he may complete it earlier than that. If he does, the 50-year period begins to be counted from the time it is completed, but if he takes four years, according to section 7, to complete the dam, why, then, he has 50 years from then if we let the law stand as it is. If we make the amendment, he would only have 46 years to operate his construction and make his return on his investment. I think he ought to be allowed 50 years from the time he begins to use his property.

Mr. ANDERSON. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. ADAMSON. Certainly.

Mr. ANDERSON. Who is to fix the date of the completion of the lock and dam?

Mr. ADAMSON. The Secretary of War is to superintend the construction, but the first part of section 7 is absolute. He must commence within one year from the date of approval. In another section he is required to present plans and have them approved in two years. Then he must commence the construction in one year, and by section 7 he is compelled to complete within a further period of three years, so he is compelled to finish the dam in four years, and at the longest period possible for him to construct the dam it would be four years.

Mr. ANDERSON. What I am getting at is this. It is necessary to know the exact date at which this lease of 50 years commences——

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes.

Mr. ANDERSON. In order that we know the exact date when the 50 years expires. How does the gentleman fix the time when the lock and dam are completed?

Mr. ADAMSON. There would not be any difficulty, I will say to the gentleman, about determining when they complete the lock and dam. That will be found out.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The committee again divided, and there were—ayes 17, noes 27.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 10. That at any time after the expiration of said 50 years the United States may terminate the rights hereunder granted upon the giving to the grantee, either before or after the lapse of the period of the grant, of two years' notice in writing of such termination, and may take over the properties which are dependent, in whole or in part, for their usefulness on the continuance of such grant and which may have been acquired by any grantee acting under the provisions of this act, upon condition that it shall pay, before taking possession, first, the actual costs of the dam and locks and all other aids to navigation constructed under the approval of plans and specifications rights of way, water rights, lands, and interests therein purchased and used by the grantee in the generation and distribution of electrical energy under the grant; and, second, the reasonable value of all other property taken over, including structures and fixtures acquired, erected, or placed upon the lands and included in the generation or distribution plant and which are dependent as hereinabove set forth, such reasonable value to be determined by mutual agreement between the Secretary of War and the grantee or owners of such property and in case they can not agree by proceedings instituted for that purpose in the United States district court for the district in which said property or some part thereof is situated, but in no case shall the amount exceed the actual cost: Provided, That such reasonable value shall not include or be affected by the value of the franchise or good will or profits to be earned on pending contracts or any other intangible element: Provided further, That in case of war or other emergency to be judged by the Secretary of War the United States shall have the right hereby reserved to requisition and take possesison of any or all of said property and operate the same for its own use and benefit as long as the necessity of emergency continues, and compensation for such use and occupation shall be determined and paid as heretofore provided in this section.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment. Strike out all of section 10 down to the beginning of the first bracket, line 21, and insert the following:

That at any time preceding the expiration of said period of 50 years, or at any time thereafter, the United States may upon giving two years' notice.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of section 10 down to the beginning of the first bracket in line 21 and insert the fololwing:

"That at any time preceding the expiration of said period of 50 years, or at any time thereafter, the United States may upon giving two years' notice."

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], who had to go away, called my attention to the fact that to be harmonious with the limitation of 50 years there ought to be no retention in the text of the word "rights" as existing after the period of 50 years, so at his suggestion I offer the amendment so as not to recognize any right of any grantee after the expiration of the 50 years. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] also emphasized the idea that there ought to be no claim of right left with him for the Government to hunt him up to trade with him.

The amendment as adopted would read——

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ADAMSON. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. There is quite a little controversy over this section; would the gentleman be willing to pass it over until the end of the bill?

Mr. ADAMSON. I have no objection. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the consideration of this section be deferred until the bill is concluded.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to pass over the consideration of section 10 of this bill until the end of the bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 11. That in the event the United States does not exercise its right to take over, maintain, and operate the properties as provided in section 10 hereof the Secretary of War may renew the approval of plans and specifications, either original or modified, upon such terms and conditions and for such periods as may be authorized under the applicable laws that may be in force at that time, or the Secretary of War is authorized, upon the expiration of any grant under this act, to approve terms and conditions under which a new grantee may operate such properties for such periods as applicable laws may then authorize upon the further condition that the new grantee shall pay the original grantee for the properties as provided in section 10 of this act.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, "ace," and insert the word "act." I am sure that there is no joker in the part of the section which I move to strike out.

Mr. ADAMSON. I have been wondering what it was that the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Kentucky objected to all the time, and I have just discovered.

Mr. MANN. However, the word "joker" is closely related to the word which is in the bill.

Mr. ADAMSON. I have just discovered the cause of the disquietude on the part of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY].

Mr. MANN. I have very little knowledge of cards, but I do have knowledge enough to know that sometimes the word "ace" is applied to one card or four cards in a pack.

Mr. ADAMSON. The gentleman knows more about it than I do. I do not know one card from another. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. I am told by several gentlemen that they agree with my friend from Georgia, having demonstrated it.

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes, sir. None of them ever carried off any of my money on that account.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois to substitute, in line 16, section 11, the word "act" for the word "ace."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the next to the last word.

Mr. ADAMSON. Is that right?

Mr. MANN. I think it is. I would not want to injure the bill any by striking it out, but if I had my way about it I would never use the language as provided in section 10 of this act. Not very long ago we got ourselves into some difficulty, I believe, in the bill reported by my friend from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] by naming a section in the bill and then not correcting it after we had eliminated one of the sections, so that the numbered section that we named was not the correct number.

It is always rather a dangerous thing to name a section by number when we could just as well say "act." That covers the whole act. However, I would like to ask the gentleman in reference to this recovery of property. There was some criticism of this in general debate. Whether it was justified or not I do not know, but it is a very important provision. Is the gentleman sure that it is perfectly clear?

Mr. ADAMSON. Of course it depends on what you do with the preceding section which we have passed over. We do not know what the committee will do with that.

Mr. MANN. I understand.

Mr. ADAMSON. But as I understand the scheme it is this, that at the end of 50 years the grantee is out. He has no right left. His property is there. If he does not move out the Government may make him move out; but the bill here provides three alternatives. In the preceding part of the bill the Government may take it and use it itself, and in this provision, if they do not want to do that, it may sell it to another man and pay the original grantee, but the Government may permit the grantee, if he desires, to make new terms and renew his grant. That is the way I understand it. But until the Government sees proper to trade with him he has no right left after the end of the term, and if he does not move the property away or apply for renewal of the grant, the Government may make him move off.

Mr. MANN. In the event the United States ceases to exercise its right to take over, maintain, and operate the property, will not that require action by Congress?

Mr. ADAMSON. I think it will; yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. But if Congress does not act, then the Secretary of War may renew the concession to the one who already has it or turn it over to somebody else?

Mr. ADAMSON. He may approve the plans and specifications for another party.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think before we go further along we ought to have a full House, and I make the point of order. It is late, anyhow.

Mr. ADAMSON. If the gentleman will withhold that, I am ready to move to rise. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the committee had had under consideration the bill (S. 3331), entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters,' approved June 21, 1906, as amended by the act approved June 23, 1910, and to provide for the improvement and development of waterways for the uses of interstate and foreign commerce," and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 2986. An act to provide capital for agricultural development, to create a standard form of investment based upon farm mortgage, to equalize rates of interest upon farm loans, to furnish a market for United States bonds, to provide for the investment of postal savings deposits, to creat Government depositaries and financial agents for the United States, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bills:

H. R. 14303. An act making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes;

H. R. 15347. An act to amend existing laws relating to the use of alcohol, free of tax, by scientific institutions or colleges of learning;

H. R. 13715. An act granting the consent of Congress to C. M. Simpson, Z. T. Hedges, J. C. Hackney, and Mark Brown to construct a bridge across Bayou Bartholomew, Ashley County, Ark.;

H. R. 12954. An act for the establishment of Northport, Chopaka, and Laurier, in the State of Washington, as ports of entry for immediate transportation without appraisement of dutiable merchandise;

H. R. 12362. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Dallas & Southwestern Motorway Co. to construct a bridge across the Brazos River, in the State of Texas; and

H. R. 7256. An act providing for the refund of duties collected on certain tobacco cuttings.

THE REVENUE BILL.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Ways and Means, I am authorized to report back with favorable recommendation the bill H. R. 16763, the revenue bill. (H. Rept. 922.)

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 16763) to increase the revenue, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Ordered printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, in that connection, I take it, it is the intention of the gentleman from North Carolina to go ahead with the revenue bill to-morrow?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; to-morrow. I am going to ask right now unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 a. m. to-morrow. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KITCHIN. Our intention is to have about two days of general debate and two days of debate under the five-minute rule for amendment. That seems to be satisfactory.

BIRTHPLACE OF ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, a few weeks ago the House passed the bill H. R. 8351, known as the Lincoln farm bill, to accept a deed of gift or conveyance from the Lincoln Farm Association, a corporation, to the United States of America, of land near the town of Hodgenville, county of Larue, State of Kentucky, embracing the homestead of Abraham Lincoln and the log cabin in which he was born, together with the memorial hall inclosing the same; and, further, to accept an assignment or transfer of an endowment fund of $50,000 in relation thereto. The Senate has amended the bill by filling up the dates left vacant by the House. I move that it be taken up and the Senate amendments agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the bill H. R. 8351, with Senate amendments. The Clerk will report the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the dissolution of the Progressive Party.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the dissolution of the Progressive Party.

Mr. MANN. He might say, "On the subject of the reunion of the Republican Party," which will be successful. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned, pursuant to the order agreed upon, until to-morrow, Thursday, July 6, 1916, at 11 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.
